The umpiring of Quinn was entirely satisfactory, but it was a game that anybody could have umpired easily. There was not a close decision throughout. The crowd was most orderly, and the visiting team and their friends were shown the utmost consideration and courtesy. Of the 500 present at least 300 were from Plainfield. The score:

Popular and Appreciated Wherever He Goes.

(From the Quincy, Ill., Journal.)

Fred G. Wheatcroft, of Plainfield, has been in Quincy and about THE JOURNAL office for nearly two months. He was sent out by Potter & Co., to put up and start THE JOURNAL'S new machinery—and most excellently well has he done his work. Mr. Wheatcroft is a good mechanic. But he is something better than that—he is a good man. He is master of his business—and in a modest, patient, kind, obliging way he has taught us all that he could. Not many men are willing to do this. While looking out for his employers' interest, he has at the same time taken great interest in our welfare, and has done everything he could to make our start a successful one. Potter & Co. will never send out a truer man than Fred G. Wheatcroft, or one who will more creditably represent them. This acknowledgment is made because it is due to a deserving man. Mr. Wheatcroft has won the respect and esteem of every one about THE JOURNAL office, and will take back with him the sincere good will of us all.

It is universally admitted that a mother should, if she is able, nurse her child, if she cannot, or if for good reasons it is not advisable, then Mellin's Food, which has been proven to correspond physiologically with mother's milk, should be used.

THE STREET RAILWAY ROUTE.

One Resident Who Demands it Should be Located on the Handsome Thoroughfare West of Plainfield Avenue Where the Property Owners Have Already Given the Right of Way.

A PRESS reporter Monday morning was shown the following letter by the Plainfield Councilman who had received it; copies of which, he said, others of his colleagues were also in receipt of. It certainly shows earnest intent on the part of the writer, at least to agitate the question of a street railway route, and not let it be finally fixed without the consideration due so important a factor of the scheme. The letter goes on to say:

"It will be very offensive to the residents of the Southwest section of Plainfield if a charter is given to an Electric Railway Co., to run down from Sixth street to Fourth street on Plainfield avenue and out Fourth street thence to Grant avenue. Such a crooked "crank route" would utterly fail to meet the pressing needs of our section now or hereafter, and is sheer nonsense.

"We ask that the company shall be required to locate their road where it is wanted, and where the franchise will also be of greater present and prospective value to our city and to the railway owners, viz: on West Seventh street from Plainfield avenue to Grant avenue, and down Grant avenue to Front street, etc.

"You will see at once how preposterous it would be to fail to compel the company to locate its tracks so as to accommodate commuters and others arriving at and departing from Grant avenue station, who reside on and beyond West Seventh street. The number is considerable now, and increasing, with such accommodations the increase will be rapid. We ask that you will press this point earnestly upon your colleagues; for our daily comfort and natural rights are involved. It is a well known fact that the right of way on Seventh street West of Plainfield avenue has been given for an electric railway. Our people crave the advantage thus to be had, and take no stock at all in the notion that electric street railways injure property. We know better, and that the reverse is true everywhere and always.

"We earnestly deplore the narrowness of those who reside on Seventh street East of Plainfield avenue who oppose the railway being put there, where it ought to be of right, with due regard for the comfort of our people, including themselves, instead of on Sixth street, which is not a main artery of travel and is too narrow. Eighth street and beyond would then be handsomely accommodated also, and the people would have a beautiful route to ride on for recreation and pleasure. When properly curbed and stoned the driveways each side of the tracks would be wider than is now used on the centre where stoned. The street would be handsomer than now, the danger of collisions removed, and the value of property thereon be greater. The electric cars are clean and ornamental, and the wires are not noticed where they are up, smaller and neater than those we have now. If this selfish, narrow and mistaken provincialism must force the railway on to Sixth street, so let it go to be regretted; but whether or not, we, out beyond on Union avenue, want members of the Council to understand that if our desires and interests are sacrificed, there will be a good deal of bitterness created, for in some respects we feel that our wants and rights have been too secondary heretofore, and are becoming aroused.

"The fact that people on a narrow or unfrequented street give the right of way, does not justify Council in allowing an electric railway to be located inconvenient to the people, who have a right to traveling facilities on their main arteries of travel, where they walk now and will want to ride. There is trouble ahead for Councilmen who fail to consider first the legitimate rights of our people and second the proper development of our city, in doing which they will conserve the interests of the railway owners, and of the city as well.

"We want no anaconda crooked nuisance of a railway, running in narrow streets, and on unfrequented highways, and failing to give us accommodation to and from Grant avenue station to our homes on West Seventh street and beyond. If you will kindly co-operate with the Councilmen who represent the Third ward in the matter, you will be honored for it.

"By having a beautiful route our people in the heart of the city will derive great pleasure in using the electric cars day and evening for riding around, as in other cities this is a great source of health-giving comfort and enjoyment as well as income to the railway companies. Electric cars have a larger function than horse cars."

A Strong Case Against Linke, Says Captain Grant.

Frank Linke, a wholesale liquor dealer on West Front street, was arrested Tuesday afternoon on the charge of selling liquor to minors. Before City Judge Codington he pleaded not guilty, and his trial was set for Friday morning at ten o'clock. The complainant in the case is Police Captain Grant, who has been securing evidence carefully and judiciously, and who says he is sure of procuring Linke's conviction.

Central Tennis League.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

The Westfield Tennis club on Saturday last were obliged to relinquish their claim to first place in the Tennis League, by losing a game to the Roselle Tennis club on the latter's courts. The Westfields were represented by Messrs DeWitt and Sansom, and the Roselles by Messrs Warner and Smith.

The Roselles, by rather indifferent playing, lost the first set 5 to 6, but their play in the next two sets greatly improved, resulting in their winning both sets by 6 to 3 and 6 to 2. The record to date is:

	Won	Lost
Roselle	4	1
Westfield	4	1
West End	1	3
Fanwood	0	4

Tried Hard for the Crescents' Grounds, But Were Refused.

What is considered the most disgraceful feature in base ball circles is the female sporting crowd now traveling over the country giving a burlesque of the sport. The women cannot play base ball, and never will be able to learn how to play the game. It is safe to say that nine boys in knickerbockers, picked up at random, could defeat this women's team without any difficulty. The exhibitions are disgraceful, and some think ought to be stopped by the police. The manager of the females tried to get the Crescent League grounds for the women's team, but, like other reputable base ball inclosures, they were refused to them.

—Cyclers who are not anxious to spend a night in the lock-up, or to pay a fine, or suffer both inconveniences, are advised to keep off the sidewalks in Montclair.

—That migratory plague of fleas has now reached New Brunswick. It didn't stay long in Plainfield, nor in Newark, but from the way the troublesome insects have swarmed into possession of New Brunswick's houses the inhabitants fear that they have at last found a place which suits their fancy.

THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

The Children Must Attend Their Own Schools.

Especial reference was made the other day from the altar in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Newark, to the standing law of the Catholic church, requiring that the children of Catholic parents attend the parochial schools. The following paragraphs from the utterances of the officiating clergyman, are of interest to the Catholics of Plainfield, particularly the sentence at the end of the first paragraph:

"The population of this parish is about 8,000 or 9,000, and it is a sorry fact that the attendance at our schools last season was only 600. This is shameful and out of all proportion to the children of school age in the parish. Parents must understand that it is a sin for them to send their children to the public schools, and they will not receive absolution in confession while they continue to do so, unless they have received permission from the Bishop.

"Another cause for the comparatively small attendance is that many parents take their children away from school and put them to work of some kind three or four years before they should be disturbed from their studies. Others again are so lenient with their children that they allow them to have their way in staying away from school. Either or all of these reasons account for the fact that we have had a school attendance of only 600, and most of these were very young. The responsibility of parents in this matter is a very grave one, and I put it to their conscience whether they think they are doing right in permitting such a state of affairs to exist."

Very Badly Treated Fish.

Five Plainfield fishermen last Thursday started in a scow to make a voyage from the bridge to the dam. All were capsized and almost immediately after the immersion of the bold mariners many dead or debauched fish floated down stream—Somerville Messenger.

Real Estate Changes Hands.

Among the recent transfers of real estate in this vicinity are recorded the following:

Walter L. Hetfield, exr., Plainfield, to James Flannery, of Scotch Plains, 1 acre land in Fanwood township, $220.

Maria M. Frear, of Owego, N. Y., to Frances Montanye, of Plainfield, lot northeast side Arlington avenue, Plainfield, 155 x50 feet, $2,250.

George M. Phillips and wife of Plainfield, to F. Wilfred Powell, of North Plainfield, lot on Mariners' avenue, Plainfield, 50x145 ft., $275.

Attacked His Family and Religion.

Trouble among the hackmen at the North avenue railroad station continues. On Monday it was especially manifest between James McCormick and Thomas Burns. McCormick shouted "crazy!" in such a way that Burns felt personally insulted, and a war of words ensued, during which McCormick said various unpleasant things concerning the religion and the family happiness of the Burns household. Burns felt hurt and angry at this public announcement of what was not so, but instead of following the dictates of passion and bruising McCormick's features he sought out Police Sergeant Lynch and had McCormick arrested.

The Mastiff's Dead, Whether Mad or Not.

The handsome large mastiff owned by J. K. VanNest, of East Front street, and which was bitten by the mad dog which wounded Maggie Quenzer, Mr. VanNest's housekeeper, last Wednesday morning, showed symptoms of rabies, it was thought, Monday and was shot, at the request of the VanNest family, by Chas. Field, a neighbor.

That the mastiff would ultimately have become mad there seems to be no doubt, but it has been suggested that to shoot the dog so soon after being bitten was premature. The rats which Dr. Gibier of the Pasteur Institute inoculated from the virus of the dog which bit Miss Quenzer will not develop hydrophobia within nine days after the inoculation, and the rabbits not within fifteen. It is only five days since the mastiff was bitten, a period of time which is considered too short for the development of the disease.

Sweet Harry Woodruff Never Out of Style.

In a list of "Men who dress exquisitely" the New York Press makes appropriate mention of a son of S. V. F. Woodruff, former manager of Hotel Netherwood, who is remembered by many Plainfielders:

"Oddly enough"—says The Press—"actors dress less well throughout than any other class, most of them being utterly indifferent to the state of any garment that does not meet the public eye. Of course there are notable exceptions. There is Mr. Sothern, for instance, who is always dressed with absolute perfection; there is Herbert Kelcey, who is the 'glass of fashion'; there is Lawrence Barrett, who is exquisite in all the details of his apparel; there is dear, pretty, golden-locked Harry Woodruff, who is always attired in the height of fashion, and Francis Wilson, who is ever scrupulously clothed a la mode."

Since Watson & Co. Extended Their Broad Street Store Through to Market Street and Put in Their

Handsome beveled plate brass trimmed show windows for the express purpose of displaying their new styles of hand-cut garments, very few young men who want the latest cuts and patterns, will venture to buy a single garment until they first see what new styles Watson & Co. are showing.

Just now those windows are very attractive as the Fall styles are out and some very stylish black and dark blue dress cutaways are shown there at $7, behind the long line of $4 royal satin striped pantaloons, and almost every hour handsome new patterns are added, as Watson & Co. like to please young men who want new things, and the correct fashion plate cut. Tell your friends that they can buy Watson's hand-cut perfect fitting garments for less than the usual run of machine-cut work is selling for, and it makes a great difference in your dress appearance which you wear.—Newark Press.

The Crescents' Good Omen.

During the game of base ball which the Plainfield Crescent League team lost to the West Ends at Somerville, last Saturday, the skies above the field of the contesting nines were clouded, and lightnings were flashing and thunders were roaring near a hand. When the train load of Plainfielders, ruminating over their defeat, left Somerville behind them and sped away towards home, the sunshine came glimpsing through rifts in the cloudland, and a bit of rainbow was painted by nature's master-hand on the horizon just before them. The bow of promise grew larger and brighter as they neared the city of their home, and as the train dashed up the final stretch the perfected bow seemed to hover just overhead —an indication to the minds of the trustful souls who had lost their money, or had refrained from betting, that the day of storms for the Crescent League was past, and that the coming games against the West Ends would be all sunshine for the Plainfield boys.

George Taylor, of Netherwood, is now at his brother's place, Rathe-[illegible], near Belfast, Ireland, where he will remain for at least six weeks. Mrs. Taylor and family are with him. The date of their return to America is not yet fixed.

Cards are out for the marriage of Miss Fannie E. Volk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. B. Volk, of Cherryville, Hunterdon county, to A. M. Vanderbeek, of this city. The wedding will take place at the house of the bride's parents Wednesday afternoon, October 1, at one o'clock.

Mrs. Albert Hardy, wife of the brother of Thos. H. Hardy of West Second street, died at her home in New Brunswick Saturday evening, after two and a half years of happy married life. Mrs. Hardy had many friends in Plainfield, to whom the news of her death is particularly distressing.

Joseph Frederic Wharton and Miss Alice Gleason, both of this city, were united in marriage by the Rev. C. E. Mitchell, Thursday night. The ceremony took place in the new house of the bride and groom, 371 West Third street, and the happy couple will at once begin housekeeping.

Miss Anna Tickner, one of the most popular teachers at the Franklin school, has been compelled by illness to forego the pleasure of resuming charge of her class this month, and will spend the early Autumn at health resorts. She will return to Plainfield and her school probably in late October.

Of the students ordained on the 9th inst., at St. Joseph's, Teignmouth, South Devon, England, by most Rev. Dr. Vaughan, Bishop of Plymouth, was E. J. Bingham, C. SS. R., brother of J. M. and W. H. Bingham, 602 Broadway, New York, and East Orange, N. J., and M. Bingham, of this city.

The wedding of Miss Marion Haines, eldest daughter of Samuel A. Haines, of Netherwood, to Count Constantine Pantaleone Balli, will take place October 4. The Count will give a stag dinner at Rosemeath September 25. He is a member of the firm of Brown Bros., of New York, London and Paris.

The German-American Real Estate Title Guarantee Company, of which John W. Murray of this city is Vice President, has given Russell Sage a security against loss in his big loan of $125,000 to the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage for the completion of the new Talmage Tabernacle at Greene and Clinton avenues, Brooklyn.

Chas. Willis, of Mountain avenue, is watching with much solicitude the growth of a pumpkin on his mountain farm, which he intends exhibiting at the coming Inter-State Fair. It is of the "cheese" variety, and already has attained a diameter of twenty inches, and a circumference of five feet, three inches. And it's young yet.

In an artistic circular, C. Potter, Jr., & Co., have the following deserved expression of appreciation to make: "We take pleasure in calling the attention of the trade to the appended notice announcing the admission to our firm of David E. Titsworth, who for many years has been closely identified with us both in the office and on the road. We are confident that this announcement will bring pleasure to his many friends, and from the new acquaintances and customers with whom he may come in contact, we bespeak the same uniform courtesy and consideration which has always been extended to us, his partners.

Salt Yourself.

But there is no other remedy for sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, or to restore a regular, healthy action to the liver, stomach and bowels, equal to those reliable little "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" prepared by Dr. Pierce. Of druggists.

The Rev. Father Connolly, parish priest of Montville, a suburb of New London, Connecticut, and well known in this city, where he had numerous relatives and friends, died very suddenly Thursday afternoon last from neuralgia of the heart. Funeral services were held in the church of which he had been the late pastor, on Sunday, at the conclusion of which the remains were conveyed to Meriden, Conn., his old home, and where his mother now lives. Monday morning services were held in the church of St. Rose of Lima, at Meriden, thirteen clergymen taking part in the ceremonies, and the singing being rendered by forty choristers. The edifice was crowded to its utmost capacity. The remains were interred in the family vault. He was thirty-six years of age, and out of the class of students that were ordained with him, but one now remains.

ROBBED THE SECOND TIME.

Burglars Blow Open the Bound Brook Post office Safe and Get Away With Its Contents.

The Post Office at Bound Brook was visited by burglars Thursday, the safe blown open and robbed of about $75 in money and a like amount in stamps. The burglars obtained entrance into the rear of the office by forcing apart the iron bars which guard the windows, after attempting to find the bolts of the door by boring some twelve-inch augur holes in the panels. The thieves left a half-pint bottle behind them partly filled with fine ducking powder, also other implements which may lead to their detection.

A PRESS reporter visited the scene next morning, and is confident that the work was done by amateurs, and not by "Mickey" McDonald, the Plainfield Post Office robber, who is at present at large. A hole was bored in the safe, powder inserted and the door and filling blown out and scattered over the interior of the office. Only two registered packages were found by the thieves and broken open. One probably contained jewelry, and was addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Talmage." The contents may lead to the burglars identification as the case as with "Mickey" McDonald.

Postmaster W. B. R. Mason immediately [illegible] the Post Office authorities to visit the office. This is the second time the office has been robbed in two years. There are facts and evidences of guilt that the PRESS is not at present authorized to divulge, which may be the means of bringing to justice the guilty parties. Postmaster Mason is editor of the Bound Brook Chronicle.

A Good Judge Lost His Judgment.

When it is known that Judge Codington so lost his head and stooped so low as to reply to a base attack upon him published in the News, the people will wonder greatly that so sound a man should make so bad a break. But he probably wonders himself, now, as he looks back and contemplates the greatest mistake of his life.

Good People from the Borough Will Attend.

The 73d annual meeting of the Somerset County Bible Society will be held in the Presbyterian church at Lamington next week Tuesday, Sept. 16. The Rev. T. J. Schock, of Bloomington, will preach the annual sermon, and the Rev. W. J. Henderson, of Somerville, will deliver a special address in the afternoon. Delegates will be met at the station at New Germantown, on the Rockaway Valley Railroad by carriages. The meeting, which will be attended by delegates from North Plainfield and Washingtonville, is expected to be an interesting one.

Plainfield Women Their Readiest Workers.

The sixth annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Union county, to be held in Etta Hall, Broad street, Westfield, Thursday, September 18, will be conducted largely by Plainfielders. Mrs. M. D. Tomlinson, of LaGrande avenue, is President, and will deliver an interesting address; and noteworthy reports of the departments which they superintend will be read by Mrs. P. H. Bennett, of Craig place, on Juvenile Work; Mrs. J. W. Yates, of East Seventh street, on Literature; Mrs. J. H. Coard, of Putnam avenue, on Hygiene and Heredity; Mrs. S. E. Kroen, of Madison avenue, on Press Work; Miss May Tomlinson, of LaGrande avenue, on the Kitchen Garden; and Mrs. T. C. Bodine, of Dunellen, on Tobacco and Narcotics.

Who is This Curse to the City?

The people of Plainfield would pay a reward for the discovery of the correspondent who continues to send such lies as this to the World:

> PLAINFIELD, Sept. 9.—Firebugs again applied the torch in this city shortly after midnight last n ght. The barn of A. Sturtevant on Orchard place was set on fire and burned to the ground. The loss was only $1,200 and is covered by insurance. This is the eighth building destroyed by fire here in two weeks. All these fires are said to have been of incendiary origin.

They are not said to have been anything of the sort. Chief Doane says the cause of Sturtevant's barn burning was green hay, and that there has not been an incendiary fire in this city in months and months.

All such reports are of great damage to this city. They spread everywhere. Even the Philadelphia papers have had columns of stuff about "the reign of terrible fire-bugs in Plainfield, again."

Why the Blackguard Keeps One Man's Name Out of His Paper.

When President Moffett and wife, and Councilman Gallup and wife, went to West Point for a day's pleasure trip, Wednesday, the News said that some members of the Council had gone out of town, and intimated in its customary, disgusting way, that they would come home drunk. But the paper mentioned no names.

On another occasion, recently, in referring to Mr. Gallup, the News spoke of "another Councilman." The gentleman meant was asked by a PRESS reporter if he knew why his name was so uniformly omitted. He smiled and said that when the News first began its usual dirty methods of attack upon him, he told the editor, "If you mention my name in your filthy sheet, I'll horsewhip you."

The Mock Rivalry in Somerset.

"Ex-Congressman John Kean," remarks The New York Times, in a column of chat concerning New Jersey politics, "is willing to measure lances with Congressman Geissenhainer, his fellow-townsman in Elizabeth, whom the Democrats will nominate. Mr. Kean carried the district once or twice against Miles Ross, whose Cheesequake Creek appropriation had brought him into disfavor, but he has not had the same good luck with others. Mr. Geissenhainer ought to be an easy winner.

"The Senatorial canvasses," The Times continues, "are taking shape quite as rapidly as the Congressional canvasses. Somerset presents a picture of sorry Democratic disunion, and it is feared that the rivalries of the half dozen candidates there will give the county to the Republicans. Andrew Lane, a wealthy Neshanic miller, whom Senator Thompson beat three years ago, is hot after the nomination again. H. M. T. Beekman, a young Jersey City lawyer, who is ambitious to represent the home of his birth in the Senate, is his chief competitor. James J. Bergen, ex-Assemblyman and Prosecutor of the Pleas, is showing some strength, however. The Republicans talk of Chas. B. Place, Lewis H. Schenck, and Senator Thompson again.

"Rumors from Union county represent that Assemblyman Fred Marsh is not ambitious for the Democratic nomination. Foster M. Voorhees and Mayor Rankin of Elizabeth, are the chief competitors for the Republican support."

PASTEUR'S PLAINFIELD PATIENT.

Drs. Gibier and Long Are Satisfied That the Dog Who Bit Miss Quenner Was Mad, and she is Being Inoculated Therefore.

There is no doubt in the minds of Dr. Paul Gibier of the Pasteur Institute, New York, and Dr. Monroe B. Long, of this city, that the dog who bit Miss Quenner of East Front street, last week, was mad. As told exclusively in THE PRESS recently, the dog was sent to Dr. Gibier for examination, and Miss Quenner went to the Institute for inoculation. Dr. Long who was present when Miss Quenner was inoculated, gave a PRESS reporter the following information about her particular case and hydrophobia in general:

"The post-mortem on the dog showed it to have been a genuine case of rabies. The stomach contained at least two pounds of unnatural food only, such as sticks, stones, hay, straw and grass. The brain and spinal cord of a rabid animal do not show any signs proving the disease to have been hydrophobia. It is believed, however, to be a diseased germ effecting the nervous centres. The microbe or germ has not been discovered by the microscope.

"When the person bitten is treated at once, as in the case of Miss Quenner, fifteen antirabic inoculations are given, one daily, beginning with a mild virus and increasing its strength, day by day, for the whole time. If several days have passed before there has been any treatment, twenty-five inoculations are given. The virus used is taken from the brain of rabid animals, and allowed to dry for different lengths of time according to the strength desired. The mildest, which is used first, has dried for 15 days, the second, slightly stronger, for fourteen days, and so on. The preparation of the virus is a very elaborate affair conducted in an extensive laboratory.

"More than ten thousand people have been inoculated during the five years in which the Pasteurian inoculations have been practiced. The application of the method has, undoubtedly, been successful in preserving a great number of persons from the frightful death which is the consequence of hydrophobia. The sixteen persons who had been inoculated at the New York Pasteur Institute in the two months following its opening, are enjoying good health, whilst several domestic animals, bitten by the same dogs that attacked several of these patients, have died of hydrophobia. A man bitten by one of these dogs and not treated at the Institute, has also died of hydrophobia."

But may not all this expense of probably $200, and the attending discomforts of the treatment, be entirely unnecessary on the part of Miss Quenner or anyone else who has been bitten by a dog? The Medical Record says that everyone who has studied the subject, acknowledges that hydrophobia, if, indeed, it exists at all in the human subject, is at least a very rare disease. Compare this fact with the almost countless number of persons who are bitten from year to year by dogs supposed to be rabid. If statistics were collected on this point the results would prove that there is no more apparent relation of cause and effect between the bite of a dog and hydrophobia than between an accidental sneeze and a stroke of lightning. And yet what do we read in the daily papers in connection with the present hydrophobia scare? Judging from these accounts it would be fair to assume that the community was as much exposed to hydrophobia as to typhoid fever, pneumonia, or any other of the ordinarily common diseases. Scarcely a day passes that some new cases of dog-bitten patients do not present themselves in the terrible plight of fear of a horrible death. It does not make any difference, apparently, whether or not it is known that the dog was mad; the patient gets the benefit of the doubt, and the so-called preventive does its perfect work. And the cry is still they come.

Scientifically speaking, it is still to be proven that this inoculation of hydrophobic viris has ever prevented an attack of hydrophobia or modified its course. And where are the cases of hydrophobia said to be dying or dead throughout the country? What has become of those which have been abandoned to their fate as beyond the reach of the preventive treatment? Surely such are interesting enough to warrant detailed records in scientific journals. And yet we never hear of them except in sensational reports connected with the booming of the inoculation theory and the popularization of special hospitals in which the alleged wonderful treatment is practiced. We say this in no captious spirit of criticism, but in the true interests of hundreds who may become unnecessarily alarmed and may be in despair of timely assistance. All things being equal, they can from the present outlook afford to take the chances of treatment by the family physician. We can certainly hold him responsible for any marked increase in the mortality statistics from this dreadful disease in case he fails in the performance of his duty.

The man, women or child who may be bitten by dog, cow, horse or hen may still live; at least, he or she has a much better chance for so doing than either of the offending animals, even without further inoculation.

Good Democrats to Represent North Plainfield.

John Vetterlein, John Bodine, Lewis R. Blackford and Henry Woodland were elected delegates, at the primary held in the North Plainfield school house Friday night, to attend the Democratic Convention of the Fourth Congressional District at Belvidere, Sept. 18. E. C. Morse was chairman of the meeting, and John Vetterlein was secretary.

Promised to Reform, But Was Scared Out of Town.

Charles F. Stephens, of North Plainfield, foreman of a Somerset street printing shop, has been charged, at various times during the past few weeks, with abusing and neglecting his wife and two children, and has been threatened, by his employer and Marshal Rutledge, with arrest. He had promised his friends that he would reform, and was, it is said, actually doing better. Sept. 10, however, it is alleged, his employer lectured him severely on old charges, and from what was said Stephens is said to have understood that a warrant had been issued for his arrest for wife-beating. The result was that in the afternoon Stephens drew from the bank his savings of $100, and last night left town, dressed in his best suit of clothes, and carrying a well-filled sachel.

Still a Chance for an Ice Famine.

The ice famine that has been threatening to visit us for the last few months is said to be on the point of realization. About the last of October, dealers say, the Maine and Lake Champlain ice crops will be practically exhausted. The small cities in central and Western New York are already suffering from a scarcity, and are competing for the visible supply. In Pennsylvania, too a considerable demand has sprung up recently for New York State ice, and the Western cities are looking Eastward for supplies to make up the shortness of the crop on the inland lakes.

Ordinarily New York dealers get ice from the Hudson for about $2 a ton. The present price for large restaurants and hotels is approximately $12 a ton. Most dealers prophesy that prices will boom shortly to the starvation point, but there is a suspicion that this prophecy is in the interest of still higher prices.

SPRIGG'S TALE.

He Says the Whole Affair was a Farce—Yet He Accuses Justice Hardy of Suggesting a Counsel for Him—And When He Told the Justice He Would Not Stand a Fine, the Justice Told Him He Could "Lay Down."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In your paper of September 8, in the article headed "Offered to Burn Down the House," you do myself and family a great injustice, and therefore I take the liberty to write you a few lines in order that the public may know the true situation. In the first place you state that there is and was been for a long time, enmity between myself and Louis Wyckoff. I think that is correct so far as Wyckoff is concerned, and he has fully demonstrated that fact by his actions toward me. As to the charge made against me on Saturday night last, the whole affair was a farce.

In the first place as I sat on my back porch smoking my pipe about 10 o'clock Saturday evening, the constable came and asked me to go with him to Justice Hardy's. I inquired what for and he informed me that Wyckoff had charged me with having threatened Wyckoff's life with a pistol in my hand, and threatened to shoot him. I of course was astonished, but went with the officer to Hardy's office thinking there must be some mistake as I had not had any pistol in my hand for a month or more, much less having threatened Wyckoff, or anyone else. When we arrived at the Justice's office, the Justice asked me if I was guilty. I said I was not. He then fixed my hearing for Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, at which time I appeared and asked to have the case adjourned until Monday morning so that I would have an opportunity to employ counsel. The justice asked me who my council was, I informed him, and he suggested another counsel. I insisted on my own choice. On the trial some of the witnesses swore that they heard the pistol shots on Somerset street, and Wyckoff swore that they were at and near his place. While I had been at home all the evening, except for an hour or so—when I was staying at a neighbor's who was mourning the loss of a child who had died a day or so before—I therefore knew nothing of the affair as charged. The justice fined me $10 and costs. I consider I was unfairly dealt with from first to last.

I was forced to trial on Sunday morning without an opportunity to employ counsel, and although I am a freeholder of the Borough, I was told by the Justice that unless the fine and costs were paid at once I would be imprisoned for 10 days. I paid the fine and told the Justice I would not stand it. He told me I could lay down to it. I think I shall take his advice, as I believe right will come on top in the end. I have lived in the Borough about fifteen years, have treated my neighbors in a neighborly way, pay my debts, served in the U. S. army in the Rebellion, am a member of the G. A. R. post and feel that I am as a good citizen entitled to protection, both in court and in print, and therefore state the above facts.

LOUIS SPRIGG.

That Dirty South Again.

Friday morning as A. L. Force, one of the proprietors of this paper, was passing the corner of Grove and Front streets, where the Carey furniture store is located, the proprietor, ex-Councilman and ex-Captain of Police, Tunis J. Carey, called out:

"I should think you'd be afraid to go by this place."

Mr. Force stopped and asked: "Why? who and what should I be afraid of?"

"I should think you'd be afraid you'd get killed. It would be a — — good thing for this community if you was dead and buried."

The Carpenters and Joiners Present Bryant School With a Flag.

The American flag now waves over all Plainfield's schools when in session. Just after noon hour Tuesday, the pupils and teachers of Bryant school met in their assembly hall, where the Rev. A. R. Dilts, presented the school with a handsome flag from the Carpenters & Joiners Union of this city.

The exercises that ensued included the singing of national hymns and addresses. The Rev. Dr. Hurlbut accepted the gift on behalf of the Board of Education, and J. B. Probasco, M. D., another of the Trustees, made the closing address. The scholars passed a vote of thanks to the Union and closed by singing "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

Greenop's Philharmonic Quartette's Programme

One of the features of the Hotel Netherwood this season, has been the music by Greenop's Philharmonic Quartette. Plainfield residents have also been cordially welcomed to an enjoyment of it with the guests. Last Sunday evening the following programme was rendered:

Overture—"Oberon"..........Weber
Adagio—From Fourth Symphonie.....Beethoven
Grand Se ection—Les Huguenots.....Myerbeer
a. Serenade.............Moszkowski
b. Spring Song..........Mendelssohn
Prelude—To William Tell..........Rossini
Bridal Music—From Lohengrin..........Wagner
Divertissement—Faust..........Gounod
Prayer—From "Mose in Egitto"..........Rossini
Andante Spianato..........Chopin
Coronation March—From Prophet.....Myerbeer

A Speedy Mustang Causes Trouble for His Master.

Jeremiah Rowe appeared before Justice Hardy, of North Plainfield, Thursday, to answer to the charge of fast and reckless driving. Rowe pleaded not guilty, and said that the mustang he was driving had selected a pace which he as driver could not control. He had no intention of violating the law, and had not been conscious of doing it.

The Court decided that the mustang had been going faster than the law allows, and that Rowe had made no effort to reduce the gait. Sentence was suspended, however, and Rowe was put on his good behavior, with the warning that another offense would be severely punished.

Rowe was fined only a short time ago, for fast driving, and the case is now pending on appeal.

A Wedding Adorned by a Plainfield Bridesmaid.

One of the largest social events and prettiest home weddings that ever took place occurred on Wednesday last week at Brick Church, N.J., at 7 o'clock, at the residence of Edward Wilde, No. 9 Prospect street, the contracting parties being his youngest daughter, Miss Edith Beatrice, and Luther Pomeroy Bryant, of Northampton, Mass. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. George W. Smith, of Hackettstown, brother-in-law of the bride. The ushers were Messrs Fred Robley and Elston French, of Orange. Misses Annie Belle Smith and Alice Cary, two little wee-tots carried baskets of flowers, which they strewed before the bride. They led the procession, wearing white mull dresses and white sashes, made Marguerite style; two bridesmaids followed, Miss Ida Wilde, the bride's sister, and Miss Harriet French, of this city. A very pretty and artistic feature was an aisle formed by six young ladies holding ribbons through which the bridal procession passed.

John have you seen that woman lately? John is astonished! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

TWO CHILDREN POISONED.

An Almost Fatal Illness Attributed to the Eating of Cheap Candies.

Ann Collier's two children became violently ill, a few days ago, and for a time were considered in a dangerous condition. They gave every symptom of having been poisoned, either by arsenic or by some similar substance. Dr. T. S. Davis administered antidotes and saved their lives. No others in the family were ill, and the cause of the poisoning was a puzzle. It is surmised however, that the young people had eaten some of the cheap candies which school children get hold of, and which are often highly colored and flavored with poisonous substances.

Mrs. McKeown Tired of Her Husband.

Alexander McKeown, a rich coffee merchant living in Fanwood, has been sued by his wife for divorce. The case was before Chancellor McGill Tuesday and he gave the defendant ten days to file an answer.

A Tree With a Flinty Heart.

The story comes from the corner of West Front street and Plainfield avenue that workmen engaged in cutting down a tree a day or two ago broke three axe-blades in chopping and then discovered a large piece of flint like an Indian axe-head buried in the heart of the oak.

The Owner the Bigger Beast.

Some criminal left his horse and wagon standing on Front street, near the post office, from eleven o'clock Tuesday morning until after five, when S. E. Flower of the S. P. C. A., took the starved and thirsty animal to Seguine's stables, where it was fed and watered. When the owner turns up he can get his horse by paying its board bill. He will also get, probably, a warrant of arrest for cruelty to animals.

Fall Over-Coats.

In all the new colors out this Fall, nothing sells like a fine, black twilled worsted made up simple, soft, and plain, entirely free from all the "fixings" usually put on ready made garments. Watson & Co. have their entire line filled in with those fashionable garments and show the $10 styles in both Broad and Market street windows as fast as finished. Tell your friends to see them before they buy, they'll like the new cut when they try them on.—Newark Press.

A Dangerous Fall.

Mrs. E. Sheridan, a guest of the Netherwood Hotel, raised one of the windows at the end of the reading room, the other night, and supposing the piazza extended around that side of the Hotel, stepped over the sill into space.

She fell about sixteen feet and landed on a hard gravel driveway. She was found unconscious by one of the laundry girls. Her arm was broken in two places, but she luckily escaped internal injury although so bruised that she is still confined to her bed.

You Can Count Them Yourself.

If it was necessary to prove to the satisfaction of anybody that THE PRESS is the Plainfield people's paper, there are many straws that show the fact plainly and indisputably. For instance look at the past week's record of "Wants, Offers and Information" advertisements in the cent-a-word column of the two dailies.

Monday's issue of THE PRESS contained 28; Monday's issue of the News contained 12.

Tuesday—PRESS, 24; News, 14.
Wednesday—PRESS, 28; News, 19.
Thursday—PRESS, 27; News, 16.
Friday—PRESS, 25; News, 17.

The Vested Choir Entertained.

The choir of Grace church, numbering about twenty-five, were entertained on Thursday evening in a royal manner by Mrs. Benjamin A. Mumford at her home on Arlington avenue. As usual on occasions of this kind, there were few absentees. The choir contributed to the enjoyment of the evening by singing a number of selections, and otherwise entertained themselves by playing "Blind Man's Buff," shouting through ex-Foreman Mumford's silver fire-trumpet, etc. The "boys" unanimously voted that the triumph of the evening's entertainment was the bounteous supply of good things to eat provided by the hostess. The party broke up about 10 o'clock and returned home full of gratitude and many other things, totally unable to sing another note.

Knights Who Like a Merry Time.

The members of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, Knights of Pythias, at the close of their regular business session, Friday night, held an old-time jubilee meeting, and enjoyed a pleasant programme of speechmaking and singing, with D. A. Pope as master-of-ceremonies. Mr. Pope broke the ice with a few interesting remarks on the good of the order, and a comic song, and J. H. Carney entertained the gathering with his funny sayings. He was received with rounds of applause. The next to step to the platform was B. R. Force, who recited in fine style. A series of musical selections was rendered by L. Barrick and Messrs Jones and Higgins, who were called out again and again.

The next entertainment of the Lodge will be given Friday evening, October 31, after which such events will be of frequent occurrence till the Winter season is ended.

Which of the Four Plainfield Nichols is This?

(From the Somerville Democrat.)

I heard a good fish story about Mr. Nichols, of Plainfield, who came to our neighborhood to enjoy his favorite pastime—angling. One day last week, while fishing in the neighborhood of Millington, with a small catfish as a bait, a five-pound bass made a sudden move on the tempting morsel, and soon catfish and hook were in his possession, to the great delight of the angler. The fish quickly hurried away beneath some driftwood in order to enjoy his rather unexpected meal. Mr. Nichols' apparatus was rather too light to attempt landing his prey by ordinary means, so he had recourse to the extraordinary.

Quickly peering over both shoulders, and feeling safe, he divested himself of all his wearing apparel, and in a few seconds, he stood on the bank, dressed only in nature's garb. Hurriedly seizing from his pocket a preparation compounded of pepper and salt, he boldly plunged into the river in order to apply the mixture to the tail of the fish, as he had heard of this being an old and invaluable remedy when other means failed. Peering cautiously around, he soon spied the fish under the root of a tree, trying to enjoy his lunch seasoned with steel. Gently inserting the hand which contained the condiment, he was just on the point of application, when the fish giving him a wicked look with his left eye, whisked his tail so viciously that the mixture was thrown into his eyes, completely blinding him for a time. When he recovered his sight no trace of the prize that was so near and yet so far.

> The fish that eats your bait and runs away,
> Will live to eat your bait some other day.

Come again, Mr. Nichols.

As the warm weather continues the natural cravings of humanity call for something cooling to drink. Hires' Root Beer is sparkling, and a most delicious article. Every family should have it in their house. A 25 cent package will enable any one to make five gallons. Ask your druggist or storekeeper for it.

SHALL WOMEN BE ADMITTED?

An Important Election to be Held Soon in Methodist Churches.

An unusual event will take place in the Methodist churches throughout the New Jersey Conference, Wednesday, Oct. 29. An election will be held in every church of the conference, and men and women will be allowed to cast their ballots together for or against one object. Already the election has been announced in many of the churches, but many members do not understand its significance.

At the last session of the General Conference of the church in 1888 there was a lively discussion over the admission of women as delegates to the conference. There were two or three elected from the Pacific State, and they demanded seats with the other delegates. For several days the discussion waxed hot, one side declaring that to thus endow women with the legislative function was contrary to the teaching of scripture, and the other holding that as women were invaluable in the church work, they should be allowed to present their views as delegates in the conference. When the vote was taken there was only a majority of three in the lay delegation against admitting the women, but a majority of thirty-three in the clerical delegation. This was a close vote on a question that was looked upon as very important in church government. To settle the matter in the future, the conference decided to submit the question to the annual conference throughout the country, and through them to the individual churches. The New Jersey Conference last Spring fixed October 29 as the day for the election. The result will be important to the church. There are a great many women of the church who are opposed to the movement, and there are many men who favor it, so the voting will be not confined to women on one side, and the men on the other. The ministers of the various churches are required to announce the election several times from their pulpits.

An Exempt Firemen's Association.

Articles of incorporation of the Exempt Firemen's association, of Fanwood, were filed in the county clerk's office recently. It was organized on September 2, and the officers are as follows: President—Thomas J. Nicholl; Vice President—John Robinson; Secretary—George Kyte; Treasurer—William J. Lobe.

What Plainfield's Enemies are Fighting Against.

(From the Bound Brook Chronicle.)

Monday night's fire proved conclusively the great value of the Bound Brook water works. The hose was attached to the highest hydrants in town, where the pressure is the lowest, but two streams were turned on the flames and at once it was seen that the fire was under control.

The Success of the Season.

Although the Broadway theatre will accommodate thousands of patrons during the next two weeks, and though seats can now be purchased for any night of the engagement, yet Francis Wilson and Company will leave behind them thousands with an unsatisfied longing to see and hear more of the "Merry Monarch." There was never so decisive, deserving and distinguished a success in the history of light opera. There is not a mistake in it. Years of experience had taught Comedian Wilson and Manager Canby just what to leave out, and the result is perfection in all parts. The music is particularly pleasing, and the lines generally good. Wilson falls down stairs as an entrance, and is on the stage most of the time. He has now an opera all his own, that he has built to fit himself and his excellent company. The consequence is it is almost faultless.

Is This Irony or Sarcasm?

(From the Bound Brook Chronicle.)

The far-seeing eye of the Madison Eagle has discovered that

> "Bro. Messler, of the Democrat, Somerville, is a poet. Bro. Mason, of THE CHRONICLE, Bound Brook, is also securing recognition in that direction. We have considerable sympathy for our brother knights of the quill."

As far as this paper is concerned it cheerfully yields the poetical palm to the clever story-teller of the Plainfield Press. In a neat half-column concerning a family feud which has attracted some attention in North Plainfield, between the Wyckoffs and the Spriggs, our if-you-see-it-in-The-Press-it-isn't-so contemporary makes the little Spriggs salute their neighbors with

> "Wyckoff, Wyckoff, > I'll knock your head off!"

To this the heir of Wyckoff estate is credited with saying:

> "Sprigg, Sprigg, you think you're big;
> Go wash your face, you dirty pig!"

Such effusions as these show the author's rare genius, and when once his abilities become known to the outer world his services will be in demand by some great daily newspaper, and we may before long find him doing the obituary verses on the Philadelphia Ledger.

But the Crescents Will Not Go to Westfield Next Wednesday.

(From the Westfield Standard.)

The Plainfield Press of Sept. 11, publishes an unnecessarily foolish article and one full of untruths. What is said about the umpire is simply ridiculous. No one who knows anything of base ball would ever think of accusing Roberts of being partial, blind or biased. That he made mistakes—we acknowledge; but they were in as many cases in favor of the Crescents as in favor of Westfield. The truth of the matter is that the Crescent people have had the umpire under their control all Summer and do not think any umpire is fair unless they get all of the decisions their way.

The crazy move of Jones which betrayed Hetsell into an illegal delivery, was simply school boy base ball on the part of the Crescent catcher.

The Press says:—"Desiring to save Gregg for Saturday's game, etc., etc." This is all rot. All Westfield wants is to get at Gregg, and this is where the managers broke their word with Westfield—though we cannot say that we expected them to keep it. And, now, right here let us say that if the Crescents will appear with their own team on the grounds on next Wednesday, they will find the result much different.

[Manager Leggett has sent word to Westfield that the Crescents will not go to Westfield next Wednesday. He also stated his belief that the Westfield management did not treat the Crescents honestly or courteously on last Wednesday—ED.]

VACATION'S UP AND SCHOOL OPEN!

This is the season for a brisk demand in CHILDREN'S CLOTHING. During the months of Summer enjoyment they have played the dickens with their clothes, and usually have little left fit to appear in school with.

We have always made the clothing of the little ones a specialty, and this Fall we shall strengthen our well deserved reputation of keeping the best stock of these goods in Newark. You'll find it to be money in your pocket and the saving of no end of trouble to come straight here with your children and fit them out for the coming season. We can not only show you all the styles to be met with elsewhere, but many novel conceits which we have designed exclusively for us. Our prices for the newest styles are no greater than you'll pay for the old ones, and as to reliable work there isn't a store in the country that is more particular than we are, especially in children's goods. We know, in advance, the strain to which the little garments will be put, and every safeguard against a sudden coming from together is taken advantage of.

It's a pleasure to talk children's clothing just now; it's a pleasure to show it. We've got something to show and talk about.

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time, once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation," read it and resolve to accept the golden chance.

OUR COUNTRY.

[illegible] Whittier [illegible]

Our thought of thee is glad with hope,
Dear country of our love and prayers;
Thy way is down no fatal slope,
But up to freer sun and airs.

Tried as by furnace-fires, and yet
By God's grace only stronger made,
In future tasks before thee set
Thou shalt not lack the old-time aid.

The fathers sleep, but men remain
As wise, as true, and brave as they;
Why count the loss and not the gain?
The best is that we have to-day.

No lack was in thy primal stock,
No weakling founders builded here;
Thine were the men of Plymouth Rock,
The Puritan and Cavalier.

And they whose firm endurance gained
The freedom of the souls of men,
Whose hands, unstained in peace, maintained
The swordless commonwealth of Penn.

And thine shall be the power of all
To do the work which duty bids,
And make the people's Council Hall
As lasting as the Pyramids!

Thy [illegible] all [illegible]
The [illegible] of the [illegible]
Earth's [illegible] shall [illegible]
With which [illegible]

Great, without seeking to be great
By fraud or conquest, rich in gold,
But richer in the large estate
Of virtue which thy children hold,

With peace that comes of purity
And strength to simple justice due,
So runs our loyal dream of thee;
God of our fathers! make it true.

Oh, land of lands! to thee we give
Our love, our trust, our service free;
For thee thy sons shall nobly live,
And at thy need shall die for thee.

TWOMBLEY'S FOLLY.

A Turning Point in the Life of His Cousin Samanthy.

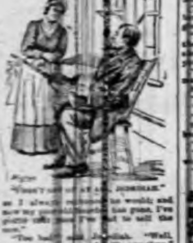
[S]AMANTHY APPLEBY, called Aunt Samanthy by her neighbors, was tidying up the room which had been [illegible] for a sleeping-room, and had in it a desk, a book-case and a little row of drawers, in which fragments [illegible] had been carefully stored. The desk and book-case Aunt Samanthy [illegible] with reverence. The [illegible] she [illegible]. Bits of [illegible] she emptied those all into her apron, and dumped them [illegible] and ends out of the window upon a flower-bed that had not been dug up that year. Aunt Samanthy had no heart for gardening. Things had gone very wrong with her, and the death of her old boarder, a returned California miner, who had made and lost several fortunes, had put the finishing touch to her woes. His room it was that she was now putting to rights, knowing that she should never see the old [illegible] and kindly smile again.

"I [illegible] it more than any thing else, after losing poor Peter," she sighed, as a tear rolled down her cheek. "He was always so kind [illegible]."

As she spoke, there came a heavy step on the [illegible], and looking out of the window, she saw her cousin, Jedediah Twombley, standing there. Jedediah was a rich man, lately made richer by an inheritance from his grandfather, who had lived to be one hundred and five years old, and died leaving all to his wealthy [illegible] and nothing to his extravagant poor granddaughter. It was natural that she [illegible] should [illegible] at him.

"Morning," said Jedediah. "Morning, Cousin Samanthy. I [illegible] stopped up to get [illegible] and to [illegible] a show, and I've sent Simon to get [illegible]. I thought I'd [illegible] how you got on."

"I don't [illegible], Jedediah," said Samanthy. "[illegible] if I should if Grandpa Twombley [illegible]



"[illegible] AT ALL, JEDEDIAH."

as I always [illegible] he would, and now my [illegible] has gone, I've got to [illegible] to sell the [illegible]."

"Too bad," said Jedediah. "Well, come and [illegible] of milk any time."

"Two miles there and back; thank you," said the widow. "Do you know if I was you, Jedediah, what I'd do? I'd say, 'Cousin Samanthy, I'm rich and you are poor. I'll give you a little [illegible] of the big [illegible] me.' That's your [illegible] grandpa was a hundred and five, and weak-minded when he died. [illegible] himself ten years ago, and you know it."

"Pshaw!" said Jedediah. "But you're a woman. That's your excuse for [illegible]. I'm not a mean man. I'll give you five dollars down, Samanthy, and [illegible]; and wills is wills, and I [illegible]."

[illegible]

"[illegible]," said Cousin [illegible]. "He always [illegible] with Peter. Peter [illegible] one of those [illegible]. What's the use, grandfather [illegible] say to me, 'of [illegible] Samanthy, with Peter—'"

"Your Peter [illegible]," said the widow, [illegible]. "[illegible] a'n't against him. He was [illegible] could be to me."

"No doubt," said Jedediah, hurriedly, "no doubt. I [illegible] Peter [illegible] when I [illegible]."

"I was [illegible] the spare room," said the widow. "[illegible] have shut up quite a [illegible] California [illegible]. [illegible] I'd let it, if I could. I [illegible] boarders this summer, [illegible]."

"I'll pay for an advertisement," said Jedediah, [illegible] a million and a half. "[illegible] have lots of [illegible]. You would grow things [illegible] want to send this [illegible] rubbish on it; you [illegible] right under your [illegible]."

"I just [illegible] drawers [illegible]. There was a lot of rubbish in them, and I meant to dig it over, only [illegible]."

"I'll let Simon dig it," said Jedediah, "and you shall be [illegible] will be a comfort to you."

By this time Simon, who had been slowly [illegible], stopped at the gate, and Jedediah called to him sharply:

"Simon, [illegible] the spade and dig over Mrs. Appleby's garden. I'll drive [illegible] myself, Samanthy. I [illegible] about the [illegible] a good one," and jumping into the wagon he drove up the road, glad to be [illegible] of his poor relation.

Simon [illegible] the [illegible] with a very [illegible].

"[illegible] for luck and some for [illegible]," he said, [illegible].

"And I've got some," said the widow. "Here, [illegible] do that unless you feel like it. I [illegible] you have plenty to do."

"I'd [illegible]," said Simon. "What's your [illegible] out here, Mrs. Appleby?"

"Them's out of my California boarder's [illegible]-drawers," said Mrs. Appleby. "What he kept in them for I dunno."

Simon laughed, and, stooping, picked up one or two bits of something, and put them in his pocket.

The [illegible] was nicely settled when Mrs. Appleby looked out again, and Simon was gone.

As Mr. Jedediah Twombley sat on his porch that night, counting up the profits of the hay-crop, a voice behind him [illegible]:

"Mr. Twombley, I've got somethin' I want to show you!"

He turned. It was Simon who had [illegible], and he held in his hand a fragment of something that looked dark and [illegible].

"[illegible] here," he said, in a whisper. "I've been to the gold mines in my time, and if this ain't gold I'll give up [illegible] I'm looking."

"Why, to be sure! To be sure!" said old Jedediah, clutching the little chunk of ore in his hand. "To be sure. Where did you find it?"

"Why, in the Widder Appleby's garden. Dug it up out'n the flower-bed you told me to spade up for her," said Simon.

"Then there's gold on the place," said Jedediah. "I've always thought there was gold here. I've always said so."

"Yes, I've heerd you," said Simon, with a twinkle in his eye. "Now, what a thing that'll be for the widder. A gold mine on her place."

"Hush!" whispered Jedediah, with his eyes gleaming greedily in the twilight. "Hush, Simon; promise me you won't tell her or anybody. I'll make it all right with you. You're kinder uncomfortable where you be, with your small family. I'll allow you to hev the [illegible] house on the hill at the same rent. Don't mention any thing about it. I'll make it right with Mrs. Appleby. Though, after all, this mayn't be gold."

"'Taps not; but old miners, like me, is calculated to know," said Simon. "If you don't mind, I'll move up to the [illegible] house to-morrow. Wait a bit. Let's go over to the widder's. I'll pretend I've [come] to sow the radish seed, if you'll give the same; and we'll see if there's any more there."

"Good!" said Jedediah Twombley. "A bright idea."

Accordingly, to the widow's surprise, Simon took the seed over; and, the errand done, brought back to his master, waiting in the wagon under the trees, three or four more specimens of the [illegible], which Jedediah took at once to a celebrated mineralogist of the nearest town, who declared that where those came from there was assuredly a gold mine. And trembling with delight, Jedediah went back to walk around the widow's house in the moonlight, where she, seeing him through the curtains, took him for a tramp and was frightened almost out of her [illegible].

Several things happened to startle her that day. The first was the appearance of Simon at her door in the early dawn as she was boiling her solitary cup of coffee over some splinters of [illegible].

"Widder," Simon whispered, solemnly. "Tend to what I say, and don't forget it. Mr. Twombley is goin' to make you an offer for your place. Don't let him have it cheap. Rise on him as [illegible] as brass. Don't chin about any thing. Don't tell him nothin'. Just say: 'I won't sell for that' until you get what'll keep you comfortable. Mind, do as I say; don't ask questions; don't chin; you'll give yourself away."

"I don't half understand you," said the widow; "you hev such curious expressions kinder; but if Cousin Jedediah [illegible] much for two acres of onions and a house like this he's goin' crazy."

"Mebbe he's seen a ghost," said Simon, "but you mind me."

[He] was off. Not too soon, for the [illegible] of Jedediah Twombley's wagon sounded down the road the next moment, and Jedediah stood at the door in place of his servant.

"What you said kind o' teched me yesterday, Samanthy," he said, "and I've been thinking. What you want is to sell your place and go board in the village. I'll buy it. It ain't worth much, but what'll you take?"

The widow looked at him. It was not benevolence that shone in his eyes, but [illegible].

"Well," she said, cautiously; some of the same blood ran in her veins, and she could bargain also. "Well, what'll you give?"

"Five hundred dollars!" said the rich man. "Eh?"

Samanthy shook her head.

"Eight?"

"No, no," said Samanthy.

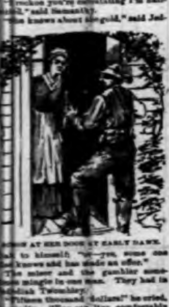
"A thousand?"

Samanthy turned pale, but shook her head.

"Two thousand!" said Jedediah.

"I reckon you're calculating I'm half-witted," said Samanthy.

"She knows about the gold," said Jed-



[illegible] AT HER DOOR AT EARLY DAWN.

-[iah] to himself; "yes—yes, some one [has] known and has made an offer."

The miser and the gambler sometimes mingle in one man. They had in Jedediah Twombley.

"Fifteen thousand dollars!" he cried, wildly. "You can live comfortably on that, eh?"

"Grandfather's ghost has appeared," thought Samanthy.

"Well," she said. "If you'll drive me to the lawyer's and pay me now, I'll do it."

Ten minutes after this the two were seated side by side in the wagon. Two hours more Samanthy was, in her own opinion, a rich woman, with no fear of suffering before her, and no more need to toil for her bread. She was to leave the cottage that day, but bewildered by her sudden prosperity, she was packing her few poor possessions, when again, in the dawn, Simon stood at her door.

"Sold it?" he asked.

"Yes," said the widow, breathlessly; "for fifteen thousand dollars. I reckon Grandpa appeared to him."

Simon put his hand in his pocket and drew out a bunch of something.

"What's that?" he asked.

The widow looked at what he held toward her.

"It's a bit of rubbish I threw out of the case there," she said.

"It's gold ore," said Simon. "Your California boarder had a lot of specimens of it in that case; he often showed 'em to me. I was a miner once. I took an interest in 'em. You throwed 'em into the radish bed; I dug 'em up out of it, just showed them to Mr. Twombley. [illegible] has always been that there's gold in these [illegible]. He thinks there's gold on your place."

"And he wanted to give me five thousand dollars!" said the widow.

"It's all right for you, and I didn't tell lies," said Simon. "I did dig up the specimens in the radish bed."

The widow lives at ease in the village and keeps her own counsel; and there's a big hole with a windlass over it where her house once stood. People call it "Twombley's Folly;" but Jedediah Twombley intends it for a gold-mine, and spent a little fortune also in [illegible] it several years.—Asa T. Perry, in N. Y. Ledger.

Johnny (looking at lightning rod on [illegible])—I'd like to know why is branches [illegible] to grow up on the [illegible]." [illegible]—"To catch the forked lightning, of course!"—Chicago Tribune.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

Cast thy bread upon the waters!
Wandering heart, in prayer and patience—
Cloud with silvery light behind it!
Then thy yearning soul shall find it
After many days!

Scattered through hours of longing,
Struggling past the waves of sin—
Grasp the sheaf of wheat and bind it
That the triumph you may win
After many days!

Sow it! reap it! until, but haste not;
Cast it as thy loving gift
O'er life's waves! Beginnings wax not—
It will come back through the rift—
After many days!

Though life's wave in wild commotion
Toss thy venture near the main,
Onward press in calm devotion,
It will float to thee again!
After many days!

Give not sighs in place of laughter—
Yield not care to dark regret!
Thy reward is coming after
All these doubtings bravely met
After many days!

Close to shore, and standing near thee,
Lo! a shining angel band!
Sent from Heaven to bless and cheer thee
Watch thy burden safely land
After many days!

Praying, watching, waiting, yearning,
All thy soul with joy uplift!
To thy feet the waves returning
Bring the Heavenly manna-drift
After many days!

MISGUIDED GIANTS.

Who Do the Real Damage to the Cause of Religious Truth.

It is not the small, weak men of the day who do the damage. These small men who go swearing and loafing about your stores and shops and banking-houses, assailing Christ and the Bible and the Church—they do not do the damage. They have no influence. They are vermin that you crush with your foot. But it is the giants of the day; the misguided giants, giants in physical power, or giants in mental acumen, or giants in social position, or giants in wealth, who do the damage. The men with sharp pens that stab religion and throw their poison all through our literature; the men who use the power of wealth to sanction iniquity, and bribe justice, and make truth and honor bow to their golden scepter. Misguided giants, look out for them. In the middle and the latter part of the last century no doubt there were thousands of men in Paris and Edinburgh and London who hated God and blasphemed the name of the Almighty; but they did but little mischief, they were small men, insignificant men. Yet there were giants in those days. Who can calculate the soul-havoc of a Rousseau, going on with a very enthusiasm of iniquity, with fiery imagination seizing upon the impulsive natures of his day? or David Hume, who employed his life as a spider employs its summer, in spinning out silken webs to trap the unwary? or Gibbon, who showed an uncontrollable grudge against religion in his history of one of the most fascinating periods of the world's existence, the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, a book in which, with all the splendors of his genius, he magnified the errors of Christian disciples, while, with a sparseness of notice that never can be forgiven, he treated of the Christian heroes of whom the world was not worthy? Oh, men of stout physical health, men of great mental stature, men of high social position, men of great power of any sort, understand your power, and know that that power devoted to God will be a crown on earth to you typical of a crown in Heaven; but misguided, bedraggled in sin, administrative of evil, God will thunder against you with His condemnation in the day when wealth and poverty, master and slave, King and subject, shall stand side by side in the judgment, and money-bags, and judicial ermine, and royal robe shall be riven with the lightnings.—Talmage, in N. Y. Observer.

THE USEFUL AND THE USELESS.

Read and Study the Bible in Preference to the Newspaper and Novel.

The attention of most men are directed to the process of accumulation. Few give sufficient attention to the art of dispossession. To know what to discard is quite as important as to know what to keep. Beside the railroad track one frequently sees piles of worn-out sleepers burning. After awhile it gets to be quite as important a matter to get rid of old sleepers as to hew out new ones. Many a man's mind is like a garret, packed and littered with rubbish which he has not been wise enough to throw away. Few, like Macaulay, have room both for rubbish and for good furnishing as well; the rubbish will usually crowd out the valuable articles. He who knows what to forget is a wise man.

There are some things that it is a positive duty to rid the mind of, if possible. Of this class is all that verges on profanity, irreverence and vulgarity—every story involving a double entendre, and every bit of scandal and slander against one's neighbor. These things not only litter up the mind with worse than useless rubbish, but, like some foul and decomposing carcass, they poison the mind and render it positively noxious to others. But there is another class of mental furnishing that is simply lumber, neither bad nor good in itself, but simply evil because it takes the place of that which is good. Of this character is much of the so-called news of the day. If we must read it, let us forget it as soon as possible. Of this class are ninety-nine out of every one hundred novels published. If they serve a purpose in relieving mental tension and resting an overworked mind, their mission is not a lasting one, and he who is foolish enough to read should at least be wise enough to forget them. Of this same kind of mental lumber is much school-book literature. It serves its purpose, but, as the cradle is useless and is relegated to the attic when the babies grow up, so the school-book has its place, but not a permanent place, among the mind's furniture. There is one Book that we can commit to heart without fear of littering the mind with rubbish. No one ever knew too much of the Bible; no one ever had it too readily at command. To replace his mental lumber with the pearls and gems of God's Word may well be the worthy ambition of every young person.—Golden Rule.

HAVING FUN.

Fallacy of the Idea That There is No Pleasure Outside of Sin.

Some one said to me: "Would you shut us young folks out from all fun?" Oh, no. I like fun. I believe in fun. I have had lots of it in my time. But I have not had to go into paths of sin to find it. No credit to me, but because of an extraordinary parental example and influence I was kept from outward transgression, though my heart was bad enough, and desperately wicked. I have had fun illimitable, though I never swore an oath, and never gambled for so much as the value of a pin, and never saw the inside of a haunt of sin save, as when ten years ago, with commissioners of police and a detective and two elders of my church, I explored those cities by midnight, not out of curiosity, but that I might, in pulpit discourse, set before the people the poverty and the horrors of underground city life. Yet I have had so much fun that I do not believe there is a man on the planet in the present time who has had more fun, and on the side of right. Sin may seem attractive, but it is deathful and like the man-skinned, a true [illegible] down and poisonous. The only genuine happiness is in an honest Christian life. There is no fun in shipwrecking your character, no fun in disgracing your father's name. There is no fun in breaking your mother's heart. There is no fun in the physical ravage of the dissolute. There is no fun in the profligate's death-bed. There is no fun in an endless eternity. [illegible], out of the ashes of a burnt [illegible], said he could recreate the [illegible], but he failed in the alchemic undertaking, and remade life once burned down in sin can never again be made to blossom.—Talmage, in N. Y. Observer.

SOMETHING WRONG.

A Few Indications of Passive or Negative Piety.

There is something wrong if the members of your family have to hear you talk in class meeting to assure [illegible] that you are a Christian.

There is something wrong if the people in your employ speak of you as an old skinflint.

There is something wrong if you never go to church except when you feel like it.

There is something wrong if you don't know to-day whether you would go to Heaven or not in case of death.

There is something wrong if you don't pay your debts, if you are able to.

There is something wrong if you are always splitting hairs with the Lord in money matters.

There is something wrong if you never mention the name of Jesus outside of prayer-meeting.

There is something wrong if you never pray except when you have to.

There is something wrong if you never go to church in bad weather.

There is something wrong if you haven't got any more religion to-day than you had ten years ago.

There is something wrong if you feel spiteful whenever you see another woman wearing a better hat than you do.

There is something wrong if you never tell your husband you are sorry you blowed him up for coming into the house with muddy boots on.

There is something wrong if you are not a good deal more anxious about getting other people to Heaven than you are to get there yourself.—Ram's Horn.

How to Succeed.

A good way to be happy is to try to be useful and helpful.

A good way to succeed is to be always trying to do your very best.

A good way to please God is to try to do the things you know Christ would do.

A good way to come out all right is to be sure to start right.

A good way to accomplish great things is never to slight little ones.

A good way to make sure of Heaven is to determine at once to go there.

A good way to get more talents is to use those you already possess.

A good way to resist temptation is to be always guarding against it.

A good way to be a growing Christian is to be a working one.

A good way to become a soul winner is to become a sin hater.—Ram's Horn.

CHOICE EXTRACTS.

—Nature never pretends.

—The course of nature is the art of God.—Young.

—Religion is an ornament in prosperity and a refuge in adversity.—Aristotle.

—To argue with unbelievers is to crack the whip after a runaway team.—Dr. Lyman Beecher.

—Sins are like circles in the water when a stone is thrown into it—one produces another.—Matthew Henry.

—It is with human character, very often, as it is with a torch; the more it is shaken the more it shines.—W. W. Newton.

—Do not expect commercial payment for the real benefits you may render mankind. Doing good is the great way of enriching character.—Dr. S. J. McPherson.

—Piety and true morality are but the same spirit differently manifested. Piety is religion with its face toward God; morality is religion with its face toward the world.—Tryon Edwards.

—Our Lord has a keen eye for all that is good. When He searches our hearts He never passes by the faintest longing, or desire, or faith, or love of any of His people. He says to each and all: "I know thy works."—C. H. Spurgeon.

—Some people are thinking and judging of themselves by what they are doing; but God looks at the heart, and God knows that a good tree can not bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit, so God wants man to get a new nature.—Sheet.

KIT CARSON FOOLED.

Indians Disguised as Wolves Deceive the Famous Scout.

Colonel Inman Repeats a Tale Told by the Old Frontiersman—How a Band of Indians Surprised a Body of Uncle Sam's Troops.

One night, nearly twenty-five years ago, I was camped with Kit Carson, Lucien B. Maxwell, General Carleton of the regular army and a couple of Apache Indians, half way up the rugged sides of the Raton Range, in the Rockies, writes Colonel Inman in the Kansas City Star. It was terribly cold, although mid-summer, and we huddled around a little fire of pine knots, many thousand feet above the sea level, close to the timber limit. We had no blankets, and, of course, were compelled to sit up through the long hours, smoke and tell stories to keep awake.

The night was very dark, there was no moon, and fortunately Carson was in a good humor for talking—usually he was the most reticent of men concerning himself. Maxwell made a casual remark in relation to some isolated peak near by, just discernible in the darkness, connecting the locality with some trouble he had with the Utes ten or a dozen years before, and his story opened Kit's mouth, who said it reminded him of one of the worst "difficults" he ever got into, and the only time when the Indians really "fooled" him. Kit always called his troubles with the savages "difficults." So Kit rolled a fresh corn-husk cigarette, while the rest of us filled our briar-woods and listened attentively to the famous old man—Maxwell, of course, was already familiar with his early life, but the story was new to the General and myself.

It was in 1842; both he and Maxwell were principal guides and hunters with General John C. Fremont on his expedition to the mouth of the Columbia. When in the Sierra Nevadas, the General sent Carson one day in advance of the main column to select a suitable campaign place, where the expedition was to remain several days for the purpose of taking some astronomical observations. The essentials were good water, timber and game, yet near an elevated point where there were not too many trees to shut out a fair view of the heavens. Kit started on his mission, moving so that he would not be more than two or three days in advance of the General, "blazing" his way, and setting up other signs agreed upon, by which his trail could be easily followed. The second afternoon out, it must have been near the crest of the Sierry range that marks the boundary between what is now Nevada and California according to Carson's description, he found a spot that fulfilled the General's requirements perfectly. It was a heavily timbered bottom, through which ran a pebbly brook, above which, at an elevation of only a few hundred feet, was a hill almost denuded by trees, with a flat prairie of several acres in extent—just the place to use instruments to advantage.

Kit camped in the timbered bottom on account of the intensely cold nights of the high altitude, making a big fire of logs, by which all the men slept, feet towards it, rolled up in their blankets, he volunteering to stand guard the first portion of the watch. He walked around, smoking cigarettes, until he got warmed through, then he would stand in the shadow of one of the big trees near the men, keeping his eye skinned, as he called it. Some time after the men were all asleep—perhaps an hour and a half had elapsed since the last smoker had knocked the ashes out of his pipe and rolled himself up and was snoring lustily—the wolves commenced to make a terrible noise in the timber. Kit said he could hear them growl and snap their jaws and fight and run through the brush, apparently coming nearer to the fire as they cavorted around. Pretty soon, Kit said he could see them playing together, but he did not want to shoot at them and drive them away; he knew the report of his rifle would only wake up the men who were sleeping so nicely after their hard day's march; besides he knew they were harmless, and were only attracted by the fire and the game the men had hung up in the trees; that the animals would play around there until the camp was abandoned in the morning and then come in to pick up what scraps they could find.

So Kit paid no more attention to the wolves, only to see them play and snap their teeth as he stood in the shadow of a big pine tree, where they couldn't see him. Presently, all at once, they came nearer, and "all of a suddint them wolves riz right up and fired a shower of arrows into the sleeping men; they was Indians, dressed in wolves' skins, and they made the snap of the jaws with two bones held in their hands."

Kit said he was never deceived that way before nor afterward; he thought they were wolves surely, and if it had been daylight, "spect he would 'a' seen 'em just a frolikin'." One or two of the men were hit, but not seriously. If the Indians had had rifles the result would have been disastrous, probably. The men all jumped up, of course, but could not draw a bead on the Indians (on account of the darkness), who scampered away safely in the night; yet there was not more sleep.

A CHILD ONCE MORE.

His Dying Moments a Dream of Boyhood's Happy Days.

The doctor said it was no unusual thing in delirium, but, says the Philadelphia Times, it seemed strange and pathetic to the loving watchers that the middle-aged, careworn man tossing wearily on a sick-bed should fancy himself again a child at his mother's knee. The green grave far away in a country village where she slept had no existence as far as he was concerned. She had never died, but was with her boy again. The many trials of life that had worn those deep lines in his face had passed from his memory now, and boyish woes and confidences alone were on his lips.

When his weeping wife laid her hand upon his fevered brow he looked up and smiled and called her "mother." The hand that held the medicine to his lips, that smoothed the pillow, was "mother's," and in all the faces that came and went about his bed he saw but hers, which had been the first his baby eyes had known, and over which the dews and snows of twenty years had lain.

He had forgotten her, oh, so many years. He had been too busy for years to lean his tired head upon that faithful, tender breast, and a thousand transient worldly things had clouded the image of that kind old mother, but as death's mighty hand set aside those perplexing, fretting distractions, all so little now, clear and sweet to his parched soul came the memory of an innocent childhood and a mother's love, and all at once he knew himself a weary, tumbled creature, sick and faint over earth's fevered, muddy draught, and he went back, like a little child, to her whose tenderness had never failed him, to drink once more of that pure, cleansing stream.

"Your little boy is tired, mother. The sun is very hot."

His children broke into sobs as he spoke, but his fatherhood was a thing unknown to him now.

"May I wear the new boots to-day, mother? Please! You said that I should. I'm not a girl, as the fellows said I was, any more, for you've cut my hateful curls. I'm 'most a man now, mother, and when I'm big I'll give you heaps and heaps of things; a red silk dress like Cousin Mary's, and a hat with a feather lots and lots longer than hers, most as long as my own, may be."

"I'm sleepy and I want to go to bed. I've been a bad boy some to-day, ain't I? but I'll ask God to forgive me, and if you do, I guess he will, too. Hear my prayers, mother; I've learned them quite by heart now."

They saw that the end was close at hand then, and his wife made a frantic appeal to him to recognize her, but his ears were fast dulling to all earthly sounds, and he only struggled to raise himself to his knees. They could have restrained him, but he said:

"Why, I can't go to sleep without saying my prayers. I've been a bad boy to-day, and God would be angry, mother."

Then they helped him up, and with tender arms supported the weakened form, while he knelt with upturned eyes fast dimming with death's film, and clasping his hands as a little child does by its crib side, prayed the sweet old petition of:

Now I lay me down to sleep,
And pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep.
And if I die before I wake
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to take.

And which among us dare to say the lisping, childish prayer had not the power Divine to wash away the dust and sin that are this sad old world's dark heritage.

HISTORICAL NOTES.

The First American Newspaper, Seminary and Insane Asylum.

In 1690 the first American newspaper—Publick Occurrences—was published in Boston, and published but once, writes H. G. Cutler in the Chicago News. It was too democratic, and was suppressed. The permanent institution appeared in the Boston News Letter, in April, 1704. Dr. Green, of the Massachusetts Historical Society, writes: "One copy only of the Publick Occurrences exists, and that is in London. The files of the Boston News Letter in the several libraries are very incomplete."

The first American magazine was published in Philadelphia by Benjamin Franklin, in 1741, being called the General Magazine and Historical Chronicle. In 1798 Charles Brockden Brown, a brilliant magazine writer and all-round litterateur, appeared as the first American novelist in a ghostly story entitled "Wieland; or the Transformation." F. D. Stone, secretary of the Pennsylvania Historical Society, has the first number of Franklin's magazine in keeping and Brown's "Wieland."

In 1749 the British Parliament recognized the Moravians as an Episcopal church, and encouraged them to emigrate to this country. During that year a colony established the first school for girls in the United States at Bethlehem, Pa. That village is still the seat of government for the northern district of the American province (or church diocese) and the original building of the seminary is yet standing.

At Williamsburg, Va., in 1773, was completed the first asylum exclusively for the insane in America. Pictures of the original building, which stood until destroyed by fire in 1885, were sent to the writer by Dr. J. D. Moncure, the present superintendent, who says: "It is the oldest asylum founded in this country, and I believe the fifth erected exclusively for this purpose in the world. We have the original records of the board of directors from December 10, 1770, to July 22, 1801.

"The following are the names of the original court of directors: Hon. William Nelson, president; Hon. and General Thomas Nelson, Robert Carter, Peyton Randolph, Robert Carter Nicholas (United States Treasurer), John Blair, Jr., George Wythe, Dudley Digges, Jr., Thomas Everard and John Tazewell."

It is of interest to learn that the cottage system was inaugurated in this—the Eastern Lunatic Asylum—as early as 1841, and that it has been followed ever since.

INCREDIBLE MEANNESS.

The Drummer Who Bought a Kiss and Didn't Pay for It.

The medal for the meanest man no longer belongs to the individual who turned the brick in his sidewalk to save buying new ones. At one of the Kansas City hotels the other day, says the Star of that city, a pretty little flaxen-haired, blue-eyed baby girl was playing with a big Newfoundland dog about the office, when she was induced to quit her romping and sit on the lap of a fat commercial traveler. The traveler amused the baby for awhile by showing her his watch, keyring and various trinkets, then seeing that the little one was restless and wanted to "det down," he promised to let her go if she kissed him first. His was not an attractive mouth, and the child strongly objected. As a final inducement, after much coaxing, the drummer went down in his pocket and pulled out a big, shining silver dollar and held it before baby with the remark: "If you give me a kiss you may have this." Such a glittering offer as this proved too much, so up went the little mouth, with lips puckered as though about to receive a dose of medicine, and "smack!" and all was over.

"Now 'oo div me the money," said the baby, holding out both of her chubby little hands to receive it. The man put the dollar back in his pocket, and instead fished out a copper cent and gave it to the child with the remark: "Now go and play with doggy."

A NOVEL use of the electric light is made on the St. Lawrence river, near the Thousand Island resorts. One of the lights has been placed at the end of a yardarm on the steamer St. Lawrence, which has a dynamo aboard. The light stands in front of a powerful reflector, and as the boat steams about at night among the islands the search-light is cast upon them, revealing with startling distinctness their beauty and the beauty of the landscape.

A NEW use for electric lights has been revealed by an Idahoan, who says that at home he takes the cheerful little electric bulb to bed with him. It keeps him warmer and snugger than all the rubber bags and tin boilers known, and the look of it alone on a cold night is, he thinks, as good as a roaring fire in a room. He considers it an altogether goodly thing to have around when the thermometer is forty degrees below zero, and he many a time goes to sleep with it between his feet.

THE FIRST WEDDING.

An Event That Occurred on the 1st of June in the Year 1.

What a morning that was of the world's first wedding! says Rev. Dr. Talmage, in the Ladies' Home Journal. Sky without a cloud. Atmosphere without a chill. Foliage without a crumpled leaf. Meadows without a thorn. It shall be in church—the great temple of a world, sky-domed, mountain-pillared, sapphire-roofed. The sparkling waters of the Gihon and the Hiddekel will make the fount of the temple. Larks, robins and goldfinches will chant the wedding march. Violet, lily and rose burning incense in the morning sun. Luxuriant vines sweeping their long trails through the forest aisle—upholstery of a spring morning. Wild beasts standing outside the circle looking on, like family servants from the back door gazing upon the nuptials; the eagle, king of birds; the locust, king of insects; the lion, king of beasts, waiting. Carpet of grass like emerald for the human pair to walk on. Hum of excitement, as there always is before a ceremony. Grass blades and leaves whispering and the birds a-chatter, each one to his mate. Hush, all the clouds. Hush, all the birds. Hush, the waters, for the King of the human race advances, and his bride. Perfect man, leading to the altar a perfect woman. God, her father, gives away the bride and angels are the witnesses, and tears of morning dew stand in the blue eyes of the violets. And Adam takes the round hand that has never been worn with work or stung with pain into his own stout grasp and says: "This is now bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh." Tumults of joy break forth and all the trees of the wood clap their hands, and all the galleries of the forest sound with carol and chirp and chant, and the circle of Edenic happiness is complete, for while every quail hath answering quail, and every fish answering fish, and every fowl answering fowl, and every beast of the forest a fit companion, at last man, the immortal, has for mate woman, the immortal.

MARRIED—Wednesday, the 1st day of June, in the year 1, Adam, the first man, to Eve, the first woman, High Heaven officiating.

BOY BLUE AND I.

When Dick was ten and I was eight,
Life's morning sweet and early!
While he wore aprons checked with blue,
And yet my hair was curly;
We used to read the livelong day
Strange tales and old romances;
Dick liked the Indian stories best,
But I had softer fancies.

[illegible] to fairy tales, alas!
And books with yellow covers;
I thought myself a heroine,
And went in search of lovers.
In my young heart in those fond days
Of bright, romantic weather,
Elves, soldiers, ogres, ghosts and war
Were all linked in together.

We had one play called Bunker Hill;
Dick always wished to play it,
I liked dolls better, though, of course
I was ashamed to say it.
Dick had a company of boys,
The name of one was Moses;
I made him once a soldier's cap
And trimmed it round with roses.

I followed in the ranks myself,
Their only banner bearing;
Dick fastened to my father's cane
The apron I was wearing.

O happy days, too briefly bright!
O memories quaint, but pleasant!
I can not bear to link to-day,
The glad past with the present!
My childhood's visions seem to mock
My lone heart, sad and smitten;
In dearer life-blood than my own
The page of war is written!

I know not where in death he sleeps—
Far distant from each other
I watched and wept, he fought and fell,
My brave and generous brother!
'Tis all we know. O no! not all—
He died as heroes perish;
He left a memory for our hearts
To fondly, proudly cherish.

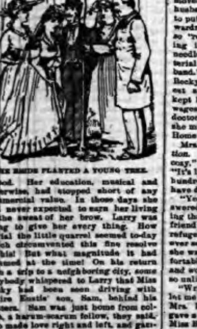
MISS BECKY'S HOME.

Why She Went to Live With an Old Gentleman.

MISS BECKY was going to the "Old Ladies' Home" at last. It was a sorry fact, but there was nothing else for her to do, it seemed. Who would think of offering any other home to a poor, almost helpless old woman who had out-lived her usefulness? Having passed her days in other people's houses, so to speak, she might not mind it as much, perhaps, as a more fortunate being.

"Yes," she said, "there's a vacancy in the 'Old Ladies' Home,' and the hundred dollars that Parson Amory left me will pay my way in, but it wouldn't last me long if I began to spend it, you know, and I shall have a warm bed and my regular meals without worrying about where the next one's coming from. I'm 'most tired worrying about ways and means. Seems as though I had been about it all my life, ever since father was taken with heart disease hearing the class in algebra. Now that the rheumatism has got the better of me, so that I can't work in cold weather, and the doctor says it'll draw my fingers up so that I can't use them, soon, it doesn't seem as if there was any thing left for me in this world but the Home—and I ought to be thankful for that!"

Miss Becky had had other expectations in her heyday, when young Larry Rogers met her and carried her basket; when his strong arm paddled her down the broad river to church on Sunday mornings; when they sang together in the choir from the same hymn book; when they loitered homeward in the fragrant summer dusk, and heard the whip-poor-will complain, and startled the fire-flies in the hedges as they brushed by. It sometimes seemed to Miss Becky as if all this had happened in another planet. She was young then, with a bloom on her cheek; but, although the rheumatism had bent her figure, and rendered her more or less helpless at times, yet her dark, velvety eyes looked out like soft stars, and the ghost of a dimple still flickered on cheek and chin in spite of her sixty-odd years. Miss Becky's father had been the district school-teacher in those far-off days of her girlhood. He had taught her the simple lore at his command, but it was Larry Rogers who had taught her music, hour after hour, in the empty old school-house; they had practiced together, while he wrote the score on the blackboard. But all this had not sufficed to enable her to earn a livelihood. Her education, musical and otherwise, had stopped short of any commercial value. In those days she had never expected to earn her living by the sweat of her brow. Larry was going to give her every thing. How trivial the little quarrel seemed to-day which circumvented this fine resolve of his! But what magnitude it had assumed at the time! On his return from a trip to a neighboring city, some busybody whispered to Larry that Miss Becky had been seen driving with Squire Eustis' son, Sam, behind his trotters. Sam was just home from college, a harum-scarum fellow, they said, who made love right and left, and gambled a bit; and when Larry reproached her with it she had not denied; she had simply said: "What then? If you choose to listen to gossip rather than wait till I tell you—"



THE BRIDE PLANTED A YOUNG TREE.

"But you didn't tell me; and I've been home a week."

"I had forgotten all about it till you reminded me," said Becky.

"It's such an every-day affair for you to drive with Sam Eustis!"—which incredulity so stung Becky that she would not condescend to explain that she had carried some needlework up to Squire Eustis' which she had been doing for his wife, and, that as she left to walk home, Sam was starting off with his smart chaise and new dapple-grays, and the Squire said: "Take Miss Becky home, Sam, and show her their paces;" and how she had been ashamed to refuse the kindness, although preferring to walk a thousand times; and how, once in the chaise, Sam had been the pink of courtesy, and had begged her to drive over with him to Parson Amory's, three miles out of her way, "that Lucy Amory may see that you don't disdain my company. For you see," said Sam, who was not as black as he was painted, or as many liked to suppose, "Lucy can make me what she will; without her I shall be nothing and nobody; but they've told her all kinds of wild things about me; they've told her she might just as well jump into the river as marry such a scapegrace. And perhaps if I made her a little jealous—you know there's no harm in that, is there? all's fair in love—and perhaps if the old folks see me driving about with Miss Becky Thorne my stock may go up, and I may be 'saved from the burning,' as Parson Amory says." And Becky had consented; how could she refuse to do a service for such a true lover? So slight a thing, too! She had often traversed the same road since, on foot, on her daily rounds of toil or mercy. Sam Eustis had married Lucy Amory years ago, and was the foremost man in the county to-day. Strange, how that friendly drive had interfered with Miss Becky's prospects; how the simple fact of carrying home Mrs. Eustis' needlework should have determined her fate, and devoted her to a life of hardship and the "Old Ladies' Home" at the end! Talk of trifles! Poor Miss Becky! she remembered that once or twice the opportunity had offered when she might have made it up with Larry; but pride, or a sort of fine reserve, had locked her lips—Larry ought to know that she was above silly flirtations. Once, when they had met at Lucy Amory's wedding, when they all went out into the orchard while the bride planted a young tree, and the guests looked for four-leaved clovers, she had found herself—whether by accident or design she could not tell—on the grass beside Larry; their fingers met over the same lucky clover, their eyes met above it, and for an instant she had it on her tongue's end to confess all about the drive and its result, to put pride in her pocket, but just then Nell Amory called to Larry.

"Oh, a horrid spider!—on my arm, Larry! Kill him, quick—do! Oh—oh—oh! I shall die—I shall faint!" and that was the end of it.

The old orchard, with its fragrant quince bushes, its gnarled apple trees, its four-leaved clovers, was a thing of the past; a cotton-mill roared and thundered there all day long where the birds built and the trees bourgeoned thirty odd years ago. It no longer blossomed, except in Miss Becky's memory. She had turned her thoughts to raising plants when she was left to her own resources, but one cruel winter's night killed all her slips and the capital was lacking by which she might re*new her stock. Since then she had* gone out for daily sewing, had watched with the sick, had been in demand for temporary housekeeper whenever a tired matron wished an outing; but latterly her eyes no longer served her for fine work, and sewing-machines had been introduced; she was not so alert in the sick-room as of yore; she moved more slowly, and her housekeeping talent was no longer in request; added to this, the bank where her little earnings had been growing one day failed and left her high and dry. Some of her friends had traveled to pastures new, some had married away, some had ignored and forgotten her. As for Larry Rogers, he had been away from Plymouth this many a year. Somebody had sent him abroad the year after Lucy Amory's marriage, to develope his musical genius. He had grown into a famous violinist, playing all over the country to crowded houses, before the finest people in the land. It was a beautiful romance to Miss Becky to read in the Plymouth Record about our "gifted townsman;" she seemed to hear the echo of his violin when the wind swept through the pine boughs. She had no bitter thoughts; she did not blame him because she sat in shadow, because her life had been colorless. She sang again the old tunes he had taught her, and made a little sunshine in her heart. All of happiness she had ever known he had brought her. Why should she complain? And now she was going to the "Old Ladies' Home."

"It isn't exactly what I expected in my youth," she said to the old doctor's widow.

"No; but you'll have a nice room and a bright fire, and the neighbors will drop in to see you and make it seem home-like. Now, there's old Mrs. Gunn; nothing can persuade her to go to the Home. She says it's only a genteel almshouse after all; and so she rubs along with what little she can earn and what the neighbors have a mind to send in; and they have to do it mightily gingerly, too, just as if they were asking a favor of her. Lor'! she doesn't earn her salt."

"I dare say," returned Miss Becky. "Now, if it hadn't been for the rheumatism I could earn my living for years yet, and, maybe, get something ahead again. But it seems as if the rheumatism laid in wait for the poor and friendless."

"You ought to have married when you were young, Becky," said the doctor's widow, who had forgotten all about Becky's love affair, and labored under the impression that she had never had a chance—an impression which matrons are apt to entertain concerning their single friends. Miss Becky had been spending some weeks with Mrs. Doctor Dwight, who had moved away from Plymouth after her husband's death. She was there chiefly to put some stitches into the widow's wardrobe, which nobody else would do so "reasonably," that lady's grief having incapacitated her for holding a needle, or giving her mind to the material details of "seam and gusset and band." But during the visit Miss Becky had been seized with her sharpest attack of rheumatism, which had kept her in bed for weeks, till her wages were exhausted by drugs and doctor's fees. It was at this time that she made up her mind to go into the Home on her return to Plymouth.

Mrs. Dwight saw her off at the station. "I hope you'll find the home cozy," she said, outside the car-window. "It's lucky Parson Amory left you that hundred dollars, after all. He might have doubled it."

"Yes, I suppose so," Miss Becky answered, meekly. Perhaps she was thinking that if she were Mrs. Dwight no old friend of hers should go begging for a refuge at an alms-house door, were it ever so genteel an alms-house. Perhaps she was thinking of the pretty, comfortable home waiting for her friend, and wondering why their fortunes were so unlike.

"Write when you reach Plymouth and let me know how you're suited," said Mrs. Dwight, and just then the cars gave a lurch and left her behind, and Miss Becky turned her glance inward. Somebody had taken the seat beside her.

"Your friend was speaking of Parson Amory, of Plymouth," said he. "I couldn't help hearing. I was born in Plymouth myself, but I haven't met a soul from there these twenty years. I'm on my way down to look up my old friends."

"Twenty years is a long time," answered Becky. "I'm afraid you won't find many of your friends left. You'll hardly know Plymouth."

"I suppose not—I suppose not. Have you lived there long?"

"I? I have lived there all my days."

"Good! I am hungry for news of the people. Tell me every thing you can think of. Did Parson Amory leave a fortune? He was called close. Where's Miss Nell—married or dead? I can see the old place in my mind's eye; and the parsonage under the elms, and the orchard behind it, where Lucy Amory planted a young tree on her wedding day, and the gown little Becky Thorne wore—by the way, is she alive? Do you know her?"

Miss Becky hesitated an instant.

"Yes," she replied, "I know her—more or less. She's alive."

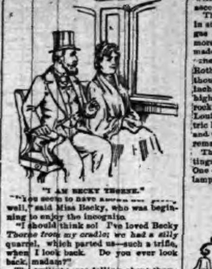
"And married?"

"Well, no, she never married."

"She must be sixty odd; she was a pretty creature, such dimples—I suppose they are wrinkles now! Where have the years gone? Is her home in the old place still?"

"Her home?" said Miss Becky, flushing a little, "she has none. She is on her way to the Old Ladies' Home."

"To the Old Ladies' Home! Becky Thorne!" he gasped; "and I—"



"I AM BECKY THORNE."

"You seem to have known her pretty well," said Miss Becky, who was beginning to enjoy the incognito.

"I should think so! I've loved Becky Thorne from my cradle; we had a silly quarrel, which parted us—such a trifle, when I look back. Do you ever look back, madam?"

The twilight was falling about them; Becky's face had grown a shade or two paler all at once; she turned her dark, velvety eyes full upon him with a startled air.

"You—" she said, "you must be Larry Rogers." Then the color swept to her checks in a crimson wave. "Do you know I never thought you had grown old like myself? Don't you know me? I am Becky Thorne!"

Just then the train thundered through the tunnel, and they forgot that they were sixty-odd.

"On the way to the Old Ladies' Home," she wrote Mrs. Dwight, "I was persuaded to go to an old gentleman's, instead."—Mary N. Prescott, in the Domestic Monthly.

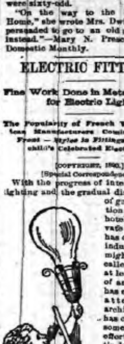
ELECTRIC FITTINGS.

Fine Work Done in Metal Fixtures for Electric Light.

The Popularity of French Work—American Manufacturers Coming to the Front — Styles in Fittings — Rothchild's Celebrated Electrolier.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

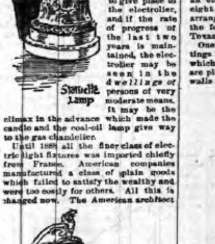
With the progress of interior electric lighting and the gradual disappearance of gas illumination in theaters, hotels and private dwellings has come a new industry. It might almost be called an art, or at least an ally of an art; for it has engaged the attention of architects and has called forth some of the best efforts of artistic designers.



Statuette Lamp

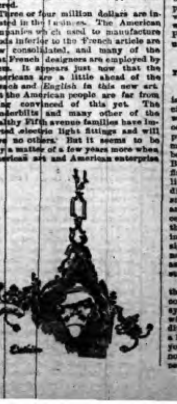
This new industry is the manufacture of electric light fixtures. Only two or three years ago it was in its infancy. To-day it has reached an importance almost as great as electric lighting itself, and has attracted millions in investment. The gas chandelier is daily receding to give place to the electrolier, and if the rate of progress of the last two years is maintained, the electrolier may be seen in the dwellings of persons of very moderate means. It may be the climax in the advance which made the candle and the coal-oil lamp give way to the gas chandelier.

Until 1888 all the finer class of electric light fixtures was imported chiefly from France. American companies manufactured a class of plain goods which failed to satisfy the wealthy and were too costly for others. All this is changed now. The American architect and the American artist have taken up the matter of interior electric lighting and the electric light fittings have become a part and parcel of architecture. The fittings are designed to suit the style of the architecture, and they cover many periods. Some of these are the Romanesque, the Renaissance (French and Italian), Louis XIV., Louis XV., Louis XVI., the Empire, Adams (English style), Colonial (American) and the nineteenth century revival of the Renaissance in the floral period. The materials in the fittings are chiefly wrought iron, brass and copper hammered.



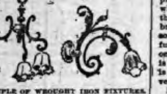
Two Brackets

Three or four million dollars are invested in the business. The American companies which used to manufacture goods inferior to the French article are now consolidated, and many of the best French designers are employed by them. It appears just now that the Americans are a little ahead of the French and English in this new art. But the American people are far from being convinced of this yet. The Vanderbilts and many other of the wealthy Fifth avenue families have imported electric light fittings and will have no others. But it seems to be only a matter of a few years more when American art and American enterprise will have overcome French and English ascendency.



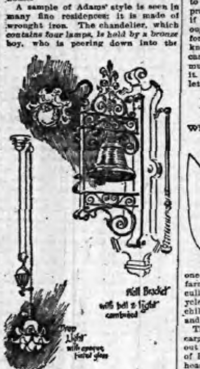
The fittings made to-day are as varied in style and far more artistic than the gas fixtures. They are considerably more costly, too. The costliest ever made was an electrolier, which now hangs in the drawing-room of Baron Rothschild, of London. It cost six thousand dollars. It is twenty-eight inches in diameter and about five feet high and is made of gilt bronze and rock crystal. The design is of the Louis XVI. period. Sixty-eight electric lights hang from the bronze leaves and the mellow diffusion of light is as remarkable as the beautiful design.

The cost of nearly all the finer fittings mount high up into the hundreds. One of the prettiest is a wrought-iron lamp with a dragon twisting himself around it and flames in the form of electric lights pouring from his mouth. There is one of these lamps in the residence of William C. Whitney, ex-Secretary of the Navy. Another is a cupid holding a lamp made of hammered copper. Ten of these are in Mr. Whitney's house.



A COUPLE OF WROUGHT IRON FIXTURES.

A sample of Adams' style is seen in many fine residences; it is made of wrought iron. The chandelier, which contains four lamps, is held by a bronze boy, who is peering down into the lights. The bracket lamps are mostly in the Louis XVI. style and are made to look as if they had been stored away for a hundred years and had just been taken from a dusty closet. The highest artistic efforts are spent on these brackets.



An immense electrolier was recently made in this city for a Roman Catholic church in Montreal. It has four hundred lights, is twelve feet high and sixty-seven feet wide. It is made principally of bronze and cost a number of thousands which the manufacturers do not care to name.

The same company, a few weeks ago, put up in the capitol at Austin, Tex., an electrolier fourteen feet high and eight feet in diameter. The lights are arranged to spell T-e-x-a-s and are in the form of a star, the "Lone Star of Texas."

One of the prettiest of the smaller fittings is a bronze fly from the mouth of which a light is pendant. These flies are placed at irregular intervals on the walls and make a curious and pretty effect. Cupids holding cut-glass balls, with drooping lamps of bronze and containing twenty-four lights, are among the finest of recent productions. One recently made for a Chicago millionaire cost four thousand dollars.

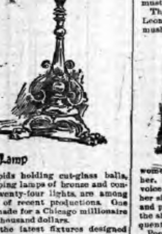


Table Lamp

One of the latest fixtures designed and now in process of manufacture is a nine-light oak-leaf electrolier of pierced china with colored metal. It will adorn an up-town hotel.

To fit up a large private house in the latest styles of electric lighting costs from fifteen thousand to twenty thousand dollars, exclusive of the plant. Of course handsome fittings can be had for one-fourth of that amount, but those who want "the latest" have to pay extremely fancy prices.

Some of the finest fittings have lately been put into steamboats. The Puritan, of the Fall River line, has a thirteen-thousand-dollar set of lamps. The pillars in the grand saloon are adorned with floral hammered leaves, from which hundreds of lights jut out. The Pilgrim, of the same line, is to be fitted up in the same way.

DON'T KISS MY BABY.

That Is What Every Mother Should Say to Her Gushing Friends.

The promiscuous kissing of children is a pestilent practice, writes a physician in the Old Homestead. We use the word advisedly, and it is mild for the occasion. Murderous would be the proper word, did the kissers know the mischief they do. Do you remember calling on your dear friend, Mrs. Brown, the other day, with a strip of flannel around your neck? And when little Flora came dancing into the room, didn't you pounce upon her demon*stratively, call her a precious little pet,* and kiss her? Then you serenely proceeded to describe the dreadful sore throat that kept you from prayer-meeting the night before. You had no designs on the dear child's life, we know; nevertheless you killed her! Killed her as surely as if you had fed her with strychnine or arsenic.

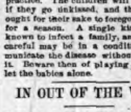
Your carelessness was fatal. Two or three days after the little pet began to complain of a sore throat, too. The symptoms grew rapidly alarming, and when the doctor came the simple word diphtheria explained them all. To-day a little mound is the sole memento of your visit. Of course the mother did not suspect, and would not dare to suspect you of any instrumentality in her bereavement. She charges it to a mysterious providence. The doctor says nothing to disturb the delusion—that would be impolitic if not cruel—but to an outsider he is free to say that the child's death was due directly to your stupidity. These are precisely his words; and who shall say, under the circumstances, that they are not justifiable?

It would be hard to tell how much of the prevalent illness and mortality from diphtheria is due to such want of thought. As a rule adults have the disease in so mild a form that they mistake it for a simple cold, and as a cold is not contagious, they think not of exposing others to their breath or the greater danger of labial contact. Taking into consideration the well-established fact that diphtheria is usually, if not always, communicated by direct transplanting of the malignant vegetation which causes the disease, the fact that there can be no more certain means of bringing the contagion to its favorite soil than the act of kissing, and the further fact that the kissing of children on all occasions is all but universal, it is not surprising that, when the disease is once imported into a community, it is very likely to become epidemic.

It would be absurd to charge the spread of diphtheria entirely to the practice of child-kissing. There are other modes of propagation, though it is hard to conceive of any more directly suited to the spread of the infection or more general in its operation. It stands to diphtheria in about the same relation that promiscuous hand-shaking formerly did to the itch. It were better to avoid the practice. The children will not suffer if they go unkissed, and their friends ought for their sake to forego the luxury for a season. A single kiss has been known to infect a family, and the most careful may be in a condition to communicate the disease without knowing it. Beware then of playing Judas, and let the babies alone.

IN OUT OF THE WET.

With No Apologies to Some Lady Writers of Fiction.



NATURE, in her great laboratory, can work wonders with very poor instruments. The instruments she used with which to mold the fair form of Leonora Scruggs were one of those feeders of the world, a farmer's hired man, and a belle of the culinary department, sacrilegiously yclept a hash-jerker. Leonora was a child of nature, and likewise of Peter and Betsey Scruggs.

The years go fleeting by with their cargoes of hopes and joys, of "nights out painting the town," of toil and moil, of Budweiser beer, of unpaid bills, of heart burnings and other physical ailments, and Leonora Scruggs has changed from the budding convolvulus of sweet girlhood to the redder and full-blown paeonia of womanhood, and all unknown to her, her fate is coming toward her, relentlessly, surely, sent by his employer to collect the price of a copy of "Samantha at Saratoga," which Leonora, in a moment of abstraction, forgetting that her wages was only four dollars a week and Sunday nights out, had ordered.

Seated in the pantry, the outlines of her fair young form rather promiscuously revealed by her loose-fitting Mamma Hubbard, was Leonora, bathing her guileless young feet in a dishpan, when the door-bell was rung savagely and a reformed salvation army major called for Miss Scruggs.

If I had a little more time to devote to writing this, I would now work in several exclamatory sentences about the shadow of the destiny that was falling upon Miss Scruggs, and upon the dishpan and pantry, but tempus is skipping and I must on.

The voice of the stranger sounded to Leonora like the sweet gurgle of boiling mush and the sacred hour that comes to women nominally but once, was upon her, and she knew that she heard the voice of the man who was to walk by her side, and put up with her kicking, and pay her millinery bills through all the shadowy years of the misty subsequently.

Peeping coyly from behind the door, and at the same time gracefully inserting her innocent feet in an old pair of carpet slippers, Leonora bashfully lisped: "Ah, there! my size."

Andronicus O'Vanderpeel raised his hat, thereby showing his wealth of carrot-hued hair, took a hitch at his pants, which were supported by an antique belt, stood on one foot, and in rich, manly tones, replied:

"Morning, lady; fine day; gotcher Smanthy at Sairtoga; two dollars, please."

Fairly carried away by the emotions the voice of Andronicus set stirring in her bosom, Leonora could only murmur, while the tell-tale hair-oil trickled across her forehead and down her nose:

"Come, now, McGinty, don't be a chump; I won't pay for no dad-binged book, but the folks is away from home, and if you want to come in and help me pare these taters we'll have more fun than some people have sheep."

And thus were two more heaven-born souls warmed by the glorious sunshine of love; thus did the only true secret of happiness come to two lives; thus did two full-grown people grow so spooney upon each other that in thirty minutes he was calling her The Pride of His Life, and ere the lagging hour-hand had circled once around its course she was sitting on his lap and calling him "baby." And ere the ruddy sun had buried his radiant features behind the western hills Andronicus had experienced the rich, I might even say opulent, pleasure of holding a one hundred and forty-pound girl on his knees for four mortal hours, and, when, in a voice choked with emotion, he asked her if she would "get hitched" to him, she buried her fat young face between the lapels of his vest, and murmured: "Bet yer neck."—V. WEBSTER ON THE ISSUE.

In 1820, [illegible] foreign importations [illegible] per cent. An effort was [illegible] made by certain interested [illegible] to advance them, and for the purpose of protesting against such proposed tariff increase a meeting was held in Faneuil Hall, Boston, under the auspices of the most prominent business men of that city. The assemblage was addressed by Daniel Webster, who in the course of his remarks used the following language:

"To [illegible] the policy is as injurious as it is [illegible]. A system of artificial government protection leads the people to [illegible] such reliance upon Government. [illegible] left to their own choice of pursuits, they depend on their own skill and their own industry; but if Government essentially affects their occupations by its systems of bounties and preferences, it is natural that when in distress they should call on the Government for relief. [illegible] a perpetual contest follows, carried on between the different interests of society. Agriculturists taxed [illegible] manufactures—commerce taxed to [illegible] agriculture—and [illegible] both manufactures and agriculture to support [illegible], and when Government has exhausted its invention in these modes of legislation it finds the result less favorable than the original and natural state and course of things.' I can hardly conceive of anything worse than a policy which should place the great interests of this country in hostility to one another, a policy which should keep them in constant conflict, and bring them every year to fight their battles in the committee rooms of the House of Representatives at Washington."

Seventy years have passed since Daniel Webster, one of the most distinguished statesmen this country ever knew, in the foregoing [illegible] remarks [illegible] the "system of Government bounties and preferences," and plainly predicted the evils sure to follow such a mistaken policy.

The [illegible] foretold by Mr. Webster [illegible] full [illegible]. The tariff instead of [illegible] just and general protection to all the people and every industry, has been [illegible] into an agency for the enrichment of a favored few at the expense of the general many. Then again [illegible] conflicting interests fighting battles in the committee rooms of Congress, [illegible] predicted by Mr. Webster, has during the present session been a disgraceful [illegible].

Coal and iron barons, Trust combines of different sorts [illegible] plundering intent, [illegible] the glass producers, wool growers, [illegible] raisers, salt makers, lumber barons, and scores of other selfish claimants [illegible] shouting and demanding [illegible] for alleged poor starving [illegible] infants, many of whom were born over two generations ago.

TIN.

Mr. B[illegible], of Boston, the tin manufacturer, is [illegible] in condemnation of the [illegible] and outrageous tariff increase placed on tin plates by the McKinley bill. He says:

"The burden will principally fall on the poor [illegible].

The poor use as many canned goods as the rich, and there are more of them.—

While the rich have gas, the poor have kerosene, which requires them to have a can to keep it in.

The rich man needs no can for his gas. The poor man uses the can where the rich man has his gas pipe.

The McKinley bill is framed in the interest of Pennsylvania, and Quay is boss of the whole thing.

"I have been a Republican ever since the party started, but hereafter I shall vote for [illegible], regardless of slippers or brass."

To the opinion of Mr. [illegible] we may appropriately add that of Senator Turpie of Indiana, who, in the course of the tariff discussion, said:

"The demand for a tariff tax on tin is merely [illegible] on the part of a [illegible] to compel the people of this country to buy and use the bogus [illegible] of the American Tin-Plate Company of [illegible]—galvanized iron."

IS THE POISON ITSELF A WITNESS?

Further Details of the Story of Attempted Murder Told by Mrs. Hose—The Wife [illegible] the Tale, and [illegible] "the Family Brought," but the Husband Claims to Be the Victim of Foul Conspiracy.

Henry Hose, who is accused by his wife of the attempted murder of his little daughter, as told exclusively in THE PRESS of Tuesday, has been released from the North Plainfield lock-up, on the payment of the fine in default of which he stood committed. Some are inclined to discredit the story told by Mrs. Hose and her children, claiming that she is more to blame than he, but Mrs. Hose insists that every word of her tale is gospel truth, and the fact that the children corroborate it so closely convinced Justice Hardy that the complaint was based on facts.

The origin of the trouble among the Hose family dates a long time back. It first manifested itself two years ago, when Hose is said to have had a wrangle with aged Francis Bernard. Mrs. Bernard had long received personal attention at the hands of Mrs. Hose, and out of gratitude promised to give her the dwelling in which the Hoses had been living and the plot of land surrounding it. Mrs. Bernard did not want Hose to get hold of the property, and, it is alleged, continually cautioned Mrs. Hose against him. Bad feeling was thereby engendered, and after Mrs. Bernard's death Hose and Bernard had frequent controversies. Hose is reported to have declared that his wife had conspired with the Bernards against him, and to have become so violent, at the time mentioned, about two years ago, that Mrs. Hose and Bernard had to seek the protection of the authorities. Justice Hardy then was asked by Mrs. Hose to go into the house and pacify the husband. Mr. Hardy says that to obey this request he had to break his way through a door, and was met face to face by Hose, who brandished a butcher knife menacingly. Hardy was unarmed, but, under pretense of drawing a revolver, frightened Hose into dropping his bloodthirsty weapon, and eventually restored peace. Last week, after occasional intervening outbreaks, the Hose volcano broke out again, and Hose was arrested and fined. The story of Mrs. Hose, relating how—in a mad rage at her giving evidence against him, and out of desire for revenge—he is alleged to have sought to poison both her children and then himself, has already been told in THE PRESS. Forces are said to have been at work to induce Mrs. Hose to withdraw the complaint against her husband. Whether or not the alleged attempt to hush up the case will be successful remains to be seen. If the case comes to trial the partly-emptied package of rat poison which Mrs. Hose says was used by her husband in his alleged attempt at murder and suicide will be used as evidence against him.

Hose has a reputation for being an industrious, hard-working man, and is said to be utterly guiltless of the brutality which Mrs. Hose has charged. A PRESS reporter sought to obtain, in an interview, a statement of his side of the story, concerning the claim that he is a victim of conspiracy, but he refused to say anything for publication. The columns of THE PRESS are open to him for whatever he may have to say in vindication of himself.

Two Boys and a Runaway Horse.

A horse owned by P. J. [illegible], from over the mountain, ran away on West Fifth street Monday afternoon, overturned the buggy to which it was attached and dragged the buggy, with two boys underneath it, several blocks. The boys had their garments soiled, and were somewhat frightened, but when the horse broke away from the torn harness and broken buggy and they were given a chance to crawl out they had life enough left to give the horse a vigorous chase. They were gleeful when it was caught.

A Cheerful Party of Royal Arcanumites.

The "informal clam chowder" given at the rooms of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, Monday night, was understood to be to District Deputy Grand Regent, A. W. [illegible], and it was a fine one. Wm. [illegible] Lyon and Charles Kellogg, of the Committee on the Good of the Order, attended to the lay out and its service in a way that thoroughly satisfied every [illegible] present.

Besides this feast of material good things, there was a feast of good things for the mind. The large delegation of members present from Fireside Council of Westfield, came up loaded with a programme of entertainment. Of this, of course, the best was Editor Pearsall's contribution. Past Regent Grant, also, was much appreciated, and the music all round was good. E. M. Rodman delivered one of those most interesting addresses of his that are always so highly enjoyed.

Dunellen Has a Congress.

A local congress of the North American Endowment Association, the first outside of New England, was organized at the W. C. T. U. rooms, Dunellen, Sept. 17, through the efforts of C. W. [illegible]. The following officers were elected:

President—Frank [illegible].
Vice President—[illegible], M. D.
Secretary—W. [illegible].
Treasurer—J. D. [illegible].
[illegible]—[illegible] L. [illegible].
[illegible]—[illegible].
[illegible]—[illegible].

The Congress, which numbers over 40 members, is a growth of less than three weeks' canvassing and which is in a most promising condition, was christened the Dunellen Congress, No. 20. J. W. Flaherty, of Boston, Mass., Supreme Vice President of the North American, was present and explained the principles and workings of the organization. The next regular meeting will be Tuesday evening, October [illegible], when the charter will be closed.

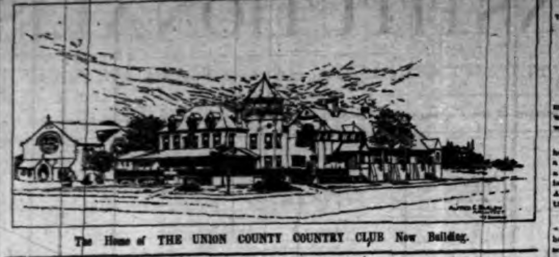
A Large Estate.

A broad land is this in which we live, dotted so thickly with thrifty cities, towns and villages! And in them all, with ever-increasing popularity and helpfulness, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, giving hope and cheer where there is disease and despair. Wherever there is humanity there is suffering; wherever there is suffering there is the best field for this greatest American Remedy. Consumption (which is lung-scrofula), yields to it, if employed in the early stages of the disease; Chronic Nasal Catarrh yields to it; Kidney and Liver diseases yield to it! [illegible]



The Home of THE UNION COUNTY COUNTRY CLUB New Building.

Eventually No Club House Will Equal It.

In addition to the complete and exclusive description already given in these columns of the rise, progress and intentions of the Union County Country Club, THE PRESS today presents a picture of the club's house and Casino as it will all appear when completed at the corner of West Seventh street and Arlington avenue. The work is rapidly progressing and the contractors have agreed to have the building ready for occupancy by November 1.

The building committee includes—Chairman Pliny Fisk, and Messrs Rowland Cox, D. C. Ivins, W. P. Smith, W. Bloodgood, H. M. Stockton and H. P. Talmage. To them is due much credit for the good taste of the building without and within. The architect Alfred E. Barlow, of New York, is renowned for the beauty and appropriateness of his work. The Berkeley Lyceum, N. Y. city, of which he is the architect, is one of the most admired buildings in that metropolis. To him is due also the praise so universally expressed, for the artistic remodeling of the Pliny Fisk residence on West Seventh street.

The exterior of the club house is described above by THE PRESS' artist. The description of the interior is as follows, written by Architect Barlow himself:

The purposes of this Club are to promote social intercourse among its members and to provide them with the conveniences of a club house and casino.

With this object in view the Governors have purchased the Arnold property, situated on the northwest corner of Seventh street and Arlington avenue, being 140 feet on the front and 200 feet deep.

Extending across the front and rear of the house are verandas 12 feet wide, the former being extended at an angle to provide ample carriage entrance.

The Reception Hall is 20 feet long by 16 feet wide, with heavy beam ceiling, with a large fireplace at west end. Beyond is the Reading Room, 15 feet square, which with rear veranda overlooks the tennis courts.

To the right on entering is the Parlor, 15 feet square, opening into the Dining Room, 19 by 15 feet. These rooms, with offices for service and staircase, constitute the ground floor. Above, on the second story, are to be found the billiard room, three card rooms, toilet, service room, and private dining and committee rooms, with large balcony in rear commanding the outdoor games.

Accommodation for servants is provided in the third story, and in the basement are the baths, toilet, coal room and ample store rooms and kitchen facilities. The buildings throughout will be heated by steam in the most approved manner. The decorative treatment is to be simple and appropriate.

Attached to the northeast angle of the club house and extending parallel with Arlington avenue, is the Casino. With the intent of a sufficiently convenient connection with the club house by temporary covers when needed, no direct communication between the two has been provided, and the connecting lines are the open terrace on the front and covered veranda on the side.

The main entrance is by the Arlington avenue porch to foyer, 19 feet long by 9 feet wide, to Hall and to the ladies' room, 19 by 14 feet.

Over these rooms is a balcony, seating 200, communicating with second story of club house.

The Hall is 75 by 40 feet, provision being made at the north end for stage and dressing rooms. Total seating capacity will be about 500. The ceiling is semicircular in section, with especial reference to the best acoustic effects, and with the three [illegible] bay windows and large hooded fireplace at the south end, will doubtless afford for the higher class of entertainments, the quietly picturesque and comfortable room so long needed in Plainfield.

The Casino will be heated by steam and effectually ventilated in the best manner.

In the basement four of the best planned bowling alleys are to be built for the convenience of club members and their families.

In the angle formed by the junction of Club House and Casino are to be placed one double and two single tennis courts, with sufficient remaining space for croquet games. On the rear line of lot provisions will be made for ladies' dressing rooms and lockers, and for wagon sheds.

In the course of time other desirable features will be added as the resources of the association justify, and eventually no similar organization will possess a more completely equipped Club House and grounds.

John Chandler has the contract for the carpenter work, Isaac Pangborn the masonry, and A. M. Griffen the plumbing. Contracts for the steam heating and electric lighting are not yet awarded. Additional particulars of all this were published in THE PRESS of August 9.

The membership of the club is limited to 100. That number is almost filled. Besides the assembly balls and the club's own receptions, the Melopoia will give its musicales in the new Casino, and possibly the Monday Afternoon women will lease it for their lectures on art, social ethics, etc.

The Board of Governors consists of the following officers and members:

President—Harry G. Runkle.
Vice President—William Bloodgood.
Secretary—William T. Kauffman.
Treasurer—Pliny Fisk.
DeWitt Clinton Ivins, William Palmer Smith, W. S. Fox, Charles C. Brooks, Henry P. Talmage, Harry M. Stockton, E. S. Mason, and Charles J. Fisk.

How Jimmy McKee Got His Horse Back.

Some days ago James McKee, the well-known trainer and driver of trotting horses, so long a resident of this city, sold his fast gray gelding John M. to a swell resident of Asbury Park at figures not far from $2,000.

The buyer posed as a rich fancier of trotting stock, and McKee unhesitatingly accepted a check on a New York city bank for the purchase money. The check was dishonored by the bank. McKee interviewed the buyer, who was profuse in apologies and explanations and promises. McKee secured a small payment and another check fortified by a chattel mortgage on the horse. The second check likewise failed to materialize in money. Thereupon McKee started into Jersey on a still hunt for his horse. He found it in a stable at Mount Holly, and pounced upon it by virtue of the chattel mortgage, and made a forced march with his property back to his stables at Goshen. Now "Jimmy" brags to his friends how [illegible] he worked his way out of a bad scrape.

ARTHUR WEBB'S TERRIBLE SUICIDE.

He Climbs Up on an Elevated Railroad Pillar to Kill Himself.

A number of the readers of this will remember Arthur C. Webb, the youngest brother of the late Otis G. Webb, for many years President of the Plainfield Athletic Club, and also a brother of Irving, Harry and Ernest Webb all boys who grew up in Westfield and were well-known and popular in this city and vicinity. Tuesday morning Arthur lay down in front of an elevated railroad train in Brooklyn with suicidal intent and was killed. He was an eccentric man. He was married, but he did not live with his wife, who lives in Bayonne. He had not done any work for three months. He boarded with W. S. VanHorn, at 1,209 Broadway, Brooklyn. His brother Ernest, a prosperous lawyer, paid his board. Monday afternoon he called at his brother's office. He returned late in the afternoon, but in very good spirits. He went to bed early. He slept in a hall room facing the streets. The tracks of the Union Elevated Railroad run along on a level with and ten feet away from the window. There is a wooden awning in front of the house 1,209 Broadway, and a pillar of the elevated road runs up at nearly the centre of this, on the line with the curb.

Some time before 6 o'clock yesterday morning Webb got up and put on his shirt, his trousers, and his stockings. Then he raised the window in his room, climbed out on the cornice and walked along to the awning and down the awning to the rail pillar. He climbed up that to the tracks by means of the bolt heads. At just 6 o'clock James Fletcher, a colored man who lives at 1,190 Broadway, looked out of his window and saw him standing on the railroad walk inside the down track of the road. He noticed that Webb was hatless and coatless. The place he was standing at was 200 feet from 1,1[illegible] Broadway, and 500 feet from the DeKalb avenue station of the elevated road. A train was nearing the station. Fletcher saw him deliberately lie down on the track in front of it. He shouted to his wife. At the same time the engine whistle shrieked, and the engineer reversed his engine. It was less than 20 feet from Webb, and the train could not stop. The engine struck him. He was frightfully injured, but he lived and remained conscious until he was taken to St. Mary's Hospital. He refused to say why he wanted to commit suicide, but continually moaned "Oh, let me die."

Mr. VanHorn told a reporter there was no doubt in his mind but that Webb was crazy. One man said he had understood Webb to say it was intended to put him in the Flatbush Asylum, and he would rather die than go there.

THE BOROUGH WAR IS ENDED.

The Telegraph Poles Will Go Where the People Say, and Nowhere Else.

The telegraph pole war in the Borough is at an end. The story of its outbreak, as told exclusively in THE PRESS of Monday, came to the knowledge of Joseph A. McClary, General Manager of the New Jersey Postal Telegraph Company, and Division Manager of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, and he promptly visited this city, displayed the olive branch of peace, and put an end to all hostility. The holes which had been dug along Greenbrook road, Grove street and Willow avenue were for the poles of the New Jersey Postal Telegraph Company, as was surmised. Mr. McClary says that they were dug under the direction of a foreman who exceeded his authority. The Company has no desire to do anything contrary to the wishes of the people, and will not erect any poles without consent of the property-owners. The local foreman did not understand this. He thought he must go ahead and complete the line through Plainfield and North Plainfield in a hurry, and he didn't trouble himself about the wishes of the people or anybody else. As soon as Mr. McClary found that holes had been dug where the people didn't want them he ordered them filled up, and his command was promptly obeyed. The route for the line mapped out by the local foreman has been abandoned, and the poles will be erected along a route against which there is no objection. Mr. McClary has given orders that the property-owners' consent must be secured in every instance preliminary to excavation. His Company aims to please the public now and always.

The Hon. John Kean, Jr., Has Both Eyes on the Water Works Plant.

The train arriving in Plainfield on Tuesday at 11:26, deposited at the station Hon. John Kean, Jr., and Counsellor Frank Bergen, of Elizabeth, the new members of the board of directors of the Plainfield Water Supply Co., whose election and the subsequent choice of Mr. Bergen as President of the Board, has already been exclusively told of in these columns.

These two gentlemen took a carriage at the station and drove about the city. It might have been only a coincidence, but the route they took was the same as that laid down by the Water Works company for their street mains. Mr. Kean sat on the back seat, and Mr. Bergen in front. The former was seen to frequently wave his hand to the right or left while speaking, as though asserting that Mr. Kean of the Water Supply Co., would change this plan of the Water Works Co., or intimating that he approved of that.

The "New company," which THE PRESS has already explained is a combination of Contract and Charter owners, has not yet submitted to the Water Board a proposition of what they are willing to do. Messrs Kean, Bergen and other directors held a meeting Tuesday afternoon and probably drew up such a proposition. As soon as it is received by Messrs Newhall and Rushmore, they will call a meeting of the Council and submit it. Then the Council will or will not approve, as they see fit.

OBITUARY.

William Hunt Cleaver.

The impressive spectacle of a patriarch whose frame is still robust falling peacefully asleep for eternity was witnessed at the home of the Rev. J. B. Cleaver on Wednesday, when the pastor's venerable father, William Hunt Cleaver, breathed his last.

William Hunt Cleaver was born in Vermont in 1798, and was a nephew of Wm Cleaver, Bishop of York, and later of St. Asaph's. Mr. Cleaver taught the village school at Scotch Plains, seventy years ago. Among those who were his pupils are the learned A. Coles, M. D., "poet laureate of Scotch Plains," and a well-known official of this city. Mr. Cleaver voted first for Adams, was contemporaneous with every President of the United States, and survived all of them excepting three.

Mr. Cleaver was very active for so aged a man, even to the day of his death, and his wife, who survives him, and who is in her eighty-eighth year, is also vigorous. The aged couple ate their sixty-ninth wedding breakfast at the home of their son in North Plainfield the morning of Sunday, July 13. They were married on a Sunday morning, before breakfast, at the home of the bride's father, John Darby, Scotch Plains, in 1821.

Mrs Cleaver's uncle, Ezra Darby of Scotch Plains, represented New Jersey in Congress, when the State had but one Congressman. Mr. Darby died at his post, and was buried in the Congressional Cemetery at Washington.

Mrs. Cleaver's cousin, Henry Stanbery, also of Scotch Plains birth, was Attorney General of the United States, during President Johnson's administration. Mr. Stanbery resigned his high office for the purpose of defending his chief in the impeachment trial which has passed into history as the greatest State case of the age. President Johnson was not impeached.

CAUGHT WITH HER FAITHLESS LOVER.

The Bliss and Romance of a June Elopement Ended—A Young Girl's Happiness Shattered for Life.

Laura Robinson, the fifteen-year old school-girl, who eloped last June with coachman William McQuay, a colored man twice her age, as told exclusively in THE PRESS at the time, has been found with her paramour in Boston, where for the past three months the two have been hiding.

When the elopers reached Boston, McQuay had not money enough to purchase a license and to pay the other necessary marriage expenses, and the ill-assorted lovers had a hard time of it. The romantic glamour of the adventure was not lasting, and the fascination which held the girl spell-bound soon vanished. After the first fleeting days McQuay avoided even a reference to the marriage tie, and at last refused point-blank to consent to a wedding. As the full realization of her shame dawned on her, Laura sought to escape from her betrayer, but he menaced her into obedience, and would not let her leave his sight. The urgent need of money prompted McQuay to look for work, and after a bitter struggle succeeded in finding a place in a hotel. The proprietor of the house wrote, at McQuay's suggestion, to E. L. Finch, of Park avenue, Plainfield, where McQuay was formerly employed, for reference. Mr. Finch at once communicated with the Robinson family, and Mrs. Robinson, Laura's mother, left for Boston last week. Saturday afternoon she telegraphed that she was with Laura and that McQuay was under arrest. Sunday Mr. Robinson also went to Boston, to make arrangements to bring all the parties back to this city today. Laura is very penitent, and is glad to be received home again. She bewails her folly and her lover's treachery, and says that the happiness of her entire life-time has been blighted.

Since McQuay's perfidy came to light his record has been traced, and it is said that he is an escaped prisoner from the State Prison at Baltimore. Laura's elder sister, Emma, to whom McQuay was considered engaged, is reported as saying that she can never forgive William for his duplicity, and wants him punished to the full extent of the law.

Laura was one of Plainfield's most promising colored girls, the daughter of Mansfield Robinson of East Second street, and was an advanced pupil at the Stillman High School. It is probable that McQuay will be tried on various charges.

Caught The Hotel Sneaker.

Officer Marsh Thursday arrested Bernard Beatty, for breaking and entering Frederick Coombs' Hotel, Westfield, the night of September 5, last, and for stealing one gold watch, three boxes of cigars and the contents of the money drawer consisting of a dollar or two in silver; as told in THE PRESS at the time.

The officer recovered the watch, Beatty having pawned it. He was taken before Justice Hart and committed to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury in October next.

HERE ENDETH THE SECOND LESSON.

Though the Women of the Tribe of the Crescents Were Present in Great Numbers, and in the Beginning Waxed Proud and Cheered With a Mighty Noise, Yet the Maidens of Somerville Who Were but Few Yelled Last and Yelled Loudest.

1. And it cometh to pass that there was much excitement within the camps of the warriors even before the dawn of the day when they would meet again in battle.

2. And he that was called Chuck, and he that was called Tee Kay, traveled into a far off country and there found one with a south paw who for much silver promised to lead the Crescents forth to victory. And there was much rejoicing among them there t.

3. But in the camp of the enemy there was lamentation. For during the night, he that holdeth down the base so many seek in vain, had gone forth to don the mask and the mammoth mitten of the tribe of the Crescents. And though he, the son of O'Rourke, had been once called Tommy by his brethren of the West End, henceforth they nameth him Tomis.

4. And when the day cometh that the two tribes meet again upon the field, verily a great crowd of people had assembled. The hosts of the Crescents gathered in mighty numbers, yea in hundreds and thousands. And the aged were there, and the priests of the synagogue, and the youth of all kinds.

5. And the noise that went up was a mighty noise when the tribe of the Crescents saw what looketh like victory. For of those who had assembled but few cometh from the far off country of the West Ends. Yet though they were few, in the end they getteth there with all their feet and they cheereth yet, while the Crescent hosts are silent.

6. As the battle progresseth it was seen that although the Crescents hitteth the ball and getteth the most bases, yet were they like unto children in running them. The battle was often their's, yet they giveth it up. The Chiefs of the tribe banished not he who is called sometime Wiegand but most times Slow Freight. Yet out the hands and feet of him came forth defeat.

7. At one time he of the south paw who was called Doran, throweth the ball into the hands of he on the first base, but he droppeth it; and thereupon he of the enemy who playeth so well, called Al, sneaketh to third base and anon cometh home.

8. And again Doran t[illegible] the ball to Wiegand, and again he droppeth it, and again one of the enemy stealeth a base.

9. But when it cometh to pass that twice he reacheth the end of the journey to home, twice he getteth touched out because he knoweth not how to save himself. Neither knoweth he how to save others; and in that inning called the fourth when there is no man out, and he that knocketh the ball over the fence, who is called McIndoe, maketh a two-bagger, and the bases are full with a mighty Lever at the bat, then it cometh to pass that the slow freight side-tracketh them all. Not content that he getteth himself out, he chaseth the others back from their bases and dumpeth the victory right there.

10. Verily those who longeth for victory, and those who staketh their silver and gold high unto all they possesseth upon the warriors who weareth upon their breasts the crescent embroidered by the women of their tribe, was wroth and curseth him of the Chiefs of the tribe whom they say keepeth this man on purposely to cast out victory. They sayeth that Jones should have been in his stead, and they cry aloud take him away, and that he is a wagon of ice, and a cart of coal.

11. So when the eighth inning cometh, the tribe of the Crescents had not the four runs that would have been made had he who was thus derided sat upon the bench instead of he who is called Freddie the son of Jones. Therefore they were but one ahead of the enemy and had cause to tremble. For there was a West End on every base, and the mighty Gore from the league of the great Metropolis, with his name in his eye, stepped forth to meet the sling shots of the wizard Doran.

12. Then the scribes of the country of Somerville, from whence cometh the West Ends, spoke forth and they said unto him who is called Tee Kay—which being translated meaneth, the boss manager of the boss team—"What thinkest thou?" And he answered and said: "I liketh it not." Then verily as he speaketh, the New Yorker sticketh forth the bat, and the ball smiteth it, and they whom the fair women call Bergy and Carby, cometh home. Then another of the enemy adds one more to the victory when the ball is thrown in past the catcher, and Gore cometh in on a wild pitch.

13. Thus ended the second lesson. The victory is not to him who batteth the best or getteth the base oftener, but to him who knoweth what to do when he gets there. Selah!

SCORE BY INNINGS.

West Ends	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	4	0	—5

First base on Errors—Crescents, 2. Base on balls—Crescents, 2; West Ends, 4. Hit by ball—McIndoe. Two-base hits—McIndoe (2), Gore. Double plays—Farrell to Bergen. Passed balls—O'Rourke, (2). Bowes, (3). Wild pitch—Doran, Harkins. Flies caught—By Crescents, 6; by West Ends, 10. Umpire—Mr. Quinn. Time of game—1:45. Attendance, 2,100.

The above score shows what a hard game it was to lose, and how much reason the West Ends had to yell over their victory. Those who staid in Plainfield for supper, hired a colored fifer and drummers, bought all the brooms in town, and headed by Carbonell marched to the station.

The Crescents had eight safe hits with a total of ten bases, and stole five more. The West Ends had only five hits and could not steal a base. Yet the Crescents were badly coached from third base, and in a general way ran the bases like school boys. There were more Crescents put out on the other bases, than on first. Four of the Crescents were put out between third base and the home plate, and six were left on bases.

Doran pitched the greatest game most of those present had ever witnessed. He struck out Harkins, Williams and Galligan twice each, and also struck out George Gore, the New York League's celebrated hitter, Farrell and Bowes. He even puzzled Quinn, who gave Farrell his base on balls in the eighth, when in fact four strikes were pitched.

THE GILA MONSTER'S DEADLY BITE.

Walter Vail's Own Story of His Miraculous Recovery.

A few months ago, the news that Walter L. Vail, a cattle dealer, from Plainfield, and son of Mahlon Vail of Park avenue, had been bitten by a gila monster in Arizona, and miraculously survived the accident, was exclusively published in THE PRESS, subsequently telegraphed all over the country, and much discussed at the time. Mr. Vail has just been interviewed at San Francisco by a reporter of The Chronicle, who describes him as a middle-aged man with every appearance of a tried frontiersman with iron nerves and indomitable courage.

"Yes, I guess I am about the only man who had such an experience with the gila monster who has lived to tell the tale," said Mr. Vail, when asked to tell his story.

"Some months ago," said he, "I was riding on horseback over a cattle range about twenty-three miles from Panetella Station, in Arizona, in company with three other gentlemen, when I saw one of these ugly looking monsters crawling along. I dismounted, determined to kill the brute, and clubbed it over the head with a stick until I was convinced that life must have become extinct. I then tied it with a string to my saddle and rode on. Pretty soon I wanted to make sure that the string had not broken and that the monster was still where I had tied him, and for that purpose reached back to feel for him. I became at once convinced that he was there, for he was still alive and took hold of one of my fingers with his jaws. Of course, having lived many years on the frontier, I knew well that the bite of a gila monster was considered deadly, and to tell the truth was badly frightened. I called my companions, and when they learned what had happened they were even more frightened than I was. All that time the hideous brute held on to my finger, and it took fully three minutes before we could pry his jaws open with a wedge so that I became liberated.

"One in the party tied a string around my finger and another around my wrist to stop the circulation of the poisoned blood, and I took a big swallow of whiskey, not as an antidote, but as a stimulant. Everybody in the party expected to see me die right there, but I made up my mind to live, if possible. I mounted my horse and started on a twenty-three mile ride to Panetella Station, and I tell you it was a ride for life. I made those twenty-three miles in just one hour and twenty-five minutes. By the time I reached Panetella my back and my legs began to pain. I felt like a man who was under the influence of a strong current of electricity, and suffered greatly. An engine for which I had telegraphed on my arrival arrived at the station about an hour after I had reached it, and I was conveyed to Tuscon, a distance of twenty-eight miles. Medical science saved my life, but not until I had passed through ten days of intense suffering."

Mr. Vail stated that he had received communications from all over the world since the publication of his adventure, and that scientists, specialists, and physicians have repeatedly requested full particulars of his case.

TWO INTERESTING ADDRESSES.

Mrs. Opdyke and Mr. Fountaine Speak on Temperance, and Gain New Signers to the Pledge.

After devotional services conducted by Mr. Fountaine, and the usual choir singing under the leadership of Mr. Vanderbeek, President Harper in Reform Hall Sunday night introduced as the first speaker Mrs. George F. Opdyke, who in a most pleasing manner, and basing her remarks upon Scripture verses, urged greater individual and associated efforts to protect our homes from the desolation of liquor, and to save the boys and girls of our country by ordaining prohibition. Mrs. Opdyke narrated an instance of liquor drinking in this Christian city of Plainfield, a case coming under her own personal notice, and which showed the awful effects of the drink habit.

The next speaker was George H. Fountaine. His remarks were also founded upon the Bible, through the teachings of which he drew a comparison of our country at the present day, and declared that "woe to them who decree unrighteously" still existed as a penalty for wrong doing. Mr. Fountaine argued strongly against the liquor traffic and cited several instances of its committed ravages.

The pledge was offered by the President, and three young men came forward and signed it.

No Doubt of Fowler's Re-Election.

(From the New York Times.)

Fowler, the Democratic Congressman in the Fourth District—Hunterdon, Warren, Sussex and Somerset—has been renominated. The Republicans have placed Editor Goodman in the field against him. There are no signs of the bitter personal contest that marked Fowler's first canvass being renewed, and he will doubtless be re-elected without much trouble.

Disastrous Ending of a Scotch Plains Sunday Frolic.

A stage containing eighteen people, returning to Newark from Scotch Plains, Sunday evening, was precipitated twenty feet down an embankment at the side of the road, near Springfield, and was completely overturned. Five of the occupants were injured. Joseph Bundy's shoulder was broken, and his wife's collar bone fractured and head cut. Moses Chadwick was severely bruised, and his wife's wrist was broken, and Thomas Sheaf had his left knee fractured. The injured were cared for by residents of Springfield for the night, and yesterday were conveyed to their homes in Newark.

The following events occurred at the Gentlemen's Driving Park track Saturday:

First race—John Hayes's Andy, Charles Brower's Asia and Peter Osborn's Galatea. Andy won, time, 2:46 and 2:43½. Galatea second and Asia last.

Second race—Nate Robbins's Doctor and Peter Osborn's Magnetic. Doctor won in 2:56½ and 3:00.

Third race—Charles Brower's John C. and Woodbrook Farm's Colonel. John C. won, time 2:44½ and 2:51½.

Fourth race—W. Quinn's Kitty Pilot and Woodbrook Farm's Senator. Kitty Pilot won in 3:01 and 3:02. This race is between four-year-old colts owned by Mr. Quinn, Woodbrook Farm and Mr. Fosher, for the best time made until the season closes, for a suit of horse-clothes valued at $25. Kitty Pilot made the best time, so far, Saturday, when her record was 3:01; Senator two weeks ago scored 3:06.

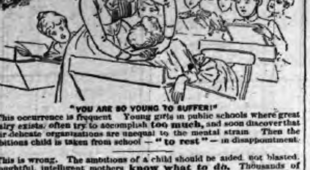
John have you seen that woman lately? John in astonishment; What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Sought for the last hundred years; a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head, found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.



"YOU ARE SO YOUNG TO SUFFER!"

This occurrence is frequent. Young girls in public schools where great rivalry exists, often try to accomplish too much, and soon discover that their delicate organizations are unequal to the mental strain. Then the ambitious child is taken from school — "to rest" — in disappointment.

This is wrong. The ambitions of a child should be aided, not blasted. Thoughtful, intelligent mothers know what to do. Thousands of bright eyed, rosy cheeked, energetic and lovable school girls regard Mrs. Pinkham as their mainstay. They are right.

We Have Already One Too Many.

The Elizabeth papers say that "there was a special meeting of the board of freeholders held Monday afternoon for the purpose of acting on the petition of the Commonwealth Water company of Plainfield for permission to lay mains on certain county roads recently paved with telford."

Providence be praised, this is not so! Plainfield has already two water companies—the "Water Works Co.," and the "Water Supply Co."—and she could be happy with either were t'other one out of the way.

The company referred to in the above extract, is the Commonwealth Water Co., of Summit.

Since Watson & Co. Extended Their Broad Street Store Through to Market Street and Put in Their

Handsome beveled plate brass trimmed show windows for the express purpose of displaying their new styles of hand-cut garments, very few young men who want the latest cuts and patterns, will venture to buy a single garment until they first see what new styles Watson & Co. are showing.

Just now those windows are very attractive as the Fall styles are out and some very stylish black and dark blue dress cutaways are shown there at $7, behind the long line of $4 royal satin striped pantaloons, and almost every hour handsome new patterns are added, as Watson & Co. like to please young men who want new things, and the correct fashion plate cut. Tell your friends that they can buy Watson's hand-cut perfect fitting garments for less than the usual run of machine-cut work is selling for, and it makes a great difference in your dress appearance which you wear.—Newark Press.

Dead is the Crow, and Blood is on the Moon.

Harry Coddington's pet crow is deceased, and vengeance is in store for the man who shot it. The crow had been a member of the Coddington family a long time. It was caught when young in the mountains back of North Plainfield. As the bird waxed in years it was given a thorough classical and scientific education, and could do many things even more wonderful than hiding keys under the door-mat, mending lamp chimneys and old umbrellas, paring potatoes, singing the babies to sleep, and taking the little ones to Sunday-school. It could sing, it is said, in a blonde voice, and play jackstones, and pull hairpins out of the girls' braids and re-arrange the hair in latest Delsarte style, and was just learning how to sew buttons on shoes when its demise occurred.

J. Worth Coddington sauntered away from the house, Sunday afternoon, with the crow perched on his shoulder. When he reached the junction of Mountain avenue and Somerset street he saw some friends coming, and advised the bird to go home. The sable creature cawed his protest, and flew into the branches of a tree, where it smoothed its ruffled feelings and sought to choke down the promptings of jealousy that all well-bred birds indulge in when thrust ruthlessly aside to make room for other bipeds. While the crow was composing itself back into a Sunday-school frame of mind a Mean Man from Mountain avenue appeared. The Mean Man knew that the bird was a family pet, for others told him so, but instead of receiving it as a distinguished guest he chuckled over what he considered a good shot and went into the house and got a gun. Then he shot the crow and killed it, and the righteous wrath of the Coddingtons was aroused. They threaten to have the Mean Man placed in the borough lock-up for discharging fire-arms on the public streets on Sunday, and to sue him for the damage he has done the family feelings by turning a good, playful, industrious live crow into a worthless dead one.

Rheumatism,

BEING due to the presence of uric acid in the blood, is most effectually cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Be sure you get Ayer's and no other, and take it till the poisonous acid is thoroughly expelled from the system. We challenge attention to this testimony:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months, and am pleased to state that it has effected a complete cure. I have since had no return of the disease."—Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th st., New York.

"One year ago I was taken ill with inflammatory rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."—Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—The customary Fall rush for household servants has set in again.

—After the most successful season of its existence, Hotel Netherwood closed this morning.

—Subpoenas were served on Monday on witnesses to appear in the libel suit [illegible] vs. Rise.

—Dupes will pitch for the Crescents again in next Saturday's game. [illegible] will be given a trial meanwhile to see if he can hold him.

—Jeremiah Manning and wife and Wm. M. Sandford and wife have sold to John P. Mills, land on Sandford avenue, Plainfield, 50x136 feet for $1,200.

—A special meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club will be held on Saturday evening at eight o'clock in the club house, to consider the football question.

—The most artistic printing ever seen in this city, is that gotten out by the Metropolis society in the way of circulars to associates, notices to members, etc.

—W. P. Smith's new coachman was kicked in the head by one of the horses in the stable, Tuesday. Dr. Davis, however, fixed the man up in good shape again.

—Tom Keefe, a messenger in the Western Union telegraph office, fell from an express wagon a few days ago, and fractured the wrist of his right arm. Drs. Fritts and Allis set it.

—Edward Warren, of East Front street, was run into by another bicyclist, while riding his wheel, Saturday evening, and his right arm was so severely sprained that he still has to carry it in a sling.

—The first peace dance of Miantonomo Tribe, No. 118, Improved Order of Red Men, will be held in The Crescent "on the sleep of the Ninth Sun of Traveling Moon, G. S. D. 399," Thursday evening, Oct. 9.

—The suit of Shotwell vs. Rise for libel, was on trial Tuesday at Somerville, but subsequently adjourned until the December term because of the unavoidable absence of certain important witnesses for the defense.

—At a meeting of the Crescent League, last week, it was announced by the Committee on Subscriptions that almost $3,000 had already been pledged by a part of the members towards the building fund for a new club-house.

—One of the watering carts sprinkled North avenue, the other day, with hundreds of little bass. They were probably some of the thousands that had been placed in the brook for propagation, by the fish commissioners.

—At last night's meeting of the Hope Chapel Temperance Club it was decided to change the meeting night from Monday to Tuesday. One young man signed the Club pledge, and five juveniles became associate members.

—A dog that appeared to be frothing at the mouth, ran through Richmond street on Monday and scared all the school children and grown folks in its vicinity. Whether he was mad, and what became of him, is not known.

—Thomas Keller won the silver cake basket Monday, by killing 17 out of 20 birds at Campbell's grounds. It has now been won consecutively by E. M. Smith, E. Teeple and T. H. Keller. It must be won twice to be owned.

—The West Ends will bring a brass band with them Saturday, and the Crescent management will provide seats for them. They will give a concert before and after the game, but there will be no increase in the price of admission.

—The guests at Hotel Netherwood are brought regretfully to the realization of the fact that the close of another happy and successful season is at hand, by the recollection that the last meal served this year will be the Saturday morning breakfast of September 27.

—Ex-Postmaster Littell, of [illegible] Brook, while at Mr. Coomber's house near the Presbyterian cemetery at that place, recently, was attacked by a dog, which sank its teeth into his right leg, leaving imprints, but drawing no blood. Mr. Littell's wife died of lock jaw a few years ago.

—The Bound Brook Commissioners have followed the example of the Plainfield Common Council and have issued an ordinance prohibiting bicycle riders from riding on the sidewalks in any part of the town. During the night, when riding along the streets, they must display a light or be fined $5.

—An old man who peddles garden truck and clams about town has given the little hamlet in the rural district where he lives a name to suit his fancy, and has labeled all his barrels and butter jars "United Income, Bivalve, N. J." He hopes to live to see the day when "Bivalve" will be recognized by the men who make geographies.

—On one of the docks at Jersey City the Central Railroad has seen fit to place a sign which says:

BOATSNOTTOLANDHERE

He who runs has no show at all with an inscription like this, and it is said that people from all parts of the world daily gather at the dock while their eyes vainly endeavor to get at the meaning of the sign.

—Gertrude Brown, one of the Fluff of Fashion company, was taken ill at Crosby's Hotel just before the time for her appearance in the play at Music Hall, last Wednesday evening. She was taken to her room where Dr. Hodges has since been attending her. On Monday she was able to leave for Easton where she will join the Company.

—The New Jersey edition of the New York World continues to harp on the charges against F. A. Dunham, engineer of the county roads—charges which The Press has conclusively shown to be false. The aspersions can do Mr. Dunham no harm, however, even where he is not known, as the article in refutation of them has been copied from The Press and published in the local papers throughout the State.

—The games that were to be played this month between the St. George Cricket Club of Plainfield and the cricket eleven of the New Jersey Athletic Club have been postponed till next season, when the Plainfield cricketers will be in better condition to cope with their rivals. It has been difficult to get the St. George players together for match games, but a thorough re-organization will take place this Winter.

Isaac Schwed, of this city, was married to Miss Florence Frank, of New York, at five o'clock Sunday afternoon, in Victoria Hall, 141 Lexington avenue. The ceremony was performed by Dr. [illegible], and was an impressive as well as joyful occasion.

The bride was attired in white faille, heavily trimmed with point-lace, and wore a veil and orange blossoms. The groom was in full evening dress, as were the other members of the bridal party.

The happy couple have gone for a two weeks' trip through Canada.

Good for young and old. We know of no better tonic for the system than [illegible] Improved Root Beer. It is delicious, effervescent, sparkling, appetizing, and a helper of temperance. [illegible] the blood, and fortifying the system against the advent of disease. A 25 cent package makes five gallons. Sold everywhere.

Lambert [illegible] et ux to Edward M. Sebring, property in North Plainfield, $900.

A Brakeman's Narrow Escape.

Bystanders at the Netherwood railroad station held their breath Tuesday afternoon at a brakeman's narrow escape from death. The man was bending backward from the steps of one of the cars, while the train was going at rapid speed, and was struck in the side by a baggage truck. He lost his grip on the hand-rail, and was almost thrown under the wheels, but managed to recover his balance sufficiently to escape being mangled. He was seriously bruised, and one of the trunks on the baggage truck was broken by the collision.

Germans Make Merry With Songs and Dance.

The Crescent League to Have a Handsome New Club House.

The owners of the property on Second street East of Park avenue, occupied by the Crescent League until burned out, offers to tear down the old walls and build on the lot a club house for the League according to such plans as it may adopt.

The new building is to be broadened four feet and brought out to the sidewalk line where it will make a fine appearance from Park avenue. It will be fitted with spacious alleys, dining, reading and "Chess rooms, ladies' parlor and in fact everything that can be asked for in a first-class club house. The insurance adjusters allowed the owners of the building $2,500 damages.

AN EQUINE PARADOX.

Critique Talks Horse, and Makes Some Scathing Comments on the Treatment Which Man's Best Friend Receives at the Hands of His Masters in Plainfield.

To THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—One of those so-called "odorless excavating" flotillas we all know so well was at work in the Park the other day when the S. P. C. A., ought to have been on deck. These caravans, whose "connection with —— & Co.," is only too obvious, like farce-comedies always go in three parts: two sections favoring the tank play, and the other one resembling the legitimate drama, carrying the pumping apparatus which is intrinsic to the success of the entire outfit. Before the latter engine, on the occasion in question, was assembled what might have been described in a general way as a live horse, although it wore a disheartened aspect and seemed to care very little about living. When the task upon which the concern had bent its energies was completed, the man who had this animal in charge besought it to move, but the poor beast remained as obdurate and stiff as the new Music Hall curtain. Whether this lack of interest and animation was to be attributed to ennui, nervous prostration or spring halts was an open question, and its answer was apparently beyond the man I have mentioned, for he at length becoming weary of persuasion, produced a good-sized rope and flayed the unlucky animal without mercy until some one in the next yard protested and got a promiscuous fusillade of profanity for his trouble. The horse was pretty badly abraided in places, and, although he took his punishment patiently, seemed to feel thoroughly discouraged. There are too many ill-natured drivers in Plainfield who let their bad impulses get away with them on the slightest provocation. The horses are, as a rule, better than their masters from a moral point of view, and do not always deserve one-tenth of the bad treatment they receive. "Professor" Gleason, who was here in the Summer, said that the only way to handle a horse was to treat it kindly, and then he proceeded to contradict himself by frightening every horse he "tamed" within an inch of its life. His policy may be the best one, but it is generally safe to try the other way and be genuinely respectable to the animal kingdom. The good people who were giving away copies of "Black Beauty" to the end that the condition of our hack-horses might be ameliorated, may also do well if they turn the light of their benevolence upon the lot of horses in other walks of life.

CRITIQUE.

SAID THE JUDGE WAS BOUGHT.

And Now the Slander Will be Sifted Out, and the Originators Punished.

A crowd of people thronged the City Court room Thursday to appear against Bridget Newman, a neighbor whose libelous ways and foul tongue have repeatedly made her familiar with court methods. Their desire to testify against the woman concerning the latest disturbance she has caused suffered disappointment, however, for she pleaded, through her lawyer, non vult, and threw herself on Judge Codington's mercy.

It was quite evident that Mrs. Newman had been guilty of gross breaches of the peace. Besides getting intoxicated, she had taken possession of the entire section of the Boulevard which is known as her neighborhood and defamed the wives and mothers, living and dead, of the inhabitants, and paraded up and down the street, her sleeves rolled up, and her arms flourishing, daring the men to come out and fight, declaring her ability to knock them all to smithereens in three short rounds.

The last time Mrs. Newman had appeared before Judge Codington she was fined $15, so in this instance the Court doubled the penalty and made it $30.

This sentence seemed very just, to the minds of the complaining witness and others, while Mrs. Newman's lawyer thought it excessive and gave notice that his client would appeal to a higher Court.

"Go on,"—said Captain Grant—"and we'll knock your case higher than a kite. We have a score of witnesses, and the higher Court will probably double the penalty, for appealing."

But if Mrs. Newman wasn't satisfied, and thought she had been fined too heavily, the crowd of witnesses against her were of the indignant opinion that she had been let off lightly. They seemed to have an idea that her offense called for solitary confinement for six or eight years, and howls of protests rent the air. The "women folks took on dreadful," as an observant colored gentleman remarked, and said that Mrs. Newman would be only too happy to pay even a $100 fine as long as she was permitted to go free and a[illegible] decent people who didn't drink, while a gentleman named Harding approached the judicial bench, shook his forefinger in the air, and shouted forth this pronunciamento:

"I think this Court has been bought long enough!"

Then he went on to declare that it was impossible to get justice at Judge Codington's hands, that the Court had been bribed at different times, to "let up" on Mrs. Newman and other "friends of Paddy Day's," and that he and others would "take the case further," where justice could be obtained against the woman who had "called his mother out of the grave" and assailed her memory with vile words.

Instead of committing the excited Mr. Harding for contempt of court, Judge Codington very patiently heard him through and then quietly made an announcement that frightened the man and drew a semi-apology from his lips.

"I have heard," said the Judge, "of charges similar to this before, and I shall trace them to their source and punish severely those who have instigated such a slander."

Harding said that he hadn't intended his statement as an insult to the Court. He "had only repeated what others had told him."

"You just made the charges yourself," was the reply, "on your own responsibility."

Harding said the story was common talk in the Boulevard, and he thought Mrs. Newman and Patrick Day had started it.

"I have heard of the story," said the Judge significantly, "and have been told that you yourself had invented it. It is a gross insult to the Court, a wrong for which there was no cause, and I shall see that the proper parties are dealt with as they deserve."

Still protesting that he didn't mean the Court any harm, Mr. Harding left the room, accompanied by others whom Mrs. Newman was said to have slandered, and avowed their intention of visiting the Grand Jury and getting their bibulous and belligerent neighbor indicted.

She Won't Marry Her Deceiver.

Deacon Mansfield Robinson's daughter, Laura, is home again; but McQuay, the man she eloped with, is still in Boston. Laura is in the 16th year of her age, but full grown and well developed. She seems to bear the separation calmly, and some of her friends say she is ready to "take up" with her deceiver again.

The strangest part of the affair is that Mrs. Robinson, the girl's mother, says McQuay proposed to marry Laura in Boston the other day, "so as to fix the thing all up;" but Mrs. Robinson told him he "shouldn't marry Laura to save his life." The parents' idea seems to be that they will be able to send McQuay to State Prison for life without the least expenditure of time, trouble or money. They would rather have satisfaction than a son-in-law.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION.

A Successful First Meeting, Preliminary to the Great Revival.

A large and interested audience attended the first meeting of the Local Union of Young People's Societies for Christian Endeavor in Trinity Reformed church, Thursday. The seven societies composing the Union were handsomely represented, and delegates were present from outside branches of their popular and flourishing organization.

The meeting was conducted by the Rev. Asa Reed Dilts, the President of the Local Union. The early part was devoted to a service of song and prayer. Special music was rendered by a union choir of fifty voices, under the leadership of M. Marvin Dunham, and there was congregational singing also. The choir music was very good, and evidenced careful preparation. The individual parts were pleasing and effective. Prayers were offered by various members of each Society, and passages of Scripture were read by Mr. Dilts. Two-minute reports from the Secretaries of the seven Societies were read. The Society of the First Presbyterian church was organized in April, 1887, with 18 members; it now has 41. The Congregational Society, which was organized December, 1886, with 49 members, now has 62. The Trinity Reformed had 41 members at its organization in October, 1886, and now has 164. The especially notable feature of this society is its remarkable hot weather record. The average attendance at the Monday night meetings in June was 108 each evening; in July and August, 104. The Park Avenue Baptist Society is a re-organization of the Young People's Association, which was as enfeebled as the present Society is strong. In November, 1888, when the Society was formed, the number of members was only 12; now it is 49. The Warren Union Mission Society began its existence in May 1888, with 25 members; it now numbers 57. Three members were converted last month. The Society of the New Market Baptist church has now 54 members, a gratifying growth over the single dozen of September, 1889. The Presbyterian Society of Dunellen counts 40 members. It had only 22 in October 1886, when it was founded. The total membership of the Local Union is therefore 467, as shown in an excellent report by Miss E. C. Benedict, the Local Union Secretary. It was organized April 24, 1890. The result of its organization has been to infuse new life and enthusiasm into the individual work.

Before introducing the two speakers of the evening, Mr. Dilts impressed upon the members of the Union the value of loyalty. He urged them to be loyal to Christ, loyal to the church universal, loyal to the church individual, loyal to the Christian Endeavor Society, loyal to the Local Union, and loyal to every one who needs Jesus Christ.

The Rev. W. C. Stinson, of Dunellen, and the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, of the Plainfield Congregational church, had been invited to speak on the subject, "How to Prepare for a Revival," and both made highly interesting addresses.

Mr. Stinson explained the different methods of different evangelists, and praised the local churches for their enterprise in securing the services of the Rev. B. Fay Mills, who will begin his great work in Plainfield in November. We must do more, however,—he said—than send for the man. We must send for the Master. We must pray for the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire. There were too many ecclesiastical ice-houses. We must arouse every energy, heap on the anthracite, and develop an undying fervor. We must each realize the importance of our individual responsibility, and must work and pray unceasingly, to bring about glorious results through the aid of our evangelistic leader.

Mr. Goodrich said that the greatest revival in Plainfield's history—that of Mr. Earl, years ago—had been preceded by weeks of special prayer; and Mr. Mills, in his conferences with the local pastors relative to his coming work here, advised that the clergymen and their congregations keep the revival constantly in mind, and think over it, and pray earnestly for its success. There must be personal work; each Christian, each member of the Union, must devote himself to assisting in the work of salvation. Let each one try to convert, by prayer and personal effort, such of his acquaintances as had not professed Christianity. During the weeks intervening between this meeting and the coming of Mr. Mills let each one be thinking, thinking, thinking, of ways to aid the work. The unity of this personal effort could not fail of marvelous results.

The Misses Etta Krymer and Etta Howland were highly complimented upon their tasteful arrangement of the floral decorations at the Christian Endeavor meeting in the Trinity Reformed church, and Messrs C. P. Wheeler, Andrew Carpenter, Chas. Wheeler and Whitfield France were deservedly praised for their excellent instrumental music.

A New Church Building in Prospect.

At the meeting of the First Church of Christ, Friday night, a brother offered to contribute the stone to build a meeting house, and Mr. Cleaver, the pastor, said he knew of another who would present a lot.

A Home for the Boys' Club.

The managers of the Boys' Club, have leased Central Hall, corner of North and Park avenues, and will take possession in about ten days. A public meeting will subsequently be held, and reports of the proposed work and expenditures will be given. About $1,300 has been raised.

Democratic Primaries.

Following are results of Friday evening's Democratic primaries.

First Ward—Louis F. Wadsworth, Chairman; Lewis H. Brown, Secretary. Delegates to Congress and Convention—Louis F. Wadsworth, Sidney E. Flower.

Second Ward—James E. Martine, Chairman; Louis M. Stover, Secretary. Delegate to Congressional Convention—William K. McClure.

Frank Linke Fined for Illegal Liquor Selling.

Frank Linke was fined $25 by City Judge Codington, on Tuesday, as a result of his recent conviction on the charge of selling liquor to a minor. Linke either thinks that the punishment is excessive, or that he ought not to be punished at all, for he has given notice that he will appeal the case to a higher Court. Police Captain Grant, however, who worked hard to secure the evidence which convicted Linke, thinks the fine was not nearly heavy enough.

Attorney Ridley a Winner.

Two cases came before Justice Hardy Friday. Mrs. Pawson and Mrs. Fox, Grove street neighbors, had been calling each other names, and Mrs. Fox had Mrs. Pawson arrested. Mrs. Pawson was found guilty, but sentence was suspended, and all parties were sent home with a reprimand.

Strumenti and Blumenti, two Italians, sued George Walton, for whom they worked in a quarry, for wages. They secured judgment. John Ridley distinguished himself as counsel in both cases.

The Crescents Have Their Heads Full Now.

(From the Rahway Advocate.)

The Plainfield Crescents still decline to make a date with the Rahways. We are informed that their friends give the excuse that they are afraid to come to Rahway for fear they will be mobbed, etc., because there has been so much said in the papers about them. They need have no fear on that score. We are not barbarians. They would be received as gentlemen by gentlemen.

NO LAMENTATION FROM SOMERSET ST.

Plainfield's Damage Not Considered When a Few Cents May be Made by It.

The only other honest paper in Plainfield falls into line with THE PRESS in the following expression of opinion concerning those irresponsible scribblers who have been, and still are, such a curse to this city:

"Inaccurate accounts of local events, written by irresponsible pens and published by New York papers, are again doing harm to the best interests of Plainfield. The stories which have recently gained currency of the imaginary work of incendiaries, has had the effect, so a local insurance agent tells The Times, of bringing instructions from the various insurance companies to insure no more barns here. It required the most energetic work on the part of the agents to convince the companies that the stories were untrue, and in every way unreliable. One carelessly written story can work more injury to the well being of a city than the writer may think. It is the property owner who feels the effects of this the quickest. That the insurance companies were convinced of the accuracy of their agents' statement is for Plainfielders a matter of congratulation."—Central Times.

This paper, some weeks ago, fought day after day against the enemy of the city who was damaging its good name and good fame by sending all sorts of lies and sensational stories to the New York World for the sake of fifty cents or so. The result was that the editor of the World discharged the man—writing the discharge in the presence of a representative of THE PRESS, and showing it to him. The man discharged was one by the name of Morrison.

The World editor explained that he had not known the man was irresponsible until he had been overwhelmed with personal complaints and letters from most of the best citizens of Plainfield protesting against the way the city was being misrepresented. The name of the scribbler explains why only THE PRESS and The Times protest against Plainfield's bad treatment abroad.

THE COLORED CONTINGENT IN COURT.

Tenants Under the Same Roof Fall Out and Tell the Court Their Troubles.

The colored people had an inning before the City Court on Thursday, when Isaac Jones, his wife Lucretia, and various relatives, appeared to inform Judge Codington what a bold bad man James O'Neill was. James isn't an Irishman, if his name has a Celtic twang. He is a brunette of the same type as Jones, who has none of the Hebraic attributes which the preliminary part of his title would indicate.

Isaac's complaint was that James had visited the apartments of Lucretia by violence, had heaped gross insults on her good name and had hurled foul blots at the escutcheon of her family. The story of this turbulent time was graphically told by Isaac, and Lucretia, and Dorcas the grandmother, and others of the Jones contingent, who all agreed that James had "talked wretched" and had made scandalous charges.

O'Neill cross-examined the witnesses to the best of his ability, and besides airing a prolific vocabulary succeeded in getting the women to give details, still more convincing against him, which they had forgotten till he prodded them up.

In his own defense O'Neill had no witnesses but himself. Two others had promised to come, he said, but it was evident that they had carelessly omitted to note down on their visiting lists this important engagement. As James seemed to think it necessary for him to give a verbal autobiography of his entire career he soon convicted himself of acts of immorality which had not hitherto been disclosed. The trouble with the Joneses was all brought about because they harbored the woman who was not his wife, after he had cast her off in spite of her seven years' faithfulness to him.

In the midst of an extended conversation in which the complainant and all the witnesses took part, Judge Codington managed to squeeze in the announcement that O'Neill's fine was $5. Then O'Neill told the Court what a deeply-wronged man he was.

The Crescents Hold Down the Norwichs.

Thursday's attendance at the Crescent League's ball grounds was a remarkably large one for a mid-week day, fully 1,000 being present. It was also remarkable because of the presence of so many of the clergy of the city, and so many who were strangers to the game. But probably the most remarkable thing about the attendance was its unanimity of feeling in favor of its home team. Even Umpire Berriman was accused by some, but without reason, of "roasting" the Crescents.

There had never been witnessed such a fine fielding game on the grounds before as that put up by the Crescents. The Norwich men were astonished and loud in their praise of it. They said that against all other teams they had met, such balls as Martin, Lee and Laffery stopped would have been safe hits.

McIndoe was not able to be present and his place was filled by Carbonell of Somerville. He dropped a fly (the only error made by the home team), made a hit, a sacrifice, and a strike-out. The rest of the positions were played by the regular team, and played to perfection. Gregg puzzled the professionals. Hackett was the only one who could find Gentle Michael's curves. Outside of him but four of the Norwich batters hit the ball safe, and they only once each. O'Connell was the only man who stole a base on Jones.

The Crescents' run was made in the ninth inning. Jones got to first on O'Connell's only error. Lee followed and flied out to right field. This with Carbonell's sacrifice helped Freddie to third from whence he stole home on a short passed ball. The score:

UNION COUNTY'S W. C. T. U.

They Have Grown So, They Now Have a National Delegate.

Mrs. M. D. Tomlinson was re-elected President of the Union County Woman's Christian Temperance Unions at Thursday's convention, and Miss Clementine Yates was elected Corresponding Secretary. Miss Thirza Greaves, of Westfield, was again chosen Recording Secretary, and Miss G. T. Underhill, of Rahway, was elected Treasurer.

The convention was attended by 106 delegates from the 10 local Unions, all of whom thought it the best one ever held.

The membership was reported to be 516, which entitles Union county to a delegate to the National Convention to be held this Fall in Atlanta.

The 14 departments have expended in their local work $4 978.97. They have held 704 meetings, 106 of which have been public meetings. The sum of $27.19 has been sent to Nebraska. There are ten W. C. T. Unions, and three "Y" Unions in the county.

The devotional exercises at the opening of the convention at 10 A. M., were in charge of Miss Yates, after which the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were given, followed by those of the Superintendents of the different branches of work which are carried on in the Unions. Among the Superintendents' reports were those of Mrs. P. H. Bennett, of Craig place, on Juvenile Work; Mrs. J. W. Yates, of East Seventh street, on Literature; Mrs. J. H. Coard, of Putnam avenue, on Hygiene and Heredity; Mrs. S. B. Krom, of Madison avenue, on Press Work; Miss May Tomlinson, of LaGrande avenue, on the Kitchen Garden; and Mrs. T. C. Bodine, of Dunellen, on Tobacco and Narcotics.

A very nice lunch was served at 12:30 by the Willard Union of Westfield, after which the reports were finished, and the President's address, which was listened to with rapt attention by all, was given. The election of officers concluded the afternoon exercises.

There were five visiting delegates present from other states, two of whom—one from Kansas and one from Ohio—gave earnest accounts of the work of their Unions.

The evening service consisted mainly of an address by Miss Greenwood, the National Superintendent of Evangelistic Study.

A PET CAT'S TREACHERY.

Pussy Bites Her Master, and Fears of Hydrophobia are Raised.

John P. Stockton, Jr., of Seventh street, son of the Attorney-General of New Jersey, was bitten by a cat Thursday, and the wound is such a severe one that the aid of Dr. Gibier, of the Pasteur Institute, may yet be required to prevent blood-poisoning or hydrophobia.

Mr. Stockton's cat had for several days been indulging in queer antics, and a superstitious servant declared that 'twas possessed with witches. Thursday the cat became such an object of terror to a child who had been trying to play with it that Mr. Stockton picked it up to put it out doors. Without an instant's warning the cat made a savage snap at Mr. Stockton's hand, and imbedded its teeth again and again in the flesh. The hand was terribly lacerated, and Mr. Stockton at once bundled the cat up in a basket and went to New York, where Dr. Gibier dressed the wound and took charge of the now vicious but hitherto pleasant and petted pussy.

Dr. Gibier will keep the cat long enough to determine whether or not it has hydrophobia, and meanwhile he gives Mr. Stockton daily precautionary treatment.

The boy who writes baseball news for the Westfield Leader, thinks Manager Lent has a claim against the Plainfield managers for losses incurred by the cancelling of last Wednesday's game at Westfield. Sold Liquor to a Minor.

Frank Linke was Friday convicted of illegal liquor selling. He was tried before City Judge Codington and a jury, on complaint of Police Captain Grant, who produced evidence to show that Linke's assistant, fifteen-year-old Garret Kiely, had sold six bottles of beer to fifteen-year-old Wm. Wilson. As it is against the law to sell liquor to minors, and as Captain Grant and the other city officials are determined to make all liquor sellers live up to the letter of their licenses, this transgression was speedily followed by Linke's arrest. The jury found Linke guilty.

Councilman Rushmore One of the New Trustees.

The first semi-annual meeting of the new Board of Officers of the New Jersey Division of the League of American Wheelmen was held at Plainfield, Thursday evening. The meeting was one of the most important held in years. Delegates were present from all parts of New Jersey, including Vice Consul H. E. Bendeck, of the Hudson County Wheelmen; Secretary-Treasurer George C. Pennell, Elizabeth Wheelmen; F. C. Gilbert Elizabeth Wheelmen; G. T. Thomlar, Hudson County Wheelmen; A. Dodd, Atlantic Wheelmen; S. Bennett, Bergen County Wheelmen; Townsend Rushmore, Plainfield Bicycle Club; F. L. C. Martin, Plainfield Bicycle Club; W. H. Stafford, Atlantic Wheelmen; W. S. Fulper, Orange Wanderers. A committee composed of Messrs G. T. Thomlar, G. C. Pennell and S. Bennett, was appointed to revise the State by-laws to conform with the constitutional rules and consider the allowing of the Secretary-Treasurer the sum of $100 per annum for his services rendered the division. In lieu of the much work done by him it is most likely the provision will be included in the revised rules, as is done in other divisions. It was decided to incorporate the organization under the title of the New Jersey Division of the League of American Wheelmen, with the following trustees: G. C. Brown, H. Benedict, G. H. Kane, B. O. Miller, L. C. Hunt, G. T. Thomlar, C. Todd, T. Rushmore, H. S. Fulper and G. C. Pennell.

A committee of four, consisting of T. N. Gray, G. H. Kane, A. Dodd and F. O. Weiss were appointed to act as representatives to the National Assembly with the Consul, Vice Consul and Secretary-Treasurer.

—The gymnasium classes of the Plainfield Bicycle Club give every promise of being liberally patronized this Winter. The hours and terms are announced today in the advertisement in another column.

THE CENTRAL'S EXTENSIONS.

Important Changes Again Reported as Soon to be Made by That Company.

A despatch from Newark to the Elizabeth Journal, says that the proposed extensions of the Central railroad, which have so long been talked of, have been under serious consideration by the officers of the company within the last few days, and as the matter looks at present the long contemplated changes will soon be made. These changes are of the first importance to a large section of the neighborhood of this city. It is proposed to make the Newark and New York railroad a part of the main line at Fanwood. The connecting line will cross Broad street at the present terminus of the Newark and New York railroad, and will run in a southerly direction between Washington and Plane streets, thence around the foot of Clinton hill to Wyoming and Fanwood. This line will run around the foot of the Orange mountains near Milburn and through Springfield. Over it all through Central and Baltimore and Ohio trains will run. The old line will be used mainly for the transportation of freight.

From Wyoming a branch road will be built, running between the second mountains and the hills, through Milburn, crossing Livingston township at Washington place, and thence to Morristown. The building of this line will prove a serious blow to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western's monopoly of traffic in the region beyond Morristown.

The line from Fanwood to Wyoming will be extended up the valley between the first and second mountains to connect with the Greenwood Lake railroad at Great Notch, and from that point through the town of Little Falls to Paterson, where it will connect with the main line of the Erie railroad.

This extension will open up a new route for transportation of coal from the mines in Carbon county, Pa., to New York State and New England, by way of Easton, the Erie railroad and the Central. All the proposed lines will pass through a very fertile country, which stands much in need of railroad facilities for its proper development.

It is said that the greater part of the right of way for the new roads has been secured, and in addition that property owners along the proposed route have promised large money contributions for the construction of the lines.

One of New Jersey's Dead Letter Laws.

The time for the New Jersey State Fair at Waverly is at hand. An Inter-State fair will also be held at Trenton, and about every county in the State has arranged for its own local fair. Every one of these fairs, and every fair that will be held during the Winter in the parlors of a church will be in violation of a State law, the wording of which is brief and sententious. It reads: "That no fair or fairs shall hereafter be held in any city, town, or place in this State." The law is still on the statute books of the State, and has never been repealed. The date of its passage is January 27, 1797. The reasons for its enactment remain shrouded in the mists of antiquity.—N. Y. Sun.

Engineer Dunham Gets Less Than His Head Inspector.

The amount of money received by Engineer F. A. Dunham, up to and including the last warrant ordered drawn by the Board of Freeholders, is $10,603.72. The amount paid out by him in the same time according to vouchers passed upon by the Board, is $9,608.65. He has therefore received for his own services $995.07, which is even less than the pay of his head inspector who receives a salary of $1,000.

The misuse of a title in a recent interview with Mr. Dunham, has given cause for more unjust criticism. It is not true that he has a separate engineer for each of his contracts. He has an inspector for each, but only the three or four under-engineers that are legally allowed.

Somerville's Cause for Elation.

One of Somerville's leading citizens has written to President Reed of the Crescent League, asking if the West Ends may be allowed to bring a brass band with them next Saturday. If the Crescents will provide seats, the West Ends will bring a band and give the people a concert.

It must be confessed that the Somervillians have every reason for their elation. They had no right to the game, and did not expect it. The Crescents batted out ten bases, stole five, went to first twice on West End errors, and twice on balls. A total of 19 bases with only two runs.

On the other hand the West Ends only had six bases on hits and a base on balls four times, but did not steal one nor get to first on an error. A total of 10 bases, yet they got five runs.

The New Jersey Postal Telegraph company has a force of men setting poles and stringing wires on a new line to connect at Basking Ridge with a line running to Morristown and the other large towns on the line of the Morris and Essex Railroad. The line passes over the historic Washington Rock grounds, within sight of where Washington viewed the belligerant armies on the plains below. It is hoped that the committee having the erection of the statue in charge will be able to place it in position before the Centennial of 1893, so that those who do not go to Chicago may visit the finest lookout in the State.

VACATION'S UP AND SCHOOL OPEN!

This is the season for a brisk demand in CHILDREN'S CLOTHING. During the months of Summer enjoyment they have played the dickens with their clothes, and usually have little left fit to appear in school with

We have always made the clothing of the little ones a specialty, and this Fall we shall strengthen our well deserved reputation of keeping the best stock of these goods in Newark. You'll find it to be money in your pocket and the saving of no end of trouble to come straight here with your children and fit them out for the coming season. We can not only show you all the styles to be met with elsewhere, but many novel conceits which we have designed exclusively for us. Our prices for the newest styles are no greater than you'll pay for the old ones, and as to reliable work there isn't a store in the country that is more particular than we are, especially in children's goods. We know, in advance, the strain to which the little garments will be put, and every safeguard against a sudden coming from together is taken advantage of.

It's a pleasure to talk children's clothing just now; it's a pleasure to show it. We've got something to show and talk about.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. STORIES OF GOOD MEN.

[illegible]

"Real wisdom is always simple," says one, "and true greatness always humble."

A luminous illustration of this truth appears in the life of the Earl of Shaftesbury, recently given to the public. The biographer says that one night the Earl would leave his place in the House of Lords, making the walls ring with his eloquence, and the next night at the [illegible] many [illegible] urchins, and leading them to the Ragged Schools, there to sit by their side, and by having [illegible] air in their hearts and longings for a true life. To have seen him at St. Giles's Refuge, talking to ragged, barefoot, homeless boys, drawing from them frank confessions of their ejection and criminal habits, kindling in them new hopes of an honest and industrious life and planning how they might reach such a goal, was an impressive lesson. For many consecutive years he presided at the meetings of the Ragged School Union, and when, in 1866, he was presented with a testimonial, he replied that he would rather preside over the Ragged School Union than command armies or sway empires. The bootblacks and donkey-drivers called him "our Earl." These donkey-drivers, called costermongers, were a community by themselves, and interested him greatly. They were poor and improvident, and gave the best places in their houses to the donkey. Lord Shaftesbury saw that to reach them he, too, must become a coster. He purchased a donkey and cart, which he loaned to those who had none. In his communications he always signed himself, in addition to his royal title, Knight of the Garter, Coster! He was greatly beloved by the costers, who on one occasion presented him with a fine donkey. With all the grace of a courtier he arose, and with his arm around the donkey's neck, said: "I ask no epitaph beyond this—that with a patience as great and a resignation as unmurmuring as that of this donkey, I may do my duty." As the donkey was led from the stage he turned to the reporters and begged them to state that the donkey having vacated the chair, his place was taken by Lord Shaftesbury.

When this English nobleman was on his way to receive military honors as Lord Lieutenant of his county, he stopped his carriage, and gave his place to a lame old woman hobbling along the road, while he mounted the box beside the coachman. It is said that it was no uncommon sight to see him walking along the worst streets of the city with pockets full of toys for poor children. At a humble flower-show, where a poor little girl had won a prize for the care of a tiny plant, he who was the greatest of illustrious men, and a Knight of England's most famous military order, stooped to kiss the wondering child, whose little life had never known caresses. When his bier stood in Westminster Abbey, there lay side by side on his coffin the flowers sent by a Crown Princess and by London's flower-girls.

Along this line an incident is told of England's greatest statesman. For many years an old man used to sweep the street-crossings near the Houses of Parliament in return for pennies given by passers-by. One day he was absent. Upon inquiry he was found by a missionary, ill in a little attic chamber, furnished only with cot and stool.

"You are lonely here," the missionary said. "Has any one called upon you?"

"O yes," he replied, "several persons have called—Mr. Gladstone for one. He called and read to me."

"Mr. Gladstone called? And what did he read?"

"He sat on the stool there, and read the Bible to me."

What a lesson! The greatest statesman in the world, sitting on a stool in an attic, reading the word of God to a street-sweeper!

Mr. John B. Gough used to describe a scene in which London's great preacher was the central figure.

"The best sermon I ever heard Mr. Spurgeon preach," says Mr. Gough, "was in the Boys' Orphanage. There was an infirmary connected with the orphanage, and in it was a dying boy. Mr. Spurgeon sat down by the little cot, and, in a voice full of tenderness, said to him:

"'My dear, you have a great many pretty promises all around this room, and do you know you are not going to stay with us long? Do you love Jesus?'

"'Yes.'

"'Jesus loves you better than you love Him, and He is going to take you to Himself. There will be no suffering there. Did you have a good night?'

"'No, sir; I coughed all night.'

"'Ah, my child, coughing all night and weary all day. Here, outside are the boys overflowing with health, and you coughing all night, weary all night—but Jesus loves you; and He is going to take you to Him, and then He will tell you all about it, and then you will be glad you waited here so patiently.'

"And without any formality he said: 'Jesus, Master, this little child is coming; give him a warm grasp of Thy hand. Love him, and guide him through the dark waters. Lift him up as a mother lifts and comforts her child.'

"Turning to the boy, he said: 'Are you quite happy here? Nurse, can we not get something to please him? Something that will gratify him? My dear, would you not like to have a bird in a little cage? We will hang it up by the bedside, and in the morning you shall hear the bird sing. Good-bye. You will be in Heaven before I see you again.'

"In such simplicity as this," says Mr. Gough, "did Spurgeon preach the Gospel."—Jennie M. Bingham, in Golden Rule.

EVERY MAN A KING.

Be a Lover of Veracity and Make it the Guide of Your Life.

The kingliest office ever held by one of human birth is that of witness-bearing to the truth. The man who is faithful in this comes nearest to the King of the nations. "Art thou a King, then?" asked the haughty Roman of One who had spoken of His kingdom. The answer is a study for a lifetime. "I am King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." The kingly office and witnessing to the truth are here held to be synonymous. There is a world of encouragement in this for every man of humble birth, of lowly estate, of scanty means. No matter how poor his home, how meager his fare, how circumscribed his influence, how desolate his lot, he may assume the royal prerogatives and exercise the kingly functions. He need not have a throne, or a jeweled crown and glittering robes, not even a scepter; but if he bears witness to the truth he has come to a regal estate. The question of the Roman: "What is truth?" was asked in contempt and was left unanswered. But the witnesses all know enough of it to qualify them for their high calling. Every one who hears the voice of Him whose "kingdom is not of this world" is "of the truth," and all who follow Him in their testimony come into the royal lineage. The witness to the truth is not, as many seem to suppose, a partisan authorized to assume the reins of power, to collect armies, to enlist a host of followers and put them in martial array, to engage in sanguinary battles, to dominate wrong and error by the use of the gun, the sword and the bayonet, and to drive all forms of evil out of the world by a superior force skilled in strategy and the machinery of war. Truth is a reformer, truth is a liberator, truth is an elevator, truth is a purifier, but as an armed warrior it is utterly powerless before the defiant will of man. Those who go forth to war in its name may assail with keenest blades the victims of falsehood, but they will make no impression on the strongholds of error. Omnipotence itself can not lead an unwilling captive to embrace the truth. He stands intrenched beyond the utmost stretch of the mightiest power that would coerce his deciding choice. To witness for the truth, therefore, is not to engage after this fashion in a hostile assault upon the evil that is prevalent in human hearts and manifested in human life. This is the hardest lesson the world has yet to learn. It is so easy to denounce, to scourge, to assail with reproaches and bitter scorn, the follies, the heresies, the evil devices, the short-comings of those who cling to falsehood and error, that every champion of the truth is anxious to get up into the chariot with Jehu and imitate his exterminating zeal. We do not now refer to those who make their pronunciation of shibboleth the sole test of righteousness and would slay with the sword of their vengeance, as the Gileadites did, all who can not sound the letters after their fashion. But the real friends of truth are far more prone to show their love of it by fighting for it than by witness-bearing. If it were an earthly kingdom this might be excused, as the Best King said: "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." The kingdom is "not from hence," and therefore it needs witnesses and not frantic zealots to war in its behalf with sword and spear. If we study the character of Him who came from a throne loftier than is found in any human court to bear witness to the truth, we can see in a concrete form the lesson which those who seek this kingly office must learn, each for himself, before he essays to practice in the high vocation. The witness must be a lover of the truth for its own sake, and make it the guide of his life.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

POLO PONIES.

Where They Come from and How They Are Bred.

Facts About a First-Class Animal—A Tussle Between a Pony and a Broncho Buster—"Cutting"—Ponies with Histories.

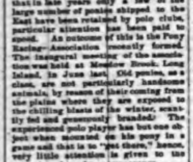
[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

Some interesting and valuable facts in relation to polo ponies, where they are raised and procured, were obtained not long since by the writer from one of the most prominent pony-raisers in this country.

Polo was introduced into the United States about 1873, through the agency of James Gordon Bennett, Oliver Iselin, Schuyler Crosby, Delancey Kane and others.

The first ponies were procured without very careful selection at San Antonio, Tex., and upon their arrival here many of them broke their necks in being halter-broken, and in various other ways proved unsatisfactory. In a short time it was thought best to raise the standard height of polo ponies from thirteen hands two inches to fourteen hands, and later another inch was added, making the present standard of fourteen hands one inch, which is just under the Westchester Polo Club rules, the object being to get a horse with low motion and great strength of back, so as to carry weight well and at the same time be of good size. From the fact that in late years only a few of the large number of ponies shipped to the East have been retained by polo clubs, particular attention has been paid to speed. An outcome of this is the Pony Racing Association recently formed. The inaugural meeting of the association was held at Meadow Brook, Long Island, in June last. Old ponies, as a class, are not particularly handsome animals, by reason of their coming from the plains where they are exposed to the chilling blasts of the winter, scantily fed and generously branded. The experienced polo player has but one object when mounted on his pony in a game and that is to "get there," hence, very little attention is given to the color, brand marks or appearance.

The age of a first-class polo pony ranges from six to ten years, and he must possess low action, his mouth must be like velvet, his temper good, he must be quick as a flash in movement and willing to throw himself five feet to the right or left by the simple pressure of the rein upon the neck. A pony of this description can be found only in the plains country of the South and West, where cattle are held on the open range. These ponies in times past were found in large quantities in Kansas, and later in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. Owing to the fact that to-day the cattle in Kansas are held within inclosures, and that there is a man on every quarter section of ground in Oklahoma, the present generation of ponies in the above-named places are not bridle-wise in the least. Texas, particularly the Pan Handle district, Indian Territory and some portions of Colorado and New Mexico are still good fields from which selections can be made. The best ponies, from a point of desirability, are obtained beyond the Red river in Mexico, but the disposition of these upon arrival in New York precludes their usefulness. Ponies with the best dispositions are found among the Indian tribes, from the fact that the colts are brought up and handled around the camp; the mares, as a rule, do the hard work.



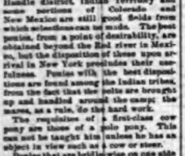
OUT IN A STORM "IN THE CANONS.

The requisites of a first-class cow pony are those of a polo pony. This can not be taught him unless he has an object in view such as a cow or steer.

Ponies that are bridle-wise on one side only are so from the fact that they have been in the hands of one cowman for a long while who was either right or left-handed as the case may be, or from the fact of his always using one hand to carry the whip or "quirt." In this connection it is gratifying to know that the practice of giving each cowman a twelve to fourteen-foot cattle whip has become obsolete, and he has now the end of his lasso or a whip two feet in length known as a "quirt." The long whip was in too active use, consequently the horses and cattle were worried and driven too much.

On his native heath a Western pony can take the conceit out of many a graduate of the riding schools. For instance, not long ago at Silver City, Ind. T., a gentleman selected eleven ponies out of a bunch of twenty-six with the proviso that any one of them could be ridden before the final purchase.

The order was given to rope a particular one of the herd, but the rope settled over the neck of another, which proved to be just what was wanted. The owner did not like the turn of affairs, but as he had made his promise he was obliged to stick to it. A broncho buster was called up, an extra stout double cinch saddle was adjusted and the man climbed on. Then the fun began, and for about three minutes was witnessed a veritable Wild West show. At the close of the first half of the exhibition the rider found himself about ten feet away and over a [illegible] staked and ridered fence. The pony was caught, the man braced up and he climbed on again. This time the pony made for a patch of wild cactus bushes and pitched and tossed in them until he was almost exhausted and the clothes eradicated from the broncho buster, who had stayed there "just the same." The buster finally got him out of the patch and rode all over the prairie until the animal was effectually subdued. As so much trouble had been caused the owner the pony was purchased as a curiosity, if for nothing more.



A PONY THROWING A BRONCO BUSTER.

In the course of time, and that at no great distance, it is going to be very hard to find a large assortment of ponies under fourteen hands one inch in height, because the owner of every bunch of stock horses from season to season puts a larger stallion at the head of his herd, and, if possible, one with better blood, principally of the thoroughbred strain. Blood tells, and the ponies are being rapidly bred up in size. People here in the East have erroneous ideas as to the value of a good cow pony in his own country. In the extreme Southern portion of Texas can be purchased a bunch of mixed stock—mares, young colts, yearlings, the aged and decrepit, by taking them as they come—for from ten dollars to twenty dollars per head. A bunch of from twenty-five to fifty broken-down, worn-out and culled-out cow ponies can be procured at from thirty dollars to sixty dollars a head. In ninety cases out of a hundred, if a person really knows what he wants and can get a cowman to turn him loose among his herd, the herder will not sell him the horse he picks out, because it will be one of his favorite cow horses or fancy cutting ponies. The word "cutting" can be explained as follows: If you should go to a cowman and buy two hundred head of cattle of a certain age or brand, and these cattle should be in the open range or a field of some eight or ten miles square, with others, for whom they have found attachments, by trying to set apart or cut out the ones you have purchased, you will very soon ascertain why certain ponies are held at such high figures. With a good cow pony or cutting horse all you have to do is to ride into a bunch of cattle and show your pony the animal you are after and he will do the rest. You are only obliged then to sit in the saddle and hold on; he will follow that animal right and left on a full run, keeping just at the right position at the animal's hip, watching with a trained eye every movement, and quickly herding him off when he has run out into the small bunch or cut. He is back and ready for another one as soon as you show him the one you desire.

POLO.

A pony that gets mad, plunges and pulls on the bit; one that is stupid or makes you work your passage, would be of no use, as a steer would put his tail over his back and return to his former companions.

One of the largest pony farms is situated in Wabaunsee County, Kan., about twenty miles from Topeka, and contains about eight hundred acres. This is the general headquarters of the business. There are also other farms in Harper, Barber, Comanche and Stevens counties.

Some of the polo ponies at present in the vicinity of New York have very interesting histories. One of them, for instance, was ridden by a woman, man-fashion, into Oklahoma when the rush was made, and he procured for his energetic owner a choice piece of bottom land in advance of the crowd. Another was driven to the wheel on a four-in-hand stage-coach, between Kingfisher and Fort Reno, in Oklahoma. X.

STUDY IN BROWN AND WHITE.

A Sensibly Chosen Summer Dress for Little Folks.

WHAT shall be bought for the every-day wear of the small pedestrian who indoors is just able to walk into mischief of varying kinds, but shows a decided preference for the wash-basin, the shoe-blacking and the ink bottle, and out of doors rejoicing in nothing so much as a sand heap and unlimited water? The pure white and delicate pinks and blues, a first choice for only darlings and children of ample incomes, must be passed reluctantly over by the mother of many, of moderate means, and something that will wash, something that will wear, and something that will not be expensive are the requisites demanded for morning or "mud pie" dresses in families not a few.

This spring, calico, cambric, percale and the fancy ginghams were all tried in the balance and found wanting; calico and cambric fade and grow thin before the summer is half ended; percales, when pretty in design, soil almost as quickly as white, and when dark enough to be useful are somewhat unattractive in design. The ginghams, while tasteful and admirable for afternoon wear, do not possess the staying qualities called for in the dress worn during the forenoon. Denim, suggested by reading "Ascutney Street," seemed a last resort, but also an unmistakably ugly one, until a pile of kitchen aprons, still fresh and clear-looking after some months' hard service, suggested a material that would meet most of the requirements of baby's dresses.

Nine yards of a clear dark brown and white in quarter-inch checks were chosen from a great variety of apron ginghams at eight cents a yard, offered for a selection, the nine yards making three dresses of the following pattern, which was decided upon after much deliberation: A very short, plain waist, with a sleeve puffed from the shoulder to the elbow, plain and tight-fitting from the elbow to the wrist; a plain, full skirt, containing three breadths, finished with a four-inch hem, and reaching to the ankles.

Around the neck is a frill of embroidery, half a yard long, and two inches deep, which gives the finishing touch to a little dress that is quaint and comfortable looking, and when its wearer is crowned with a broad-brimmed brown sailor, or better still a little sun hat of white pique, the effect is very pleasant, almost picturesque. This, at least, is the verdict of the mothers of a little hill-top colony where the dress has been chosen, by general consent, for their two and three-year-olds, boys and girls, who are to revel in sunshine and sand gardens, during the coming long summer mornings.

Two dollars will buy materials for six dresses, including embroideries and buttons, and one dress, cut and fitted perfectly, will serve as a pattern for the others, any one of which can be made on the machine in three hours, an easy piece of work for a morning or afternoon. When economy is the first consideration, the material can be made up Mother Hubbard fashion, and the neck finished with a frill of the same, but the first pattern is, otherwise, well-worth the difference which would thus be saved.—Good Housekeeping.

The White House Silver.

Women all over the land know how it is not to have enough silver knives and forks to go around, and they have all felt the anguish of seeing the most distinguished guest get the plated one by mistake. But who would dream that the White House would not have enough knives and forks to go around, and yet it is true. Every time fifty people sit down to a state dinner there two of them take their bouillon from plated spoons, their terrapin from plated forks and cut the fillet of beef with plated knives.

It is a horrible thought, but there are only four dozen genuine silver knives, forks and spoons in the butler's pantry, and by the most skillful ingenuity they can not be made to do duty for fifty people. There is one set of knives and forks in the sideboard which has a history, for it cost a President his re-election. These are the gold knives and forks which Van Buren added, and when the people learned that the public money was being taken to put gold spoons in Presidents' mouths they promptly defeated him.

Now, the truth of the matter is that they are not gold at all, and the people were hasty in their judgment. They are solid silver washed with gold, and it was only a few years ago—in President Arthur's day—that they began to wear off and disclose the hoax. He had them rewashed, and they are still used on state occasions. They are small, fine bladed and much more delicate than those commonly in use in this day. Many of the larger pieces of silver date back to Madison's day, although no memoranda have been kept, and it is hard to tell when things were purchased.—N. Y. World.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

HALL FIXTURES.

Frank Laurel Tells How to Make a Mirror and Umbrella Stand.

In too many houses the hall is but a small alley whose only furnishing is a square piece of gaudily colored oil cloth, with perhaps a long row of clothes hooks in the wall on a level with the top of the door, or thereabouts. The caller, who may have ridden a dozen miles over a dusty road, and whose hair and clothing are gray with dust and awry from the wind, must either sit with this disordered toilet through the brief call, or ask for whisk broom, hair brush, and a more suitable place to use them than the parlor. If possible, therefore, the hall should be large enough to hold hat rack, umbrella stand, mirror, whisk broom, and hair brush. If no better can be done put up two shelves upon iron or wooden brackets—fair iron brackets are but ten cents a pair—with a looking-glass between, the last as large as can be afforded.

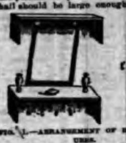


FIG. 1.—ARRANGEMENT OF HALL FIXTURES.

The shelves may be finished with stain, or bronzed, or may be covered with a linen scarf, fringed and embroidered. (See Fig. 1.) The upper shelf will accommodate those humanly obstinate hats which will not hang when hung up. The lower may have vases with flowers, a pincushion, etc. The books underneath are for the use of the juveniles, and none should be put so high as to render a jump or spring necessary in order to reach them. A simple umbrella or hat stand, like the one shown in Fig. 2, is easily made, and useful to hang overcoats on as well as hats. It consists of three bamboo-rods, or broom sticks, or [illegible] small trees or straight limbs, put together as shown, and ebonized. This is easily done with "diamond dye," black. If there are knobs where twigs and small limbs have been cut off, they but serve to add to its rustic beauty when ebonized and varnished. Tie firmly in the middle, and put a strong ribbon or small rope (which may be bronzed) through staples to hold the top well together. The tray at the bottom is a shallow wooden butter bowl with staples put through screw eyes in the bowl, to fasten it to the standards. This catches any drip from a wet umbrella, and also holds a muddy pair of overshoes or sandals if wished.—Orange Judd Farmer.

YOUR VACATION.

This Means You, Good Mothers and Housewives.

Mrs. Housewife, have you begun to make preparations for your summer vacation? Haven't given the subject a thought! Well, then, it is time you were beginning to think about it. Don't say that you can not afford to take a vacation; you would not say so if you looked at it right, for the truth is, you can not afford to go without one. You believe that it is necessary for a child to have a rest from school; you believe that the pastor should have a vacation, and that the business man is blind and foolish who does not give himself a rest. You know that the plants and fields must have a rest, or they soon become useless, and you are not so foolish as to believe that you are so very different from the rest of the world that you can continue year after year in doing the most trying sort of work, without a rest, and not have your efforts more or less a failure.

There are so many inexpensive ways of spending a vacation that there are few who need to plead poverty as an excuse for not taking one. When you get at the root of the matter you will find that the real reason why the housewife gives herself no rest is because she imagines that her little world would speedily go to rack and ruin if she did not give it her constant personal supervision. It would be a good plan for her to do as the little girl in the story did—"play she is dead" for a week or two. Things will go on when she dies very much as they do now, and when that fact is realized the vacation problem becomes much less difficult.

It will do the children good to spend part of the vacation in doing the housework. Shut up all the rooms except those most needed, and let the family live on bread and milk for a week if need be, while you go home to mother, or if you have no mother, go to the neighboring town and board for a week. Ten chances to one you will get awfully tired of it, and when the week is up you will feel like a child who rejoices that the dreaded punishment is over, and be very glad to go back to your work again. Now don't say that such a feeling is convincing proof that the vacation has done you no good. The flowers might say the same thing of the frost which gives them rest, and with as much truth.

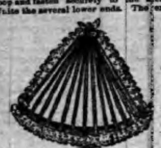
The mother whose daughter is less than twelve can not so easily take a vacation, yet she may rest a little if she will. One such woman pitched a tent beneath some trees in the yard, and swung hammocks under it; then closed the house, all but the kitchen, and for two weeks spent her time in the tent. She thus saved sweeping and bed-making, and picking up things after the children and entertaining guests. The children were delighted with the arrangement and required much less attention than usual. She dressed them in outing suits made for the occasion which were easily washed and required no ironing. Living in that way she cared less about appearances and had a good, lazy time lying in the hammock for hours with little to do but read. The out-door life made them all so hungry that bread, butter, radishes, milk and fruit were all they cared for, and the task of cooking was simplified by more than one-half. There was a little fruit to can during the time, and the milk to care for as usual, but such necessary tasks were done during the cooler hours of the day.—The Housekeeper.

To Preserve the Complexion in Summer.

The young lady who wants to look as pretty as possible during hot weather, must endeavor to keep cool. She must not have a hasty temper, for anger makes a red face. Second, she must eat nothing indigestible, for nothing makes the face red and the nose red so quickly as a bad diet. She should especially avoid flesh foods, which are heating to the blood. Her diet should be grains and cooling fruits, together with milk, in rather small quantities. If the diet is good, the temper cool and the nerves quiet, she will not be troubled with a red face and coarse looking skin. Aside from this, much can be done by frequent bathing in cool water, not only the face, but the whole body. If there is a little irritation of the skin, due to erythema, it does no harm to apply a little starch powder or powdered arrowroot to the surface and it will often prove quite soothing. But the young lady who wants to preserve a fine complexion must never use any form of face powder which contains lead or arsenic.—J. H. Kellogg, M. D.

Pretty Design for Tidy.

This tidy is prettily adapted to the popular, low willow rocker whose braces are arranged by the artisan so as to form an umbel in two sections,—which of course makes convenience for fastening the tidy. Make a flexible arch to fit the top of the chair, upon which stitch 13 rays of picot edge ribbon in any design or scale one fancies; the orange scale is pretty. The center ribbon is the pure color. Leave the ends long enough to loop and fasten securely to the arch. Unite the several lower ends. The exactness of the parallel can be obtained by proper attention given to sewing of the strips upon the arch, across which stitch a border of pretty lace continuing around the sides; tie the corners to the braces of willow or bamboo with a ribbon that matches with, or is complementary to the center ray. For a very dainty decoration use 11 rays, if they fall between the slender braces they look airy and summery. If wire is used for the arch and wound with footing or other thin stuff, the graceful negligee of the top loops conceals it effectually.



RIBBON TIDY.

Treatment of Persons Overcome by Gas.

In regard to the treatment of persons overcome with gas several suggestions were made by different speakers at the recent meeting of the American Gas-light Association at Toronto. The most practical were those quoted on the authority of a prominent physician:

1. Take the man at once into the fresh air. Don't crowd around him.
2. Keep him on his back. Don't raise his head or turn him on his side.
3. Loosen his clothing at his neck.
4. Give a little brandy and water, not more than four tablespoonfuls of brandy. Give the ammonia mixture (one part in all, aromatic ammonia to sixteen parts water) in small quantities at short intervals, a teaspoonful every two or three minutes.
5. Slap the face and chest with the wet end of a towel.
6. Apply warmth and friction if the body or limbs are cold.
7. If the breathing is feeble or irregular, artificial respiration should be used and kept up until there is no doubt that it can no longer be of use.
8. Administer oxygen.

Treatment of Burns.

The best thing to do, writes Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of the Michigan Sanitarium, whether the burn is large or small, is to submerge it in water, which will keep the air away from it and alleviate the smarting; then as soon as possible apply a paste made of carbonate of soda and water. Spread it on the burned surface, cover with cloths and keep saturated with water. This mode of treatment destroys the pain, expedites recovery and prevents blistering. There is no better remedy known. If it is applied promptly and properly, the skin will form a hard, dry covering over the burn and no blistering will occur. If a blister is formed, it should be carefully punctured to let the water out and let the skin down upon the raw surface. If a burn is treated antiseptically—and this manner of treatment is antiseptic—there will be no suppuration. The dressing need not be changed, but more of the carbonate of soda may be added if washed away by the application of water. The less the dressing is moved the better.

MUSIC THAT CHARMED.

How a Little Colored Boy Captured a Carload of Passengers.

An incident of a peculiarly touching character occurred yesterday in one of the elevated railroad trains that brought tears to the eyes of the passengers, says the New York Times. The train had just left One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street when the passengers saw entering the car a little boy about six years old, being half pushed and half carried by an older boy, evidently his brother. At the first glance it was seen that the little fellow was blind and his eyelids had almost grown together. He had a pale, wan face, but was smiling. A quick look of sympathy passed over the faces of the passengers, and an old gray-haired gentleman got up and gave his seat to the two. The "big brother," who was about eleven years old, tenderly lifted up the little blind boy and placed him on his knee.

"How's that?" he asked.

"Nice," said the little chap. "Where's my 'monica?"

This puzzled some of the passengers, and several turned to see what the child meant. But the "big brother" knew, and immediately drew out a small mouth harmonicon and placed it in the little fellow's hands. Both boys were well dressed. The little fellow took the instrument into his thin hands, ran it across his lips, and began to play softly, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Tears came into the eyes of the old gentleman who had given up his seat, and as the little fellow played on, running into "Rock of Ages" and "Abide with Me," there were many moist eyes in the car. The little player seemed to have a remarkably true ear and occasionally, when the instrument would rasp, he would turn sadly to his "big brother" and say: "Don't whistle."

The train rushed along, the passengers listened, and the little fellow played on tirelessly, never missing a note from "Anna Laurie" or "Home, Sweet Home." Finally the "big brother" leaned down and told the little one to get ready to leave, as the train was approaching their station. Then, as if he knew he had won a whole carload of friends, the blind boy quickly changed "The Suwanee River" into "Auld Lang Syne," and with one accord the passengers burst into a round of applause, while the "big brother" carried the little one out of the car.

Races in the West Indies.

"It may come to pass," said a British lecturer lately, "that some African may, in centuries to come, point out how a race of Englishmen once dominated the West Indies and were improved off the face of the land. Such fears are real enough. In 1658 there were in those islands 4,500 Europeans to 1,500 Africans. In 1800 the numbers were 30,000 Europeans and 300,000 Africans. In the last census the figures were 14,433 Europeans, 109,946 colored, or mulattoes, 444,186 Africans and 12,240 Asiatics.

Cost of an Introduction.

Brown and Smith step into a saloon and meet Jones. Brown and Jones salute each other and then Brown says: "Mr. Smith, let me introduce you to my friend, Mr. Jones."

Mr. Smith (who has had several social glasses)—Now, Brown, this introduction is not at all necessary. I've known Jones longer than you have. Jonesey, old boy, put it there! (They shake hands effusively.)

A while after Brown and Smith get out and Smith says: "Confound it, Brown, why did you introduce me to that man Jones? He borrowed ten dollars of me."

"You said you knew him better than I did," returned Brown.

"Oh, well, I said that just for effect."

"Well, it had its effect, you see."

"Yes, and I am out ten dollars."—Texas Siftings.

Desperate Chances.

First New Yorker (to a friend)—Do you know some good life insurance company that you can recommend?

Second New Yorker—Yes, half a dozen. Any hurry about it?

First New Yorker—Yes; I want to get my life insured right away. And say, if any thing should happen to me won't you look out for my family?

Second New Yorker—Goodness gracious! man, what desperate step are you about to undertake?

First New Yorker (in solemn tones)—I'm going on a steamboat excursion.

Second New Yorker—If that's so get insured before you leave; you are taking desperate chances.—Texas Siftings.

Only One Day's Delay.

In Chicago recently the boiler and engine of a printing establishment were wrecked by an explosion. A month would be necessary to set new boilers and repair the engine. This meant loss in filling contracts, beside the throwing out of employment the employes. But this is not a waiting age. The proprietors walked across the street, so to speak, secured a forty-horse power electric motor, connected it with the shafting and the next morning, after the accident full operations were resumed. Under the old regime of steam a month was required to put things in working order. Electricity accomplished the thing in a day.

Put His Foot in His Mouth.

At Rome, Ga., while a horse was loose in the stable one of his hind feet got caught in his mouth. It is supposed that the animal was rubbing the flies from his nose with his hind foot, when by accident the foot passed into the mouth. The hoof was shod with a heavy iron shoe, and the sharp corners of the shoe and hoof cut very painful wounds in the mouth. The animal fell to the ground and continued to struggle without relief. When he was discovered he was covered with foam, and showed every sign of a fearful struggle. His master came and succeeded in extracting the foot.

Baby's Face Was Clean.

A rather precocious infant had its christening unfortunately deferred until it was able to talk, and at the font was lifted in its father's arms for the ceremony. After the minister had dipped his fingers in the water, and made the sign of the cross on her forehead, the unawed child leaned down, and catching up the long sleeve of his white gown, wiped the water away, calmly remarking: "Baby's face clean. Don't want wassin; det it wassed 'fore us [illegible] out!"

Short But Sweet.

Jinks—Why, Binks what's become of your watch?

Binks—Sat in the train next to a man who asked me ten times in one hour if I had the time.

Jinks—Well?

Binks—Gave him the watch.—Jewelers' Circular.

DARLING.

A little maid with sweet blue eyes
Looked upward with a shy surprise
Because I asked her name;
Awhile she bent her golden head,
While o'er her face soft blushes spread
Like some swift rosy flame;
Then, looking up, she softly said:
"My name is Mamma's Darling."

"Tell me your mother's name, my dear,"
And stooping low I paused to hear.
The little maid seemed musing;
"Why, mamma's name's like mine, you know
But just because we love her so
We call her Mamma Darling."

"Tell me your papa's name," I cried.
The little maiden's eyes grew wide;
"My papa! Don't you know?
Why, ever since the Baby died
Mamma and I have always tried
To cheer him from his sorrowing;
And my mamma and I love best
To call him Papa Darling."

"What did you call the baby, dear?"
The answer came quite low but clear:
"The baby—oh, I wonder what
They call him now in Heaven;
But we had only one name here,
And that was Baby Darling."

Swift years flew by, and once again
That little maid so tender
Stood by my side, but she had grown,
Like lilies, tall and slender;
This time 'twas I that called her name,
And swift the blushes grew like flame
At that sweet word of morning;
I clasped her in my arms and kissed
My tender-hearted Darling.

—Yankee Blade.

TRAPPED BY A WOMAN.

Thrilling Experience of an Amateur Lady Detective.

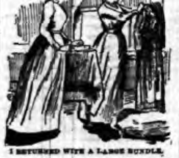
THE HISTORY of Margaret Hoffman, even when spread upon paper in cold type, reads like a romance. Deliberately related to the writer by the heroine of that romance herself, a girl who has but just attained her majority, it possesses an extraordinary degree of interest, which the modesty of the relator and her apparent unconsciousness of having done any thing remarkable rather enhances than lessens.

"You find me surrounded now with every luxury," said Miss Hoffman, "but two years ago I was a poor girl in an Illinois country town, earning my daily bread by hard labor. My father had died a year previously. My mother was an incurable invalid. My days were spent in the small dry-goods store where I earned just sufficient to support us. The only relatives I had were a distant cousin in New York and an uncle, my mother's brother, with whom my father had quarreled in early life and to whom our branch of the family had never become reconciled. News reached me one day that this uncle, a morose old man, had been suddenly stricken with disease, and had expressed a wish to see his only sister and her child. He was very well-to-do. As a prosperous merchant on South Water street he had accumulated a considerable fortune, and it was with renewed hope that mother and I set out for Chicago.

"Upon our arrival here we at once went to the store on South Water street, where we met his partner. He received us with cold politeness, but informed us, much to our astonishment, that a visit to my uncle's home on the North side could be provocative of no good—in fact, that my uncle was as much set against my mother as ever—in fact, that he had long ago disowned his brother's family, root and branch.

"The source of the information I had regarding my uncle's wishes was of such a reliable character that this extraordinary statement from his partner set me thinking. I could not reconcile it with the expression which had fallen from the lips of the sick man: 'I would like to see Mary and her little daughter before I die.'

"I determined to act at once. I knew my uncle was very sick—not expected to live, in fact. Something in this man's face told me that he lied. The reason was not far to seek. My uncle, as I have said, was a rich man. This fellow did not want near relatives at hand at such a time. I knew that my uncle had made a will years before. Mr. Samuel Whitney probably figured there prominently, as my uncle was childless. Mr. Whitney did not want the will altered.



I RETURNED WITH A LARGE BUNDLE.

"'Mother,' I said, 'you must go and see what you can do at the house. You must go alone. I don't wish Mrs. Whitney to see me. Never mind why.'

"I was the stronger of the two. My mother never resisted me. She went, and returned after an hour's absence to say that admittance to her brother's presence was denied her.

"How thankful I was now that I had saved a little money. It enabled us to live in an humble way for two weeks, during which time I issued forth daily on my tours of investigation. I returned home one day with a large bundle, which I unfolded in the presence of my mother. A display of the following articles brought from her pale lips a cry of astonishment. Two coarse calico gowns, one pair of heavy cheap shoes, one straw bonnet ornamented with red feathers and blue ribbons, one pair of blue spectacles, one brown wig, two cheek plumpers, a pot of rouge, another of powder, a hare's foot such as theatrical people use in their making up and a large red bandana handkerchief.

"Then I announced that I was about to make application for a position as servant in the house of Mr. Whitney, my uncle's partner.

"The next morning there issued forth from the little lodging which had seen the departure day after day of a weary, pale, spiritless, very blonde and quite refined young lady, an uncouth, rosy, buxom servant girl, whose only defect seemed a somewhat weak eyesight, which necessitated at all times the use of spectacles. For an ignorant country girl, she seemed singularly quick and smart in the performance of her household duties. In a week Mrs. Whitney had voted me a treasure. In a month I had sized up every member of the household, and come to the conclusion that Samuel Whitney was one of the greatest villains the world had seen in a long while.

"I had discovered that my uncle was completely in the power of Mr. Whitney and his wife. They alone attended to his wants and gave him his medicine. Not another living soul, except the doctor, was permitted to approach him. Once to my great indignation I heard my mother's name mentioned by the sick man. He had evidently been frequently in the habit of asking for his sister.

"'Why does not Mary come and see me?' he was asking.

"'I have written to them several times,' replied Whitney.

"The liar! Almost I had a mind to tear aside my disguise, rush in, declare myself and comfort him.

"And have spoiled every thing. My uncle had never seen me. While Whitney would have been flustered at first, he would have soon recovered himself, and I should have been ignominiously thrown out of the house.

"'Take some more of this medicine,' I heard Whitney saying.

"'No, no! No more of that. Medicine won't save me. I don't like that stuff, Samuel. I think it does me more harm than good.'

"A new light broke in upon my brain. I had heard of such things, but I dismissed the idea as too utterly improbable. Whitney could never be re-enacting in the nineteenth century the crime peculiar to the age which produced the Borgias—he could not be slowly killing this man by poison.

"But though I dismissed it the idea returned to me with tenfold force that night as I lay in my narrow cot. Although it was long past midnight, I could not sleep. It was a very close, sultry night. I arose and opened the door of my room to have more air.

"As I did so I caught the sound of voices.

"'What was that?' It was Mrs. Whitney who was speaking.

"'Nothing,' replied her husband.

"'But I heard a noise.'

"'It is nothing, I tell you; rats or something like that. Go to sleep.'

"The Whitneys were lying in bed, awake, and their door was open. Beyond it was the room of the sick man. An irresistible desire to hear further prompted me to steal softly from the room into the passage way. My foot caught in the mat. I could hear Mr. Whitney raise himself up in bed.

"'Who's that?' he called out.

"My heart stood still for a moment. 'It's Emma, sir!' I replied.

"'What are you doing out in the passage this time of night?' he asked suspiciously.

"'Why, I ain't in the passage,' I replied. 'It was hot and I just got up to open the door.'

"'Well, go back into your room,' said Mrs. Whitney, 'and don't let me catch you out of it till morning.'

"But I would not go back. Something I could not define recalled my suspicions of a previous evening. I felt intuitively that they meditated some evil against my uncle.

"'What are you standing there for? Why don't you go back into your room again?' called out Mr. Whitney.

"It was a trying moment. I knew that if I once shut the door I could not reopen it without making some noise, which might lead to suspicions, which suspicions might lead to an investigation of my trunk and effects which would be only *s*urely discomforting. Yet as it was I ran an awful risk. I stood here my natural self; no rouge, no wig, no spectacles, just as I had risen from my bed. Every dictate of prudence told me to go back; yet an inner consciousness whispered: 'Go forward!'

"'Are you going to stand there all night?' came the now exasperated voice of Mr. Whitney.

"'No, I'm not,' I snapped out; 'but it's hard a poor servant gal can't get a breath of fresh air.' And I banged the door to with much unnecessary violence, as if I had got out of temper.

"Had I retreated into my room?

"No. I had resolved to brave every thing. In that brief moment of time there had come a vision to me of my poor helpless uncle in the power of these wretches. I had banged the door to, but I had left myself outside stand*ing in the passage, with beating heart* and limbs which trembled, for I knew that the flash of a light might reveal me at any moment, and I had learned by this time the desperate character of these people, the Whitneys. Beyond a doubt of it they were slowly poisoning the man whose wealth they coveted.

"It had been impossible to get to the sick chamber; it was too well guarded for that; but I had had to wash some medicine glasses, and had drained into a little vial the contents of one not entirely swallowed. A local druggist whom I took into my confidence had told me it was undoubtedly arsenic.

"'Well, that hussy's out of the way,' I heard Whitney remark, when I had shut the door. 'Do you know, I don't like the looks of that girl. Discharge her!'

"'Discharge her?' said Mrs. Whitney. 'I wouldn't do that. She's the best girl I've ever had, and she's such a fool, too. I'm sure she suits in every way.'

"'If I thought she suspected any thing,' growled Whitney, 'I'd soon settle her. Do you think she's asleep yet?'

"'Why, no, give her a little time,' replied Mrs. Whitney. 'How impatient you are. Wait ten minutes.'

"'I am impatient; wouldn't you be? Think of all I have put up with from that old dotard in the next room. The years of labor, of weary waiting; the indignities to which he has subjected me; how I have had to toady and cringe to him to get a small share in the business. Of course, I'm impatient. Will he never drop off, I wonder. That last dose should have done it.'

"All this time I was standing almost paralyzed with an unspeakable horror. An indefinable dread took possession of me, a deadly terror seized upon my heart, my knees trembled, I dared scarcely breathe. To stand alone thus at dead of night and listen to those wretches plotting how to encompass the more speedy death of a helpless man.

"To remain where I was was to court discovery, and something told me a horrible death. It was equally impossible to retreat, for the noise of the opening of my room door would be the signal for instant investigation by the already suspicious Whitney, and I had no time to suddenly assume my ordinary disguise. There remained but one course to pursue. It required the exercise of the greatest caution and more courage than I believed I possessed.

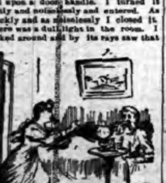
"There was a small empty room beyond the apartment of the Whitneys which commanded a full view of the sick man's chamber. Once there I should be comparatively safe.

"But to reach it I must pass the door of the room where the Whitneys lay.

"Carefully poising myself I essayed to pass across the intervening space. Slowly I advanced, moving first one limb and then another, hardly daring to breathe, and feeling forward with my hands outstretched lest I should suddenly encounter some unexpected obstacle.

"I had safely passed the open door of the Whitneys' chamber, when I became confused, and in the utter darkness lost my way. Vainly I stretched out my hands. At last to my great joy they fell upon a door handle. I turned it softly and noiselessly and entered. As quickly and as noiselessly I closed it. There was a dull light in the room. I looked around and by its rays saw that by mistake I had entered the apartment of my sick uncle.



"HUSH," I WHISPERED.

"He was broad awake and sitting up in bed staring at me with two glaring, awful eyes. The living image of my mother, as he had known her in her youth, and clad in my white night robe, his diseased and distorted imagination completed the illusion.

"'Mary,' he gasped, 'do not come to reproach me.'

"'Hush!' I whispered, hastening to the bedside. 'Hush, uncle! Do not make a noise, for God's sake.'

"He trembled violently. 'I do not understand,' he said, vaguely, as one in a dream. His terror seemed to have departed at the touch of my hand.

"'Listen,' I said. 'I am not Mary, your sister. I am her daughter. We heard you were very ill and wished to see us, so mother and I came to town. We have been here for weeks trying to see you, but they kept us away. Don't be frightened at what I am going to tell you. The Whitneys are not your friends. They are giving you improper medicine. Don't take it, uncle, for Heaven's sake. It's poison!'

"'Poison! Oh! you don't mean that; and Sam Whitney, too, my old partner.'

"'Yes, uncle, I do mean it, and I'm here at the risk of my life to tell you. Hark, he's coming now to give you your medicine. Pretend to take it, but don't swallow it. It's arsenic.'

"A dreadful expression passed over the face of the old man; but even in that moment he thought of my safety.

"'Hide, child, hide,' he whispered, and he pointed to the closet.

"From there I witnessed what confirmed my suspicions. It was Samuel Whitney who poured the draught which my uncle pretended and did not drink. Subsequent analysis has, you know, proved it to be a most deadly poison. Horror stricken at the enormity of this man's crime, with the knowledge that instant death awaited the penetration of my disguise, I awaited only the coming of daylight to pick a quarrel with my mistress, which resulted in my instant dismissal. I left her house to report at police headquarters, but some*thing had alarmed* the Whitneys. When the officers reached the house the birds had flown.

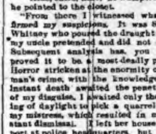
"My uncle has been dead a year. My mother, sole heir to his considerable estates, lives surrounded, as you see, by every luxury. As I am only twenty-two, and am quite wealthy in my own right, I presume I am to be envied."—Austin W. Granville, in Chicago Journal.

RICH AND PRETTY GIRLS.

Pen Pictures of Some of the Daughters of Michigan Statesmen.

General Alger Has an Interesting Pair of Girls—Senator McMillan's Pretty Daughter—A Michigan Girl at the Russian Court.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]



WILL you excuse me if I sit in my shirt sleeves?" And the daughter of Ambition, as personified in the person of Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, gives an emphatic toss to her pink, silken blazer, which carries it to the ignominious seclusion of a trunk bottom.

It is reasonable to remain at home, when the thermometer is trifling with the affection of the nineties; but from a girl's standpoint such reasoning is not reasonable, and to enjoy is to flit. Hence the position in the foreground of our picture of a cavernous trunk, and unlimited girlish fripperies.

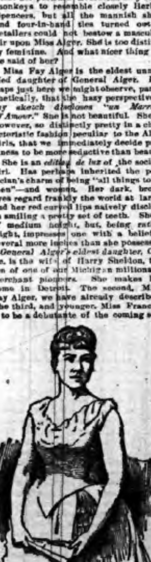
As to other accessories, be kind enough to imagine a faint odor of violets, swaying muslin draperies and that delirious and formidable confusion of "things" which render so delightful the summer room of our summer girl. The walls breathe hints of sojourns by sea and mountain side. In a corner, from amid some dainty water color sketches, the photograph of General Sherman looms up very much as a rugged old rock rears itself from amid surrounding greeneries. The scrawl beneath it, you will observe, bears the General's signature. A severe little writing-desk indicates a lavish waste of gray matter in somebody's brain. It is here that Miss Fay Alger serves her mind, done to a turn, and garnished by *one of Uncle Sam's beautiful red post*age stamps.

Just at present she is perched humming-bird fashion upon the arm of a huge cane rocker, busily fanning herself with a very natty sailor hat. It is the moment of moments in which to steal her portrait. Evolution may cause monkeys to resemble closely Herbert Spencers, but all the mannish shirts and four-in-hand ties turned out by retailers could not bestow a masculine air upon Miss Alger. She is too distinctly feminine. And what nicer thing can be said of her?

Miss Fay Alger is the eldest unmarried daughter of General Alger. Perhaps just here we might observe, parenthetically, that the hazy perspective of my sketch discloses "un Mariage D'Amour." She is not beautiful. She is, however, so distinctly pretty in a characteristic fashion peculiar to the Alger girls, that we immediately decide prettiness to be more seductive than beauty.

She is an edition de luxe of the society girl. Has perhaps inherited the politician's charm of being "all things to all men"—and women. Her dark, brown eyes regard frankly the world at large, and her red curved lips naively disclose in smiling a pretty set of teeth. She is of medium height, but, being rather slight, impresses one with a belief in several more inches than she possesses.

General Alger's eldest daughter, Carrie, is the wife of Harry Sheldon, the son of one of our Michigan millionaire merchant pioneers. She makes her home in Detroit. The second, Miss Fay Alger, we have already described. The third, and younger, Miss Frances, is to be a debutante of the coming season. She closely resembles her sisters, possessing in common with them that well-bred, well-groomed look so characteristic of American girls of the upper classes and so highly indicative of a refined mother's presence upon the domestic stage.



MISS M'MILLAN.

Where is Don M. Dickinson this summer?

If you wish to join a certain inner circle of rusticity, take a certain crazy little steamer leaving Detroit daily, and after various tiltings and lurchings you will at last find yourself alongside of an equally crazy little pier, cherished as a curio and antique by dwellers on Grosse Isle. Multiply nine miles of quiet by two of comfort, and you have this island.

Here Don M. Dickinson and family are enjoying the ephemeral beauties of the summer days of 1890. It is all delightfully primitive — perhaps no place more so — from the afore mentioned insane little steamer to the negligee assumed by our erstwhile Postmaster-General.

It would remind some of the girl who said she liked to be engaged because it would be such fun to break it off. The chief pleasure in being there would be, to such ill-regulated persons, the ability to come away again.

Well! Good-bye to Grosse Isle and a glance at Detroit's amateurish Newport —Grosse Pointe.

Surrounded by rolling green lawns, tennis courts, palms and blossoming hedges, here stands the summer home of Michigan's Senator, James McMillan. Its russet tints are thrown out effectively by the contrasting blue of July skies.

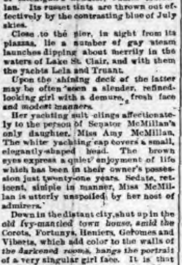
Close to the pier, in sight from its piazzas, lie a number of gay steam launches dipping about merrily in the waters of Lake St. Clair, and with them the yachts Lela and Truant.

Upon the shining deck of the latter may be often seen a slender, refined-looking girl with a demure, fresh face and modest manners.

Her yachting suit clings affectionately to the person of Senator McMillan's only daughter, Miss Amy McMillan. The white yachting cap covers a small, elegantly-shaped head. The brown eyes express a quiet enjoyment of life which has been in their owner's possession just twenty-one years. Sedate, reticent, simple in manner, Miss McMillan is utterly unspoiled by her host of admirers.

Down in the distant city, shut up in the old ivy-mantled town house, amid the Corots, Fortunys, Heniers, Gérômes and Viberts, which add color to the walls of the darkened rooms, hangs the portrait of a very singular girl face. It is that of Grace McMillan Jarvis, the eldest daughter of Senator McMillan. Before this portrait flowers placed as before a shrine tell the tale. It is one familiar enough—an association of wedding bells with a fast following funeral knell.

In the Grosse Pointe nursery, with its walls as blue as a robin's egg, sleeps the Senator's little grandchild, not the least of her inheritance being the name of her mother—Grace McMillan Jarvis. One of Detroit's large hospitals—Grace—is an In Memoriam royal indeed, and one which occupies much of Senator McMillan's time and interest.



MISS HELEN LOTHROP.

On the deck of the Truant besides Miss McMillan one may often see another of Michigan's greatest heiresses, Miss Helen Newberry, the only daughter of ex-Congressman Newberry.

Her white yachting suit clings to the form of a nineteenth century Venus. This is a distinction with a very wide difference, for who would gaze for a moment on an antique Venus nowadays?

Her figure proclaims her a devotee of physical culture, and so she is. Her light brown hair is ruffled with the lake breezes, and gray eyes look from a face of tan. Tennis player, swimmer and a veritable little sea-dog when it comes to yachting, of her we can not expect the coloring of a lily. She is well remembered in Washington, where she was the season's guest of Mrs. James McMillan, and where she was noted for wearing with exceptional grace the trying First Empire and Greek gowns. She is a skilled musician, interpreting with feeling and precision music of a high order, yet not above thrumming on a banjo in honor of the moon upon a summer evening. Last autumn while living in Paris she became the keynote in the color scheme of a gossipy little story, whose sketching outlines time has since filled in.

It all hinges—this story—upon the infatuation of a certain Count Baergraff over our very chic little friend, Miss Newberry; and possibly also over the glittering ducats of Newberry pere. Be this as it may, upon her return to this country she had added an ornament largely affected by American girls to the jangle of bonbonieres and other noisy trifles hanging at her very small belt. It was a titled scalp.

Absence seems to have but added business-like intensity to the Count's passion, but he was at first seemingly ignorant of the best course to pursue. As Miss Newberry had given him no encouragement whatever to follow her to America, he was in despair.

Finally, light seeming to flicker, dawn-like, upon the edge of his mental horizon, he dispatched a cable to a mutual friend. The original request was made that she discover, if possible, if a certain gentleman with a German accent and a hard-up title could be found stalking about the corridors of Miss Newberry's heart.

As the heart in question proved to be unoccupied by any such person, the return message was not conducive to an American trip on the part of the Count. Miss Newberry is therefore still Miss Newberry, due perhaps to her possession of an unusual quantity of good hard common sense.

It is at Grosse Pointe also, that our ex-Minister to Russia, G. V. N. Lothrop is passing the summer in a large summer house which has quite a farm-house flavor about it, and is surrounded by sunny vineyards. Mr. Lothrop's eldest daughter Annie is now the Baroness Huehoe, having married the Baron soon after the return of the family from St. Petersburg. She now forms one of the brilliant court circle in that icily splendid city. His younger daughter is still in the home circle.

JOHANNA STAATS.

A Pet Goose's Larceny.

A family in Dover, N. J., who had long been missing valuables was amazed a day or two ago to find them in the secret nest of a pet goose. Among the articles which the bird had appropriated were two gold thimbles, a tortoise*shell comb, scarf-pins, spools of sewing* silk, silver lace and a Waterbury watch. The goose had a trick of knocking at the door in quest of edible dainties, and on being admitted and petted would seek a sunny corner of the room and doze. When left alone it began its purloining operations. It was hiding the stolen time-piece with its other treasures when discovered.

WHITE HOUSE CHERUBS.

A Few Amusing Stories of the President's Grandchildren.

Baby McKee Has a Will of His Own and Is Fond of Running Things to Suit Himself—Little Mary's Sweet Temper—Cousin Marthena.

The domestic life at the White House grows more and more interesting as the little people are from day to day developing, says the Washington Herald. Little Benjamin begins already to show a masculine individuality. A year ago he did as he was told; but original will, if not original sin, was strikingly exhibited the other day by him. Benjamin got up all right, and was as good-natured as can be. During the morning a delegation appeared and Benjamin was taken down to help receive them. He passed around the room voluntarily and shook hands with every one, and was simply delightfully cordial and childishly charming. But it fatigued the little man, no doubt, for he afterward was irritable with those he loved best, just as older and wiser people are. By evening, however, he brightened up, and in the cool of the day, while the President and all the household were sitting on the front piazza enjoying the evening breezes, little Benjamin with the rest, the Attorney-General joined the group. After greetings from the older ones the President bade his namesake shake hands with Mr. Miller. Then little Benjamin put his hands behind him and looked from his head to his feet the personification of rebellion.

"Will you shake hands with Mr. Miller?" said the President, coaxingly.

"No, I won't," said Baby McKee.

"Then you must go into the house. I can not have a little boy out here who is not polite."

Benjamin went into the parlor, followed by his mortified mamma, and there he set up a howl that, like Tennyson's bugle, "set the wild echoes flying." Mamma coaxed, nurse coaxed, and still this little man kicked and screamed until he had vented his anger and indignation. Finally—for he kept peeping out and it looked so very nice outside, and his grandpa never relented an inch nor gave him a look—he could not hold out any longer, and suddenly became quiet, walked out, and shook hands with Mr. Miller, and then walked off to play with little Mary, as calm and serene as though he had not been making a "scene" and mortifying every body.

Not long since, one fine morning, Mrs. McKee bade the nurse take the children out on the grounds and let them run about and play in the grass. All went well for awhile. Benjamin and his sister could not make mud pies, but they did heap up little piles of leaves and enjoy rolling about. Of course their little white dresses soon had the freshness taken out of them, and the White House children looked just like any child might under similar circumstances. Presently a group of tourists passed by on their way to the War Department. Among them were some ladies, one of whom espied the children. Addressing the nurse, she said: "Whose children are those?"

"Mrs. McKee's, madam."

"Humph! you don't tell me! Well, I don't see that they look any better than other folks' children! Seems to me if I lived here I'd keep my children dressed up."

The nurse apologized for their commonplace appearance, and, gathering up the babies, went in to pour out her indignation, but she was met with shouts of laughter from Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. McKee, who see the funny side of a situation as quickly as any body.

Little Mary McKee is beginning to rival Benjamin in the family affection, for she is fast learning from her brother all he knows, and developing on her own account, besides. She is very docile, and will do a lot of pretty or "cute" things to please her friends. But her originality is as feminine as it is worth mentioning. She likes to see herself arrayed in her pretty clothes, and she has a favorite hat (or bonnet) which is so becoming, and which she likes so well that when it is once on she never wants to take it off. She would like to wear it to ride, to walk, to her meals, and to her bed if mamma and nurse would let her! She had a little rivalry with Cousin Marthena Harrison when she was visiting at the White House. One day nurse took the little maids with her to a store. To get what she wanted she had to ascend to the second floor with the babies on the *elevator. They caught sight of them*selves in the side mirrors. "Who is that?" said nurse to Marthena, pointing to her image in the glass. Ignoring herself, she said: "Oh, that's Baby McKee." Almost every fine afternoon the nurse and children can be seen riding out to the Soldiers' Home or the shaded suburbs of the city.

HOW SHE ESCAPED.

It's an Ill Wind that Doesn't Blow Good to Somebody.

"Early in the '60s I was a railroad telegraph operator down in Georgia," said he to a Philadelphia Inquirer reporter, "and I had a mighty narrow escape from being lynched one day. It was in the afternoon. A gang of darkies came along to where my station was, about three miles from any human habitation. They had in their grasp a beautiful young white girl, and they tied her fast to one rail of the track, right before my eyes. They then stood there, and pointing revolvers at my head said if I interfered in any way they would murder me. Five minutes before the Atlantic express was due they departed, leaving the girl on the track to be cut in two by the train. I was in terrible suspense. I knew I would be called a coward and a cur if I allowed that girl to be killed, but I was afraid to signal the train to stop, because I knew the darkies would kill me if I did. But I was going to save my position anyhow. Just as the train passed my signal sta*tion I ran down the track and with a* pair of pliers cut the wire connecting the signal to the station. By doing this I thought I could tell the railroad officials that the vandals had cut the wire so that I could not signal the train. See the fine point? Well, while I was cutting the wire the wind came up suddenly and blew a perfect tornado. Big oak trees were blown over so that their tops touched the ground, and I had to hang on to the track so that I wouldn't be blown away. Well, when I went up the track I saw those darkies running away, and I supposed that the girl had been cut in two. I was prepared to look upon a horrible sight, but, to my great joy and utter astonishment, she was still alive. I cut the rope with my pliers and released her. I carried her tenderly up to the signal station, bound up the gashes made in her limbs by the rope, and—"

"And what?" asked somebody.

"And I asked her to be my wife."

"What did she say?"

"She thanked me for my bravery, and softly murmured: 'Yes.'"

"But how was it the train didn't kill her?"

"I never found out until two years afterward. Then I met the engineer of that very train. He explained to me that just as the train was about to strike the girl that heavy gust of wind came along. It was so powerful that it lifted one side of the train over, making it run on one rail for about five hundred feet, before it fell back on the other rail. It so happened that the girl was tied to the rail from which the wheels raised, and that's how she escaped."

OFFICIAL CALL.
County Democratic Convention.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee of the county of Union, held Thursday, Sept. 18, it was resolved to hold the County Convention on Tuesday, October 14, at Library Hall, Elizabeth, at 2 o'clock P. M., to nominate a candidate for [illegible]

[illegible]

The number of votes given in each ward and township, with the number of delegates to which each is entitled, is as follows:

[illegible]

The city of Plainfield will hold its primaries on [illegible]

By order of the County Democratic Executive Committee.
THOS. [illegible], Chairman.
CHAS. [illegible], Secretary.
Dated September [illegible], 1890.

ARGUING NO AND VOTING YES.

The man who consistently carries into practice his avowed convictions of right, whether political or otherwise, is deserving of honor and respect, while he who speaks one way and then acts another is, to say the least, unworthy of confidence.

Certain Congressmen of the present day are living illustrations of the assertion we thus make.

When the McKinley tariff bill was first before the House, a prominent Republican member from Ohio denounced it without stint as a vicious measure and one that ought never to become a law.

Hark!

'Tis the cracking of the party whip!

And the heroic Ohio Representative, without a pang or blush, immediately votes with McKinley and Reed to pass the evil thing.

Then again, there was a brave-mouthed Republican Senator from Kansas who, when the bill came into the Senate, waged a furious battle against it day after day, declaring the project unsound in principle and an outrage upon the honest masses.

Crack went the party lash!

Where went the Kansas Senator?

Crouching as docile as a flogged spaniel at McKinley's feet.

Furthermore, a New York Republican Senator, of high repute as a lawyer, argued earnestly that the reciprocity feature, bestowing upon the President extraordinary powers, added by the Senate to the bill, was clearly unconstitutional, yet, in obedience to caucus dictation, that legal luminary voted to insert the very thing his avowed judgment had proclaimed to be disloyal to the supreme law of the land.

To term such partisans statesmen is folly.

But we are happy to note an honorable exception. A Republican Congressman from the Newark District of New Jersey opposed the infamous Force Bill, and in defiance of Reed's party lash boldly recorded his vote in the negative.

Mr. Lehlbach has the courage of his convictions, and to him credit justly attaches.

A NATIONAL DISGRACE.

The National House of Representatives at Washington formerly was and by right and decency ought now to be a deliberative body, affording the minority a fair opportunity for the consideration and discussion of all legislative questions, and giving reasons even for the fore-ordained partisan action of the majority.

That is the legitimate purpose of the House of Congress and under the supervision of former honorable Speakers it was maintained.

The reverse has been inaugurated to the disgrace and injury of representative government.

Republican Reedism arrogates dictatorial authority.

Caucus reigns supreme.

The minority have no rights unprincipled partisanship is bound to respect.

Important public measures are concocted in secret and rushed through [illegible] without any chance for debate.

Democratic members are hardly [illegible]

It is a stigma upon the American name.

VOX POPULI.

[illegible] the Democratic Third District Convention renominated by acclamation the Hon. Jacob A. Geissenhainer of Monmouth County for Congress.

Such representative action was in every way proper and consistent with popular sentiment. Mr. Geissenhainer has faithfully served the people of New Jersey in Congress and will undoubtedly be returned by an increased majority.

He is not a narrow politician, but a [illegible]

Vote for GEISSENHAINER.

GOVERNOR ABBETT DENOUNCED IT

And Plainfield Votes Emphatically That the Constitution Shall Not Be Amended so as to Permit Special Legislation.

There was a special election in New Jersey Tuesday to decide whether the State Constitution shall be amended. Subdivision 11 of section 7 of article 4 of the Constitution says the Legislature shall not pass private, local, or special laws "regulating the internal affairs of towns and counties." The Legislature of 1889 agreed to amend the Constitution by striking out this clause, and the Legislature of 1890 approved of the proposed amendment. The matter was then in shape under the New Jersey laws to be submitted to the people.

Many of the leading men in the State were opposed to the proposed amendment. The State Agricultural Society issued a letter advising the people of the State to vote against the amendment, and the Hudson County Democratic Committee has also put itself on record against it. Gov. Abbett has denounced it as dangerous, and lawyers have given reasons why the proposed amendment should be defeated. The main argument is that to give the Legislature the right to pass special laws for the government of towns and cities would open the way for corrupt jobs, and would lead to dangerous and ill-planned legislation.

Those who favored the amendment argued that special laws have been passed under the guise of general legislation, and that the clause in the Constitution prohibiting special legislation does not, in fact, prohibit it. For that reason they think the clause should be stricken from the Constitution. The people in general were apathetic, and the vote was light.

Those who did vote in this city, indorsed the Governor's view. The second ward, where Councilman Spangenberg comes from, proved itself again "the banner district. Its vote was unanimous against special legislation. Although in most other places in the State the saloons were open as usual, Captain Grant closed all of Plainfield's drinking places during the entire day. The election cost this county alone, about $2,000.

The detailed vote of this city and the boroughs was as follows—the first amendment being to permit special legislation, and the second to provide that judges of common pleas courts shall hold office for five years:

Mrs. Newton F. Drake Goes Free.

Those, if there are any, who hoped to gratify their abnormal appetites for scandal by witnessing a sensational trial in the Drake case at Somerville, will be disappointed. Counsel for Mrs. Drake executed a flank movement against such Wednesday and the result is that Mrs. Drake entered a plea to the charge of simple assault that she was unwilling to contend against the State, and was set free without even so much as one word of rebuke or reprimand. Indeed the Court said that the Court of course, did not know whether she was guilty or not.

THE PRESS agrees with the observation of the Court upon making final disposition of the case, that "the Court has not made any mistake this time." The way in which the matter was presented was this: When the prosecutor asked Mrs. Drake how she pleaded "guilty or not guilty," Craig A. Marsh arose and asked permission to be heard on behalf of his client before pleading. The Court granted permission, and counsel then made a calm statement of the facts of the case, followed by an impassioned appeal to the court to allow defendant to plead non vult contendere to simple assault, and to allow the suffering already endured by the defendant to stand as the only penalty. A petition was presented containing about twenty names of representative men heartily approving the course suggested by counsel. The petition after referring to the physical and mental suffering of defendant and the fear that the strain of a protracted trial would be fraught with danger to her health, concluded as follows:

> [illegible]

The Court said that of course it knew nothing of the guilt or innocence of defendant but it was bound to respect the views of such representative men of the community. They were the leaders of all philanthropic and humane undertakings and institutions and were known to the Court to be men of the highest integrity, intelligence and good judgment. It would not be right for the Court to disregard this request. They undoubtedly might be safely taken as exponents of the best public sentiment in Plainfield and North Plainfield. Under the circumstances, the Court would suspend sentence.

That disposed of the case. We congratulate the defendant's respected parents and family who have from the beginning had the profound sympathy of THE PRESS and the best people of this community.

JOHN F. DORAN.

Something About the Speedy Left Hander Who Has Been Pitching for the Crescents.

John F. Doran, was the giant that Wingard to away to the West Ends, Saturday, Sept. 20, will don a Brooklyn uniform on the Atlantic league diamond. If the rumored series of games for the local and inter-state championship between the representative national and players' leagues teams are brought off, he may exhibit his skill against some of the best batsmen in the country. If the labors of the [illegible] are in vain and [illegible] ter he will [illegible] until next season. If reports and records are to be trusted the new acquisition will be a great help to Manager Wey-bling. Sewh[illegible] and Doran—right and left handed alternately—will make a quartette of twirlers that will be hard to beat. John F. Doran is one of the youngest twirlers in the professional ranks. Notwithstanding the fact that he has only been a pitcher a little over one year, he has gained for himself a reputation which places him on a par with the best pitchers of the players' national leagues. He is a Jerseyite by birth and is only 20 years old, but has the appearance of a born athlete. He is about 5 feet 9 inches in height and weighs 160 pounds. Two years ago he made a good showing against the Newarks while playing for the Elmiras, of the Central league. [illegible] of the Jersey City team, took a liking to him and signed him. After a few trials he was considered too slow for the [illegible] and was released. New Haven took him up, but he did not do very well until this season, when he got rid of his wildness and began pitching a game which has brought the New Haven team up to its present position as certain winner of the Atlantic association pennant. He combines speed with headwork. His delivery is a puzzling one, and he has a better command of the ball than the usual run of left handed twirlers. He is said to be cool and collected in critical stages of the game, and there is no doubt that should his present form continue, he will prove a great find for Captain Ward and the Brooklyn team. He will pitch for the Crescents again next Saturday.

CAST INTO OUTER DARKNESS.

A Colored Congregation in a Ferment Over a School-girl's Error—Casting Laura, and Questioning the Morals of Those Throwing the First Stone—The Choir Threatens to Strike.

The sensation caused among the colored people of the Mt. Olive Baptist church, some months ago, by the scandal aroused over the alleged shortcomings of their pastor, was repeated Monday, when the congregation met and wrought themselves up into a state of mind over the case of Laura Robinson, the young school-girl who was recently brought back by her mother, from Boston, after a most unhappy elopement with Wm. McQuay, whom she has since refused to marry.

Laura's mother was present, and spoke right out in meeting as soon as the suggestion had been made to scratch Laura's name off the member-ship list and to cast her into the outer darkness outside the pale of the church.

"My daughter's a virtuous girl," she said, "as good and virtuous as any one else inside these walls. She isn't to blame because a big strong man lured her away—she who belongs to a sex so weak and helpless."

And if the truth were known—she continued, waving her hands about with a gesture that meant a great deal, in a generalizing way—those who were so ready to find fault with Laura were just the ones who weren't the most pure in heart.

Laura had been abducted away,—she said—but she had kept from committing wrong herself. Anyhow, whether she was a good girl or not, let the guiltless one—and she glanced around significantly —let the sinless one, cast the first stone.

This made the strong-minded sisters mad, and in energetic language they disagreed with Mrs. Robinson, and told her to "go 'way!" and to do other things which, as Mrs. Robinson said, no decent lady would suggest. An excited war of words resulted. Uncomplimentary remarks were freely made. Such pleasant characterizations as "brazen hussy," "bold, bad thing" and "scand'lous critter" were heaped by feminine tongues on feminine heads. The members of the church choir got up and said that they considered themselves Laura's superiors, and if Laura ever played the organ in that church again they'd strike, and never sing again, so there!

"Oh, I tell you, we had a hot time of it!" said one of the colored sisters this morning. The upshot of it was that Laura was excommunicated, her name was stricken off the roll, and she was "cast into outer darkness," so far as one congregation could cast her.

FOR ARTIST ARTISANS.

Progress of the Institute Founded by a Plainfielder.

The New York Institute for Artist Artisans at 140 West Twenty-third street, New York, was yesterday opened for the Fall term with 250 enrolled pupils. Prof. John Ward Stimson, of Plainfield, the founder and Superintendent of the Institute, is in charge, with a full corps of instructors, including those of the last two years, and classes in painting, sculpture, architecture, illustration, etching, stained glass, ceramics, carving, metal working, jewelry, interior decoration, and plastic modeling, with studies from still life and life models.

Mr. Stimson's idea in the establishment of the Institute was to make it the nucleus of a Central National Art University, teaching principles instead of mere imitation, and developing the democratic American idea that art is not necessarily the mere foible of the foolish, the fad of a few fashionables, or the monopoly of the speculator. He has been working practically and successfully on lines which have engaged the attention of the artists and manufacturers of Great Britain for a year with the result that a national organization has been formed for the promotion of art and its application to industry.

As an example of the esteem in which the Institute is held by those who have looked into it, Gen. Webb, President of the College of the City of New York, has just arranged for four scholarships to be awarded to successful competing graduates from the college. Among the patrons of the institute are Tiffany & Co., the Gorham Manufacturing Company, Howard & Son, Cottier & Co., Herter Brothers, Lamb Brothers, Robert Graves, Warren, Fuller & Lange, Frederick Beck, Cheney Brothers, William Strange, the Phoenix Silk Company, William Kyle & Co., Doughley & Wadsworth, Charles Danforth, R. Richardson, and others representing the jewelry, wall paper, stained glass, silk, and other art industries. Yesterday H. O. Havemeyer sent a contribution of $1,000 toward establishing the Institute on a sound basis.

The Institute depends largely upon popular support for its success and has been maintained thus far only by sacrifices which Mr. Stimson is no longer able to make. It is the most promising among the art educational institutions of the country.

—The first rehearsal of the Plainfield Choral Society will take place on Monday evening, Oct. 6.

THE CITY'S REPLY TO CAREY.

Corporation Counsel Marsh Says the Letter Neither Denied That He Was Guilty, Nor Made the Idle Claim That the Charges Were not Sufficient Cause for His Expulsion—And As to Carey Being Tried by the "Injured Parties" Themselves, Mr. Marsh Says That Obscene, Profane and Indecent Language Used in the Presence of Gentlemen Does Not Injure the Gentlemen.

Following is the brief of Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh in answer to the argument before the Supreme Court by Frank S. Bergen, Esq., denying the right of the Mayor and the Board of Police of this city to suspend Policeman Carey from duty for three months without pay, for the use of obscene, profane and indecent language. The points made are so clear as to lend a general interest to the document, and everyone will be entertained by a perusal of it and surprised to find a brief so readable to common mortals. It is also safe to say that the majority—including those who like THE PRESS are well aware of the ability and acumen of astute Counsellor Bergen—will be completely convinced that this time he has met a lawyer on the other side who has effectually answered him.

NEW JERSEY SUPREME COURT.

THE STATE,
TURIE J. CAREY, Prosecutor.
vs.
THE BOARD OF POLICE OF THE CITY OF PLAINFIELD, Defendants
On Certiorari.

BRIEF FOR DEFENDANTS.

THE PROCEEDINGS UP FOR REVIEW.

For "using obscene, profane and indecent language" while in the discharge of his duty as policeman, the prosecutor was tried before the Board of Police of the City of Plainfield, adjudged guilty and suspended from duty for three months without pay, and the resolution of the Board designating him as "the regular policeman who should act as captain of police," was revoked.

*The prosecutor, by his counsel, cross-*examined the witnesses produced to substantiate the charge, but made no defence on the facts whatever, and in the reasons assigned for reversal it is not denied (doubtless because this court would not weigh the evidence), that prosecutor was in fact guilty as charged. Nor is the idle claim made that the charge, if substantiated, is not sufficient cause to justify suspension or even expulsion from office.

The only questions raised by the reasons assigned for reversal relate to the authority of the Board of Police, the qualification of two of its members, and the regularity of the procedure.

All of the proceedings brought up for review in this cause were conducted by the Board of Police without the assistance or advice of counsel. The Board acted as practical business men investigating the question whether a policeman of the city, over whom the city ordinance gave them jurisdiction, had misbehaved himself in office. Their view was that they were competent to decide that simple question from the evidence that might be submitted, and they preferred to let the guilt or innocence of the policeman be established by the sworn statements of witnesses, unaided by prosecuting counsel, even though the defendant appeared before them championed by one of the most astute counsellors of this bar. The Common Council of the city, in fact, expressly instructed the Corporation Counsel neither to prosecute or defend, but to hold himself in readiness to advise the Board upon any legal question which they might see fit to submit to him. See case page 33, l. 29. The Board did not think it necessary to take his advice on any of the questions raised.

The Board of Police, in endeavoring to strip the proceedings of all technicalities, and to investigate the matters before them in a practical, common sense way (just as they would, as private individuals, determine whether an employee had or had not so demeaned himself as to require dismissal from service), were doubtless guided by the exposition of the statute governing the case, given by the Supreme Court, in Dowell v. Mayor, of Camden, 19 Vr., 433, 434.

In that case, in the opinion by Dixon, J., it is laid down:

"The technical rules that have been judicially adopted with regard to inferior criminal prosecutions are not to be applied to this investigation, for while it is proper that proceedings to deprive persons of common rights for alleged crimes should be confined by somewhat strict limits, the removal of incompetent or ill-behaved officials from their exceptional positions of authority and responsibility should be easy and prompt, and no forms should be requisite which are not in themselves substantial safeguards of justice." The brief then quotes from the charter and city ordinances, the sections pertinent to the case, and continues as follows:

The provisions of this ordinance have been strictly followed in the proceedings brought up for review, and the findings and orders of the Police Board in the premises have not been disturbed by the Common Council.

I propose to take up seriatim the reasons assigned for reversal, to be found on page 37 of the case.

THE FIRST REASON ASSIGNED

The most important question sought to be raised by the prosecutor is that contained in the first reason assigned.

If it were true, in any just sense, that Elmore D. Moffett acted at one and the same time as party and judge, his conduct would be utterly indefensible, and his vote would, of course, be a nullity. The case, however, shows that while Mr. Moffett did sign the charges upon which said prosecutor was tried, he did so believing that he was merely performing the ministerial act of reducing to writing the complaints against the prosecutor then already made by other parties.

See Case, page 28.

The charges preferred had been made to the board orally by other parties (Case, page 28, lines 9 to 13), and Mr. Moffett swears that he did not consider himself a party to the case against Mr. Carey (Case, page 28, lines 6 to 8), except in the capacity of a judge—as a member of the Board, and he further testifies that he sat on the trial with a mind free from bias, prejudice or fixed opinion adverse to the defendant on the charges preferred; that he had not prejudged the case; that he had no animosity against Mr. Carey, and never had had; that he had repeatedly and invariably said that he could not say what would be the result until he had heard the evidence; and that if the charges had not been proved, he would have rendered a verdict of not guilty.

If counsel had been consulted by the Board, doubtless a different mode of procedure would have been advised, but it is respectfully submitted that assuming Mr. Moffett's testimony to be true, the proceedings in this matter should not be declared invalid simply because Mr. Moffett did not adopt the circuitous method of procuring some one else to sign the formal charges.

The misconduct alleged against prosecutor in this case took place in the presence of two members of the Board of Police, and for aught that appears in the case, no one outside of the Board could be found who was willing to sign the formal charges. Suppose that there were no witnesses to the alleged misconduct but those who were members of the body required by law to try the defendant, will it be pretended that the defendant must needs go scot free under those circumstances? Or suppose that such other persons as were present with members of the tribunal appointed to try the defendant, were personal friends of the prosecutor, and should refuse to sign the charges, is it rational to hold that however flagrant the offence, it was committed with impunity?

If Mr. Moffett or the Board had instructed some third party to sign those charges would the question in the case be one whit different? And yet the latter method of procedure has the sanction of this court.

See Ayres vs. Newark. 20 Vroom, 170, 172

In that case the charges were made by the Chief of Police not voluntarily, or on his own motion, but by the direction of the commissioners who were to sit as judges on the trial, and the Supreme Court held:

"There is no objection to this action by the Chief of Police and the Board of Commissioners. Their proceeding was a mere form to put the charge in shape for a proper investigation."

THE SECOND REASON ASSIGNED.

The second reason assigned for reversal, it is submitted, is without foundation in law. The use of obscene, profane and indecent language by the prosecutor was misconduct in office, not because it was addressed to any particular person or persons, but because it was an offense against good order, against the entire community, against the laws of the State. If such language had been used in the presence of a justice of the peace, and addressed to such justice, the defendant could have been convicted upon view of the justice. Other instances of conviction upon view of a magistrate are a familiar exercise of judicial power, and the validity of such convictions has never been questioned.

THE THIRD REASON ASSIGNED.

The third reason assigned does not appear to be supported by the return to the writ or the evidence. See Case, page 7, where it is stated that the objections were presented, that the Board voted upon the same and overruled them.

The Court will infer, in the absence of any return upon the point, that the objections were overruled after full consideration. If prosecutor desired to show that there was no consideration given to the objections he should have obtained a rule of this Court requiring the Board to make return as to whether or not any consideration was given to the objections referred to, or a rule to prove by evidence aliunde that no such consideration was given.

Omnia praesumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium.

But if the Court should consider the testimony taken, it is submitted that the evidence on cross-examination of prosecutor's witness, John Johnston (See Case page 24, from line 19), shows that counsel for prosecutor was then given opportunity to submit any papers, and to make full argument upon the facts alleged in his challenge, and that he failed to produce any proof whatever to support such facts, and that the Board, after full hearing, in the exercise of their judicial power overruled the challenge. Here follow abstracts from the cross-examination of Walter I. Clarke, Edward B. Daly and John Johnston, all witnesses for Carey, proving that the Board of Police gave Carey's counsel opportunity to submit anything he chose to offer.

Mr. Johnston's cross examination closes as follows:

"Q. Did the Board cut him [Mr. Bergen] short or tell him to stop talking?

"A. I think they didn't.

"Q. They heard him out, didn't they?

"A. I think they did."

Judge VanSyckel speaking for the Court of Errors, in Wilkison v. Trenton, 7 Vr., 499-505, says: "No evidence has been taken to show the principle adopted by the Commissioners, and we must therefore presume that they acted rightly."

THE FOURTH REASON ASSIGNED.

It is submitted that the statement alleged in this reason, that Messrs Moffett *and Hetfield voted to overrule the chal-*lenge of their right to sit is not supported by the return or the evidence. The prosecutor failed to point out to the Board what method of procedure should be adopted in disposing of his challenge, and the Board, it will be inferred, in the absence of proof to the contrary, acted in accordance with the principles of justice.

But assuming, for the sake of argument, that Messrs Moffett and Hetfield voted upon the question—from all that appears in the return, the Court must infer that there was a majority of the voters of said Board in favor of overruling the challenge, independent of the votes of Messrs Moffett and Hetfield. All the return says on the subject is the following: "Moved that the challenge of Mr. Bergen be filed and the same overruled. Carried." See Case, page 7, line 11.

But even if there were not, independent of the votes of Messrs Moffett and Hetfield, a majority of votes in favor of overruling the challenge, does it follow that the challenges were not properly overruled? Suppose that prosecutor had seen fit to challenge the entire Board, who could vote then whether to sustain or overrule the challenge? If by challenging the right to sit of a sufficient number of the Board to leave only a minority of votes in favor of sustaining the qualifications of the challenged members, an accused policeman can escape trial before the properly constituted authorities, no policeman, however unlawful his conduct *may have been, need have any fear of re-*moval from office for cause.

THE FIFTH REASON ASSIGNED.

The assertions contained in the fifth reason that Messrs Moffett and Hetfield entertained hostility and prejudice against the prosecutor, in respect to the matters alleged in the challenges, and were not impartial and indifferent as to the guilt or innocence of the prosecutor, find no adequate support in the evidence of prosecutor's witnesses, and are fully and explicitly met and denied by the sworn testimony of Moffett and Hetfield.

See Case, page 27, line 20, and pages 30 and 31.

The evidence as to what may have been said by Messrs Moffett and Hetfield on the trial of Joseph B. Miller has nothing to do with their action on the trial of the prosecutor. Assuming that the marks attributed to them on the occasion of the Miller trial had relation to the matters on which the prosecutor was to be tried, it has been shown that any prejudice then existing in their minds against the prosecutor, must have been completely removed before the prosecutor was tried. See the sworn testimony of both Moffett and Hetfield, to which reference has already been made. Whatever Messrs Moffett and Hetfield may have seen or heard or said prior to trial of prosecutor, this Court may safely accept their testimony to the fact that they had in no sense prejudged the defendant, but on the contrary entered upon the investigation of the charges against the prosecutor with minds free from bias, prejudice, or fixed opinion as to prosecutor's guilt or innocence.

THE SIXTH REASON ASSIGNED.

It is submitted that the return and the evidence show that the prosecutor was given a fair trial, and that the requirements of the statute of March 25, 1885, were carefully observed, under the construction placed upon that statute by the Supreme Court in Dowell v. Mayor of Camden, 19 Vr. 433, 434, and in Ayers v. Newark, 20 Vr., 170-172.

The opinion on page 172 of the case first cited, construes the statute as follows:

"A fair trial does not mean that all the formalities shall be observed that are used in the trial of criminals for minor offenses in courts or by magistrates. The policeman under charges is not regarded by this statute as a criminal, but a public servant or agent whose efficiency and fitness for the discharge of his duties may be questioned at any time in the interest of the public, and no mere forms tending to chicanery and delay, rather than substantial justice, should be regarded. The purpose of the law is to secure the services of reliable men to preserve the public peace, not to keep inefficient and litigious men in office until all the forms of criminal cases are observed, and every ingenious objection answered."

The striking paragraph in the brief of counsel for prosecutor, on page 3, is a begging of the question. Counsel there says:

"One of the principal questions in the case, if it can be called a question, is: Whether a person can have 'a fair trial,' and 'every reasonable opportunity to make his defence, before his accusers and enemies, claiming to be the injured parties, sitting as judges.' The mere statement of the proposition seems to answer it."

The words italicised (the italics are mine) assume the things to be proved.

That the Board of Police have not been proved to be, and in fact were not "the accusers and enemies of the prosecutor," has been already shown. Other parties were the "accusers" in fact, and the signing of the charges was, as Judge Scudder remarks in the case of Ayers v. Newark, Supra, "a mere form to put the charges in shape for a proper investigation." To infer that Messrs Moffett and Hetfield were "enemies" because in the performance of their sworn duty, they proceeded to put prosecutor on trial for misconduct committed in their presence, is gratuitous. As well accuse the judge of the Court of Oyer and Terminer of being an enemy of a criminal because the judge in instructing the Grand Jury respecting their duty in investigating the crime with which the criminal stood charged, denounced the crime, and declared the accused ought to be indicted if sufficient evidence were produced.

Second—Messrs Moffett and Hetfield did not "claim to be the injured parties." They were not in fact injured by the language used by the prosecutor. The injury was to the prosecutor himself and to society, as in the case of intemperance or suicide. It is a novel proposition that the use of obscene, profane and indecent language in the presence of gentlemen is an injury to them, in the sense intended by opposing counsel. True, their sense of propriety would be shocked, but so it would if prosecutor had in their presence committed an assault upon some stranger. If his contention on this point is sound, then a policeman may curse and swear ad libitum, if only he takes the precaution to do it in the presence of the body having power by law to punish him for the offence.

THE SEVENTH REASON ASSIGNED.

It is conceded that the point made in that part of the seventh reason which alleges that the Board of Police had no power or right to remove the prosecutor from office is well taken. But attention *is called to the fact that the Board of Po-*lice did not attempt to remove the prosecutor from office. Neither does the ordinance in question attempt to confer such power upon the Board of Police. That ordinance expressly limits the power of the Board to a suspension from office for a period of not more than three months, and preserves to the Common Council the sole right of removal from office.

The statute of March 25, 1885, relied upon by the prosecutor, relates solely to removal from office. Prosecutor's view would extend the words of the act to include suspensions even pending trial before the Common Council. It cannot be supposed that by the act in question a policeman is given the right to violate any criminal law of the State, and to remain continuously exercising the functions of his office, until after he shall have been tried and convicted and expelled from office.

The charter of the city of Plainfield gave ample power to the Common Council, and such administrative boards as might be created in pursuance thereof, to temporarily suspend from duty a policeman charged with such flagrant misconduct as that alleged in this cause, and the legislature cannot be held, in the absence of clear expression, or necessary implication, to have intended to curtail this useful and necessary power.

It would be subversive of all discipline in the police department, if, despite the gross misconduct of policemen in the very faces of the Board having control, there was no power to temporarily suspend such an officer until opportunity for the Common Council to determine whether that officer merited expulsion, or whether any proceedings should be taken with that end in view. The legislature cannot reasonably be held to have intended such result.

The act governs expulsion. Suspension is a different thing. The legislative intent clearly appears to be that a policeman should not lose his office, or, in other words, that he should not cease to be an officer, without first having a fair trial upon the charges preferred against him. If such was the intention of the legislature, that intention has not been contra*vened by the action of the Board of Police* of the city of Plainfield.

The rescission by the Board of Police of their resolution designating prosecutor as the regular policeman who should act as captain of police, was not a removal *from office within the meaning of the ten-*ure of office act. If there were in Plainfield an office of Captain of Police within the meaning of the act, that office would have to be filled by nomination by the Mayor and confirmation by the Council. See Charter amendment 1874, Sec. 1. No such officer was ever nominated by the Mayor or confirmed by the Common Council. The Board of Police had no power to create the office, or appoint to such an office. Prosecutor was nominated and confirmed as a regular policeman, and took the oath of office as such. The title given him by the Board of Police must for the purpose of this suit be regarded as a mere decoration. The Board was powerless to create any office.

It is submitted that as the alleged office of captain of police has no existence under the charter and ordinances of the city of Plainfield, prosecutor cannot in legal contemplation have been removed from such office.

One important fact should not escape the attention of the Court, namely, that *the entire Police Board, to the qualifica-*tions of the majority of whose members prosecutor makes no exception whatever, unanimously agreed that the prosecutor had been proven guilty of the charges preferred against him. See Case, page 9, line 34. The Board disagreed solely as to the penalty to be imposed. Id.

It is respectfully submitted that nothing in the reasons assigned require the setting aside of the proceedings had before the Police Board of the city of Plainfield, whereby for the use of obscene, profane and indecent language, the prosecutor was temporarily suspended from office

CRAIG A. MARSH.

Voted for the New Name.

The question of changing the name of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics has for several weeks been a subject of consideration throughout the country, and finally the National Council of the order ordered that a vote should be taken in each Council and the result be certified to the National Council by the State Council of each State. Franklin Council, of this city, one of the most vigorous in this State, has voted unanimously to change the name of the order to the Order United Americans, the proposed new name. The subject is to do away with the confusion now existing between the present name and that of the United American Mechanics.

PLAINFIELD GETS A MEDAL.

But Capt. Martin Had to Fight to Make It Second Instead of Third.

The Elizabeth Wheelmen ran off their ten-mile handicap road race, open to all residents of Union county Saturday. From the start to the finish the men were well strung out, the handicaps not developing any close finishes. The winner proved to be a dark horse—James Blake of the Union County Roadsters, with five minutes handicap; he crossed the tape in 37 minutes 14 seconds; Stanton M. Smith, Plainfield Bicycle Club, with five minutes handicap, was second; time 39 minutes 32 seconds; Rufus Whitehead, Union County Wheelmen, four minutes handicap, third, time 40 minutes 35 seconds; A. F. Calkins, Elizabeth Wheelmen, two minutes handicap, fourth, time 47 minutes 20 seconds. Calkins virtually started from scratch, and made a good race.

A bitter war of words was waged in the matter of distribution of prizes. The members of the Union County Roadsters entered protests against the awards, in consequence of one of their members J. Blake making the best actual time as well as winning the contest. They claimed that their man was entitled to two prizes. In view of his performance, which was disputed by the donators of the trophies, the Elizabeth Wheelmen, and also by the referee, Captain Frank L. C. Martin of Plainfield. It took some three-quarters of an hour for the settlement of the difficulty, it being decided that the first man in, having made the best time, should receive the time medal, the second man, Stanton Smith, the winner's medal, and the third and fourth men the third and fourth medals, respectively. This did not meet with the Roadsters' approval, who say they will still protest.

J. E. Murray, also of the Plainfield Bicycle club, was the only Plainfielder besides Mr. Smith included among the thirteen contestants. He made a good run.

Broke His Neck.

Wm. Hall, of Fanwood, broke his neck afternoon Sept. 24, at 3:30 o'clock, and died two hours after. The unfortunate man was a carpenter and at work on the roof of John Waterson's house at Cranford. He fell twenty-five feet to the ground.

Willie Gets a Free Ride.

George VanNest's boy Willie, who is *only a few years old, boarded a passen-*ger train Monday for New York. He informed the conductor that he was under age and did not have to have a ticket. When the train arrived in Jersey City the news of Willie's arrival was telephoned to his father who lives on East Fifth street and the boy was sent for.

Anxiety Deferred Until Saturday Next.

Rain on Saturday caused the postponement of the third game of the Crescent-West End series, although both teams were in town and the band played ——. The game will take place next Saturday on the Crescent ground.

The New York Sun of Monday said the West Ends had Gil Hatfield and George Gore of the New Yorks, Jack Farrel, the old-time professional, John Galligan of last year's New Havens, and Catcher Bowes of the defunct Brooklyn Association team.

Passed His Allotted Time.

Thomas Oliver is now living in South Plainfield at the age of seventy-two. He was born in the old Oliver house on Main street, Rahway, where John Cornwell now lives. His father's name was Thomas Oliver, and Thoms Potter was his stepfather; he says he has traveled pretty much all over the World; was in the Mexican war, and the war of the rebellion: was never sick in his life, except a few weeks in his childhood when he had smallpox. He is well preserved, hearty and in good health except his feet which have been lately affected with rheumatism. His mother died, and he left Rahway about sixty-four years ago, and has been roaming about ever since.

They Didn't Know What a Good Road It Was.

The ten-mile handicap road race of the Brooklyn Bicycle club, which was to have been held Saturday on the Westfield-Fanwood course, over the new county road, was postponed on account of the rain, it being erroneously supposed that the road would be muddy. Capt. W. Fuller states that the race will be run next Saturday rain or shine.

The entries to the race include Fred: Comingsby, J. M. Schoefen, E. A. McLeum, Howard Speiman, C. F. Quimby and N. H Rohmisour, all members of the Brooklyn Bicycle Club and wheelmen of national reputation. Mr. Comingsby will attempt to break the ten-mile road record of America. Dr. Gale has tendered the use of the Westfield club house to the visiting wheelmen. The local clubs will be out in force to render such assistance as they can. The event promises to be very interesting.

The Recent Unprecedented Rainfall.

The precipitation in all parts of the State for the week ending Sept. 17, was above the weekly average, and in a few localities exceeded the normal for the whole month of September, which is 3.89 inches. This normal for the month would not be so high but for the remarkably heavy downpours which occurred in September, 1874 and 1882, when the total for the month at New Brunswick, Middlesex county, was in the former year (1874) 8.61 inches; of this amount 7.10 inches fell on the 15th to 18th inclusive, and in the latter year (1882) 15.52 inches fell; of this amount 11.84 inches fell on the 20th to 23d inclusive. At this time, also, the unprecedented September fall of 25 inches occurred at Paterson, Passaic county. Some idea may be obtained of the vast amount of water which fell when it is known that "an inch of rainfall means a gallon of water spread over a surface of two square feet, or a fall of about one hundred tons on an acre of ground."

The following are the total rainfalls reported in inches for the week spoken of:

	Inches
Plainfield, Union county	4.41
Highland Park, Middlesex county	3.27
Beverly, Burlington county	3.26
South Orange, Essex county	3.48
Trenton, Mercer county	3.19
Gillette, Morris county	3.27
Woodbury, Gloucester county	2.86
Madison, Morris county	3.26
Tenafly, Bergen county	3.24
Egg Harbor City, Atlantic county	3.18
Bridgeton, Cumberland county	2.30

—Although the trade of the Adams Express company in this city has not lessened, and so many of the people prefer its service to that of the United States, yet the former has withdrawn its business from Plainfield as told exclusively in THE PRESS of Tuesday. Manager E. H. Holmes, however, will continue his local express business with an office at 27 *North avenue, and will put in your Win-*ter coal, too.

John have you seen that woman lately? John is astonished! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column and read about it, the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she was a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Sought for the last hundred years: a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.

The words came harshly from the stage manager; an impatient audience are awaiting the next act, and she who has fainted takes the leading part. This is "a peep behind the scenes," and a sight familiar to the "green-room" of every theatre. "Has she worked too hard, or been careless of her health?"

Actresses, singers, and others in the profession, do not always think; they rush into the tide of popularity, regardless of all save fame and fortune. How often we read of some favorite actress — "Ill in London, nervous prostration, etc." We have the cure of hundreds of such cases on record. Send stamp for "Guide to Health and Etiquette," a beautiful illustrated book.

Just Escaped With a Broken Collar Bone.

William Edgar and his brother Alonzo, who were driving from their home in Westfield to Elizabeth, Friday morning, were almost killed by an express train at "Park Lane" crossing, Roselle. It was just about 11:30 o'clock when they reached the track at the crossing, and the 11:09 from this city for New York due at Elizabeth at 11:26, was making up lost time.

The engine did not strike the horse that the Edgars were driving, but rushed by so close to its nose that the animal was dashed to one side in a heap. The buggy was smashed and Alonzo's collar bone was broken. Yet the brothers had more to be thankful than sorry for.

It Seemed to Strangers, Very Like a Suicide.

A sad accident occurred at Fanwood at 2:25 Tuesday. The large and magnificent thoroughbred dog, belonging to the Hon. George Kyte—which has been in the care of his trainer, Isaac Crue—was executing his well-known feat of jumping from the over-head bridge, just East of the Fanwood station and alighting upon moving trains. Miscalculating the speed with which the express from the East was moving, the dog struck the track in front of the locomotive and was instantly killed.

The noble animal was the pet of the ladies and children of the suburban town. The accident was witnessed by a number of the residents. The remains were tenderly removed and given a respectable interment.

Finished by Daylight, a Tie.

It is reported that the House Committee of the Fanwood Club entertained a prominent resident of Fanwood at the Club Monday evening in a series of games of billiards—three ball cushion-caroms.

Twenty-six games were played of thirty-four points each, resulting in a tie between the Chairman of the House Committee and the guest of the club—each winning thirteen games. The contest was *highly exciting and immensely en*joyed by the spectators present, as each of the gentlemen won alternate games.

*It is proposed to have another exhibi*tion at an early date, and although, as in the Crescent League, no betting is per*mitted at the Fanwood Club—it is under*stood that large amounts have been wagered on the result of the next contest. Abner P. Downer, the expert bowler of the Club, is slated as referee.

Since Watson & Co. Extended Their Broad Street Store Through to Market Street and Put in Their

Handsome beveled plate brass trimmed show windows for the express purpose of displaying their new styles of hand-cut garments, very few young men who want the latest cuts and patterns, will venture to buy a single garment until they first see what new styles Watson & Co. are showing.

*Just now those windows are very at*tractive as the Fall styles are out and some very stylish black and dark blue dress cutaways are shown there at $7, behind the long line of $4 royal satin striped pantaloons, and almost every hour handsome new patterns are added, as Watson & Co. like to please young men who want new things, and the correct fashion plate cut. Tell your friends that they can buy Watson's hand-cut perfect fitting garments for less than the usual run of machine-cut work is selling for, and it makes a great difference in your dress appearance which you wear.—Newark Press.

To Bible Students.

The American Institute of Sacred Literature, of which Prof. W. R. Harper is principal, will offer in this city, on December 30, an examination on the Gospel of Luke. Those who pass this examination will receive a certificate from the Institute. Those who have been engaged in the study of the International Sunday School Lesson ought to be sufficiently prepared for this examination. The object of the examination is to induce more careful study of the Life of Christ as set forth in Luke. Those who desire to take the examination must enter their names before December 1, 1890. I shall be glad to furnish any further information to those who are interested in the subject.

Catarrh

IS a blood disease. Until the poison is expelled from the system, there can be no cure for this loathsome and dangerous malady. Therefore, the only effective treatment is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the best of all blood purifiers. The sooner you begin the better; delay is dangerous.

"I was troubled with catarrh for over two years. I tried various remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no benefit until I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this medicine cured me of this troublesome complaint and completely restored my health."—Jesse M. Boggs, Holman's Mills, N. C.

"When Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me for catarrh, I was inclined to doubt its efficacy. Having tried so many remedies, with little benefit, I had no faith that anything would cure me. I became emaciated from loss of appetite and impaired digestion. I had nearly lost the sense of smell, and my system was badly deranged. I was about discouraged, when a friend urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and referred me to persons whom it had cured of catarrh. After taking half a dozen bottles of this medicine, I am convinced that the only sure way of treating this obstinate disease is through the blood." —Charles H. Maloney, 113 River st., Lowell, Mass.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—The New Jersey Division, League of American Wheelmen, lost about $50 at the annual meet at Plainfield last Spring.

—Plainfield will this year receive $[illegible] as its share of the taxes assessed by the State against railroads and canal property.

—The application of Chas. Greuler, of Somerset street, for a wholesale liquor license, was granted by the Court at Somerville Friday.

—James Carty cut off the end of his third finger with a butcher's cleaver at G. H. VanEmbt's meat market, 25 Somerset street, Friday.

—Mrs. Dr. Edwards who has been ill at the City Hotel, is steadily recovering and in a few days will announce when she can receive patrons again.

—Wheeling the crosswalks is prohibited against by city ordinance, yet the wheelmen daily violate this provision for the comfort of pedestrians.

—The regular Fall session of the Classis of Newark of the Reformed church, will be held Tuesday, October 14, in the Trinity Reformed church of this city.

—The weather which prevented a ball game Saturday was also accountable for the scarcity of young men wanting to borrow a quarter, who of late have been so numerous Saturday nights.

—Mrs. Dr. Edwards, the clairvoyant, has so far recovered from her recent illness that she is again able to see her patrons on and after Wednesday at the City Hotel, from 2 till 5 o'clock P. M.

—Several boys played ball on the street Thursday, and during their frolic a horse was struck, almost causing a runaway. The boys were arrested, and next morning Judge Codington fined them each one dollar.

—The Catholic Young Men's Literary Union have just purchased the desirably located property at the corner of Fifth and Liberty streets. Alterations will be made to the house for the convenience of the members.

—William Kirk, of this city, representing Milliken Bros., the iron merchants of New York, who are also residents of Plainfield, was awarded the contract for a county bridge on North avenue, Westfield, last week.

—Two boys were playing leap-frog on West Fifth street Thursday. One of them kept calling for a higher "back," and finally got one so high that he fell to the pavement, rolled over to the gutter, and cut open his cheek on the edge of the curb.

—Walter Benjamin Randolph has become proprietor of Edwin Maynard's barber rooms, 20 Park avenue. Mr. Randolph has been in Mr. Maynard's employ many years, and is a most popular barber with a large number of Plainfield gentlemen who all wish him success.

—Complaint is made against the odor of the water used in sprinkling Front street the past few days. The sniffing of noses was especially noticeable Thursday afternoon, and pedestrians who frequently meet the sprinkling cart are beginning to be known as the handkerchief brigade.

—Robert Brait and wife, Margaret E. Ayres and husband, and Virginia J. Munday, all of Rahway, with Sarah M. Potter and husband, of Raritan, have sold to Sarah A. McNabb, of Bound Brook, [illegible] acres of land, partly in Plainfield and partly in Fanwood township, for $2,481.

—Owing to pressure of work at the Potter Press Works the lathes and planers have been run to their full capacity every night until nine o'clock, for some time past. A night shift will be started to-night, with a full squad of men to help carry out the present demand for the Potter presses.

—One has to possess the skill of a slack-wire performer to keep on some of the sidewalks over in the Park. The Borough Council ought to take out life insurance policies and then stroll along the West side of Sycamore avenue, near Mercer, and perhaps they would see fit to have one danger-spot made safe.

—Even Plainfield is not without its road hogs. Friday a man driving a team attached to a big heavy truck deliberately turned out of a road where there was an abundance of room, purposely crowded a bicycler into the gutter, ran his horses onto him, and threw him to the ground, damaging both machine and rider.

—Michael Cox tried to wipe a North avenue restaurant off the face of the earth Saturday night, and in consequence yesterday morning fined $15 and sent to jail for thirty days. Henry Gesller also got into trouble and was fined $10. Bridget Newman, who was fined $20 several days ago, decided not to appeal, and paid her fine.

—The managers of the Crescent team proposed to give the players the entire receipts of a closing game as a benefit, but left it with the players to choose who their opponents should be. They have decided to have the "Edgewoods," who defeated the Crescents, August 2, by a score of 8 to 3, and who were defeated by the Crescents September 1, 4 to 3.

—The Hotel Mail, New York's bright journal of hotel news, has concluded its twenty-fifth volume, and has entered on the second quarter of its century of life. It is the oldest, most influential and most widely quoted paper of its class, and its success must be highly gratifying to the men whose brains and energies have developed it. The able editor is D. N. Thayer, and the wide-awake business manager is A. J. Leader, of North Plainfield.

—Lever, centre-field of the Crescents, came to Plainfield on August 23, with the Metropolitans. He was the second man at the bat, and knocked the ball over the fence. He was engaged by the Crescents at once. Since then he has played six games with the Plainfield team, in which he has been at the bat twenty times but has only made one little hit. Yet Sunday he played with the Metropolitans again, and batted a single, a two-bagger and a home run.

—Dwelling houses constructed of barns are not uncommon, but it remains for North Plainfield to give to the world a barn transformed from a dwelling house. After vainly trying to sell the tenement on the rear of the lot on which he has just built a new store and dwelling, and to have it moved away, Joseph [illegible] has concluded to turn it to account himself, and by several alterations has made a barn which will doubtless seem quite palatial to the live stock which will inhabit its stables.

The Bachelors Have a Night of It.

The members of the Bachelors' Club had a gay time at their anniversary on Tuesday. An elaborate banquet was provided by Caterer Stephenson, and good music was furnished by Conde and Rogers. The table was exquisitely decorated with flowers and cut glass. In the centre was a floral pyramid three feet high, surmounted by a dazzling crown of electric lights. Mirth and sociability prevailed till daylight. 'Twere a long story to tell all the merry events of the feast and fun, but the keynote of it all may be found in the Club motto: "When a man's single he lives at his ease."

PERSONALIA.

Wm. M. Demarest is at the Niagara House, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Walter Murray, youngest son of John W. Murray, has gone to Yale.

J. A. Hill and family, of 35 Carlton avenue, started Tuesday for a coast trip South.

Miss Bertha Grandin, of Ravenna, Ohio, is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. L. Adams, at Force's hotel.

Mrs. Henry B Wells and Miss Dorothea Wells, of Washington avenue, are spending a few weeks at Boston.

Rumors that F. E. Miller, owner of Netherwood Hotel, will reopen the Park House this Winter, are not true.

The engagement of G. Harry Squires of Broadway, and Miss Grace Howard, of Ninth street, has been announced.

John Mortimer and family, of East Fifth street, are home again after a long season at their Summer cottage in Asbury Park.

James T. Closson has purchased the property adjoining him on East Front street, corner of Sandford avenue, for $9,500.

Geo. Schwenk, of the Holly Grove farm, was among the principal exhibitors of choice Jersey cattle at the State fair at Waverly.

John H. Doane, senior member of the firm of Doane & VanArsdale, has been very ill at his home on LaGrande avenue, but is now recovering.

Latest advices from Peter Hoagland locate him at Denver, Col., the extreme Western point of his pleasure trip. He will return by way of Council Bluff and St. Paul.

F. W. King, one of New York's prominent literary men, is stopping with his family at Force's hotel while a new house is being completed for them on Sandford avenue.

Miss Indiana Virginia MacCardell, of Chester, Pa., who has been the guest of Miss Florence M Randolph, of West Front street, left town Saturday for Trenton.

The latest addition to this city's professional men, is A. P. Roberts, formerly of Philadelphia, who has opened dentistry parlors at the corner of North and Park avenues.

Willet S. Marsh and Miss Florence LaBile, both of this city, were united in marriage by the Rev. Cornelius Schenck at the Trinity Reformed church parsonage Tuesday evening.

Miss May Hurd, daughter of John W. Hurd, of Dover, has entered Miss Kenyon's Seminary, "The Chestnuts," and is becoming a popular member of West Seventh street society.

Dr. Thomas Brown, of Rochester, N. Y., is visiting his Plainfield relatives, among them his brother, Isaac P. Brown, of Broadway, and his sister, Mrs. Jacob Thorn, of East Second street.

Geo. Schwenk, of the Holly Grove Farm, Plainfield, has been awarded several premiums for the superiority of the choice herd of Jersey cattle exhibited by him at the State Fair at Waverly.

Mrs. Hannah Stiles, of Illinois, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. David Pangborn, of West Fifth street, for some time, died Sunday, aged 49 years. The funeral took place on Wednesday at 2:30 P. M.

Thomas Chamberlain, of the Potter Press Works, after an enforced vacation of nearly four months, spent in England in search of health, has returned greatly benefitted, and will soon resume his former work again.

Maggie May Maire, daughter of the late Joseph Maire and May Fahn, died Monday at the home of her step-father, Lawrence Fahn, in North Plainfield. The funeral services took place on Wednesday afternoon at half-past three o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs Charles H. Pelletreau have invited their friends to a wedding reception tendered their daughter and Dr. Charles B. Thiers of this city. The affair will take place Wednesday evening, Oct. 8, at 300 Livingston street, Brooklyn.

The wedding of Miss Fannie Kiesam and Milton C. Barkalew, of the firm of Barkalew & Dunn, will take place Wednesday evening, October 15, at 7 o'clock, at 14 Elm place, this city. The Rev. N. W Cadwell, D. D., of Westfield, will officiate.

The County Convention of the Christian Endeavor Union will be held in the Trinity Reformed church, this city, on Friday evening of next week. Addresses will be made by the Rev. W. H. Shermer, of Elizabeth, and the Rev. George H. Payson, of Rahway.

T. E. H. Curtis, Secretary of the Colorado Coal and Iron company, who is building himself a beautiful home on Eighth street adjoining H. G. Runkle's, has just returned from a fishing trip to Lake Bell. One of his stories (which was quite a good one in them days) is the catching of two bass on one hook. One of the fish, he says, weighed two pounds, eight ounces.

Counselor W. K. McClure has purchased the handsome residence at the corner of Crescent avenue and Third place, built some years ago by the late Washington Lithgow, a former Councilman of this city. It is considered one of the best built and finest finished houses in Plainfield. It cost Mr. Lithgow a great deal of money. Even the mahogany in the lower hall was imported from Santo Domingo especially for that house.

Apropos of an article entitled "Old Geographers," M. S. Simpson, M D., of this city, sends to the Philadelphia Ledger, of Thursday last, a transcript from "An Account of the State of the Roman Catholick Religion Throughout the World. Written for the use of Pope Innocent XI (1676-1689, M. S. [illegible]), by Monsieur Cerri, Secretary of the Congregation de Propaganda Fide. Translated from an Authentick Italian MS., by Sir Richard Steele [1716]."

The Chimney Rock correspondent of The Somerset Messenger says that W. A. Coddington, of Plainfield, last Sunday resigned the superintendency of the Chimney Rock chapel, "his business compelling him to give up the position he has so faithfully filled the last five years. We regret to lose him and we hope the future Chief Justice will always bear in kind remembrance the humble school over which he once presided. Lawyer Fred H. Cook succeeds him here."

Engineer Charles Bigelow, a cousin of Mrs. C. H. Bugg, of this city, was killed Monday in a collision on the L. & S. Div., near Mauch Chunk. Owing to a blockade, only one track was in use and the telegraph operator was ordered to hold back all coal and freight to let the passenger trains through. The operator, however, neglected to transfer this order to the night man who succeeded him, and Bigelow's engine drawing a train of coal cars met a passenger engine on the same track.

Encroached on a Neighbor's Land.

Isaac Lederer, the dry goods merchant, has achieved so much success in Plainfield that it has become necessary for him to enlarge his already extensive establishment. When his plans for building an addition were in progress, however, it was found that the building on the Prudential adjoining, projected over on his land, and was in the way of the proposed extension. He notified the executors of the estate, who were at first inclined to dispute the claim that they were trespassers, but after surveyors had rendered their decision corroborating Mr. Lederer the executors yielded, and the building which trespassed has been cut away several inches and is now outside of Mr. Lederer's line.

HARRY HOPKINS' DOWNFALL.

Is This the Erstwhile Business Manager of the Park House?

Harry E. Hopkins, alias Corry—who, it is said, is "Count Hopkins" who was business manager while his father was proprietor of the Park House, this city, in 1886—was arrested Tuesday by detectives in Buffalo, on warrants sworn out in New York charging him with grand larceny. It is said that Hopkins was educated for a lawyer and admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of New York State. His dissipated habits, however, brought him to the grade of a criminal. He committed a serious offense some time ago in New York, and to save himself fled to Texas, where he remained until he supposed all had blown over, and then returning he committed other thefts.

Whistling Mrs. Shaw.

Mrs Shaw, who rented ex-Councilman Squires' home in this city during one Summer, is to go to Russia to whistle for roubles. Her tour was arranged for by the Grand Duke, when he was in London. Her whistle will produce a sum equal to $2,000 a night.

The Crescent City Chosen for Their Convention.

Plainfield has been chosen by the Union County Union of the Young People's Societies for Christian Endeavor as the place for the next annual meeting of the Union, which will be held Friday, October 10.

A Barn Burned at New Market.

Fire on Nelson Blackford's farm, near New Market afternoon Sept. 24, destroyed the barn and all its contents. Besides the building, Mr. Blackford loses ten tons of hay on which there was no insurance. The barn was insured for $250. The tenant loses his wagon and carpentry tools.

Almost Cut Off His Foot.

A son of Edward H. Woodward, President of the Cuba Manganese Company, of Carleton avenue, was using a hatchet on Tuesday when the implement slipped, and the blade was imbedded in the young man's leg, just above the ankle, inflicting a terrible wound. Dr. Tomlinson dressed the injury, which will keep the patient indoors a long time.

They Appreciate Good Treatment but Can't Afford to Pay League Salaries Any Longer.

The following letter was read at a meeting of the Crescent League, September 24, and received with much gratification:

UNION LEAGUE CLUB,
Somerville, N. J.

Mr. Charles A. Reed, President:

Your favor of the 22d inst. was brought before our meeting held this evening, and I was instructed to inform you that the sentiment of the members present was unanimously against any change of schedule or that any games be added to the schedule already arranged. We feel indebted to your organization for the gentlemanly treatment received in the present series and trust that it will continue through the games which we hope to arrange in the future.

Yours truly,
J. E. BROKAW, Sec.

The Mail Cart Wobbles Now.

Edward Martin, the man who transports the mail pouches from the North avenue railroad station to the post office, was energetically pushing the mail cart, heavily laden with its accustomed early morning burden, around the corner of North and Park avenues, at six o'clock Thursday, when the wheels, like the famous "one-hoss shay" described by Dr. Holmes, fell to pieces, "all at once." The sudden fall of the wagon and its load took Mr. Martin so completely by surprise that he was thrown to the pavement and tangled up among the debris. Beyond the soiling of his new Autumnal trousers, however, he was uninjured. The fractured wheels were patched up, and did wobbling service all day. They will be replaced by wheels which follow a straight and true track.

Learned Early How to Swim.

Harry Roughtenhausen, age four years, was playing with several other cherubs of similar age, along the raceway back of French's mills, Sunday, when the bank caved in, and Harry was precipitated into the water. He floundered about so vigorously that he succeeded in keeping his head above the surface of the stream, and by an instinct whose success seemed miraculous, struck out like a veteran swimmer, reached shore and crawled out. His infant companions took great delight in removing most of his garments, and they trailed the majority of his wardrobe gleefully through the alley and along West Front street, while he, scantily clad, and shivering and chattering, tottered along behind "I fell in," he kept saying sobbingly in tearful pride, "but I swum'd out, I swum'd out."

Plainfielders Help Dedicate the Handsome New Chapel at Chimney Rock.

At the recent meeting of the Union Chapel Association at Chimney Rock, Fred. H Cook and Ransom Lamb were elected Trustees for three years. The Board organized with W. A. Coddington, of Plainfield, as President, F. H. Cook, Secretary and F. N. Voorhees, Treasurer. In the two years since the chapel was built the debt of $1,300 has been reduced to $500, all outside expenses have been paid to date and there is a balance in hand of $54.

The dedication of the neat little chapel was witnessed by a large assembly last Sunday The interior was handsomely decorated, and the bright sunshine lighting up the surrounding scenery made all seem in unison with the happy hearts of the people present. Addresses were made by the Revs. J. B. Cleaver, of Plainfield, and W. W Jordan, of Bound Brook, Wm H. Ayers, Chas. M. Nabb, Geo. La Monte, W. B. R. Mason, S B. Dunning and others. The stirring speeches made a marked impression upon all. Gov. Brown prepared the masonry, the Rev. W. W. Jordan laid the corner stone, the benediction was invoked by the Rev. J. B. Cleaver, and all joined in singing "Old Hundred."

All This to be Inaugurated in a Few Days.

TO THE PEOPLE: On Monday evening next at eight o'clock, John L. Collins, general organizer of Boys' Clubs in the United States and Canada, will inaugurate the Boys' Club of Plainfield.

Central Hall will appear to better advantage than ever before, when dressed to receive these uncut diamonds. This large, light, and well ventilated room, will be furnished with chairs, tables and bookcases, filled with new books; the tasteful clean walls will be more beautiful, with 75 new pictures, the indefinite loan of the Century Company, New York. The new iron sink will hold its own in one corner and the reflected cheerfulness from those clean faces is going to brighten ours.

We will offer brightness, beauty, comfort and warmth to the part of our community, who have probably never before received these four things, at once, in one room. We expect to be a beacon in our elevated position, for who can overlook our 13 windows, our command of the prominent avenues, and our sweep of the railroad. We shall be all light and our love to man will shine forth like our lights that are to beckon boys in. We shall be merry for games will be there. Sometimes quiet for a corner will be there for those who wish to write, perhaps to a mother, far, far off.

Our hall, our beautiful hall is ready; our superintendent is here, and our starter, Mr. Collins, will welcome all subscribers, all interested and all boys, between the ages of 6 and 20. Our hall contains 2,800 feet. On Monday evening let there be 6,000!

THE BOARD OF MANAGERS.

An Evening Musicale.

A musicale was held at the residence of the Misses Flanagan on Liberty street, Thursday, that was attended by a large number of invited guests. Singing and selections on the piano were the principal features of the evening's enjoyment. Refreshments were served, and at an early hour this morning those present departed for their homes well pleased with the night's pleasures.

Terribly Mangled by the Cars.

A well dressed man attempted to board a fast freight train on the Central Railroad near Dunellen, Thursday, and fell under the wheels. His body was terribly mangled, but though unconscious he was still alive when found. On the fly-leaf of a note-book in his pocket was the inscription "James B. Francis, 30th and Penn streets, Pittsburgh, Pa.," and on the supposition that that was his name and address his senseless, bleeding body was conveyed to that city.

North Plainfield Young Men in Texas.

Fred. Olds, of North Plainfield, who was one of the Craig brothers' party to go to Texas last Spring, is expected home today. David French will remain a short time longer. The landed interests of the Craigs are demanding much attention from George and Wm. D., whose ranch contains extensive droves of cattle. George Stiner also has bought Texas property, and will raise cattle. The young men are all in the best of health and spirits. They are delighted with Texas, and say that its unlimited resources have only just begun to be developed.

One of the Things to Expect When Such Men Are Elected to Office.

Councilmen Hetfield, Roberts and Gallup, composing the committee on fire and buildings, with the board of engineers consisting of Chief Doane and Assistants Waters and Martin, made a tour of the city on Friday and located the fire alarm boxes at the following places:

Front street and Park avenue, Front street and Grove, Front street and Plainfield avenue, Spooner avenue and Seventh street, Liberty and Fifth streets, Central avenue and Seventh street, Crescent avenue and Broadway, Broadway and Webster place, LaGrande and Woodland avenues, Front and Richmond streets, Second and Washington streets, Park and North avenues.

The Best Show Plainfield Ever Saw.

A light house at Music Hall, Thursday, enjoyed the best minstrel show ever given in this city without excepting even Thatcher's. Cleveland's company includes most of the best people in the business, and the result is an opening and olio that are unsurpassed.

Percy Denton, the interlocutor, one of the best of middle men, with Dougherty, Schoolcraft, Emerson and Fagan on the ends, make a merry quintette of fresh and witty conversationalists. The vocalists, Benedetto, Shaw and Nankeville, are also good. Fagan's spectacular dance and drill, are even more luxurious and novel than anything he has created before. Fields and Hanson are the peers of all other instrumental comedians, while the Craggs are most marvelous.

A Plainfield Woman Makes an Interesting Speech.

At the meeting in Reform Hall Sunday evening President Harper occupied the chair, the Rev. W. E. Honeyman, Chaplain of the Club, conducted the devotional services, and a full choir, led by Mr. Vanderbeek, with Miss Doremus as accompanist, rendered well the music.

The speaker of the evening was George M. Angleman, who in a clear and forcible manner reviewed the temperance question, and commented on the individual responsibility it involved. Mrs. Rachel Bogart, by invitation, followed Mr. Angleman with a few very appropriate remarks.

The President made several announcements, and prefaced the offering of the pledge with a short address, after which the Rev. Mr. Honeyman pronounced the benediction.

Crushed Stone Wanted, Not Mud.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—For several years strenuous efforts have been made by private individuals at their own expense to improve the condition of the Washington Valley road, and hundreds of dollars have been expended in crushed stone thereon. The new road master, recently appointed by the North Plainfield Township Committee, has commenced operations by digging the soft mud out of the ditches, and spreading it on the road to the depth of several inches over where tons of crushed stone were laid and spread. As one of the indignant taxpayers of the district I protest against such misuse and waste of the people's money, and ask the honorable committee to have the mud removed from the road, and such work in future prohibited. There should be no appropriation of money made for the road except for crushed stone, opening ditches and making water stops. Any other work at present is unnecessary and should not be allowed.

RUPERT W. ANDERSON

A Course of Self Preservation, Merely.

"The country at large," said Congressman Geissenhainer the other day, in conversation with a Republican of this city, "does not fully understand our position in regard to the Venable-Langston case, and no doubt there are many who blame us for absenting ourselves from the floor, and so preventing the counting of a quorum. The question is this: The district is a Republican one, and the regular Mahone-Republican candidate was Mr. Arnold. Mr. Langston (a negro) ran independently, making a bid for the negro vote. Owing to this split in the party, Mr. Venable, the Democratic candidate, was elected by a plurality of 641 votes over Langston.

"Mr. Langston bases his claim to the seat on irregularities committed in two wards in Petersburg, but it is conceded that even if the entire vote of the whole city was thrown out, Venable had a plurality of 487 votes. In face of these facts the Republicans have as a matter of party policy, in order to increase their strength in the House, decided to unseat Venable after a two years' occupancy, and seat Langston; and they have made this the order of business so that nothing can be done until this question is decided

"Our position is clear. We cannot be a party to the crime of unseating one of our own party who was fairly elected. In other words we will not assist our enemies to injure us. Consequently we absent ourselves. It is all that we can do. The Republicans have a clear majority of 16, and we say that if they wish to commit any such steal, they must do it without our aid."

—"Where are you going, my pretty Maid?"
"I've an ad. for the newspaper, sir," she said;
"An ad. for the news?" I asked, amazed.
"But if I know myself, sir!" she said.

A Young Girl's Grief

At seeing her charms of face and form departing, and her health imperiled at her critical period of life, was turned to joy and gratitude after a brief self-treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It purified and enriched her blood, gave a healthy activity to the kidneys, stomach, bowels, and other organs, and her return to robust health speedily followed. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

HYMENEAL.

Halsted—Osgood.

On Sept. 23, at 12 o'clock noon, was celebrated the marriage of Miss Eleanor Gertrude Osgood, niece of Frank M. Derby, of this city, to Frank Ryder Halsted of Brooklyn. The best man was his brother, Frederick Halsted. Dr. W. H. Shepard and Frank Olacy were the ushers. The ceremony was performed in St. Mark's church, Brooklyn, by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Rosch. Following the ceremony, was luncheon at the future home of the young couple in Willoughby avenue, to their immediate relatives A number of Plainfield people were present at the ceremony.

Kulp—Voehl.

Miss Auguste Voehl, one of the twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Voehl, was married at six o'clock Sept 24, to John Kulp, at the residence of the bride's parents, 65 Somerset street. The Rev. C. B. Mitchell officiated. Only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Kulp will live at Bergen Point, where the groom has purchased a bakery. They have the good wishes of a large circle of friends.

Hamilton—Young.

Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the First Presbyterian church, Dunellen, W. J. Hamilton and Mrs. Mary Young were married by the Rev. D. W. Skellinger, of Albany, the former pastor of the church. Mr. Hamilton is the manager of the telegraphic department of the New Jersey Central Railroad in the New York office, and is the Superintendent of the Sunday school where Mrs. Young is a teacher. The bride was dressed in a handsome traveling suit of dark plum color. Mr. Smith, of Somerville, presided at the organ. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs Hamilton were driven to the station, and amid a shower of rice started for the West They expect to spend their honeymoon in California, and will be gone about six weeks.

MARTIN—JOHNSON.

Colored society was out in full force and correct style, Thursday night, at the wedding of Edward Alfred Martin and Miss Anna Johnson. The ceremony took place at the residence of Peter Gordon, 70 East Fourth street. The bride and groom were overwhelmed with compliments and congratulations, at the reception, and were showered with good wishes as they started off on their wedding trip. The Rev. Mr. Mitchell officiated.

VANCLEVE—SCHENCK.

Wm. VanCleve, of Brooklyn, was married by the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, Wednesday, Sept. 25, to Miss Josie Schenck, formerly of this city, at the home of the bride's parents in New Market.

A Boroughite's First Poem.

A resident of the Borough, evidently a close observer of the happenings of waning Summer out-door life among his neighbors, immortalizes a recent incident of Washington Park life as follows:

Within a hammock snug they sat;
But how the two behaved
One could not tell, it was so dark,
Had it not been for the remark
"Oh, George, you must get shaved."

Can't Even Print What is Stolen, Correctly.

(From the Central Times of Wednesday.)

Rev. C L. Goodrich is intending to preach a doctrinal sermon next Sunday morning, on "Why I am a Congregationalist."

(From the "News" of Thursday.)

The subject chosen by the Rev. W. R. Richards for his sermon next Sunday is "Why I am a Congregationalist."

To the Victors Belong the Spoils.

The first of the Democratic employes in the postoffice to go, are carriers Joseph Shepherd and Peter Flynn. They were notified, Wednesday last week that pursuant to orders from headquarters at Washington, they would be relieved from duty on Oct. 1. Postmaster Pope says he has no fault to find with them. They were appointed, however, under a Democratic administration. It is expected that Charles Stephens and Peter Weaver, who have been acting as substitutes, will take their places.

Councilor-Elect Tallman.

At the regular meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., held in their hall corner of Front street and Park avenue, Thursday, after the usual routine business was transacted the following officers were elected for the ensuing quarter:

Junior Past Councilor—Gilbert S. Martin.
Councilor—Charles W. Tallman.
Vice Councilor—Louis M. Dunavan.
Ass't Recording Secretary—David S. Dunavan.
Conductor—Elias R. Pope, Jr.
Warden—Charles W. Taynor.
Inside Sentinel—Harry C. Dennis.
Outside Sentinel—William R. Hardy.

Must Wait for the Next Grand Jury.

The friends of Henry Hess, of North Plainfield, who is accused by his wife of attempting to poison himself and child, are indignant because he was not given a chance to be freed—or indicted—by the Grand Jury in session last week. The jury is said to have waited half an hour after all other cases had been disposed of, to examine the witnesses against him, but they did not appear, and, indeed, had not been summoned. Hess himself did not reach the county seat until after the jury had been discharged. He is now a prisoner at Somerville, and must wait for the next Grand Jury to act on his case.

How a Dunellen Boy Made Money by Being Robbed.

A youngster in Dunellen has been breeding a fine flock of pigeons which he had planned to present to a friend, a sportsman, to be used as targets in the coming shooting tournament at the Middlesex Gun Club grounds. Thursday night some one stole the entire flock, and for a time the sky of the generous-hearted fancier was dark. Next morning, however, he arose bright and early, and by a bright bit of detective work discovered the robber in the person of a former playmate. Terms of restitution were made so satisfactory to the owner of the birds that now he has his pigeons again and a $5 gold piece to boot.

A Stranger Extracts a Loan From a Kind-Hearted Plainfielder.

A middle-aged man button-holed a Plainfield citizen, recently, and would not release him till a "temporary loan" had been effected. The stranger claimed to be connected with B. McGuigan & Son, metal workers, of Jersey City, whose card he presented. He had been working, he said, on Mr. Hicking's new house near Dunellen, and some one had stolen his pocket-book, which was filled with money, and other valuables, from the pockets of his garments, which had been hanging in one of the unfinished apartments. As soon as he was given the money he asked for he vanished, and he hasn't been seen or heard of since.

—A conference of delegates from the different gun clubs of the State will be held at Dunellen, Friday evening, to arrange for the annual Fall tournament of the New Jersey State Sportsmen's Association.

When you have that tired feeling of exhaustion, and you have little ambition, your blood is thin and poor. There is nothing that will enrich your blood, bring back life and activity, like Hires' Root Beer. Nothing so nutritious and strengthening. Ask your druggist or grocer for a package. OBITUARY.

William Johnson.

William Johnson, who is well-known in this city, where he was a frequent visitor during his residence among the Hills of Somerset, back of North Plainfield, and who will be affectionately remembered by the surviving members of the old anti-slavery movement and by the elder generation of the Methodist Episcopal church, in New York city, died Friday morning at his home, No. 354 Stuyvesant avenue, Brooklyn. He was born May 8, 1815, at Kingston-on-Hull, England, and was educated to follow his father's profession of architect and builder. Before he fully reached the age of manhood he came to America and for many years made his home in New York city, where he was associated in the construction of many notable houses, churches and other buildings. His first work in this country was in the erection of the well-known row of brick and marble houses on the North side of Washington Square, between Fifth avenue and University place, which for more than half a century have been a landmark of New York city.

Mr. Johnson early became actively interested in the anti-slavery movement, of which he was for years a leader, and to which he devoted a large share of his time and means. His office was an important station on the "Underground Railroad," and he personally aided in the forwarding to freedom of many fugitive slaves. A reminiscence of one of the most romantic and exciting of these episodes was not long ago published under the caption of "A Slave-Hunt in New York." Mr. Johnson was from early years a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and was active and influential in its work in New York city. He was among those who most strenuously opposed the too-prevalent subserviency to pro-slavery sentiment, and was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist organization, which was formed at the Utica convention nearly fifty years ago, as a protest against any neutral or indifferent attitude on the slavery question. He was a man of great intellectual force and scholarly tastes. All his life he was an indefatigable collector and reader of the best books, and he amassed a large library, containing, besides standard modern and classical works, a considerable collection of the earliest printed books of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. He was a congenial companion of many of the old "Knickerbocker" literati of New York city, and was a frequent contributor to the press of essays on current topics.

Mr. Johnson suffered much in the financial crisis of 1857, at which time he was heavily interested in the lumber trade, and in the Fall of that year went to New Providence, N. J., to live. He remained there until last year, when he removed to Brooklyn. He was twice married, and had six children. Of the two sons of his first wife, the elder, William Gervais, died at sea when a young man, and the younger, Samuel Justin Johnson, now lives in Philadelphia. His second wife, Alathea A. Coles, survives him with her four children, Darley C. Johnson, of the United States Assay Office in New York city; Wordsworth C. Johnson, of New Providence, N. J.; Sarah Imogene Johnson, of Brooklyn, and W. Fletcher Johnson, a New York newspaper man.

The Indictment of Mrs. Drake.

Mrs. Newton P. Drake, of North Plainfield, was indicted Friday by the Somerset County Grand Jury on the charge of abusive treatment of her stepson. She will enter a plea of not guilty, and will be given a trial at an early date.

Diehl—Vanneman.

George A. Diehl, of Bloomington, and Miss Lina Vanneman, of Somerville, were married at the residence of the bride's father, Elias Vanneman, on Main street, Somerville, Thursday evening, in the presence of a numerous company of friends. The Rev. Wm. M. Trumbower officiated. The happy couple will reside on Grant avenue, Plainfield, where Mr. Diehl is engaged in the Potter Press Works.

New Market's Mail Troubles.

A PRESS subscriber at New Market writes as follows:

"THE DAILY PRESS does not reach me till the second day after publication. For instance, Wednesday's PRESS does not arrive at this office until Friday morning, despite the fact that it is mailed promptly from Plainfield. No better illustration can be produced to show up the absurd mail facilities under present arrangements. Formerly, when our mail matter came via Dunellen on the Central Railroad, no such delays occurred Thirty-six hours is consumed for mail matter to travel 3½ miles."

A Female Impostor in Town.

A well dressed woman, a stranger in Plainfield, has been making her living, the past few weeks, by imposing on the sympathies of residents in the neighborhood of the Bryant school. She has led a life of leisure and has secured a good income by telling various pitiful tales which never fail to extract from twenty-five cents to one dollar from each listener. Sometimes she begs outright, claiming to want the money to go to the dying bedside of a son in New York city, and sometimes she merely asks for a loan, saying that Plainfielders for whom she has worked owe her, and promising to pay the money back as soon as she could collect what was due her. She has in every instance failed to return the loan, and finding her to be a fraud, her victims are taking steps to have her arrested.

Donald Downie's Property Seized for Debt.

Donald Downie, the English traveler and lecturer, is in financial difficulties which may prevent him from fulfilling engagements in Somerville and other places where he is booked for early dates. Just after his lecture on Japan at the Warren Union Mission chapel, Thursday evening, Constable Bauernschs levied on Mr. Downie's stereopticon, views and other paraphernalia, to satisfy the $30 claim of his assistant, Edward O. Ackerman, a former Plainfielder, for wages, and the claims of parties who have furnished Mr. Ackerman with board under Mr. Downie's promise to be responsible. Mr. Downie has promised to settle the debts, and when the promise is fulfilled the goods under seizure will be restored. If he does not pay within a stipulated time the goods will be sold.

Reckless Riding on the Public Streets.

A citizen whose indignation has been aroused at the alleged carelessness of some of the city's employes has asked for the ear of the Mayor, the Captain of Police, the Chief of the Fire Department, "the appreciated Street Commissioner," and others interested, through THE PRESS. The burden of his complaint is against the driver of the horses used in drawing the street roller over the new layers of crushed stone in the neighborhood of Park avenue, Seventh and Eighth streets. Every day this week, he says, as soon as work has stopped at noon and night, one of the men has mounted one horse, dashed rapidly down Park avenue, and caused the mate of the team also to gallop wildly along, riderless, and free to do whatever damage it pleased. Several narrow escapes from the hoofs of the flying steeds are reported, and the people who have witnessed the reckless racing are unanimous in asking that it be stopped.

Upon vigorous health and a rugged constitution will depend largely upon the future happiness and success in life of a child; the choice of a food is, therefore, of the highest importance. Mellin's Food is rich in blood forming, brain-forming and bone-forming compounds, and is recommended by the highest medical authorities.

Failed to Find Indictments Here.

The Somerset County Grand Jury examined into the following cases from North Plainfield and dismissed the complaints without finding indictments:

The case against Eugene Hoerster, on the charge of illegal liquor selling.

The case against Ernest and Bernard Hengel, charged with assaulting Marshal Becker when he prevented them from kidnapping a child in the Borough.

The case against Otto Hartmann, accused by his sister, Henrietta Goetze, of inhuman treatment.

The Longest Fly on Record.

J. Hervey Doane's carrier pigeon "Dude" is home after over a year's absence. He sailed for Europe in 1889 with Scripps' League, and was released hundreds of miles out at sea in company with another bird bearing a message from Julian Hawthorne. This latter bird after flying two days and a night lighted on a ship bound for New York, and was captured. Dude was never seen since until Thursday, when he returned to his old perch in his owner's loft on La Grande avenue.

If Men Didn't Observe, There Would Be No Books to Read.

The debate held by the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Young Men's Christian Association Tuesday was a very interesting event. The speeches were fresh, and the arguments spirited. Vincent Rockwell, James Kimball and Charles Fernald spoke in the affirmative of the question "Resolved, That reading is more beneficial than observation." William Crawford, Walter Dobbins and Warren Rice supported the negative. Judge J. H. Allen, and jurors Rockfellow, Frost, Cook, VanEmburgh and Currie decided that the negative debaters had the best of the argument.

Plainfield Real Estate Transfers.

Among the recent real estate changes in this vicinity are recorded the following:

Lemuel E. Hart and wife to Amelia A. Mulford, all of Plainfield; lot on southwest side of Leland avenue, 59x134, $900.

Clarence J. Rice, Mary B. Loomis and Edwin Loomis to Lemuel B. Wooiston and James F. Buckle, land on Sandford avenue, Plainfield, 60x218, $1,500.

Jeremiah Manning and wife to Wm. M. Sandford, of Plainfield, land on southeast side of Park place, Plainfield, 100x60, $1.

Wm. M. Sandford and wife to Jeremiah Manning, land on southeast side of Third street, Plainfield, 50x156, $1.

A Plainfielder Now the Sole Proprietor.

Last week's Hotel Gazette contains a fine reproduction of a photograph of Geo. B. DeRevere, of this city, and a sketch of his busy and successful life. He is now proprietor of the Union Square Hotel and Hotel Dam, New York, and Taylor's Hotel, Jersey City. The paper says:

The Union Square Hotel and the Hotel Dam, Fourth avenue and Fifteenth street, Union Square, this city, have passed into the sole proprietorship of George B. DeRevere, who for the past five years has been the junior member of the firm of Dam & DeRevere, and for the past eight years proprietor of Taylor's Hotel, Jersey City. When Mr. DeRevere bought a half interest in the Union Square and Hotel Dam as one of the proprietors of the houses he paid $75,000 and on September 3 he paid about $75,000 more for his partner's half interest, and the firm of Dam & DeRevere has been dissolved by mutual and friendly consent. The sum of $150,000 would seem to be a very reasonable price for such a magnificent and profitable enterprise as the Union Square and Hotel Dam, the first with its 110 rooms and the Dam with its 140 rooms, making a total of 250 rooms, all fully furnished, including a lease which runs to the year 1897.

The late Andrew J. Dam, Sr., who built the Hotel Dam, said it cost $150,000 to build and $75,000 to furnish; and the Union Square $200,000 to build and $75,000 to furnish, so that the enterprise represents an outlay of about $500,000.

During the eight years that Mr. DeRevere has been proprietor of Taylor's Hotel, Jersey City, he has made over $100,000 there, and his son, Geo. B. DeRevere, Jr., superintends the running of the house and buys the supplies during the absence of his father. It must not be forgotten right here that Mrs. DeRevere is one of the most famous hotel women in America.

A Young Republican of This City Tells Why Uncle Sam Cannot Secure the Latin-American Trade.

The Washington, D. C., Post, of last Tuesday, says that "Charles Bullman, an expert mining engineer of Plainfield, N. J., who has spent the largest part of the past seven years in South America, is at the Ebbitt. In addition to his professional skill he is a keen observer of events and talked interestingly of the Southern end of the continent."

Mr. Bullman was bred in this city and brought up in the Plainfield public schools. He lives on Third place. He votes the Republican ticket, yet told the newspaper man: "Had Gen. Barrundia been aboard a ship flying the English flag, do you think he would have been butchered?" They would never have dared to perpetrate the outrage. In all South America there is a wholesome respect for the rights of an English subject. The Gautemalan government would have not ventured to board an English vessel.

"A citizen of the United States feels keenly the disadvantage he is under by the indifference in which his Government is held in almost every section of Latin America.

"I am directly interested in Colombia, which is beginning to make considerable headway in the development of its mining and agricultural resources. Mr. Cherry, of San Francisco, has contracted with the Colombian government for the completion of a railroad between Buenaventura, a seaport on the Pacific, and Cali, in the Cauca Valley. The route lies across the Andes, and will open up a magnificent country to commerce. Now, all their products, hides, coffe, and cacao have to be transported on mules over the mountains.

"Of all the South American countries Chili is by long odds the most progressive and prosperous. There are no blacks or Chinese there. The people are wonderfully bright, and are leaders in everything. I am a firm believer in reciprocity with all these people, but must confess that it is hard to see how it can be brought about. A great difficulty in the way is that the governments down there have no other way of raising revenue than by import duties. Some also have export duties. There is no tax, generally speaking, on landed estates, as in this country A man may own 1,000,000 acres of land and not pay 1 cent of taxes. We ought to sell them more of our products, but this is out of the question as long as they can buy European goods at less cost."

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—U. S. Government Report, August 17, 1889. 6-1-y

VACATION'S UP AND SCHOOL OPEN!

This is the season for a brisk demand in CHILDREN'S CLOTHING. During the months of Summer enjoyment they have played the dickens with their clothes, and usually have little left fit to appear in school with

We have always made the clothing of the litttle ones a specialty, and this Fall we shall strengthen our well deserved reputation of keeping the best stock of these goods in Newark. You'll find it to be money in your pocket and the saving of no end of trouble to come straight here with your children and fit them out for the coming season. We can not only show you all the styles to be met with elsewhere, but many novel conceits which we have designed exclusively for us. Our prices for the newest styles are no greater than you'll pay for the old ones, and as to reliable work there isn't a store in the country that is more particular than we are, especially in children's goods. We know, in advance, the strain to which the little garments will be put, and every safeguard against a sudden coming from together is taken advantage of.

It's a pleasure to talk children's clothing just now; it's a pleasure to show it. We've got something to show and talk about.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,300 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A. St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation" read it and resolve to accept the golden HAND OF FORTUNE!

CHRISTIAN COURTESY.

[illegible] of What Our Creature [illegible] in God's House.

The editor of the Sunday School Times recently asked Robert J. Burdette to reply to the inquiry of a correspondent who wanted a "few points on church etiquette." His reply is in a characteristic vein:

[illegible]

"Fall or slide into the pew nearest the aisle.

"Stay there.

"Do not sit [illegible] bodies. Rest one elbow on the arm of the pew, and support the side of the face with the outspread hand. If the cheek can be pushed up in folds and wrinkles, so as to wholly or partially close one eye, all intelligent expression will be destroyed, and the attitude of utter and disrespectful ease will be heightened by the charm of [illegible].

"Do not rise during the singing of the hymns. The fact that you played [illegible] base ball all Saturday afternoon, or walked four or five miles around a billiard-table Saturday night, entitles you to a little rest Sunday morning. This is the day of rest, and you are no Sabbath-breaker.

"Take advantage of the long prayer, when other people should have their eyes closed and their heads bowed, to adjust yourself into a position of limp and lounging listlessness that you can endure comfortably through the sermon.

"Extend your legs as far under the pew in front of you as you can make them reach without sliding off your seat.

"Gracefully and politely cover your mouth with your hand while yawning during the sermon. If the minister is looking at you, cover the mouth with both hands, and, at the close of the yawn, bring your jaws together with a cheerful snap.

"It is a mark of the highest culture and best breeding in refined society to look at your watch frequently during the sermon. After looking at your watch, always turn your head and gaze longingly and earnestly toward the door.

"Do not move if a stranger, accompanied by his wife and daughter, attempts to enter your pew. Permit them to climb over your legs, no matter how much they annoy you. This is the Lord's house, and all His children are welcome. It is not Christian, and it may even be questioned if it is really polite, to put your knees up against the back of the pew when a family of strangers attempt to enter. It is practiced in some churches, but we have never openly encouraged it here.

"Do not annoy strangers who may enter the church by looking at them, or even glancing in their direction. Nothing is more embarrassing to a sensitive person than to find himself an object of attention under the eyes of strangers in a strange place. If he really wants a seat, he will find one without the obtrusive interference of other people. Some of the ablest scholars in our denomination believe the employment of ushers to be a relic of paganism and a legacy of Romanism, if, indeed, they are not the Scarlet Woman himself.

"At the close of service remark aloud, but to yourself, that you are hungry as a shark, and set off for home at a brisk trot. The house of the Lord is no place for idle chatter and worldly gossip with strangers."

He then describes the imposing edifice of the "Church of Saint Divers of Gilt-edge" and he concludes:

But last of all, it may be by some mistake you stumble into the church of the Samaritans. You have no dealings with those fellows, and you would back out as soon as you see where you are going, but the Samaritans are wide awake, with some very informal notions about church etiquette. The sexton, standing on the porch sees you are a stranger, and the minute you pause hesitatingly in front of the church you are his. He hypnotizes you with a cheerful smile and a beckoning hand, and passes you in through the wide-open door almost before you know it. An old deacon in the vestibule has you by the hand at once, and introduces you to "our [illegible] clerk," adding as he [illegible] your part of the introduction: "I don't exactly know your name,"—as though he used to know it like a book, and has a pretty good inkling of it now, but can't quite place you. An usher at each door is ready for you—there is a perfect picket line of sextons and deacons and ushers along the front of the church of the Samaritans; not to keep people out, but to bring them in; it isn't a fort, it's a hospital; it's a one-way bolted with Christian courtesy, and the man who is caught there never tries to get away. The older you are the better seat you get; if you [illegible] the young fellow who is leading you forward that your hearing is a little "near-sighted," he'll get you the best seat in the house, if he has to ask a resident Samaritan to give it up to you. You get comfortably seated, and somebody pushes a hassock toward you; a child from the next pew hands you a hymn-book; an old lady puts a Bible into your hands. The minister looks at you as though he had seen you before and was glad to see you again.

Before you get fairly out of the pew, after service, somebody has you by the hand, telling you he is glad to see you there, the pastor is asking you to come again, the usher is telling you the hour of evening service, the superintendent is giving you an invitation to stay to Sunday-school, and when, a little ashamed of the way you felt when you tried to back out, you say, rather meekly, you are a member of the Church of Jerusalem yourself, they say, reassuringly: "Oh, that's all right; there isn't much difference between the Samaritans and the Church of Jerusalem now; but our people drop in and see us on their way to Jericho," the deacon tells you "to get the best wife in the world out of the Church of Jerusalem," and so you have a good time, and so when with such a glow at your heart that if it wasn't Sunday, and in town, you'd take off your coat.

You see, it is just here; the Samaritans feel at home in their church, and consequently they know just how to make strangers feel at home there. It is their Father's house, and they conduct themselves there as easily, cordially, naturally as children at home. A church of that sort has a home-like atmosphere the visitor recognizes and enjoys. Any guest can tell the family living-room from the "spare-room" with his eyes shut. The trouble with some of our churches is that the members frequent them so seldom they have a out-in-a-strange-city feeling themselves when they do go, and are consequently awkward and constrained in their efforts to make the stranger feel welcome—very much as I should probably feel if, being a chance visitor at the palace, I should attempt to receive Queen Victoria's guests in the drawing-room, while she finished her luncheon of bread and honey in the kitchen.

Get acquainted in your own church; feel at home there yourself; get into the habit of frequenting the house during the week; and on Sunday attend both services and the Sunday-school—see how easily the "workers" of the hive and the little people receive and entertain guests—and you will soon find yourself as cordial and warm-hearted as those fellows over in the Church of the Samaritans, and won't ask for a letter of introduction and countersigned credentials before passing a hymn-book to a stranger. And remember always the injunction of Peter, "an apostle of Jesus Christ," writing "to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia:" "Finally, be ye all of one mind, having a compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous."

THE BOWSEES.

Mr. B's Excited Ideas About Spontaneous Combustion.

SOON after supper the other evening Mr. Bowser slipped upstairs, and as his action looked very mysterious to me I followed him. I found him overhauling the clothes basket.

"Mrs. Bowser," he began by way of explanation, "do you know that we have had a close call—a dozen close calls—from being burned alive in our beds?"

"Lands sakes! What do you mean?"

"I mean that there hasn't been an hour in the twenty-four since we moved into this house that it was not liable to take fire. In other words, we have been slumbering on the edge of a volcano."

"Why, Mr. Bowser!"

"Nothing but the hand of Providence has prevented a great disaster," he continued, as he dumped the last of the clothes out of the hamper.

MR. BOWSER KICKED AT THE CAT.

"But what has that hamper to do with it?"

"Every thing. Mrs. Bowser, did you ever hear of spontaneous combustion?"

"Of course."

"Well, there hasn't been a day that all the elements necessary to spontaneous combustion haven't been present in this hamper. Also, in various other places in this house. I shudder over our narrow escape."

"You—you haven't gone and got another fire-escape, have you?"

"There you go! Always ready to throw up something! I suppose you'll call this a notion of mine?"

"What has spontaneous combustion got to do with our clothes hamper?"

"Every thing. Here are the elements right here to start a fire. Here are cotton, wool and silk crowded together in a temperature of at least ninety degrees. Nothing could be more favorable."

"I don't believe it!"

"What! What!" shouted Mr. Bowser holding up a pillow-slip in one hand and one of baby's stockings in the other. "You don't believe in spontaneous combustion?"

"Under certain conditions, yes; but those conditions can not be found here. Some one has been working on your imagination."

"Oh! They have! On my imagination!" he softly whispered. "When every scientist and scientific publication believes in spontaneous combustion—when it is practically demonstrated every day in the year, when it is a fact as well known as that a horse has teeth, you stand there and tell me that I have been played on! Mrs. Bowser, will you have the kindness to go down-stairs?"

I went down, and he took every article from the hamper and spread them out on the floor. Then he went through every clothes-closet and bureau drawer, and it was fully two hours before he came down and heaved a great sigh of relief and said:

"There! We shall not be burned alive—not to-night!"

"There was no danger," I replied.

"There wasn't, eh! Mrs. Bowser, I—I—"

His emotion overcame him, and I got some [illegible] water.

"Why don't other people's houses turn up through spontaneous combustion?"

No answer.

"I haven't seen any thing in the papers about a clothes-hamper explosion."

Mr. Bowser gritted his teeth.

"If it has got to that pass that the sheets off the spare bed can't come in contact with the baby's stockings without striking fire, we'd better fill the cellar with tin boxes."

Mr. Bowser kicked at the cat, but missed her by about two feet.

"But there'll be a fire, of course. You have overlooked an old vest somewhere, and it will get down off its hook and walk over to one of your old shoes and arrange for a bonfire. I shan't sleep a wink to-night."

Mr. Bowser circled around the room three times with great dignity, and then went off to bed. When he was out of the way I went out and had a talk with the cook. The result was that we brought an iron kettle into the front hall, got out some cotton-batting, and as I went upstairs, she whispered to me:

"I understand, ma'am. In exactly half an hour I'm to touch it off."

Mr. Bowser was in bed, and though I spoke about the coal wave, baby's cold and other things, he had nothing to say. I wasn't hurt, however. I got into bed and waited. It wasn't over ten minutes until the odor of burning cotton was plain enough in the room, and I sat up and gave Mr. Bowser a dig and asked:

"Don't you smell smoke?"

"Smoke!" he shouted, after a sniff or two. "I smell fire!"

"Perhaps the cook lighted the gas with paper."

"Perhaps the confounded house is afire! (he jumps out of bed) of course it is! (he goes to the door) she's all ablaze down-stairs! Fire! Fire!"

"The baby!" I shouted as he danced around, but he was gone, carrying his pantaloons and one shoe under his arm. He ran down the hall, shouting "fire!" at the top of his voice, came back and grabbed his necktie and shouted again, and the next I heard of him he was in front of the house yelling like an Indian. Half a dozen men were going by, on their way home from some sort of convention, and they rushed into the house and soon located the fire. I heard Mr. Bowser telling them that he had long expected it, and that he had the most careless wife in the world, and that he hadn't slept sound for three months, and then there was a pause. They had found the kettle with the smoking cotton.

I didn't hear Mr. Bowser laughing with the rest. Perhaps he tried to, and it was a failure. It took all the rest of the beer in the case to get the men out, and they also ate up all the cheese and crackers, but when they had gone, Mr. Bowser came upstairs. He struck every step with the tread of a Roman Emperor. Baby and I were in bed and apparently sound asleep. He came in, walked twice around the room with his hands under his coat-tails, and then loomed up over the bed and said:

"Mrs. Bowser, I have come to kiss my child good-bye before I go."

I didn't say any thing.

"Mrs. Bowser, I shall take the child with me!"

I didn't answer.

"Mrs. Bowser!"

At that moment the cook came down the hall and asked who was there.

"It's I," answered Mr. Bowser.

"And what are you doing?"

"N-nothing."

"Then you'd better be in bed and let the poor missus and baby and me get a few winks of sleep! Such a house! Such carryings on! Such spontaneous combustious kick-up-a-fustabus! I give you notice, sir, that I quit the place before the dishes are washed in the morning!"

She went off to bed, and Mr. Bowser made two more circles of the room, kicked the footstool under the bed and then crept into his accustomed place and was snoring away in the usual manner in less than fifteen minutes.—Detroit Free Press.

A Remarkable Escape.

At Parkersburg, W. Va., a contractor took part in a frolic that ended in a fight, all hands being drunk, and a man undertook to assault him with a hatchet. He rushed to a third-story window, and, suspending himself by his hands from the sill, would have dropped to the street and no doubt been crushed to death but for the fact that his feet were caught at the top of the sash in the second story and the sash gave way just as he let go his hold on the sill. The sash with the window and his feet slipped inward, carrying him into the room below and allowing him to escape unhurt.

THE SUMMER HOTEL.

Howard Fielding Briefly Tastes Its Delights.

He Observes with Pain the Decline of the Hotel Orchestra, and Furnishes the Feet of Genius for a Grand Tableau.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

I have just served a sentence of two weeks and three days at a summer hotel. I will not state where the hotel is, but the climate of the place was said to be a sure cure for a large variety of ailments, none of which I had ever had before I went there. During my stay, however, I enjoyed them all. The landlord told me that nothing but the salubriety of the place saved my life. I shall never impose the same strain on that climate again, for I do not wish to spoil it.

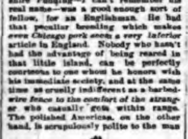
There is nothing so corrosive to a man's self esteem as to find himself classed way down in the subcellar of the social category—down among the men who order the whole bill of fare, and the women who publicly quarrel with their husbands in order to remove injurious suspicions from the mind of the observer—to be classed, I repeat, by a gentleman of color who wears a dress suit at breakfast time. But I never could get up the courage necessary to resist the head waiter. When he beckoned to me I invariably fell humbly into his wake, and then he steered a straight course for the chumps' table, where I was served by a girl with hair so red that when she brought me roast beef I knew what must have been the color of the old car-horse it had been cut off of.

THE PRETTIEST GIRL IN THE HOTEL.

I tried getting there early in order to eat before the chumps arrived, but no sooner did I reach my place than I observed in the doorway the melancholy countenance of the lonely young man who did not wear cuffs. When he had seated the young man the head waiter at once returned to the door and brought in the husband who palpably regretted his choice, and the wife who was the amply sufficient cause of his remorse.

Then I tried coming late, but the chumps were also unavoidably detained on that occasion, and we were all fed from the same trough as usual. One day I summoned up all the nerve I had left, and asked the head waiter to give me another seat. He said: "Yes, sah; dis way, sah," seated me in my old place, and escaped. I hadn't the moral courage to move. That afternoon I asked the clerk to make the head waiter change my seat, and he promised to do it.

This change, however, was not wholly fruitless, for it enabled me to hear a fairly good thing. On my right was a table where a mother and four daughters sat. The girls were all old enough to marry rich men, and the mother was willing that they should do so, at any moment. On my left sat the sensation of the hour; the only real, live, guaranteed foreign nobleman in the place. And he was a bachelor, too. Lord Yorkshire Pudding—I can't remember his real name—was a good enough sort of fellow, for an Englishman. He had that peculiar breeding which makes even Chicago pork seem a very inferior article in England. Nobody who hasn't had the advantage of being reared in that little island, can be perfectly courteous to one whom he honors with his immediate society, and at the same time as cruelly indifferent as a barbed-wire fence to the comfort of the stranger who casually gets within range. The polished American, on the other hand, is scrupulously polite to the man he doesn't know, while he may not tip his hat to his own wife's mother.



"GENIUS AND THE NINE MUSES."

My lord certainly kept his eye-glass bearing steadily on the table where the mother and daughters sat, and they were not slow to notice it. I could hear some pretty little squabbles between the girls, as to which one of them was getting the best of it. The mother did not enter into these disputes, but she looked at my lord in a way that meant: "Oh! how I wish there were enough of you to go around." She was in high feather, and the girls couldn't sit still in their chairs. It looked like a clear case even to my unprejudiced vision, and I was beginning to be interested to discover which of the daughters stood the best chance of being unhappy for life, when my lord pulled one of his side-whiskers with an air of decision and remarked to the man beside him, in that generously audible voice of his: "I say, deah boy, that table girl, as you call 'em, don't-yerknow, waiting on those old women over there, is the prettiest girl in this hotel, ba Jove!"

Everybody was talking about the incident after dinner while the evening promenade on the piazza was in progress. I was there, catching the neuralgia in one ear and the sweet strains of the hotel orchestra in the other. The orchestra was not what it used to be. The popularity of hotel life at American summer resorts has, on the whole, declined of late years. It seems incredible that the robust digestive apparatus of our people can have been exhausted in so short a time, but something has caused a falling away of guests, and many a seaside hotel proprietor has had to cut down expenses this season. The unhappy musician has been the first to feel the sharp edge of retrenchment. Hotels which formerly supported an orchestra of half a dozen players—and two or three dummies who worked the well-greased joints of voiceless trombones—have now come down to a violinist, a cornetist and an old maid to pound the piano.

And the "hop" is not what it was. As for that, I have a theory that the generation which succeeds our children will be too lazy to dance, and that signs of the decay of this exercise, which kept our grandmother merrily skipping about until daylight, are not wanting even now. However, far be it from me to force the results of my own deep research upon a world which can not appreciate me. I will say only that the hops at our hotel this summer were failures. So, in the last week of my stay, they got up some tableaux, by way of variety. As I was known to have perhaps the most refined artistic taste of any man of my weight in America, I was selected to arrange the display.

The next day I was approached by Mrs. A., mother of Miss Birdie (one of the nine). Mrs. A. tapped me playfully on the arm with her fan and inquired what I was going to do with her Birdie. I came very near saying that I didn't see what anybody could do with her, but by great self control I limited myself to a mild inquiry as to what Birdie's mother wanted me to do with her. It did not take me long to discover that the old lady wanted her Birdie to perch higher than any other in the tableau. I scented danger, and promised only that I would give the subject the consideration it deserved.

"I need not tell a person of your fine artistic sense," said Mrs. A., "that Birdie is the only girl in this hotel who can fill a position of prominence in a tableau. I only wish to inquire whether you had chosen your subject. And, by the way, I understand that the expenses are to be defrayed by the ladies. Allow me to put whatever sum you think necessary at your disposal. But you must promise me about Birdie."

NO WONDER THE BALL-ROOM IS EMPTY.

"My dear madam," said I, "it has appeared to me necessary from the nature of the subject—which I must keep secret for the present—to give perhaps the most prominent position to Miss B."

"Oh! you can't think of it," cried Mrs. A., holding up her hands in horror, "my dear sir, she has been fading steadily for the last ten seasons. Poor girl! I pity her. Under these circumstances I must withhold my subscription from the affair."

Of course I had no idea of losing her subscription.

"I don't see how I can promise about Birdie," said I, with hesitation.

"If you only won't let Betty B. have the best place, I'll subscribe double," said Mrs. A.

"Madam," said I, "you may have my word of honor upon it."

So she took my word, and I took her subscription. Within ten minutes I was approached by Mrs. B.

"I need not tell a man of your extraordinary good taste," said she, "that my daughter Betty—"

"Madam," said I, "all that you would say has already occurred to me, but the nature of the subject points with an unerring aim to Miss Birdie A."

I thought Mrs. B. was going to faint, and, as she weighed over two hundred pounds, the moment was full of terrible anticipations. But she recovered her composure, and told me that if I would keep Birdie out of first place she would bear the whole expense of the affair herself. I accepted her proposition.

In the course of the day I encountered all the ladies whose daughters were to appear. They all complimented me on my exquisite artistic taste in all matters connected with tableaux; and they all ended with bribery. After these interviews I was somewhat shocked to reflect that I had solemnly promised to keep every blessed girl in the list in some subordinate position. This was not easy, for in a tableau some person has to shine with especial effulgence. After mature deliberation I decided that I was the person in this particular case, and I constructed a tableau representing the Nine Muses at the feet of Genius. I furnished the feet. All the lights were turned full upon me, and the spectacle was probably one of the most beautiful ever presented to an American audience. The thought that I had fulfilled my nine bargains at once fell upon my conscience as soothingly as cold cream on a sunburned nose. However, I had to leave the house very soon, to escape the consequences of too much fame.

Just before I left, I asked the landlord what he would give me to write up the hotel.

"Write it up?" he asked.

"Yes," said I, "give the facts about it."

"Do you want to kill the place?" said he, turning pale.

The Mournful Tale of Joel Radkin—He Came to Chicago, Only to Find That His Genius Wasn't Appreciated There.

There is probably no occupation which for the romantically inclined dime-novel fiend possesses such a charm as that of the detective.

To the brave boy with nerve of iron and sagacity unparalleled, who sits on the shady side of a straw-stack ten hours out of the twenty-four reading tales of "Fang-Tooth Jim the Jumper," "Handsome Harry the Hustler," or "Scar-Faced Scully the Scout," the life of the detective is crammed full and running over with poetry. In fact, his lot is cast but a few miles this side of Paradise.

The idea, says the Chicago News, of being the very brain which dictates the movements of the strong arm of the law is to the heated imaginations of these amateur grangers something sublime. To rectify the wrongs of the innocent and helpless, to pursue to conviction the villainous perpetrator of the deeds of darkness, to hound to the gallows foul murderers, is, thinks the heroic embryo, the acme of earthly glory.

Such being the case, it is not strange that so many applications are received by the detective agencies for positions. There are scattered through the country agencies which advertise for men to do detective work in the counties of their residence, and it is this sort of an institution which generally "catches" the grangers. Advertisements are sown broadcast in the country papers, and upon application from an ambitious youth, he is cheerfully accepted. The applicant is at once informed by mail of his appointment as a detective, and requested to advance the sum of five dollars as payment for his star, credentials, etc. This the future Pinkerton is always ready to do, and upon sending in his cash he receives a large glittering tin star, a beautifully worded certificate of appointment, and instructions to lie low and await developments.

The agency, in addition to the above, generally vouchsafes the information that an important case is developing in the new detective's locality which will shortly be placed in his hands. "Only this and nothing more," for no matter how long the young sleuth waits for further instructions, they come not. It is a straight case of "soak," sufficient to cure the detective fever in most cases, and, as a general thing, the victim settles down to farm life and sets up a country grocery, with nothing to remind him of his youthful folly but his fading credentials and rusting star. In some instances, however, the would-be sleuth makes a more systematic effort to reach the much-to-be-desired goal, and makes application in person to the bona-fide agencies in the large cities. Such applications are not of rare occurrence in the agencies of Chicago, and many amusing incidents growing out of them can be told.

The applicants classified as dime-novel readers are almost exclusively fresh from farms or country towns, where the excessive quiet renders a desire for almost any sort of excitement natural. The youths, for they are always young, generally have an exaggerated idea of the important figure they are to cut in their new sphere which makes their ignorance more laughable than it would otherwise appear.

One of the most verdant of these specimens was Mr. Joel Albatross Radkin, Jr., from Switzerland County, Ind., who not long since applied for a position at one of the prominent detective agencies of this city. Joel was a picture, a chromo, a landscape. He was built upon that slim, slender plan which has been disguised by some inhuman punster as the "raillery of nature," and was about as inartistic a piece of architecture as one would see in a day's journey. An extremely small head, light blue eyes, a long, pointed nose, shocky straw-colored hair, a wide mouth, a form like a clothes-horse, and Joel Albatross is described. Joel is, in his neighborhood, accounted a literary phenomenon, for not only has he read "heaps and piles" of the Seaside Library and other dark tales, but he has even, wondrous to relate, written several Indian stories and two or three poems, a stanza from one of the latter being hereby published as a proof of the young man's genius:

"Oh, blest be the West, the far away West;
The land of the sword and gun,
Where the brave heroes the dark robber mows
Down, and also the Injuns."

Such talent could not long remain unnoticed, and Joel soon became the sage of his township. But he longed for a more glorious field in which to earn fame and fortune, and determined to seek it in our own windy city. Accordingly he gathered together what firearms he could scrape up in the neighborhood and landed in Chicago.

He immediately sought out one of the agencies here, and firmly grasping the old army musket which he carried entered the presence of the superintendent.

"I want to be a detective," he calmly announced, a ha-the-villain-still-pursues-her expression stealing over his noble countenance. "I'm from Indiany, and I ain't no slouch of a detective, you bet," continued Joel to the superintendent, who stood aghast, gazing at the apparition. "I've been a readin' my cayreer arter Deadwood Dick, and am good enough in detectin' now to commence biz."

"Think so?" inquired the official, regaining his composure. "So you're from Indiana, boy? I would have supposed from your general appearance that you were from New York or London."

"Is that so?" said the delighted heir of the Radkins.

"I thought this here outfit of mine would fetch 'em," he continued to himself. "I ain't no dern fool, and I knowed this here muskit and butcher-knife was the proper thing for a detective. Wall, mister, can you give me a case to begin work on immediately to once?"

"Well, don't be so fast. Suppose you give me some of the experience you have had in this work."

"Wall," said Joel, leaning his gun in a corner and sitting down on the superintendent's desk, "I hev had a right smart of experience, I kin tell you; I have run down more villyuns than any other feller in Switzerland County. One time there was a feller stealing pap's watermelyons an' I determined to run him to the earth. (That's what they say in the story books.) So I disguised myself with a pair of rope whiskers and man's green goggles and went out after dark one night, an' I laid for the villyun. He came, I saw an' he run like thunder. But he dropped a sack in his haste. With a stealthy tread I crept to where it lay, seized it and bore it away in triumph. It had on it Si Bradley's name, and ever afterward I knowed who it was who stole them melyons.

"Then one day I captured a feller what stole a buggy whip. I seed him take it, an' it only took me three days to prove it, and get it back. Oh, as I said before, I ain't no slouch."

"Perhaps not," said the superintendent, "but I feel that our agency is not a fit place in which to utilize your remarkable talents. I would suggest that you go back to Indiana armed with firm determination and that musket, and henceforth consecrate your life to the killing of fools. Should that gun chance some day to shoot out of the wrong end, then so much is gained. No, there is no opening for you, except the one which the carpenter, foreseeing your visit, kindly provided. Please take advantage of it as soon as possible; turn the knob to the right."

Joel did so with a dazed and dreamy expression filling every nook and corner of his extensive countenance. As one in a dream he took the first train for Indiana, where he is probably even now engaged in ferreting out deep-laid plots against hen-coops and melon patches with all the skill ever displayed by a professional from Scotland Yard.

MR. RADKINS ASKS FOR A JOB.

"That fellow," said the official who related the story, "was a fair sample of the granger applicant for positions. They come here in all grades of verdancy and ignorance, eager for excitement and renown, generally leaving about as Mr. Radkin did. It takes a mighty smart man to be a detective, the principal acquirements being the ability to keep one's mouth shut. We get most of our men from the ranks of the police force and places of that order. Even with that sort of a man it takes at least a year's training to make a reliable detective, and you can imagine the labor it would require to manufacture a first-class man out of such material as Joel. That sort of fellow may generally rely on being given the key to the street."

Youthful Depravity.

"Papa," he asked, "don't wasps build their nests of mud?"

"They do, my son," said his father.

"Are wasps good for any thing?"

"So far as we know, Willie, they are not."

"Then the mud is wasted, isn't it?"

"I presume it is."

"Then it's just like our frono, isn't it?"

"How so?"

"Because it's wasp-wasted?"

And the strong man, who had always felt hopes that Willie some time would enter the ministry, went out to the coal-shed and wept.—Chicago Tribune.

A GOOD BEAR STORY.

Mrs. Bruin, Her Cubs, a Bull-Dog and Some Cattle Engage in a Fight.

A few days ago Charles and Robert Kiple, thrifty Monroe County farmers, brought up a lot of cattle on the Pocono plateau, writes a Scranton (Pa.) correspondent, and started to drive them to their farm in the neighborhood of Tannkletown.

A brindled bull-dog accompanied them. Three miles south of Houser's mills the cattle came to a halt and partly turned around, and the men had all they could do to keep them from stampeding. After they had got the cattle headed right again they saw what had caused the scare. A few rods away an old she bear was sitting in the center of the road and on each side of her there was a cub, and all three were looking at the frightened cattle. The young men could not get the drove to budge from where they were, so they sent the dog ahead to drive the bear family out of the road. The dog bounded forward, and when the bears saw him coming they got down on all fours and stared at him, making no move to get out of the way. Instead of pitching at the old bear, the bull-dog grabbed one of the cubs and began to drag it toward the log fence, but he hadn't gone far when the squealing little brute brought the mother, who attacked the dog and made him let go. That waked the bull-dog up, and he whirled and got a hold on the old bear's flank. The cubs vanished like partridges, while their mother was raging and trying to shake the dog off; and for a moment the old bear and the dog had it hot and heavy from one side of the road to the other. Finally the bull-dog set his teeth in the bear's nose, and the noise and the efforts she made to fling him away excited the curiosity of the cattle to such a pitch that they set up a bellowing and went cantering toward the belligerents with heads and tails in the air. The young men hurried after the drove, intending to keep it on the move until it had passed the bear; but the ring-leaders halted as soon as they had reached the fighters. Just then the old bear shook the dog loose from her bleeding nose and threw him over the fence. She then started for the opposite side of the road, but the ring-leaders headed her off, and a moment later the whole herd was bellowing furiously and endeavoring to get a chance at the bear. Then the dog returned and the cattle separated, when the canine again tackled the bear and got a broken back from one of her paws. Before the cattle had time to close up their ranks Charles Kiple dashed ahead of them and fired five revolver bullets into the bear's head. Then the young man whipped the drove into a run, and left the dead dog and the dead mother bear lying by the roadside.—Chicago News.

Sambo Surprises a Missionary.

A native convert to Christianity in equatorial Africa recently asked a missionary the following question: "Which is more contrary to Christ's commandments, to go about naked according to the custom of our ancestors, or to go in debt for garments which make us hot and unhappy?" The answer of the missionary is not given, but probably it was in the line of a wise compromise—if compromises are ever wise.

A SOULFUL AGGREGATION.

A Wail of the Unappreciated.

The poets all have sung their songs in tones of loving praise,
Of fightin' men and all that sort, for countless years and days,
Until I think it's almost time to make Pegasus prance
In ringin' in some word for them as never had a chance.

I know a dozen fellers now, that somehow stayed behind,
And why, no one could never tell, for they was men of mind.
All brainy men and statesmen, too, as modern statesmen go,
But, somehow, in this crooked world, they've never had no show.

There's old Jim Potts, what ought to be in Congress right to-day,
He hain't no head for business—could never make it pay;
But when it comes to tariff, or internal revenue,
—Now what old Jim he doesn't know ain't worth a-lookin' through.

But pore old Jim is brainy man, as I have said before,
And several more (includin' me) set round the grocery store,
And there we run the country, accordin' to our lights,
And we figger how the working-man is losin' all his rights.

But yet, with all our good, hard sense, some loud and windy fuss
Can put a standin' collar on, and raise a little fuss,
And everybody flocks to him, and lauds him to the sky,
And leaves us men of solid worth plum stranded high and dry.

—Indianapolis Journal.

A Dreamer's Vision.

Watching the twilight deepen
Into the starry night,
Feeling the gentle breezes
Die with the failing light,
Seeing the planets peeping
Out from the dome above,
I thought of one who had left me—
Of one that I dearly love.
The pale and silvery moonlight
Cast shadows all around,
From the room beyond soft music
Came with a muffled sound.
You'll say that I was dreaming,
Yet surely, across the floor,
I saw the form of my darling
Come in at the open door.
She came and stood beside me
(Shall I ever forget the sight?),
Her dear, sweet face all radiant
Beneath the moon's pale light!
The splendor of her soft, brown eyes
Outshone the stars above—
I feared my trembling heart would burst,
With tenderest joy and love:
Dreaming—was I dreaming?
Of a face I hold so dear?
I called her by her own sweet name—
She did not seem to hear!
I tried to touch my darling
As she stood there, sweet and fair—
My longing, aching arms could grasp
Naught save the empty air!

—Detroit Free Press.

The Woman-Beater.

"That horrid man! he beats his wife!"
"Good gracious! Is it true, dear?"
"Why, yes; he told my brother, Jack—
But never breathe how you hear."

"Oh, no; of course not—not a word;
But tell me all about it."
"Well, Tuesday night he beat his wife!
There is no chance to doubt it."

"The brute! (Jack enters.) When Jack comes
He'll tell us. I'm just dying
To know about it. 'Beat his wife!'
A beast without half trying."

Jack—"My sister, you are very wrong"—
Thus gently he rebuked her.
"Charles did say that he beat his wife—
At six straight games of euchre."

—Lena Gilbert Ford, in Judge.

The Lamp.

Clear as if she passed me now—
Stepping leopard-like and quick,
Long limbed, with a furtive grace—
I can see the ivory brow;
See the gold bronze of the face
Burn with joy, I know not how;
See beneath the scarf the hair,
Black as midnight, fragrant, thick,
Falling all about her there,
And as fire bursts from char,
Each eye kindle like a star!
When her long-lost lamp I bring—
There's such magic in the thing—
From her ashes scattered far,
From her thousand years away,
She comes back to me to-day.

Just a little earthen lamp—
Here the oil swam, here the wick,
Here the flame went flaring back
If the bearer turned her quick;
Turned her in the shadowy space,
Saw the flash of one swart face;
Saw the eager arms, and—hark!
Sprang aside, and let the dark
Blow her out and drown the spark!

—Harriet Prescott Spofford, in Harper's Bazar.

Unrequited Love.

The fairest of the fairies, she,
The daintiest of doves,
The prettiest of pictures,
The loveliest of loves;
Her face is like an angel's,
Each hand is like a pearl—
Most beautiful of creatures is
The pretty tennis girl.

Her voice is like the siren's song,
Her words my heart entrance,
Her laughing eyes are full of love,
And charm with every glance;
Her dainty feet in shoes of tan
My brain set in a whirl;
I love her for her loveliness—
The pretty tennis girl.

The golden tresses like a frame
Surround her charming face,
And half conceal and half reveal
The neck of wondrous grace;
I bless the lucky breeze that plays
About each truant curl;
And though she doesn't care for me
I love the tennis girl.

—G. P. Taggart, in Table Talk.

That Bothersome Fan.

My heart is full of a maiden fair,
The sweetest that e'er was seen,
With gleams of gold in her sunny hair
And wells of light i' her een;
But, ah! I'm afraid
This beautiful maid
Is a trifle cold,
And thinks I am bold,
For she grants me naught but her fan to hold

And when I attempt to declare my love
She manages artfully
To hide her face behind the pesky thing,
And this gets the drop on me;
And then, I declare,
I almost despair,
For what chance have I
When she is so shy?
By Jinks! I would like that fan sky-high!

—Frank B. Welch, in West Shore.

Humble Service.

Even the little daisy
Has humble service done;
Its shadow has protected
The dewdrop from the sun,
The lingering jewel trembling,
As some fond heart might do,
To speak for smallest service
Its gratitude to you.

True service for another
In one brief act may glow,
To waken love and reverence,
To banish doubt and woe.
A voluntary kindness
Has a luster all its own,
The tribute for its service
In sparkling tear-drop shown.

—[illegible] W. Griffith, in Golden Days.

CALLING ON A KING.

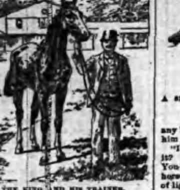
A Photographic Interview with the Monarch of the Turf.

Why Salvator Fell Out with Pretender Tenny—Some Surprising Information Concerning the Track—Haggin's Famous Horse Thinks He Could Distance Blaine and Cleveland in the Great Presidential Stakes.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

It is not easy to approach the supreme head of the American turf. When King Salvator is in his stable, casual visitors are expected to pay their respects from a respectful distance. Without proper credentials, callers are regarded with suspicion. The monarch's most immediate attendant is a colored boy named Brandon. There isn't a stable lad in America who wouldn't give up all claims upon watermelons for the balance of his life if he could have the honor which Brandon enjoys and this, it will be conceded, is saying a good deal. When the Haggin horses are out for an airing, the king is invariably at the head of the procession. The fitness of things finds further illustration in the fact that next in line comes the queen of the track, Firenzi, whose claims to royal honors have been vindicated on so many hard-fought fields. Successes have not turned the head of Salvator; greatness sits as easily upon him as his exercise blanket. A more tractable animal was never foaled. He is apt to be a trifle sluggish in the early spring when it becomes essential that about fifty pounds of his superfluous tissue should be worked off.

High living and little exercise, however, do not make him inordinately fat, and he takes kindly to the rather disagreeable business of getting down to his running weight of about a thousand pounds. His royal highness is a chestnut, bald faced and white legged below the knees. It would be easy to mistake him for an English horse with his remarkable muscular development and unusual length. A thousand pounds is not above the average weight, neither is his height unusual, but the shoulders stand up in more than proportion to his altitude and account in some degree for his phenomenal propelling power. He is a handsome horse, but not remarkably so. Senorita has perhaps greater beauty to the square ounce of tissue than Salvator has to the square pound, but he is a superb looking beast notwithstanding. Senorita is a perfect model of equine daintiness and finish; Salvator's light barrel and magnificent quarters tell a story of speed and strength. All his lines are consistent with his astonishing achievements. To see Salvator in his stable and to see him under a jockey is to look at two different quadrupeds. When he is being exercised at a slow walk his head is carried low and his motions give little promise of his possibilities; when he is fighting for his head and leaving his "field" behind, his stride, long, easy, smooth and natural, is perhaps as pure a gait as ever adorned the turf. For entertaining the opinion that take him all in all we shall see Salvator's like no more, Trainer Matthew Byrnes may readily be pardoned. The racing at Sheepshead Bay was not over for the day when he introduced me to the monarch.



THE KING AND HIS TRAINER.
(from an instantaneous photograph.)

"Why didn't you wait and see the last race run, Mr. Byrnes?" I asked.

"I would rather come here to see Salvator walk than to see other horses going at full speed," was the reply.

Salvator received me with condescending graciousness.

"You are perfectly welcome," said the affable autocrat of the track, "to any information I can give, but I have a natural reluctance to entering upon anything in the nature of a personal discussion. Nothing in my judgment can be so unbecoming as the habit—"

"Pardon me," I interrupted; "there are the highest precedents for it. The Emperor William, for instance, discusses himself constantly without the least reserve. As a matter of common justice it is due you that some misapprehension concerning your relations with Pretender Tenny should be cleared up. This audacious attempt to seize your throne for insta—"

A MORNING TROT.
(from an instantaneous photograph.)

"I beg that you will make no allusion to so trivial a matter," broke in the monarch with much stateliness. "At the risk of seeming to be discourteous, I must decline to talk about Tenny. There are some topics which can be tolerated only at a loss of self respect, and that is one of them. I trust you will not regard me as unduly sensitive about my personal dignity, but even were that not at stake I could not but look upon his pretensions as too ridiculous for consideration."

"Still it must be confessed that in his match race with you he was dangerously near your throat latch at the finish?"

Something more than remotely resembling a horse laugh followed this remark. When this flash of equine merriment subsided the king jocosely observed:

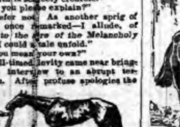
"It is quite probable that you still have a good deal to learn about close finishes. Your innocence is not unnatural. From my colthood up I have given them a good deal of attention, and I must confess that even to me they still, in exceptional cases, possess a few elements of mystery. That anybody should be deceived, however, about that particular close finish after what happened at Monmouth is scarcely credible."

"Will you please explain?"

"I prefer not. As another sprig of royalty once remarked—I allude, of course, to the sire of the Melancholy Dane—I could a tale unfold."

"Do you mean your own?"

This ill-timed levity came near bringing the interview to an abrupt termination. After profuse apologies the atmosphere cleared up somewhat and Brandon's pet was induced to proceed.



SALVATOR AND HIS VALET.
(from an instantaneous photograph.)

"Place not your faith in close finishes. I am not in a position to disclose the secrets of my profession, but if I were I could tell you a story which would make interesting reading."

"Can't you give it to me in confidence?"

This question, for some inexplicable reason, seemed to completely upset Salvator's gravity. He laughed most immoderately.

"The idea of telling any thing to an interviewer in confidence! Now see, young man, let me give you a tip. Don't shudder; I don't mean a tip in the racing sense of the word. I trust I'm too well bred for that. You can look at my pedigree if you don't believe me. What I meant to say was: Let me give you a hint. I know an interviewer the minute I see him. I don't know how I came to talk to you at all. You come and catch me when I have a lucid interval and see how reticent I'll be."

"Well, it's too late to regret it now."

"I know it; but there's one thing I want to tell you, and, people can make the most of it. The fact is that up to the time of that affair at Sheepshead Bay Tenny and I had an understanding. He didn't keep faith with me, and so I gave him a licking at Monmouth that he won't forget in a hurry."

"What was the understanding?"

"Well, you see Mr. Haggin told Byrnes in my presence that if I held my supremacy until the end of the season he'd retire me. I put the matter to Tenny in this way: He could have a clear field next year if he wouldn't bother me this season. Tenny agreed, and you know how he tried to steal a march on me at Sheepshead. Well, the game didn't work, and I made a show of him at Monmouth. You would have done the same thing in my place, wouldn't you?"

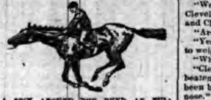
"That was rather underhanded."

"Wasn't it? Since then Tenny has been trying to bring about a reconciliation, but it won't work."

"You astonish me."

"I suppose I do, but if you doubt my word ask Firenzi; she'll tell you the same thing. Tenny tried to get her to persuade me to let up on him."

"I don't doubt your word, but I don't see where the necessity is for making any bargain with Tenny if you can beat him so easily."



A SPIN AROUND THE BEND AT FULL SPEED.
(from an instantaneous photograph.)

"It does look a little strange, doesn't it? But I think I know what I'm about. You see, Tenny isn't like any other horse. Sometimes he can give a streak of lightning a good start and beat it, and at other times he's no better than a selling plaster. You never know where to find him. Now that we've fallen out, I have to keep keyed up to the top notch to be sure he don't get away from me. All I'm afraid of is that some day he'll catch me when I'm not feeling well. If he does, he'll come near doing the trick in spite of me if it's one of his good days. But, let's change the subject. I don't like unpleasant topics."

"What on earth do you, of all other horses, want to retire from the turf for? Now, if you were an old plug, bringing up the rear all the time, I could understand it."

"Well, you go into training during the hot weather, and you'll find out. To say nothing of the hard work, I can't take a drink when I feel like it. Then there's that fellow Brandon. I used to like him at first, but I've got bravely over it. He watches me like a cat and haunts me like a ghost. How would you like it? I've been tempted to kick his whole head off many a time. Haggin's a good fellow, but I don't see much of him. That's the worst of being owned by a millionaire. Of course I could have an easy time if I wanted to, but I'd have to pay for it in the end."

"How's that?"

"Well, I could get beaten half a dozen times and they'd take me off the track; but after that they wouldn't think much of me at the stock farm, where I'm going to spend the balance of my days; and I wouldn't be treated with the deference I am accustomed to. That's what I'm working so hard for."

"Will you excuse me if I ask you a rather pointed question?"

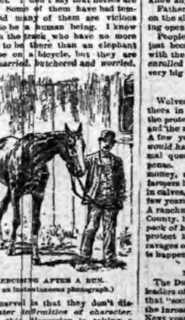
"Don't make it too pointed; it's my first experience at this kind of thing."

"I'll be as delicate as possible. You have said nothing which justifies the conclusion that races are run on their merits. Are horses in the habit of coming to what you call an understanding with each other?"

"Why, my dear boy, your guilelessness is perfectly refreshing. Can't you see that we are the real protectors of the public? Everybody knows that owners combine, that races are fixed in advance, that in other words, the trusting public has no show unless we take the matter in hand. We are constantly trying to preserve the purity of the turf. You've heard of a lead pipe cinch! Well, if you haven't it's time you did. I could tell you of a dozen cases in which either owners or jockeys have put up a job, and in which their calculations were upset. When you hear of another sure thing gone wrong you can make up your mind that nothing but an honest horse broke the combination. You didn't know, I suppose, that I am the president of our anti-crookedness society?"

"Well, I've heard of a good many pretty little schemes coming to grief, but I had no idea that the horses took any hand in defeating them."

"I want to tell you just one thing more. It's a mystery to me why, as a class, racers do their level best to beat each other. They usually have in the saddle either a little brute or an imbecile, who draws blood and uses the whip just at the moment when he should be sitting still and giving his mount a chance. They think that is riding. We know better. We will do more in response to a touch for an intelligent fellow like McLaughlin than we will for all the punishment that the troop of little scamps who weigh in at the races can inflict. I don't say that horses are perfect. Some of them have bad tempers, and many of them are vicious enough to be a human being. I know horses on the track who have no more business to be there than an elephant has to be on a bicycle, but they are driven, harried, butchered and worried, and the marvel is that they don't display greater infirmities of character. However, this discussion is taking a somewhat serious turn, which I am sure was not my desire."



EXERCISING AFTER A RUN.
(from an instantaneous photograph.)

At this moment Brandon thrust his head through the half-open door, surveyed his majesty for an instant and withdrew.

"There he is again," said Salvator. "I shouldn't be surprised if he's been listening to every word we've said. Now you begin to have some idea of the unfortunate position of a horse in training. I can't hold a confidential conversation with a visitor without fear of interruption. There's one thing I want to ask you before you go. I understand I'm to be photographed in a variety of attitudes, and that the photographs are likely to be printed. Now, I'll leave that to you if that isn't a fine thing—the king of the turf masquerading about in front of a photographer? What indignity will Byrnes want to affront me with next?"

"Do you regard it as an indignity?"

"Wouldn't any self-respecting animal?"

"Well, all I have to say is that you needn't go far to find a precedent. Don't you remember that a celebrated Brooklyn divine was recently photographed in every conceivable posture, except, perhaps, that of standing upside down?"

"You don't tell me! I hadn't heard of it."

"Who do you suppose it was?"

"Oh, you needn't tell me. It must have been Talmage. But here's Brandon coming again. You'll have to hurry on. By the way, just a word before you go. I wish you'd make a little announcement for me."

"Why, certainly. What is it?"

"I see something in the papers about a Presidential race. What are the stakes?"

"About fifty thousand dollars."

"Why, that isn't much. It isn't as much as the Futurity, but still it's worth winning. Are there many entries?"

"Quite a number."

"When is it to be run?"

"Not until 1892."

"That shuts me out. I'll be off the turf by that time. Thank heaven, but I'd like to give them a run for it. Who are the favorites?"

"Well, there's Blaine on one side and Cleveland on the other. Blaine is aged and Cleveland's a six-year-old."

"Are they in training?"

"Yes, but Cleveland hasn't got down to weight yet."

"What are their performances?"

"Cleveland won it once and was once beaten by a head for it. Blaine has been beaten for it, too. He lost it by a nose."

"Close finishes, eh? Well, you can tell them both that if Haggin enters me they won't be in it."

With a coquettish flourish of his tail the king of the turf dipped his nose fastidiously in a pail of water, while Brandon harmoniously whistled, "Oh, dat watermelon."

GEO. F. DOBSON.

REFORMER BESSIE.

Four Children Learn a Good Deal from a Little Puppy.

L. S. Hunt tells the following little story in the Examiner:

Bessie must have wakened in the morning with a plan in her busy little head for teaching certain members of the Newton family a lesson. The first thing she did was to go into the library, and finding on a chair a new magazine that Harry had left there she pulled off a cover. "There!" thought she, "I'll teach Harry not to leave so valuable a thing as a book where it doesn't belong." Then she went in the boys' room, and finding a borrowed book out of place she remarked to herself: "This will never do. A borrowed book should al*ways be carefully put away. I'll just* destroy this one to teach Master Willie a lesson." So she soon defaced its pretty, bright color badly.

Next she visited Marjory's room, and, finding more dust on the floor than should have been there, she evidently thought of the saying: "Dirt is misplaced matter," and gave Marjory a gen*tle hint by tipping the contents of* the scrap basket out upon the floor.

Then she went into the sitting-room, and, finding Alice's hat on a little work-stand, she thought: "Another thing out of place—another lesson to be taught." So she pulled out the feather, leaving hat and trimmings on the floor.

When all was done she cuddled up on the lounge, well satisfied with her morning's work. At the dinner table four members of the family looked as though each wished some one else would speak first. Finally mamma said:

"I see Bessie has been trying to teach us again."

Four voices answered faintly: "Yes."

"She certainly has taught us once more that there shall be a place for every thing and every thing should be in its place," said papa.

"Including Bessie herself," added mamma.

And Bessie? Well, Bessie was a six-months-old puppy with innocent, soft brown eyes.

SOME BIG MISTAKES.

An Epigrammatic Lecture by the Editor of the "Ram's Horn."

Preachers who get sour and scold when things do not go to suit them, make a big mistake.

People who leave their politeness at home when they travel on railway trains, make a big mistake.

Young people who put off becoming Christians because they think they have fifty years to do it in, make a big mistake.

Men who are afraid to give their wives a word of praise, for fear it will spoil them, make a big mistake.

Parents who want their children to keep out of the church until they are old enough to understand all the doctrines and decide for themselves, make a big mistake.

Farmers who feed their pigs and cattle good corn, and pay no attention to what kind of books and papers their children are reading, make a big mistake.

Women who are overly anxious about their complexions, and underly anxious about their salvation, make a big mistake.

Young men who think they know it all, and that father and mother don't know any thing, make a big mistake.

Fathers who whip their boys for doing on the sly what they themselves are doing openly, make a big mistake.

People who expect to get to Heaven, just because they have shaken hands with the preacher and had their names enrolled on the church book, make a very big mistake.

Wild Animals in Texas.

Wolves, coyotes, wild cats and panthers in Texas are multiplying under the protection of the barbed-wire fence and the apathy of the State legislators. A few years since a thorough scalp law would have settled forever the wild animal question in Texas at a small expense. Now it will cost twice the money, and meantime stockmen and farmers have lost many times the money in calves, colts, and sheep killed. In a few years things will be much worse. A ranchman, G. A. Anderson, of Kinney County, has been compelled to buy a pack of hounds and turn huntsman to protect his flock from the increasing ravages of panthers. The same thing is happening all over Texas.

No Americans for Her.

The Duchess of Buccleugh, with other leaders of London fashion, has decided that "society" must be protected from the inroads of financiers and Americans. Next year no American is to be recognized socially who is not properly introduced by the United States Minister at the Court of St. James. These aristocratic confederates regard the Prince and Princess of Wales as inexcusably tolerant of the newly rich, and at her Grace of Buccleugh's late ball and garden party, which were splendid affairs, hardly an American, a financier, or a "cotton lord" was to be seen, though the Marlborough House garden party swarmed with them.

The End of His Courtship.

"Now, Maude," said the young man, about 11 p. m., "don't give me any old chestnuts. Do not say you will be a sister—" just then the parlor door opened and a hoarse voice said: "Young man, let me be an assister to you." And when Chappie picked himself up from the green lawn in front of the doorstep and painfully limped his way down to the gate he breathed a prayer of thankfulness that he was no closer related to that family. The old man had hurt his feelings.

Hard on the Industrious Farm Hands.

"These barbed wire fences ain't no good," said the farm hand. "I wouldn't have one of 'em around the place, if I had my way."

"Why not?" inquired the stranger. "They're cheap and strong, and keep cattle in better than any thing else."

"That may be," replied the farm hand; "but then a feller can't sit down to rest on 'em."

FOR LITTLE PEOPLE.

A DREADFUL THING.

She never meant to do it—the darling little thing!
She bent her head at prayer-time, and then stood up to sing.
But oh! that sermon seemed such a weary time to sit,
How could she keep from fidgetting a very little bit?

She tried to keep herself awake by looking very wise,
And staring at the minister with very sober eyes.
And when the lids were droopy she tried another way—
She counted back and forward the flowers in her bouquet.

She smiled at all the pansies, and saw how very plain
The cunning little faces kept smiling back again.
She gathered up the rose-leaves which fell about her feet,
And put one to her pretty lips, as rosy and as sweet.

She never meant to do it—she wanted just to try
How nearly she could come to it, and never could tell why
In one unlucky moment before her lips could stop
She drew her breath too hard and it went off with a pop!

Tom couldn't keep from laughing, although he bravely tried
To look as solemn as a judge when little Polly cried.
And then he softly whispered: "I wouldn't mind it so,
You'll never crack a rose-leaf in church again, I know."

You will not find a little girl if all the world you search
Who thinks it such a dreadful thing to make a noise in church.
She never thought of doing it—'twas all because, you see,
The sermon was too long for such a little mite as she.

A LITTLE JOKE.

Two Merry Children's Sad Experience with a Spool of Thread.

It was a very pleasant evening party; at least the children all thought so. With music, games and refreshments, what could have been wanting? They had gathered into a circle for the last play of the evening, for it was ten o'clock; and they had promised not to remain late. Mattie Vernon was standing beside Charlie Benson, and the two were very warm friends. She saw a bit of thread on his shoulder, but, instead of brushing it off, she said:

"Charlie, there's a raveling on your sleeve."

He looked at it down his cheeks, and demurely said:

"Pick it off, Mattie."

She caught the end of the thread and pulled. To her intense amazement she drew out about ten yards of the thread, and it still kept coming. It seemed as if Charlie was unraveling.

"Mattie," he said, with a grin, "if you insist on having that thread, why, I might as well give you the whole spool."

As he spoke, he reached into a side pocket of his coat, and handed her the spool. All the children laughed uproariously, while Mattie grew very red in the face, and an angry sparkle came into her eyes.

Charlie had poked the end of the thread through the seam in his sleeve, with the spool hidden away in his pocket. He had arranged it to trick some one; Mattie was the first to notice the raveling, but, as they were such famous friends, she thought he might have spared her. She hated to be laughed at, and was vexed enough to cry about it. She lost her temper, and angrily said:

"Charlie Benson, you're too mean for any thing!"

"Don't mind it Mattie," Charlie pleasantly said. "It was only a little joke."

"But not a joke to my liking," she sharply said, "And I'll never speak to you again."

Charlie colored, but made no reply, for he knew it would aggravate her all the more. It was an unpleasant episode, and threw a damper upon the group. Charlie had brought Mattie to the party, but when he offered to walk home with her, she turned from him in disdain.

He tried to make peace, the next time they met, but she would not listen to him.

"I told you never to speak to me," she said.

"No, Mattie, you didn't," he gently replied. "You said you would never speak to me. After all, it was a very harmless joke, and caused a good deal of fun."

"Yes, at my expense," snapped Mattie. "It was mean in you to set it up on me."

"I didn't, Mattie," declared Charlie. "You happened to be the first to notice it. I hadn't the least idea that you would get angry, or I would have given you warning. I really had meant that stupid Joe Barber should fall into the trap."

"I don't want to hear any more about it," Mattie resolutely said. "We can never be friends again."

"Mattie, please don't say that," pleaded Charlie. "It makes me feel miserable. You play jokes yourself, and I thought you would enjoy one put upon you. Didn't you hand me a bouquet with pepper on it at the picnic? Didn't I sit down on the floor, at Nellie's birth-day party, because I didn't know that you had removed the chair from behind me? Everybody laughed, but I didn't get angry; I laughed too."

"Yes, that's true," assented Mattie, in a modified tone.

"What did you think, Mattie, when the thread began to play out?" Charlie roguishly asked.

"I was almost dazed," Mattie said. "At first I couldn't understand it. I was afraid you were coming all apart. Then I saw into the trick—"

"And got mad," interjected Charlie.

"I felt hurt," Mattie said.

"The look on your face was absolutely comical to see," Charlie remarked. "It was a cute little joke, and they all thought it very funny."

He began to laugh, because he couldn't help it, and his laugh was so contagious that Mattie had to laugh too.

"Charlie, it was funny," she said.

"And we are friends again, Mattie?"

"Why, yes," she replied, with a smile. "I have been silly. I lost my temper, which you didn't, when I played those jokes upon you. If we can't take a joke, we shouldn't play any. I'll not meddle with your coat sleeve again, even if it is covered with lint."

"I am glad you have forgiven me, Mattie," Charlie said, with a bright look on his face. "And glad that we are friends again."—Frank H. Stauffer, in Interior.

—I suppose when you do a friend a good turn, and he is so busy with enjoying its benefits that he goes off in a hurry and forgets to say "Thank you," you are likely to say to yourself, "I'll next try my hand on somebody at least who can get breath enough before he eats his cherries to look back on the orchard." I'd rather a man would hurl "Thanks, awfully," at me than to keep dumb. Even conventional and slang thanks are better than utter discourtesy and blank ingratitude.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Primary meetings for the election of delegates to attend the Democratic County Convention at Elizabeth, will be held in this city, at Democratic Headquarters, Friday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 10 and 11.

On Monday last with the legalized advent of McKinleyism, was born a new period in American history. It will be handed down to posterity as "Black Monday"—a day on which the luxuries of the rich were catered to by the Republican monopoly-helpers, while the needs and necessities of the poor were equally heartlessly ignored.

Every Democratic voter should remember that next Friday and Saturday evenings, the 10th and 11th, occurs the primary meetings for the selection of delegates to attend the County Convention, which will be held in Elizabeth on the 13th. It is the bounden duty of every such voter to attend the primaries and see that right persons are selected for delegates. On them depends the proper selection of candidates for State Senator, Sheriff and Assemblymen.

The indications now are that the Union County Democrats will complete their county ticket at the forthcoming Convention, by placing in nomination good candidates for Senator, Sheriff and Assemblymen, to ride on to victory with our splendid candidate for re-election to Congress, J. A. Geissenhainer. So let it be. Let us have no wrangling, but nominate good men, wherever they may happen to come from. Union County is Democratic, if only Democrats will vote right.

The Republicans of Union County have nominated Amos Clark, Jr., for Congress, and their press are telling how Amos was once before elected to that position, but they don't tell how it came about. That event occurred when the Democracy made the fatal blunder of nominating Horace Greeley for President, and met with crushing defeat everywhere. In the present instance the Democrats have renominated a man who, during his official career, has proven himself an able Representative, and a true Democrat. In Mr. Jacob A. Geissenhainer, the people have a candidate worthy of their suffrage, and there is no reason why he should not be returned to Congress by an increased majority over his last election. We honestly believe he will be.

Will Crowd Old Trinity to the Doors.

The convention of the Union County Union of Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, to be held in the Trinity Reformed church, Plainfield, this week Friday evening, promises to be a most interesting event. The music will be rendered by the local society, with a chorus by the congregation.

The Rev. W. M. [illegible], of the First Baptist church of Elizabeth, will speak on "The Manliness of Christianity," and the Rev. George H. Payson, of the Presbyterian church of Rahway, on the "New Pledge." A paper on "Why we Study the Bible" will be read, and there will be other interesting exercises. Societies from all parts of the county will attend.

A Woman Aids in Plainfield Temperance.

The meeting in Reform Hall Sunday evening was very interesting. President Harper occupied the chair, the Rev. Mr. Love conducted the devotional services, and Mr. Vanderbeek's full choir, with Miss Alice Smith as accompanist, acceptably discharged their duty.

The President announced that Mrs. Dewett, a temperance worker from Newark, had been prevented from attending, as expected, because of a sudden death in her family.

He then introduced Miss Florence G. Hawkins, who admirably read from a pamphlet entitled "The Liquor Traffic in Western Africa," by Mary E. Leavitt, and which pictured the awful devastation wrought there by the intoxicating fluid. Miss Hawkins was followed by the Rev. E. M. Rodman, who based his remarks largely on the sad story Miss Hawkins had recited, and urged that Christian nations should arouse themselves to the enormity of the evil traffic and apply an effectual remedy by exterminating it. Dr. Rodman gave most excellent counsel to all present and depicted in various forms the ruin of strong drink.

After appropriate and instructive remarks by the Rev. Mr. Love and Edward F. Williams, the attentive assemblage dispersed under the benediction pronounced by Dr. Rodman.

"Ladies" Who Remember When Broad Street Was a Cow Path.

(From the Westfield Standard.)

What might properly be termed an old ladie re-union occurred at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. C. Marsh last Sunday. There were [illegible] and the oldest was a lady [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Mrs. Wm. RENOUNCING THEIR OLD ALLEGIANCE.

Councilmen Roberts and Smith Desert the Republicans, and Councilman Jenkins Joins Them—Water Works, Depot Tenants and Street Paving Receive Attention at Municipal Hands.

The marked feature of Monday night's meeting of the Plainfield Common Council was the unanimity with which Councilmen Roberts and Smith voted with their fellow-Republicans and against the four Democrats with whom they have been prominently affiliated, the past seven months, in working zealously for various public interests. The first important matter in which this division of the former amalgamation was noticeable was a proposition connected with the water works question.

Councilman Newhall, Chairman of the Water Board, opened the subject by reporting concerning the letter from Charles K. Moore, Manager of the Water Works, which had been referred to the Board at the last meeting of the Council, and which had requested that the Board meet with the Company to examine into a proposition for the speedy completion of the works and for avoiding litigation. Mr. Newhall stated that after Council had adjourned last month the Board met with Mr. Edwards, representing not only the Water Works Company and Mr. Moore, but also the Plainfield Water Supply Company. This meeting—he added—was of no account whatever. It would be an absolute impossibility to give an idea of what was said. It would probably never be heard of again. Immediately following the meeting, however, the Board had received from the Plainfield Water Supply Company, through Frank Bergen, President, the following communication:

To the Water Board of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—We understand that at a conference between your honorable body and the counsel for Mr. Moore and the Water Works Co., held Monday evening, it was agreed that a definite proposition from the Plainfield Water Supply Co., for the construction of water works would be the proper basis of further negotiations on the subject. We have accordingly considered the matter carefully, and have gone over the various provisions of the contract between the Water Works Co., and the City, made in December last, with a desire to agree as all of its essential provisions so far as it is prudent to do so. Many of the provisions of the contract, if legal, are of but little practical value to the City, although they would no doubt make it difficult to obtain capital to build the works, and might be used effectively to depress the value of securities issued by a Company subject to its terms. The main objects, however, sought to be attained by the contract are these:

1—The construction of water works capable of giving the City at all times a plentiful supply of pure and wholesome water.

2. The works to be constructed in a first-class manner, of the best material, and as soon as practicable.

3. Furnishing the city with 100 hydrants for use in extinguishing fires, and such additional hydrants from time to time as the growth of the city may require in the judgment of the Common Council; the charge for hydrants for a period of ten years after the completion of the works to be $35 each per year.

4. The good quality of the water to be constantly maintained, and the rates for consumers to be reasonable.

The schedule of rates set out in the contract of December is in for the most part fair, but a few changes of minor importance should be made. These general provisions contain substantially all that can reasonably be expected and our Company is ready and willing to enter into a contract with the city based thereon, and to proceed at once to construct the works.

It should be added that our company has recently negotiated with the Plainfield company and Mr. Moore, and is now in position to obtain title to the property at Netherwood on which twenty wells have been sunk and a pumping station is in course of erection. All the capital required has been provided, and our charter confers unquestionable authority to construct the works without applying for any additional franchise. A committee of our Board of Directors—consisting of Messrs John W. Murray, O. T. Waring and the President—has been appointed, and will be pleased to confer with your honorable body at your convenience.

THE PLAINFIELD WATER SUPPLY CO.,
By Frank P. Bergen, President.
September 19, 1890.

In response to this communication—continued Mr. Newhall—the Board immediately notified Mr. Bergen that it was ready to meet at any time the representatives of the Plainfield Water Supply Company, but up the present time the Water Supply Company had not expressed themselves as ready to act definitely in the matter.

The entire matter was referred back to the Water Board, and Mr. Newhall then presented a communication from Supervising Engineer Hering stating that all work on the construction of the water works had been suspended, suggesting that he di continue the services of his resident engineer until resumption of the work should be made, and promising in return to claim no pay whatever till work was resumed. In conjunction with Mr. Hering's letter Councilman Newhall presented a resolution accepting Mr. Hering's proposition. To this resolution Councilman Hetfield took exception, and moved that it be referred to Corporation Counsel Marsh for his advice. Mr. Hetfield held that to permit Mr Hering to remove his resident engineer from the city would be a direct violation, by the city, of the water-works contract, and ought not to be done. It wasn't the city's fault that work on the water-works had been suspended and that there was nothing for the resident engineer to do. A contract was a sacred thing, and if the city took a step like this it furnished a precedent for the Water-Works Company to break its contract.

Mr. Newhall said that there was no need of referring the matter to Mr. Marsh for his advice, for Mr. Marsh had framed the phraseology of both Mr. Hering's proposition and the Water Board's resolution, so that there should be no legal flaw. The proposed action was unquestionably in the interests of the city. It was simply a question of Mr Hering's withdrawing his resident engineer and surrendering, during the water-works inactivity, his right to receive from the city $300 per month, until there was something for himself and his resident engineer to do—all of which he considered highly honorable of Mr. Hering.

"It's just this way:—added Councilman Rushmore—if we insist so rigidly on sticking to the contract, and refuse to let him withdraw his engineer, to whom he has to pay $150 per month, he will demand from us every month $300, for doing absolutely nothing.

Councilman Smith also was of the opinion that the contract would not be interfered with by the action proposed.

Councilman Jenkins said nothing, but his subsequent vote found him arrayed with the Democratic trio present, and filling the vacancy they suffered through Councilman Gallup's absence. These four votes, however, of Councilmen Hetfield, Jenkins, Moffett and Spangenberg, to refer the matter to the Corporation Counsel, were unavailing against the five of Councilmen Johnson, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore and Smith, and the resolution of Mr. Newhall was carried.

Not only on this question did Dr. Jenkins side with Messrs Hetfield, Moffett and Spangenberg. Just as often as Messrs Roberts and Smith indicated by their votes their desertion of their Democratic former comrades, just so often did he indicate by his vote his allegiance to the standard they had deserted. The "Big Six" seemed to have lost the two others, but to have gained him irrevocably.

The next question on which this peculiar division was shown was the matter of accepting Cemetery avenue as a public thoroughfare. The Trustees of Hillside Cemetery reported that they had bought the land and opened up the street—which is, a half-mile in length, from Park avenue to Woodland avenue, at the main entrance of the cemetery—and had spent $4,000 in preparing the roadway for macadamization. Now they desired that the city accept the avenue as a public highway, and that it be macadamized in time for Winter travel.

Mr. Hetfield objected to accepting the avenue until it had been put in perfect condition, with sidewalk and macadam already laid. Mr. Newhall suggested that after accepting the street the city would have the power to compel the owners of the land fronting on it to lay such walks as might be required. After some discussion the avenue was accepted as a public thoroughfare by the following vote:

To accept—Councilmen Johnson, Moffett, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore and Smith—6.

Not to accept—Councilmen Hetfield, Jenkins and Spangenberg—3.

The avenue had hardly been accepted when Mr. Smith was ready with an ordinance providing that it be macadamized. Mr. Hetfield again urged objections. Cemetery avenue, he said, ought not to be macadamized until Third street and other streets in the heart of the town were attended to. Dr. Jenkins was of the same opinion, and wanted streets such as Grove, in the heart of the city, put in proper shape, before attending to the driveways of the outskirts. Grove street was in a disgraceful condition, and so were others of the most important streets; Cemetery avenue could wait.

The vote by which the ordinance was adopted on its second reading, and ordered engrossed and advertised preparatory to its final passage, was as follows:

In favor—Councilmen Johnson, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore and Smith—5.

Against—Councilmen Hetfield, Jenkins, Moffett and Spangenberg—4.

Plainfield is therefore at last to have a perfect roadway leading to the gates of the most beautiful cemetery in the State. The money to pay for the macadamization will come out of the general instead of the street fund, as what is left of the street fund will be needed in macadamizing and repairing Third street and other thoroughfares.

The ordinance having for its object the macadamization of Plainfield avenue was also brought up by Mr. Smith, was opposed by Mr. Hetfield, and was adopted on its third reading by the same familiar vote of 5 to 4, Councilmen Hetfield, Jenkins, Moffett and Spangenberg voting no. On its final passage President Moffett went over to the "aye" side and made the vote 6 to 3.

Just what has been expended on the streets this year was explained by Chairman Smith, of the Street Committee, in a detailed report. The total outlay, from March 1 to September 1 was $11,498.15, leaving a balance of $3,501.45 of the $15,000 appropriation.

Interest in fire-alarm matters was revived by Mr. Hetfield, who presented a resolution providing for the purchase of a $300 steam whistle to be used in connection with the city's Gamewell Fire-Alarm System. A letter had already been received from the Plainfield Electric Light Company calling attention to the fact that the city's right to use the electric light poles for fire-alarm purposes ceased with the expiration of the contract for city lighting, October 31, and Mr. Newhall remarked that unless the city renewed its contract with the Company favors at the hands of the Company could hardly be expected. Of course a renewal of the contract was probable, but there was no stipulation or agreement before Council that even with a renewal of the contract the Company would furnish steam for the blowing of the fire-alarm whistle free of charge. He wanted the arrangements made known whereby the whistle was to be blown after being purchased and put on the building.

After further argument the matter was referred to the Committee on Lights, who will arrange a steam whistle stipulation in the new street lighting contract with the Company.

The three lights which THE PRESS had said were needed on Westervelt avenue were ordered placed in position.

Edwin H. Dobbs resigned from the regular police force on account of being troubled with an old wound. His resignation was accepted, and Christian Frederickson was appointed in his place.

Wm. Mattox and Nicholas Conway were appointed special policemen.

The Plainfield Construction Company petitioned for a franchise to construct and operate a street railway from the corner of Park avenue and Randolph road, through Randolph road, Arlington avenue and Fourth street, and such other streets as the property owners of the city might designate. The matter was referred to the Committee on Streets.

Plainfield Engine Company, No. 2, was granted the privilege of taking its apparatus to the firemen's parade at Perth Amboy Oct. 15.

A petition for a crosswalk across East Front street from the postoffice to the City National Bank was referred to the Committee on Streets with power, and the walk will probably be laid at an early date.

The City Treasurer was authorized to borrow $500 for the poor fund, and $3,000 to pay a note about to fall due.

A special meeting of the Council to adopt the Cemetery avenue macadamization ordinance on its final passage will be held Oct. 24, and the work on the roadway will then be pushed forward.

GETTING READY FOR MR. MILLS.

Fervent Zeal Will Not be Lacking When the Famous Evangelist Begins His Plainfield Work.

A great deal of interest is already manifested over the coming of the Rev. B. Fay Mills, who will begin his great revival work in Plainfield November 3. Preliminary arrangements are rapidly being consummated. The pastors of the various churches met with the laymen in the Young Men's Christian Association rooms Saturday evening, when a General Committee to take charge of the work of conducting the services was organized with the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes as Chairman and the Rev. Asa Reed Dilts as Secretary. The following were appointed from among the members of the General Committee as an Executive Committee:

Pastors—The Rev. Dr. Yerkes, the Rev. Mr. Dilts, the Rev. Dr. E. P. Ketcham, the Rev. C. E. Mitchell, the Rev. Mr. Newell, the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, the Rev. W. R. Richards.

Laymen—E. E. St. John, J. W. Jackson, E. O. Power, J. D. Spicer, A. L. Force.

A Nominating Committee—consisting of the Rev. Dr. Ketcham, the Rev. Mr. Goodrich, the Rev. Mr. Schenck, the Rev. Mr. Mitchell and Messrs O. B. Leonard and J. D. Spicer—was appointed to nominate Committees on Finance, Advertising, Canvassing, Music, Ushers and Devotional Services. They will report their nominations for confirmation at a meeting of the Executive and General Committees Saturday night.

The various evangelistic services to be conducted by Mr. Mills will be held, at different afternoons and evenings, in two or three different churches, including probably the First Baptist and the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian.

Chautauquans Have a Merry Time.

The members of the New Market Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle entertained a number of friends in the lecture room of the Seventh Day Baptist church at New Market Thursday evening. The Rev. Mr. Livermore explained the method of study employed, and questions giving an idea as to the nature of the work were propounded. Miss Mary Titsworth won a prize in a spelling match in which members of the Circle participated. A trio and a quartette were sung, and at the close of the literary exercises Mrs. Jacky introduced one of her far-famed collections of wax-works, causing an abundance of fun. Altogether a most enjoyable evening was spent.

GOLDEN WINS AN EXTRA TEN.

After Eight Innings With Tyrian Hits and not an Error, the Crescents Flounder in the Ninth.

When the Crescents had finished their ninth inning at the oval, Saturday, the score stood 6 to 1 in their favor and they had a record of 12 safe hits with a total of 18 bases. They had not made an error and Doran had held the West Ends down to one little hit in eight innings. Then occurred a most unprecedented combination of circumstances that, combined with the tactics of umpire Golden, who was possibly inspired by a promise of ten dollars from Manager Mack of the West Ends, tied the score.

Already during the game the bias of the umpire was apparent to the experts. His name was Golden but his decisions as to balls and strikes were as tinkling brass. In the fourth inning Doran repeated his feat of the previous game by striking out George Gore, but Golden would not call the big professional out again. Harkins was also struck out but permitted to live and boasted of it. In spite of this sort of a deal, however, the Crescents held the West Ends down, and but four of the visitors reached first base in eight innings.

But in the ninth the Crescents' young infield could not stand the strain against the picked professionals. Gil Hatfield, the New York League team's noted infield player, went to the bat first. The three-thousand-dollar short stop hit a little one to the ten-dollar short stop, and Martin failed to handle it in his usual style. He was on his tip toes, and really did not know just where he was for a moment or two. Meanwhile Hatfield had reached first, and went to second on a passed ball. Gore, also of the New York league, followed and duplicated his hit of the previous game by a two-bagger over third base. Hatfield came home on the hit, and Gore subsequently went to third on another unfortunate slip of Chick Hofford's, who had been playing a phenomenal game up to this closing inning. Bowes was struck out, but was followed by Farrell, who was given his first on what Golden called four balls. Harkins was also struck out but the umpire would not allow it, and compelled Doran to put one where the batter could safely hit it. He did and another run came in. Williams was also given his first on balls by Golden, but Kennedy of Cobbleskill would not wait and fanned himself out in a ridiculous way that caused the grand stand to laugh although its Plainfield occupants were beginning to feel rather anxious. There were two out, and Bergen knocked to Lee, but the latter failed to accept the chance, and another run was scored. A pop-fly that dropped in right field too far out for Lafbery and too far in for Hatfield, was Carby's contribution to his country. It let in Williams with the run that tied the score, and as soon as he recovered his breath he went over to first base and shook the arm that did it.

The excitement was now intense. The score was 6 to 6. Bergen and Carbonell were on the bases, and Gil Hatfield was again at the bat. The crowd stood up and pressed against the ropes. Golden saw at his right and left, and behind him, a sea of faces that he naturally supposed largely represented the home team's friends. He made up his mind then and there that he had fully earned his money, and wished he was far, far away. The first ball pitched met Hatfield's bat fair and square, and out of reach of the infield. Bergen started for the home plate with the winning run, and made a bold slide. He passed Hofford before the latter got the ball that O'Rourke threw in. But Hofford turned quickly when he did get it, and touched Bergen as he was feeling with hands and feet for the plate. Five hundred men swarmed into the diamond in an instant, and Golden's decision could not be heard by the other five hundred who kept their seats. He looked at the crowd, remembered he was in Plainfield, said the man was out, and fled.

But he refused to continue the game. He said it was impossible to get the crowd off the field; and then, when he was told that the diamond could be cleared in a few minutes, said that he was afraid to go back. Meanwhile there was all sorts of scrapping and tongue lashing going on amid the crowd, but the only arrest was of a young Somervillian who interfered because the officers sought to take in his over-excitable father. He was subsequently fined five dollars. Golden then asked Manager Leggett for Manager Mack. Mr. Leggett said that he would pay him whatever was the price agreed upon, and it was not necessary to find Mr. Mack. Golden then told Mr. Leggett and Mr. Burnet that "Mr Mack promised to pay me ten dollars out of his own pocket."

Possibly that is one reason the Crescents lost. Another reason is the costly infield errors, and another possibly that Doran breaks badly when he does break. His ninth inning Saturday was almost a fac simile of the eighth of the game before when the West Ends snatched victory from defeat in the same way. Then the record was two singles, a two-bagger and a base on balls. Saturday it was two bases on balls, three singles and a two-bagger.

The Crescents, as usual, with the exception of the unlucky inning, out played and out batted their opponents. Harkins was hammered at will, and was only left in the box because the West Ends saw no chance of saving the game and wanted to save from disgrace the pitcher who had won so many battles for them. Hofford was great, and Lally a wonder. His hit that struck the house beyond the centre field fence won him a box of cigars from Tom Keller. Lafbery never made a break, and set an example for them all. His playing, and Farrell's, was way out of Gil Hatfield's sight. The latter made two of the worst errors of the game. O'Rourke did great work with the stick, and his throw-in in the ninth inning saved the game.

Thus closed this season's games with Somerville. The tie will not be played. The score.

West [illegible] This Purchase of Mountain Property!

THE PRESS understands that a party of New York capitalists closed a deal Oct. 1, whereby they became possessed of 200 acres of land on top of the mountains West of this city. The sale was made through the Real Estate Trust which company was authorized by the same party to purchase more. Does it mean a mining or land speculation, the building of an elevated city, or that railroad from Newark?

THE NEW GRACE CHURCH.

A Bond Decided on, and the Vestry Tell the People What Must be Done by Them to Build It.

At last the parishioners of Dr. Rodman's church are being moved in a way that will undoubtedly result in the building of the church they have long needed on the fine location they have long owned at the corner of Seventh and Sycamore streets. Besides the earnest addresses on the subject that have emanated from the pulpit, a circular has been sent forth by the vestry that speaks very plainly as regards the people's duty in the matter.

The vestry believe that it is entirely within the ability of the parish to contribute the funds necessary to enable the vestry to erect and inclose sufficiently for use a suitable church, leaving, if necessary, the finishing and furnishing for another effort; and the only question to be determined is whether those who attend Grace church, and are interested in its growth and prosperity, will do what they can.

A stone church of sufficient capacity can be erected and furnished for about $40,000. With the available funds (about $5,000) now on hand, and additional subscriptions of say $10,000, the vestry would feel justified in soliciting detailed plans and specifications, and proceeding with the work, relying on additional subscriptions of at least $5,000 before the building was inclosed.

On this plan the vestry would expect to borrow (mortgaging the church property) $15,000, which, with funds on hand and subscriptions before named, will enable them to erect the building and make it habitable, leaving a portion of the finishing and furnishing—estimated at say $5,000—for further subscriptions after the church can be occupied.

That they should have and must have a new church building, they say, must be apparent to all, and does not admit of any discussion. The effort made three years ago was not supported as the vestry hoped it would be, and was abandoned; but this effort will not be abandoned, so far as the vestry is concerned, but will be continued until a contract has been made for the erection of the building; and for that purpose the vestry ask for contributions in cash, or in form of subscriptions, which can be sent to C.P. Bull, Treasurer.

The vestrymen themselves have subscribed $5,000, and if the rest of the church people give but twice what those eight men have given, there is sufficient. A sub-committee of vestrymen for the purpose—consisting of W. E. Lowe, O.T Waring and C. P. Bull—have, after diligent inquiry, decided to recommend the adoption of a ground and elevation similar to that designed by Architect R. W. Gibson, and erected at Olean, N.Y. This has been duplicated, or rather an enlarged copy of the same has been contracted for, by Trinity church, Sing Sing. The church in Sing Sing is to seat 650 people, the greatest width is 81 feet, and the greatest length 140 feet; the contract price for masonry and carpenter work is $26,000; that will finish the church, but not furnish it. Adopting the plan of the Sing Sing church, and inclosing four feet more in width and five feet more in length, and not leaving quite as much space between chancel rail and commencement of pews, yet allowing liberal space for each sitting, there is arranged a plan that will accommodate 720 people, at, it is believed, a cost for masonry and carpenter work not exceeding $28,000; it being estimated that the masonry will be as cheap in Plainfield as in Sing Sing.

Mr. Gibson, the architect, is well known as the designer of the Cathedral in Albany, and whose design for the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, is the favored one. What has influenced the vestry most in their choice is the fact that, while the style of church recommended is very beautiful in its design, it is of economical construction. The style adopted is Gothic. The ground plan consists of chancel, nave, side aisles, with shallow transepts, narthex, organ room, vestry and robing room. Side aisles serve for passageways only, none of the congregation being seated behind pillars or other obstructions. This enables the pillars to be erected of a substantial design and size, giving the interior a dignified effect. The transepts are introduced to give variety and picturesqueness to the design and so as to enlarge the seating capacity near to the pulpit. The masonry work of the interior is of plaster, ornamented with mouldings and carved capitals. The windows at the west end in the transepts and chancel are large tracery windows, while those in the nave aisles are comparatively small and simple. The clere-story gives a double window to each bay division of the nave. The roof has open timber work of pointed arch form, all finished in wood and stained. The roof rests direct upon the pillars of nave, which have no arches. This arrangement enables the clere-story to be used in a height which would not permit of it otherwise, with much more effect than is usually obtained, and at a moderate cost.

Externally the building will be of stone, rough dressed, with bold, painted arches and water tables, and the trimmings of cut stone of fine quality. The handsome square tower designed for the front, and which will occupy a considerable part of the space, will rise in noble proportions and terminate in battlements, with turret running up easterly corner and overtopping the battlements. The whole effect of the building, as viewed from the front, will be singularly massive and dignified.

These are the main features of the church recommended for consideration, and in order to co-operate with the rector to secure money enough to commence to build, the vestry would suggest that a circular be issued to the parish, which shall embody their views, and an effort be made to secure at least $15,000. In the event of said amount being raised, they further recommend that an architect be employed, at a cost not exceeding three and a half per cent. of the estimated outlay, to furnish plans and specifications of a building, the cost of masonry and carpenter work (to include gas fixtures and windows) of which shall not exceed $30,000.

Here He Ties.

(From the Insurance Critic.)

John M. Crane, of Plainfield, the well-known and highly popular ex-Secretary of the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York, and during the past two years Manager of the New York office of the old Union Mutual Life Insurance Company of Portland, Me., has just resigned from the last named Company and accepted the appointment of Superintendent of Agencies of the American Casualty Insurance and Security Company, of which the firm of Beecher, Schenck & Benedict, of New York, are General Managers. The connection of Mr. Crane with the American Casualty is but a natural sequence, and we predict will result in much advantage to both the company and our friend Crane, who is not only a vigorously industrious worker but a successful "hustler" in whatever he undertakes, and, what is better still, a truly loyal man to his business interests and friends. Our best wishes go with you, John, wherever you tie up.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

THE SHOOT IS ENDED.

Bad Weather Interrupts the Sport at Dunellen But Big Events Are Coming.

The sixth annual tournament of the Middlesex Gun Club came to an end Friday night. For the first time in the history of the club the weather has operated against success. Torrents of rain fell Thursday night, the 2,000 pigeons left after Wednesday's live-bird sport were drenched in their coops, and 400 of them were killed by the water. Friday afternoon a penetrating mist fell, and the men had to wear cumbersome waterproof garments and to shoot through a blinding atmosphere of rain and smoke. The outlook Saturday was so dreary that it was abruptly decided to postpone the big one-hundred-dollar-entrance sweepstakes, which was to bring together the champions of the various States, and to end the tournament last night.

The shooting for the big guaranteed purse of the season Friday beg a well. Of the first 200 birds released from the traps only seven were lost, and of these three were hit and fell dead outside of the boundary line. W. H. Wolstencroft, of Philadelphia, who won first money in the same event last year, shared first prize yesterday with W. Crosby of Batavia, N. Y.; each having a clean record of 25 birds killed, defeating the American champion. Quimby, Kleinz, Elliott, Welch, Biggott and VonBrackle each brought 24 to earth, and divided second money. W. H. Green, Wild, Hedden, Manley, and Whitney each missed two and went shares on third. Cannon and Marsh defeated Seigler and Class in shooting off a tie for fourth, and went halves. Peacock and Williams had been in for fifth money, but in shooting off the tie Williams lost.

The marksman who won the most applause during the day was William S. Canon, the famous one-armed shooter from Newark, who brought down his birds with the utmost ease. He lost his arm during the war, and fought two years without it. He arranges his necktie without assistance, laces his shoes rapidly; and in fact does everything as quickly and correctly with one arm as most men do with two. W. Fred. Quimby also was accorded cheers for being the sportsman to use his second barrel least of all during the day.

In several minor events of the day Canon, Kleinz, Crosby, and Welch won first money, and Collins, C. Smith, A. Hedden, Manley, Voorhees, Sigler and Leek won second. Other moneys were won by Dayton, Terry, C. M. Hedden, Lindsley, Green, and Peacock.

Financially the tournament has been a great success to the club, and a dozen or two of the participants have profited considerably.

The indefinite postponement of the big one-hundred-dollar-entrance fifty-live-bird sweepstakes was a great disappointment to the participants in the tournament, and especially to those who had planned to take part in the event. Elliott, the live-bird champion of the United States, had hoped to compete in this affair with the champions of other States, and, to give vent to his ambition to defeat them, he arranged last night with Frank Class, of Pine Brook, champion of New Jersey, and J. Frank Kleinz, of Philadelphia, champion of Pennsylvania, for a three-cornered match, each man contributing $1,000 to the prize pot and each shooting at 100 live birds. The match will take place within two months.

The conference of delegates from the different New Jersey gun clubs, which was to be held Friday night, did not take place for want of a quorum; hence the annual Fall tournament of the New Jersey State Sportsmen's Association could not be arranged for, but it was decided to hold a tournament at Newark, from Nov. 25 to Nov. 28, and to adopt it as the State tournament as soon as the consent of a quorum could be procured. At this tournament the shooting of Nov. 25 and 26 will be at inanimate targets, and that of Thanksgiving Day and Nov. 28 at live birds.

Bound Brook Borough Must Wake Up.

The Somerset County Grand Jury has made a presentment against the Bound Brook Borough Commissioners for permitting the Bound Brook streets to remain in such a deplorable condition. The Court was requested to bring the matter before the December grand jury if improvements were not made in the meantime.

MORE ELABORATE THAN EVER.

The Plainfield Choral Concerts Will Have an Orchestra at Every One.

Monday night was the first rehearsal of the Choral Society of the coming season, and in spite of the weather there was a full attendance. The reports of what had already been accomplished and what was assured, were unprecedentedly favorable. At the time of the first rehearsal of last year, there had been 70 subscriptions received, netting $700; while above even the number reported was just double, of which 52 were new patrons who had never subscribed before. Only 15 more subscribers can be accommodated.

Leader Fitzhugh made a speech and President Howland an address. The society was told that the coming concerts would be the most elaborate in style of any that were ever given in Plainfield. The chorus is full and better even than last year especially in the basso parts. President Howland, in his address, stated that the Society was beginning the most successful year in its existence, in the quality of the works to be given, the efficiency of its chorus, and also financially. There will be an orchestra at each of the three concerts. At the first concert will be given Mendelssohn's Oratorio of "Elijah," with four soloists. The first part of the second concert will consist of solos and part songs, some of which are to be accompanied by the orchestra. The second part will be Gade's "Crusaders," with three soloists. At the third concert will be rendered Haydn's Oratorio of "The Creation," with three soloists.

Owing to the limited seating capacity of the Hall, only a few more subscribers can be received. Those who wish to subscribe should do so at once or it will be too late. Names may be sent to the treasurer, H. O. Newman, 4 West Fifth street.

Forgot His Manhood in Woman's Presence.

Fanwood society is greatly stirred over an episode which took place Sunday at the home of one of the most prominent residents of Plainfield's thriving suburb. A Union county official whose home is in Fanwood is said to have used insulting and grossly improper language in the parlors of his neighbor, in the presence of the neighbor's wife; and became, it is alleged, so objectionable a visitor that he had to be summarily ejected, after being repeatedly requested to leave. A PRESS reporter sought to interview the husband on Monday, but that gentleman said he had nothing to say. It is understood, however, that the husband has written a letter to the official demanding that the disturber apologize to the insulted wife.

"The Brightest Jewels"

In a mother's diadem are her fair, healthy children—the pride and ornaments of her home. But a mother cannot bear and nourish such children while she is the victim of suffering and disease. By a course of self-treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, every woman can thoroughly eradicate, and at the same time build up and invigorate the whole system by its health imparting influences. A trial bottle will convince. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, to give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Lawyer Reed Has Lawyer VanNess Put in Jail.

Some time ago lawyer J. K. VanNess bought at Sheriff's sale a part of the Allen property out East Front street. He paid only a part of the purchase money, and proceedings were commenced to get the rest. The court upon application of Counselor Charles Reed issued its summons for VanNess, but he failed to appear. Then a warrant for his arrest for contempt was placed in Constable Amos Moffett's hands.

After patient waiting and watching the Constable got his hands on VanNess, and the slippery attorney was locked up in the County Jail under Warden Dodd's care.

Bread! Bread! The Cry for Bread!

A million loaves, not enough for one city! Five millions, not enough for one State! Fifty millions, not enough for this country a single day, yet often what sour, soggy stuff it is, nevertheless it is eaten, and the result is dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, impoverished blood, pimples, blotches and scrofula. For the correction of all this, and as a general tonic for the system, take Golden Medical Discovery prepared by Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo. Its action is like a charm, a "benediction that follows after prayer." A remedy for stomachic and liver troubles, as well as a specific for throat and lung disorders. It is guaranteed to benefit or cure, or money refunded.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

A. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, [illegible] the bright hours!

—One of Plainfield's oldest residents [illegible] Monday.

—The doctors held one of their periodical reunions, with a supper at the City [illegible] night.

—The White House Monitor, [illegible] new weekly publication, is a good local newspaper, and deserves a liberal support from the people whom it seeks to serve. Its editor is L. T. [illegible], formerly of [illegible] Brook.

—Arrangements are being perfected for a series of highly interesting [illegible] in [illegible] Hall. The Rev. Mr. [illegible] will be the speaker next Sunday evening, and Samuel A. [illegible], of [illegible], the week following.

—Mrs. Dr. [illegible] Edwards, the clairvoyant, although so far recovered from her recent illness as to be able to see all who want to consult her, will leave for the South in a few days to seek renewed health. Therefore all who so desire should call at once at the City Hotel.

—Thompson's Park's new pianos and organs [illegible] already receiving many visitors who are delighted with the assortment of instruments on exhibition. An accomplished pianist keeps the air thrilling with melody, and adds to the attractiveness of the place.

—The "[illegible] Jack" is the best Quartet in New York or Brooklyn today. Its members are soloists of repute; their voices blend in a beautifully rich and harmonious quality of tone, and they sing with feeling and expression. They will give a concert at Music Hall Thursday evening of next week.

—Eight [illegible] from the [illegible] avenue loft of J. Hervey Doane, were shipped to Havre de Grace, Friday P. M., to take part in a federation race. The distance is 125 miles. The Press was appointed to countermark the birds, by the rare [illegible] of the Federation of American Homing Pigeon Fanciers.

—A carriage was crippled at the corner of East Second street and Park avenue Friday night, by getting one of the wheels wedged firmly underneath the body of the vehicle. A [illegible] people stood around in the rain and watched two men work within [illegible] a quarter of an hour, until the wheel was released from its [illegible] state and restored to its customary position where it could rotate with [illegible] difficulty.

The Date of His Coming.

At a meeting of the city's clergy, held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, Oct. 1, the date of the coming of the Evangelist, B. Fay Mills, was fixed for Monday, Nov. 3. Another meeting will be held soon to decide upon other details, committees, places of meeting, etc.

[illegible] to [illegible]

The [illegible] of the [illegible], to be given at the Union County Country Club's [illegible], will be on the evening of Dec. 12. The first grand concert by the same society at the same place, will be on the evening of Jan. 27. Upon the latter occasion will appear Miss Howe, the wonderful soprano whose talents are [illegible].

Warren [illegible] for the Borough.

Workmen attempted to fill the huge tank on the Music Hall stage Monday, by carrying [illegible] from Green Brook at the rear of the building, but found the work [illegible] as arduous as trying to bail out the ocean, and gave up in despair. The services of Warren Engine were then procured, and after forty minutes pumping the tank was filled. Then the Engine Company collected thirty dollars.

A [illegible] Pastor will Address Them.

The fourth anniversary of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Dunellen Presbyterian church will be celebrated Oct. 16. The Rev. W. C. [illegible], pastor of the church, and the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the Trinity Reformed church of Plainfield, will deliver addresses. A reception will be held in the Sunday school room at the close of the evening.

[illegible] Fish in a [illegible] Pond.

Fred [illegible] and Wm. [illegible], after fishing all night long in the New Market pond, have broken the record. Oct. 1, a young man by the name of Hallock caught a carp weighing 15 pounds, a bass weighing [illegible] pounds and another carp weighing [illegible] pounds. That aroused [illegible] and [illegible], so they fished all that night and caught, besides [illegible] fish and [illegible], a carp that weighed 17 lbs. [illegible]

A Horse Falls Dead in the Borough.

A horse owned by A. E. Palmer, of Rockview avenue, dropped dead in the harness while being driven down Washington avenue Thursday. Mr. Palmer was being conveyed to the railroad station when he noticed that the horse was acting queerly. He dismounted, [illegible] his [illegible] to return home, and set out for the station on foot. The horse died a [illegible] opposite the house of the President of the S. P. C. A.

Now if she had used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, there would have been nothing of the kind said, for it will cure catarrh every time.

PERSONALS.

Miss Marguerite Day, of this city, is visiting friends in New York.

Mrs. C. B. Ferry, of East Second street, is suffering from a sprained ankle.

Mrs. Joseph F. Sheppard left today for a visit among friends in Wilkesbarre and Scranton.

Edward G. Pope, youngest son of Postmaster E. E. Pope, is home again after a long absence in the far West.

Elmer E. Runyon will sing this season with the Metropolitan Singing Society of New York, under the leadership of W. R. Chapman.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew M. Vanderbeek have returned from their wedding trip, and have begun housekeeping at their pleasant new home on Grove street.

David Wotherspoon of this city, and partner, won a match for doubles against Warner and Rowlan, of Roselle, at the Westfield tennis tournament, Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Martin are again residents of Washington Park, North Plainfield. They removed from 20 Crescent avenue to 58 Washington avenue today.

During the absence of Herman Simmonds, of Broadway, who will make a two-months' trip through the South, his family will be guests at Van Court Inn, Roselle.

John E. Clark, accompanied by Frederick Crawson, both of Camperia, N. Y., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hartpence, of West Front street. Mr. Clark is Mrs. Hartpence's father.

Logie A. Anderson, a former resident of Plainfield, and a brother-in-law of Elias H. Bird of this city, died at New Brunswick Saturday, after an illness of two weeks. He leaves a wife and three children.

George C. Martin and family of Eighth street and Central avenue, left Plainfield at 1:30 P. M., Sunday, for Kansas City, Mo., where Mr. Martin has just entered business and where his family will make their home for the future.

An excellent portrait of Julian Hawthorne, the famous novelist whose face was a familiar sight on Plainfield streets during his residence at Scotch Plains, adorns the pages of the current issue of the Elizabeth Town Talk.

The Rev. George Karner, of this city, whose wife was Miss Cadmus, has accepted a call to Albany. Mr. and Mrs. Karner are now in Plainfield visiting at the home of the latter's father, Abram L. Cadmus. Albany has drawn from this city the Revs. Raymond, Doane, Karner and Skillinger.

Dr. Dan Adams and Capt. Doane have returned from the Adirondacks with a record of five deer killed besides an innumerable lot and assortment of small game, trout and salmon. They shipped one of the deer to Plainfield, but it was delayed on the road a week and arrived, alas! too late.

Among recent guests at Van Court Inn, Roselle, were Herman Simmonds and family, of this city. This new hotel just opened by H. W. Pope seems sure of success. The most expert of chefs has been secured and every other detail arranged for the satisfaction and gratification of the very best people.

Dr. H. S. Jones, of the homoeopathist school, has begun practice in Plainfield at the office of the late Dr. Titsworth, 108 East Front street. He is a graduate of the New York College of Homoeopathy, and practiced for three years in Elizabeth before setting out on a series of travels from which he has returned to choose Plainfield for his home.

Architect Charles H. Smith, of this city, who is just completing a handsome residence for the Corporation Counsel on West Eighth street, will shortly begin the building of a home for ex-Judge Wm. Stillman, on West Seventh street between Central avenue and New street. Mr. Smith has also been engaged by the N. J. A. C. to build them a club house at Bergen Point.

HYMENEAL.

(From The Press of Wednesday.)

THIERS—PELLETREAU.

This evening at the home of the bride's parents, 306 Livingston street, Brooklyn, will take place the wedding of Miss Florence Lansing Pelletreau and Charles Rodolphe Thiers of this city. The immediate relatives and intimate friends only, of the couple, will be present at the ceremony, but a large number of invitations have been issued for a reception to follow from 8 till 10 o'clock. Messrs Emerson and Jackson, of the Crescent League, will be the ushers. Upon their return from a wedding trip, Dr. and Mrs. Thiers will be at home in the Craig homestead on Somerset street. The extensive list of bridal gifts already received, testifies how high a place the couple occupy in the esteem of their large circle of acquaintances. Their friends in the Crescent League presented them with an elegant and costly clock of onyx.

STOVER—SYMONDS.

The marriage of Herbert W. Stover, of this city, and Miss Lillian Symonds, will take place at six o'clock to-morrow evening at the home of the bride's mother, First street, Albany. The affair will be very private because of the recent death of the bride's father. The groom is a son of ex-Councilman and ex-Fire Commissioner Rowland M. Stover, and occupies a lucrative position with John W. Murray's fire insurance company, the German American. The newly-wedded couple will live in this city.

CODDINGTON—WILSON.

The wedding of William Archibald Coddington, of Plainfield, to Miss Ida May Wilson, of the Borough, will take place this evening at six o'clock, at the home of the bride's brother, Albert H. Wilson, of Woodbridge. The officiating clergyman will be the Rev. Mr. Gates, pastor of the Woodbridge M. E. church. The form of ceremony will be Episcopalian. The groom himself, attired in a Prince Albert costume of broadcloth, will escort the bride through an aisle formed by the twinings of silken white ribbon, to the altar nook that has been provided for the occasion in a bay window of the parlors. The bride will wear a handsome costume of white silk, low corsage, and will carry a bouquet of Marechal Niel roses. The wedding march, from Lohengrin, will be played by Miss Imogene Smith, of Dunellen. The pathway over which the bride and groom will pass will be strewn with flowers. The ushers will include Charles B. VanWinkle and Fred Cutter, of Plainfield. The number of guests will be limited strictly to relatives and intimate friends, owing to the recent death of the mother of the groom. A reception will follow the ceremony, and the happy young husband and wife will depart on their wedding trip. Their honeymoon will be spent amid the rare October beauties of the Berkshire Hills and other New England resorts. Their future home is Plainfield.

M'INTYRE—WOODLAND.

Miss Annie Woodland, youngest daughter of the late John A. Woodland, and sister of Henry Woodland of Grandview avenue, was married to David M. McIntyre, of Newark, at her home, 53 Somerset street, North Plainfield, today. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple boarded an early afternoon train for a wedding trip in the South.

—The trials of the indicted men [illegible] have been put off for a month. A number of Plainfielders are on the struck juries. It will make a difference whether the accused are tried before Fackler or [illegible]

BOWLERS THROW OFF THEIR COATS.

Getting Ready for the Season of Healthful and Exhilarating Sport.

With the advent of October the bowling season practically opens, and soon throughout the country, and more particularly in Plainfield and neighboring towns, will be heard sounds similar to those that fell upon the startled ear of the legendary Rip VanWinkle—the dull rumble of the heavy balls coursing down the alleys, followed by the sharp crash of flying pins.

The game of bowling has made wonderful progress during the past few years, and that, too, without settled rules and with no national organization. These two essentials were supplied, however, when, on September 8, representative bowlers from various clubs throughout the country met in New York city, organized the American Amateur Bowling League, and unanimously adopted a code of rules. Last Winter saw a great increase in the devotion paid to the pastime and in the numbers of the players; and everything promised a still more successful season during the coming Winter. This promise will be more than fulfilled.

An interesting feature of the sport is the fact that all sorts and conditions of people yield to its fascination. Good bowling alleys are now considered quite as essential to well-appointed clubs as are billiard rooms. Nor is bowling confined to men alone. Women have recently taken it up and have shown their ability to surmount the difficulties which are supposed to obtain in those sports requiring free-arm movements.

What lends the game its chief charm is the fact that it is almost a strictly amateur pastime, though few sports have been made the object of more legal enactments than has bowling before it was placed on its present high level. Another thing that has been notable as giving a high standing to the game is the fact that the best bowlers today are found not among the few professional bowlers, but among those who are strictly amateurs. All the best-known bowlers of even the large cities are men who are recognized as amateurs. The sport is, therefore, one of the few where the term amateur signifies superiority in skill as well as in spirit.

There are few indoor games in which are so united the elements of both skill and strength. To drive a ball approximating 27 inches in circumference a straight distance of 60 feet requires a keen eye, a steady nerve, and a good muscular development, and these qualities are all attained in time by the player, together with an increased freedom and grace of carriage. Some games require more skill, others more strength, but there are few in which these requisites are so admirably united.

Much advice can be given to the beginner, but the essentials of good bowling can be summed up in this: Keep control of the ball at the moment of delivery. Swing the arm in a horizontal line, and when the ball just brushes the floor release it. If it is held longer, until the arm is on the upward swing, it will go bumping down the alley and doubtless find its way into the gutter. After the player can deliver a centre-ball he can try a cross-ball, that is, delivered from the side of the alley. Which is the more effective ball is a disputed question, but the cross-ball is certainly the more difficult. If the player is ambitious, he can attempt the curved ball. There are players who can start the ball in the centre of the alley, curve it almost to the side, and finally hit the head pin. But there are few players who can roll this ball effectively. If possible, a twist should be given the ball at the moment of delivery. This will have a greater scattering effect on the pins, and with it the bowler will be less likely to leave difficult "spares" on either side. The most scientific part of bowling consists in picking off the difficult "spares," that is, the pins left standing after the delivery of the first ball.

Without doubt the number of tournaments and match games during the coming season will be much greater than last. Though the Crescent League is at present crippled through the burning of its club house, its members still anticipate an abundance of sport during the Winter. Tournament teams for the season's match games are already being planned for by the various bowling organizations of the locality, and will be put at practice games as soon as the weather is cool enough. Those who witnessed last Winter's games of the Plainfield, Fanwood, Westfield, Elizabeth and Somerville series, and who watched the development and progress of Plainfield's players, are confident that the Crescent city will ere long possess some of the most famous bowlers of the New York, New Jersey and Staten Island section.

Queer Movements of the Adams Company.

Notices have been posted in the New York offices of the Adams Express company, instructing the men to refuse all freight for Plainfield and Somerville. The metropolitan newspapers quote the company's managers as refusing to give any reason for this order, and as saying that they have not yielded to or compromised with any rival company and have not abandoned any offices. As The Press has already stated, however, the Plainfield and Somerville offices have been abandoned, despite the fact that they are doing a bigger business and handling more profits than ever before.

Chosen to Serve Again.

At the annual meeting of the Plainfield Crescent League, held evening Oct. 1, the following officers were reelected:

President—Charles A. Reed.
Vice President—Charles C. Burnet.
Secretary—Charles H. Lyman.
Trustees—James E. Arnold, Howard L. Emerson, [illegible] VanVliet.

Mr. Burnet reported that a place was open for the Crescent League's team in the Amateur bowling league that is now being formed of such clubs as the Staten Island, Palma, Oritani, N. J. Athletic, Elizabeth A. C., etc. The matter of entering the tournament, was referred to the Trustees with power.

An amendment to the constitution was adopted raising the initiation fee for admittance to the Crescent League, to $20 and the annual dues to $18, all of which, however, is not to take effect until Jan. 1, 1891.

Neighbors at War in the Borough.

John P. Stine, of North Plainfield, has been placed under bonds, by Justice Hardy, to keep the peace against Wm. Childs Smith. Some time ago the Stine property in the West End avenue and Rockview avenue neighborhood was cut up, on paper, into building tracts. Smith bought one of the lots, and built a house on it, since which time the Stines have decided to abandon their plans to sell the remainder of the land. Smith had bought his section on the supposition that the neighborhood was to be built up, and that certain streets, laid out on the recorded map which accompanied his deed, would be opened. Ever since he drove his wagon across the land where the promised streets were to be, he was accused by the Stines of trespassing, and a constant warfare resulted. Recently, Smith alleges, John Stine tried to drive over him with a team of spirited horses, and in consequence he had Stine arrested and put under bonds.

Possibility.

HARVEST MOON HAPPINESS.

The Methodists Give a Pretty Affair in Vincent Chapel.

A bit of golden Autumnal fairyland was displayed at Vincent Chapel Thursday night, when the people of the Methodist Episcopal church opened a harvest moon fair and supper for the benefit of their Evona mission, for which a new building is about to be constructed.

The weather out of doors was unpleasant, but inside of the handsome chapel all was brightness and good cheer. The place was adorned with sheaves of grain and stocks of corn, rich, russet-hued and rustling. The walls were hung with gorgeous assortments of Autumn leaves. A floral cottage thatched with straw and illuminated with jack-o'-lantern pumpkins peeped modestly forth from among the gay frost-bitten leaves and spreading branches of a bit of woodland. A rustic atmosphere, balm-laden, and quivering with the pleasant sounds of mirth, pervaded the place. The occasion was very like a revel by moonlight amid fragrant woods and bounteous fields.

All the more lovely for being flesh-and-blood creations were the fairies of this wonderland. Attired in the daintiest of costumes, and beaming with winsome smiles and fascinating graces, they cast a subtle charm over every trespasser on their domain, and exacted tribute money from not unwilling purses.

Jack Horner was present, with his pie—a mammoth toothsome creation in a big bright pan. Through a hole in the upper crust the visitors thrust their thumbs, and brought forth dainty bonbons and other goodies. Mrs. D. Davis, Miss Daisy Mitchell and Miss Belle Lunger superintended the distribution of plums.

If one wished more substantial refreshments he found no lack of fair ones willing to provide it. He had but to make known his desires, and one of the fifteen—Mrs. Pike, Mrs. Packer, Mrs. Winter, Mrs. Mahaffe, Mrs. Love, Mrs. Lunger, Mrs. Spicer, Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. Valient, Mrs. G. Thorn, Miss Baker, Miss S. Sharp, Miss Lunger, Miss Bolsterli and Miss May McDonald—would attend him.

Ice-cream was furnished to its devotees by Miss M. Sharp, Miss L. Wakefield, Miss G. Sharp, Miss Maize Hurlbut, Miss Grace Carroll, Miss Alice Loomis, Miss Annie Stafford, Miss Kittie Mitchell, Miss Rose Thorn and Miss May Thompson.

There was of course a lemonade well; and generous glasses, sparkling to the brim, came for thirsty wayfarers from its cool, delicious depths, in answer to the beck of the wands of Mrs. Carroll and Miss Alice Carroll.

A genuine country store was another of the attractions. It was a cosy little corner, and its patrons were many. From behind the well-laden counter all sorts of desirable wares were handed out by Mrs. Taft, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Edwin Loomis, Miss L. Chandler and Miss Eleanor Morrison.

At the fruit and decorating booth Mrs. Griffen, Mrs. Roberts, Mrs. Chas. Mitchell, Mrs. M. Brown and Mrs. Homan presided. They had many callers.

A Plainfielder Goes Abroad and Gets an Office.

D. T. Dunlap, a brother of Wm. W. Dunlap of Plainfield, and himself a former Plainfielder, has been elected Clerk of the District Court in Carbon county, Wyoming. His plurality was 130. He ran on the Republican ticket, and ran considerably ahead of it.

Entering Its Fourth Year of Success.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., celebrated its 3d anniversary Monday evening by an entertainment and "lunch-box sociable" in Amphion Hall. The pleasant features of the programme included an address by Mr. McFarland, of Trenton, piano solos by Miss Pierson, of Morristown, recitations by Miss Susie March of Westfield, and by Mr. Phillips, a harp solo by Donatto Lasina, and songs by the Eclipse Quartette—Messrs J. C. Martin, E. C. Searing, R. W. Schiereth and E. Southard. The floor manager of the dance that followed was Gilbert Sutphen Martin, Past Councilor of Franklin Council, who also led the grand march in his usual graceful style with his cousin, Miss Lizzie Sutphen.

Death of the Rev. W. P. Tilden.

The Rev. W. P. Tilden, who organized the Unitarian Society of Plainfield, died at his home in Milton, a suburb of Boston, Friday morning, in his seventy-ninth year. Mr. Tilden had for many years been a familiar figure in Boston, where he was a long time pastor of the New South church, and of Church Green. He went to Boston in 1862, and remained until the close of 1883. He was greatly beloved by his parishioners for his kindly ways and his thoughtful care of their welfare. He was preaching in Plainfield, and working hard for the success of the church, when taken ill a year ago. He went to Lakewood and other resorts, hoping to recover his health, but his frame was worn out, and his spirit took its flight.

Prepared Her Husband's Supper, and Fell Dead.

The death of Acky Annie Bray, wife of George Bray, of 185 Grove street, North Plainfield, occurred Friday evening, under peculiarly distressing circumstances. She had been ill since early July, but of late had been feeling a great deal better, and was planning to give her husband a happy celebration of his birthday anniversary Saturday. Friday night she prepared supper, and made every thing bright and cheerful for his home-coming from a hard day's work. Then she seated herself in a chair to rest. When her husband arrived he found her lying on the floor, in front of the chair, from which she had fallen, dead. Dr. Long was summoned, but the woman was past medical aid. Mrs. Bray was forty years of age. She had been married fourteen years, and was a devoted wife.

Reform Club.

At the regular meeting of the Reform Club last Thursday evening, the following resolution was adopted;

"Resolved, That the ladies of the Temperance Aid Society be and they are hereby respectfully requested to arrange and introduce a varied order of exercises for our Thursday evening meetings, with the view of rendering those occasions increasingly attractive and interesting; and that a special committee of three members of the Reform Club be appointed to co-operate in carrying into practical effect the foregoing suggested work."

President Harper named as such Committee Messrs Vanderbeek, Sampson and Burnett.

The Club also resolved to discontinue its meetings in Reform Hall during the coming union evangelical services under the leadership of Mr. Mills.

Why the Adams Express Company is Becoming Unpopular.

The queer movements of the Adams Express Company have called forth words of censure from the Bound Brook Chronicle, which says that wherever the company exists the old and reliable men are being dismissed and younger men hired at low wages to fill the vacancies.

Besides abolishing the offices at Plainfield and Somerville the company has now discontinued its Elizabethport branch, much to the inconvenience of Elizabeth merchants, who now threaten to institute a boycott against the entire concern.

The Bound Brook office will be retained. A. M. Converse, of East Bound Brook, who for nearly a quarter of a century has held a position of trust with the company in its main office in New York, is among the list of old men discharged.

THE BOROUGH'S MARCH OF PROGRESS.

Electric Lighting at Last a Probability—No Money for Somerset Street—Mr. Emmons and Mr. Hegeman Talk Back at One Another.

At the Borough Common Council meeting Friday evening the project to repair Somerset street was knocked in the head. Councilman Emmons did his best to wrest sufficient money from the hands of the Street Committee for the purchase of 300 tons of crushed stone exclusively for Somerset street, and when the question came to a vote Councilmen Smalley and Sebring stood by him and tied against Councilmen Hegeman, Hockle and Needham. Mayor Pisne put his deciding vote against the Emmons contingent, and Somerset street stays as it was. Those who voted against the Emmons project explained that they did so, not because they didn't favor it, but because they had been kept, through the remissness of the Street Committee, in ignorance of just how big a balance was left in the street mending treasury.

Mr. Emmons said that if he might be permitted to make a few remarks he thought he ought to be allowed to say something, and he wanted to state, and he defied contradiction, that the Street Committee was spending all its money in one favored part of the borough to the exclusion of the other side of town.

Mr. Hegeman protested against Mr. Emmons' talking that way and arousing sectional feeling, and said he protested against it anyway. He also characterized as ridiculous Mr. Emmons' charges that he, Mr. Hegeman, legislated for the interests of one section of the borough and against the interests of another section, and added that Mr. Emmons was himself the obstructionist. Mr. Emmons had voted against the proposition to macadamize Greenbrook road [which statement Mr. Emmons indignantly denied], and as long as Mr. Emmons opposed Greenbrook road Mr. Hegeman would oppose Somerset street.

In explaining the position he took, Mayor Pisne said, casually, that he supposed the Street Committee—of which Mr. Hegeman is chairman—knew what it was about, at which Mr. Emmons said he'd thought the whole year that they didn't.

For fear that Mr. Emmons didn't understand, Clerk Brokaw arose and said "Motion's lost!"

"Yes"—said Mr. Emmons sarcastically—"I marked it that way."

Petitions which received attention and were referred to appropriate committees was one seeking for the adjustment of the grade and the scraping of the gutters on Vine street, so that pools of detrimental stagnant water would no longer accumulate; one from Warren Engine Company asking the privilege of procuring, through popular subscriptions, a good big fire alarm bell, in place of the present "insignificant" one; and one from the Edison Electric Light Company of North Plainfield, through Chas. F. Hughes, seeking to obtain a franchise to light the streets of the Borough at the rate of $18 per year for each lamp; at least 200 twenty-candle-power lamps would be required, making the annual cost $3,600.

The Fire, Water and Lamps Committee reported that it favored the Edison Company's proposition, and at an adjourned meeting to be held Friday evening, October 10, something will be done towards closing a contract.

A Cold Water Cranford Man for Senator.

The Union County Prohibitionists held a convention at Elizabeth Thursday, in Temperance Hall, and nominated an entire county ticket.

Mr. Bigelow, of Cranford, was nominated for State Senator. There was quite an attendance of cold-water men at the affair, and considerable enthusiasm manifested.

Women in Handcuffs Excite the Throng.

Two women from the borough—Mrs. Noah Drake, and the relict of the late Italian "Romeo"—caused a big rumpus on Tuesday, in Magistrate Hardy's office, where they were sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. They unloaded their minds in the foulest of language, and smashed the glass in Mr. Hardy's door. Their violence necessitated the use of handcuffs, and in their manacled condition they were hustled off to the railroad station, bound for Somerville, and followed by a curious crowd.

Shattered His Elbow by a Fall.

Patrick Kiely, a workman for Mr. Burgess on Central avenue, was seriously injured by a fall from a tree Thursday. Carrier E. T. Dunn happened to be passing, and assisted in carrying the unfortunate man into the house. Drs. Boone and Hedges, who attended him, found that he had sustained a compound fracture of the arm at the elbow joint—one of the worst kind of fractures and the hardest to heal properly. The bones at the joint were crushed into fragments, and several pieces penetrated the flesh and pierced the skin. The injured man suffers great pain, though the injury was dressed with the utmost skill.

Installation of Officers.

At the regular meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., held in their hall corner of Front street and Park avenue, Thursday, after the usual routine business was transacted the following officers were installed for the ensuing quarter:

Junior Past Councilor—Gilbert S. Martin.
Councilor—Charles W. Tallman.
Vice Councilor—Louis M. Dunavan.
Ass't Recording Secretary—David S. Dunavan.
Conductor—Elias R. Pope, Jr.
Warden—Charles W. Taynor.
Inside Sentinel—Harry C. Dennis.
Outside Sentinel—William B. Hardy.

Several brothers from Newark, Rahway and Woodbridge were present and took part in the installation ceremonies.

Uniformed Knights of Honor.

Wetumpka Commandery, No. 34, Uniform Rank of the Knights of Honor, was instituted Thursday night by Deputy Supreme Dictator, C. J. Feytel, in Wetumpka Lodge rooms, 3,401, Knights of Honor.

The Commandery starts with a charter list of 29. The following officers were elected:

Past Commander—C. J. Feytel.
Commander—S. E. Flower.
First Vice Commander—D. W. Thiers.
Second Vice Commander—L. I. VanAlstyne.
Secretary—J. Sylvester.
Treasurer—F. P. Raffner.
Senior Aid—John Fellows.
Junior Aid—J. C. Pierson, Jr.
Guard—E. S. Rodgers.
Sentry—John VanMiddlesworth.

Members of the Knights of Honor in good standing are eligible to the Commandery. The Commandery meets at S. E. Flower's, 13 East Front street on Monday evening next.

Fanwood Club Car.

Wednesday, Oct. 1, the 5:15 train from New York carried the Fanwood club car on its first trip. The car is one of the handsomest of its kind. It is the original Howard car but much improved in its interior furnishing. Mrs. James Fancher was the first lady to honor it with her presence.

The members of the club include such representative men as R. P. Moore, Walter Force, George Brown, A. D. Becken, Rus Kempshall, Col. Charles Moore, Bishop Kyte and Wm. E. Gibbs. The car leaves so early in the morning and returns so late in the evening, that Abner P. Dowser did not join its coterie. Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Gibbs and Mrs. Warren are among the ladies who have been the club's guests on the car. It leaves Fanwood every morning at 7:37.

A PRETTY OCTOBER WEDDING.

A Notable Bridal Ceremony at Netherwood's Church of Our Saviour.

The marriage of Miss Marion Gvaquoine Haines, the eldest daughter of Samuel A. Haines, President of the National Commercial Travelers' Association, and Constantine P. Ralli, manager of the banking house of Brown, Brothers & Co., of New York city, and eldest son of the late P. C. Ralli, of London, was celebrated Saturday morning in the Protestant Episcopal Church of our Saviour at Netherwood. The beautiful little house of worship, which is close by the home of the bride, was prettily decorated with palms and cut flowers, and filled with the friends of the young pair.

Miss Haines, who was accompanied to the chancel rail by her father, wore an extremely pretty costume of brown cloth trimmed with ostrich feathers, with bonnet to match, and carried a bouquet of white roses, yellow chrysanthemums, stephanotis, and smilax. Her only ornament was a beautiful diamond pendant in the shape of a cross, with a superb sapphire in the centre, and a fleur de lis between the bars. This was a gift from the bridegroom, who was attended by James Brown Mabon as best man. Wm. M. Kingsley and Martin Bates were the ushers. There were neither bridesmaids nor maids of honor. The Rev. Dr. George Vandewater, rector of St. Andrew's church, Harlem, officiated, and was assisted by the rector of the Church of Our Saviour, the Rev. S. P. Simpson. A wedding breakfast was served after the ceremony at Belvedere House, the home of the bride's father.

Among the guests were Miss Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Coe, Mr. and Mrs. John Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Ralli, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Anthony, Mr. and Mrs. William Palmer Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Brian H. Smith, Mrs. Oscar Hermance, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Rice, George H. Church, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Buchanan, Henry C. Bowen, Major and Mrs. R. L. Burnett, Miss Anthony, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ellis and family, Mr. and Mrs. William Lord, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Plummer, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Bowen, Mr. and Mrs. J. Vandervcnter, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Talmadge and Miss Helen White, of Netherwood; Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Ginna, Mr. Daniel Ginna, Mr. and Mrs. Dorsey Hyde, Miss Edith Hyde, Mrs. S. Jacobus, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fisk, Miss S. Lawrence and Miss Bessie Ginna, of this city.

A CAMERA-FIEND'S TRIBULATIONS.

How the Printers Delay His Lovely Vacation Photographs, and How Fair Women Profit by His Helplessness.

Plainfield's amateur photographers who depend on the manufacturers of their cameras for "doing the rest" are learning by experience that it is next to impossible to get a picture from the photographic printers in less than six weeks, so utterly unprecedented has been the descent of amateurs upon the printers with the negatives which represent their vacation photographing. There have never been so many amateur photographers abroad in the land as the present season; and as of course only a few of this immense army of photographers print from their own negatives, the printing has to be done after they come back to town, and they all want it done at once. The result is a dreadful congestion of negatives at the printers, and hope deferred that maketh the heart sick on the part of the enthusiastic amateurs. In this connection it may be mentioned that a new and, so far, lucrative business for women has been opened up by this craze possessed by everybody, to take photographs. Printing photographs from negatives is an occupation for which women, with their naturally quick eyes and deft fingers, are especially adapted; and some few of them have worked into it very well.

The Plainfield enthusiasts tell a story of one young woman who put $2,000 in the bank last year, representing the clear profits of one year's work in printing photographs. And evidently her work this year is on a much larger scale than last year. Women's work in this branch is acknowledged by photographic experts to be superior to that done by men. But perhaps it will be with this business as with so many others; the success of some will encourage others to enter it, and at last it will be overcrowded and precarious. But even then there will be "room at the top," as usual.

Dr. Davis Gets Judgment for His Horse.

The first case to be tried in the Union County Courts this term was that of Dr. T. S. Davis against Mark Moore. The physician had a horse killed, some time ago, on Peace street, by Moore's driving into it, and the suit for damages resulted. The justice of the doctor's claim was made so apparent by Counselor Chas. A. Reed that he was promptly awarded a verdict for $328.85.

William B. Surrey the Man.

At the quarterly business meeting of the teachers of the Crescent Avenue Sunday school held evening Oct. 1, Henry B. Newhall resigned his position as Superintendent, and positively refused to serve any longer. For fourteen years he had occupied the office, and has set the school upon a height reached probably by no other in the State.

The resignation was accepted with much regret. Then arose the question is there a man who can fill his place. The great difficulty of finding such a one was placed in the hands of a committee of nine.

A Pleasant Birthday Surprise Party.

A large gathering of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Mitchell met at their home on Plainfield avenue, Thursday, to celebrate the forty-fifth anniversary of Mrs. J. W. Mitchell's birth. The house was crowded. The company indulged in various appropriate pastimes, interspersed with singing. The special committee for the occasion was Mrs. E. B. Maynard, Mrs. Mary Thomas and Mrs. Francis Wyckoff, who did all in their power to make the occasion enjoyable to all. John W. Mitchell, son of the Rev. J. W. Mitchell, presided at the piano and showed marked ability as a young amateur. At a late hour the company dispersed, singing "God be with you till we meet again."

Better Mail Service for New Market.

The following letter will bring joy to the hearts of the suburban folks but Seventh street way:

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Office of Superintendent,
NEW YORK, Sept. 30, 1890.

Stanley Day, Esq., New Market, N. J.

Your letters of September 26 to the Honorable Postmaster General at Washington, D. C., enclosing an envelope mailed at New York at 2 P. M. and addressed to yourself at New Market, Sept. 24, and which did not reach you until Sept. 25, has been referred here.

As this office has explained to you on several occasions recently you could not receive at your place the same afternoon by train 5, any mail deposited in the New York postoffice later than 11:30 A. M.

The matter of direct dispatch from New York to New Market by the 3:00 P. M. Lehigh Valley Railroad train has been given attention and arrangements have been made so that commencing with Sept. 30, this mail will be dispatched from New York.

The Postmaster has also been advised of the establishment of this additional mail.

It is trusted that this arrangement will be satisfactory.

Respectfully,
R. C. JACKSON, Supt.

TURN ON THE LIGHT!

Let There Be Illumination of Councilmanic Methods as Well as of Streets.

Superintendent Moore, of the Plainfield Electric Light Company, told a Press reporter today that his company had offered, and offers now, to light the streets of the borough of North Plainfield with lamps of a greater candle-power, and for less money per lamp, than was stipulated in the recent offer of the proposed Edison Electric Light Company of North Plainfield. Yet the Committee on Lights reported at the last meeting of the Borough Council that they preferred the offer of the Edison Company to that of the Plainfield Company. This is a matter that ought to be thoroughly investigated at the next meeting, Friday evening. The money that is spent on street lights comes out of the pockets of the people, and that concern which will give the best service for the least money ought to receive the contract.

The Banner Ward of the State.

Returns from all over the State show that nowhere, except in the Second ward of this city, was there a unanimous vote against the amendment to permit special legislation. The total vote of that ward—which is the ward Councilman Spangenberg comes from—was 144, and all against the proposed amendment. The first ward of Bayonne comes next with only one vote for it, cast by Editor Page.

Prosperity Reported and Officers Elected.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church, took place Tuesday, Sept. 30, and was the largest and most interesting one that the church has ever held. Reports of the year indicated progress and good work in all departments. The trustees reported all bills paid and a very comfortable balance in the treasury. At the close of the business meeting the ladies served refreshments and an hour was spent in a social way.

The deacons elected were L. C. Bateson, A. C. LaBoyteaux. Members of Official Board—Rev. M. E. Dwight, C. E. Boss and A. J. Winckler. Trustees—Jacob Kirkner, G. W. Rockfellow, Wm. H. Brower, J. E. Morse, John E. Stewart, B. R. Force, C. E. Boss. Clerk—J. A. Robinson.

VACATION'S UP AND SCHOOL OPEN!

This is the season for a brisk demand in CHILDREN'S CLOTHING. During the months of Summer enjoyment they have played the dickens with their clothes, and usually have little left fit to appear in school with.

We have always made the clothing of the little ones a specialty, and this Fall we shall strengthen our well deserved reputation of keeping the best stock of these goods in Newark. You'll find it to be money in your pocket and the saving of no end of trouble to come straight here with your children and fit them out for the coming season. We can not only show you all the styles to be met with elsewhere, but many novel conceits which we have designed exclusively for us. Our prices for the newest styles are no greater than you'll pay for the old ones, and as to reliable work there isn't a store in the country that is more particular than we are, especially in children's goods. We know, in advance, the strain to which the little garments will be put, and every safeguard against a sudden coming from together is taken advantage of.

It's a pleasure to talk children's clothing just now; it's a pleasure to show it. We've got something to show and talk about.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. [illegible]

"THEREIN TO BE CONTENT."

[illegible]

In the [illegible] the late Louisa M. Alcott [illegible] 1874: "When I had [illegible] I have no time, and when I get [illegible] I shall [illegible] every life. I suppose it's [illegible] I admit, but it's [illegible] things I do, and are [illegible] This expresses [illegible] which Thackeray [illegible] "When I was [illegible] window that I [illegible] was full of [illegible]

[illegible] It was a shilling; I had none. Now I have the shilling, but I don't want the tolly." By a sort of irony of fate it happens to the most of those whom the world esteems supremely fortunate, because they have won the prizes of wealth or fame, that the things won come too late to give happiness, if they ever had that power.

What is this but to say, with the Scripture, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth?" Youth is not a desperately unhappy period, as a rule, because many things are desired that cannot be possessed; and advanced years need not be void of happiness because they bring possession without desire. The apostle Paul has taught us the secret of happiness, the philosopher's stone that transmutes all into gold, the true elixir of life: "For I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content."

Therein, be it observed, not necessarily therewith. Paul writing those words, chained by the wrist to a Roman soldier, and prepared for a speedy sentence of death, was probably no more content with such a state than we should be; but he was content in it. His happiness rested on a securer basis than outward circumstances and conditions. The peace of God, that passeth all understanding, kept his heart, as he prayed that it might keep the hearts of the Philippian Christians. It is the common delusion of men that they could be happy if they were only otherwise circumstanced—that if they had this or that, perfect contentment would then possess. Paul touches the deepest secret of human nature when he indicates that contentment is an inward state, and is the least dependent on external condition. As our great English poet has sung:

The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a Heaven of hell, a hell of Heaven.

We are so constituted by nature that our desires always outrun our possessions.

As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on.

An insatiable craving for more, more, and ever more, makes all that we have seem insignificant by comparison with what we have not. For this craving there is no cure but one, a radical change of nature that shall substitute for love of self the love of God and man. This inward transformation, this moral and spiritual regeneration is what the spirit of God accomplishes for man; and the fruits of this Spirit are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control.

There is nothing in Christian contentment of supineness or slothfulness of spirit, nothing inconsistent with that noble discontent which impels men to strive manfully for the bettering of themselves, their fortunes, and the world. To be content is not to vegetate, not to float with the stream. It is rather to preserve a serene spirit, an unshaken trust in God and the wisdom of His providence, that shall nerve and inspire its possessor to do the utmost of which his powers are capable for the betterment of himself and of the world.—N. Y. Examiner.

THE BOOK OF LIFE.

It Has a Wonderful Vitality for a Work That Has Been so Often Demolished.

The Bible is a book which has been refuted, demolished, overthrown and exploded more times than any other book you ever heard of. Every little while somebody starts up and upsets this book; and it is like upsetting a solid cube of granite. It is just as big one way as the other; and when you have upset it it is right side up, and when you overturn it again it is right side up still. Every little while somebody blows up the Bible; but when it comes down it always lights on its feet, and runs faster than ever through the world. They overthrew the Bible a century ago in Voltaire's time—entirely demolished the whole thing. In [illegible] years, said Voltaire, Christianity will have been swept from existence and will have passed into history. Infidelity ran riot through France, red-handed and impious. A century has passed away. Voltaire has "passed into history," and not very respectable history either; but his old printing-press, it is said, has since been used to print the Word of God; and the very room where he lived is packed with Bibles, a depot for the Geneva Bible Society. Thomas Paine demolished the Bible and finished it off finally; but after he had crawled despairingly into a drunkard's grave in 1809, the book took such a leap as at since that time more than twenty times as many Bibles have been made and scattered through the world as ever were made before since the creation of man. Up to the year 1800, from four to six millions copies of the Scriptures, in some thirty different languages, comprised all that had been produced since the world began. Eighty years later, in 1880, the statistics of eighty different Bible societies which are now in existence, with their unnumbered agencies and auxiliaries, report more than 165,000,000 Bibles, Testaments and portions of Scripture, with 226 new translations, distributed by Bible societies alone since 1804; to say nothing of the unknown millions of Bibles and Testaments which have been issued and circulated by private publishers throughout the world. For a book that has been exploded so many times this book still shows considerable life.

I have heard of a man traveling around the country exploding this book and showing up "the mistakes of Moses" at about $200 a night. It is easy work to abuse Moses at $200 a night, especially as Moses is dead, and cannot talk back. It would be worth something, after hearing the infidel on "the mistakes of Moses," to hear Moses on "the mistakes of the infidel." When Moses could talk back, he was rather a difficult man to deal with. Pharaoh tried it, and met with poor success. Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, and it is said found a grave in the Red Sea. Korah, Dathan and Abiram tried it, and went down so deep that they have not yet got back. But now Moses is dead, and it is easy to abuse him. It does not take a very brave beast to kick a dead lion.—Dr. H. L. Hastings.

STRENGTH OF CHARACTER.

Do Not Mistake Strong Feeling for the Real Article.

It was Robertson who said most profoundly: "We mistake strong feelings for strong character. You must measure the strength of a man by the power of the feelings which he subdues, not by the power of those which subdue him." This mistake, however, is almost universally made, especially by the young. How often we hear a girl or a boy confessing to a hasty and uncontrolled temper in words which clearly convey the suggestion that such a temper is an evidence of strength of character; how many young people deem an even temper a sign of weakness, and the power of self-control an evidence that there is not much either of strength or of sensibility beneath a quiet and equable surface.

Such a view is entirely erroneous. As Robertson says, the only evidence of strength in a man is his power over his own self. Indeed, his powers are not his until they are entirely under his own control. That of which we can be robbed by outward circumstances, or by the caprice of others, is not ours. This thought carries us one step farther, showing us not only the need of mastery over our own turbulent and insubordinate characteristics, but the need of a voluntary and deliberate exercise of the powers which are by nature ours. For instance, a person may have been endowed with a large stock of good temper, yet he is not truly good-tempered till he has deliberately chosen to be good-tempered in a time when to fail would be natural. Thus George Macdonald says of one of his strongest and most beautiful characters, dowered with an inexhaustible fund of good temper, "but it was not hers until she had made it her own, by choosing and willing to be good-tempered when she was disinclined, holding it fast with the hand of determination when the hand of wrong would snatch it from her."

There is only the virtue deliberately sought and won which is really ours; there is truly no self-will or [illegible] of [illegible], no [illegible] circumstance beyond our control, can rob us of it. It is because this truth is not understood and appreciated that so many people fail in their strongest point. So it was that the meekest man spake unadvisedly with his lips, and the man of courage, Elijah, gave way to utter discouragement and prayed for death. It is not only when we think we stand, but just there where we believe that we stand most firmly, that we have need to take heed lest we fall.—American Messenger.

"RAM'S HORN" SAYINGS.

Custom is a merciless master.

Never look where you shouldn't walk.

Much doing is not so important as well doing.

Every soul is a battlefield where the powers of hell and Heaven meet and engage in conflict.

The young man that fools away his time is about as long-sighted as the farmer who makes a hen-roost out of his two-hundred dollar self-binder.

God won't help a man who won't do something to help himself. It won't do to sit in a chair and pray for muscle. You can only get it by using what you have.

Astronomy has counted three hundred and fifty millions of shining worlds, all no doubt full of gold mines and yet the church is crowded with people who are afraid that God will not be able to fulfill His promises.

WAR ON THE PARTRIDGE.

A Day in the Woods with Dog and Gun.

Fun Snatched from a Day's Hunt—A Disappointing Point—Where to Look for Partridges—Guns and Shells That Will Give Best Results.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

The dawn of the first of September is always greeted with a rattling volley of shotguns in all parts of rural New York. The partridge can no longer skulk about under the protection of law, and he finds it necessary to keep his eye peeled or down goes his shanty.

Nevertheless the first always finds plenty of sportsmen waiting for its arrival and anticipating a day in the woods with their dogs. In some parts of the State very good shooting can be had. But mark you it means work and the hardest kind of work too. One secures his partridge in the same manner as the honest farmer whose ground he hunts upon earns his bread—by the sweat of his brow.

The country is mountainous and the path of the hunter strewn with thorns. In other words it is filled and canopied with thorns and briars, and under foot with jagged rocks and stumps. For a protection against the first wear an entire suit of canvas, with short breeches and leggings. For the feet, lace shoes with thick uppers and medium heavy soles filled with hob nails, are the best.

So equipped and accompanied by my two two Irish setters, Fan and Lady Bel, I started out bright and early on the first. We reached a choice piece of cover just in time to see a rabbit, closely pursued by a couple of hounds, make a short run in the adjoining field and then take to the cover again, the hounds in full bay after it. I soon found it was time wasted to hunt over this ground, as every bird was treed, and I only had the doubtful satisfaction of seeing my dogs make false points and of hearing birds get out of trees usually behind me. A short walk brought me to another cover which was a noted partridge retreat for this season of the year, there being plenty of berries for the birds to feed on. It was a tough-looking place to tackle, and after I got in I found it to be even worse than it looked. After having succeeded in extricating myself from an unusually bad tangle, and on recovering enough wind for the purpose, I whistled for the dogs, which were nowhere to be seen. They were apparently out of hearing as well as sight. So I started in search of them.

I began getting pretty well out of temper, and was tearing through the brush regardless of consequences when I stumbled pell mell over the two dogs, carrying them both to the ground with me. On reaching a sitting posture, I found they had already recovered themselves and were standing as staunch as before. It was a sight to warm one's heart. Lady Bel was half a length ahead of Fan with tail, back and head on the same level and both front legs braced squarely in front of her as if to prevent the animated dog flesh that they supported from approaching nearer the game.

Fan was in an easier position. One front foot was raised and her lips were slightly parted, through which could be seen the gleaming fangs and slowly dropping saliva.

With tightly grasped gun pushed well in front of me, I stepped ahead of my dogs. Three, four, five steps ahead of them. Still no signs of a feather. Yet I knew from the dogs' actions that the game was very close. Another step! The suspense began to be unpleasant. A kick in the brush and, for a moment, I thought the rush of air would carry me away with it. Birds got up all around me and some of them within reach of my gun barrel. Luckily the brush was low so they were well up over it before they came in proper range. I dropped one ahead of me and just had time to cover another with my left as it disappeared in some higher cover to the right. My eyes were gladdened, however, by some floating feathers that marked the spot he disappeared in.

After reloading I gave my dogs, who dropped to shot, permission to "fetch." Lady Bel almost immediately brought in a good sized young bird, and I sent her back to help find the other, walking in the same direction myself. On reaching the spot where I thought the bird fell, I found Fan making game with head turned back looking and waiting for me. As I drew near her she began moving slowly forward, only pausing as she heard me do so behind her. So afraid was she of getting too far ahead and flushing the bird. The scent became so strong that she almost crawled on her belly, and just as she stiffened into a point, I heard Lady Bel coming through the bushes. As she approached me I saw she had a winged bird fluttering in her mouth. She got within a few feet of me before knowing it. Suddenly she saw Fan. Slowly her tail raised to the level of her back and one front foot left the ground, making as pretty a back as I ever saw. Meantime, mind you, she had a live bird fluttering in her mouth struggling to get away. A greater proof of intelligence could not well be imagined. Reaching down I stroked her with my hand. She acknowledged the caress by a barely perceptible wag of the tail, but her eyes never for a moment left Fan's form. A few steps forward brought me alongside Fan and with a whirr-r-r up got a bird which I was fortunate enough to kill. At the command "fetch" Fan went out to retrieve it, and Lady Bel gave up the winged one she had held so long, which I killed, not by wringing its neck or thumping it against a tree, but in a more humane way—by breaking its neck between my teeth.

The last bird fired at which Fan soon brought in turned out to be a very fine old cock. The signs of an old bird are a dark orange mark over the eyes; they also have a much thicker skull than the young ones.

After a pull at my pipe and a chat with the dogs, who understood and appreciated the compliments I gave them, we began walking in the direction that most of the brood had taken. I put up six of them, getting a point on every one and killing three.

This increased my bag to six, and I had made a double shot, the first one I ever made on partridges. By a strong effort I escaped the "big-head," which feeling I had nearly succumbed to after making the double, and pointed my face towards home. I was walking along the top of one of the steep sides of a deep ravine with a creek running through it, which, by the way, is a favorite place for partridges later in the season, as it is warm and protects them from the wind. The dogs were working down below me, one on each side of the stream. I saw Fan just at the water's edge come to a stand and pointing nearly behind her. Lady Bel, seeing her from the other side, drew slowly up, reached the stream and stepped carefully into the water. When about half way across she was evidently overtaken by the fear of coming too near and encroaching on Fan's rights. So she stopped, half emerged, in mid-stream. Dreading the descent down the steep bank, I stood where I was hoping the bird would get up of its own accord. This did not occur, so I slid, scrambled and fell to the bottom and approached the dogs. I reached the stream, but had not yet disturbed a feather. A few more steps brought me on the same side as Fan. I wondered how she could retain the uncomfortable and cramped position she was in. But she did, and showed no signs of weakening either.

Nerving myself for the denouement, I pushed in ahead to flush the partridge, walking over all the ground pointed out, but failing to put up the bird. Had I not been sure of the dogs, I should have thought it was a rabbit or squirrel! Under the circumstances it completely mystified me. I looked over at my companions. They stood the same as before. I spoke to them, but they obstinately held their point, and in a way that suggested that they knew their business and thought it was just a little queer I didn't know mine. I began to think I didn't sure enough, when my eyes were attracted by a small, round spotted object just at my feet. By the Great Horn spoons! It was a turtle. The mystery was solved.

One rule that should be closely adhered to in this sport is, to always shoot. It makes no difference if you see a feather or not, throw your shot just in front of the leaves the bird's flight disturbed. You may not kill him; the chances are about nine out of ten against you. The advisability of this habit though is proved when a bird shows himself for a few feet only. There is not then a moment's hesitation as to will I or will I not shoot. But the bird is instantly covered and after some practice often killed, although the chance seems a slim one.

In regard to gun and shells the best result in partridge shooting can be obtained with a seven pound breech loader having twenty-eight inch barrels, the right hand barrel cylinder bore and left medium heavy choke. Shells for the right hand barrel (or for the barrel that is first fired) should be loaded with three and a half drams of smokeless powder, primed with black and one ounce number ten shot. Three wads should be put over the powder and one on top of shot. Shells for the other barrel should have three drams of best black powder and one ounce number eight shot. For later shooting when the birds are wilder, tougher, and better protected with feathers, use number seven and number five shot.

In the choice of dogs for partridge shooting select a setter. His long thick hair will prove invaluable as a protection against the briars. Whereas a pointer will get foot-sore after a day's hunt, and will also refuse to enter briar patches that a setter will come out of unscratched.

For a pleasant day's shoot a man's dog should be well under control, and to ensure this they must be worked for at least a week in advance of the shooting season. Otherwise they will be headstrong and rank, and will flush, although, perhaps, unintentionally, about as many birds as they stand. J. W. J.

A Congregation's Struggles Ended and a New Dowsing Here.

The Forest Grove Presbyterian congregation is in luck, and all its members promise to become rich through a strike in oil made on a few acres of ground surrounding the rickety old chapel called a church, says a Pittsburgh dispatch to the San Francisco Chronicle. The site is located about eleven miles from Pittsburgh, and is right in the center of the new Grove oil fields.

For years Deacon Boscom has been pastor of the congregation, and it took the combined receipts from a few acres of farming land, the district school and the offerings of the small congregation to keep the good man alive; but by good fortune this is all changed.

Three good oil producers have been struck during the past week, with an average output of about 1,000 barrels a day. This gives the church people a daily income of $120 from royalties, in addition to a cash bonus.

Two new wells are being sunk, which will increase the church income to $7,500 a month. One of the new wells has been dubbed "Old Hundred," because of the following revised version of the familiar hymn which one of the drillers has tacked upon the derrick:

Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,
Praise him for putting oil below,
Praise him, ye drillers, give hearty thanks,
Praise him for the overflowing tanks.

A Famous Woman Surgeon.

Mme. Ribert, the eccentric, who was the first European to practice medicine in the Turkish harems, was as skillful as most of her contemporaries. The woman's career is more romantic than most fiction. Her lover in Paris was a medical student; she devoured his text books with more avidity than he did her novels. She passed a brilliant examination at twenty-six, and went to Cairo to practice; her patients were soon number by the hundreds, but the excesses into which she plunged resulted in her incarceration in a lunatic asylum. She then sought a new career in Cochin China, and at once won the admiration of the French inhabitants. So speedily did her skill as a surgeon make her famous that she in a short time became physician to the court, and was to have operated on the Queen mother of Annam for a cataract. The day before she was to have relieved the old Queen, who had been blind for years, the wonderfully beautiful and skillful Dr. Ribert died—probably from early excesses. She drank hard in her youth and had run the gamut of Parisian and Oriental indulgence.

Muse on the Water-Melon.

Murat Halstead concludes a brief dissertation on the Georgia water-melon in the following words: "The Georgians say, and it is discouraging, that the very best melons grown in the State are so fragile they can not be transported, and that those who would enjoy the top flowers of this wonderful product of the sun and seed must go where the exquisite spheres glisten among the dewy leaves of the generous vines whose marvelous distillment of sweetness is the dainty distinction of a favored land."

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Sept. 4, 1890.

The regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders, of Union county, met on Thursday, September 4, 1890 at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, and Freeholders Bender, Briant, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Little, Pierson, Roll, Russel, Sullivan, Thompson, Trahon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West.—17

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and approved as read.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A communication from County Engineer F. A. Dunham, showing the progress made in the work on the county roads to date, was read, and on motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek ordered filed.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Committee on Jacques avenue bridge, Rahway, would respectfully report that they examined the same and would recommend the building of an I beam bridge, twelve-foot span, twenty-foot roadway; cost not to exceed one thousand dollars.

All of which is respectfully submitted, George Wright, Wm. W. Russell, Wm. Howard, Daniel O. Sullivan, Committee.

Freeholder Jones moved its adoption. On roll call adopted unanimously.

The committee on North avenue bridge, Roselle, would respectfully report that the present structure is inadequate to carry off the water. They therefore recommend that the same be replaced by new iron beam deck bridge, not to cost over $1,800. Wm. T. West, George W. Littell, Wm. W. Russell, A. Vanderbeek, George W. Doty, Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Trahon received and adopted unanimously.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the two bills of H. M. & J. F. Shanley; one of $1,288.14 and the other, $1,624.90, be paid by the county collector when the same are properly sworn to and approved by the committee.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Briant:

Resolved that a committee of five be appointed to report on the advisability of building a new bridge over the brook by the residence of D. M. Smythe on Division avenue, Summit.

On motion of Freeholder Roll adopted.

The director named the following committee: Freeholders Briant, Roll, Wright, Pierson and Jones.

By Freeholder Wright:

Resolved, That the committee on Jacques avenue bridge be authorized to proceed to build the same according to accommodation of committee, at a cost not to exceed one thousand dollars.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder West moved the board go into executive session, which was carried.

Resolved, That the clerk of this board notify the contractors on all county roads now in course of construction when the time limit of their respective contracts will expire, and also that the county will expect such roads completed and ready to be turned over to the county at that time.

W. T. West, Chairman, Geo. Kyte, Sec.

On motion of Freeholder Howard, adopted unanimously.

A RUSSIAN TRAGEDY.

A Mother and Five Daughters Put Themselves to Death.

The Moscow police were notified by a woman who cooked for the Dobroveroff family that she had been unable to enter the house, and that all day no one had been seen coming out. The door of the Dobroveroff apartment was accordingly broken open, and in the first room entered, the dead body of a woman about sixty-four years old was found stretched on the bed. It was the body of the mother of the family, who had been dead several days. On a table near the bed stood the image of a saint.

The door leading into the next room was closed, and all cracks were carefully filled with small pieces of cotton. When this door was broken open a ghastly sight was revealed. On the floor were stretched five dead women; four had laid themselves along the wall, placing cushions under their heads, while the fifth had thrown herself in the middle of the room at the feet of her sisters, and lay with no cushion under her head and with a handkerchief covering the face.

They were the five daughters of the woman in the first room. Their ages ranged from twenty to thirty-two years. The youngest is said to have been very beautiful, and there were evidences that she was not as reconciled to her fate as were her other four sisters. On a trunk near by was a note signed by the five sisters. It read: "We beg that no one be accused of our death."

Four names were written in a firm and steady hand. The fifth betrayed emotion. It was the name of Amelia, the youngest sister. Two sealed letters addressed to woman friends contained thirty roubles to pay some small debts owed by the unfortunate sisters. The cause of death was apparent: In the room was two heaters, in the bottom of which still smouldered a few pieces of charcoal.

Another sorry sight was revealed in a third room, where lay twenty dead bodies—seventeen were cats, three dogs. The pets had all been dosed with strychnine to prevent their falling in the hands of inconsiderate masters.

The pitiable story revealed at the inquest was that the daughters, when told that their mother's disease was incurable, placed forty roubles in the hands of a friend, whom they asked to attend to the last rites of their beloved dead. It would be too harrowing, they said, to look after all the details themselves. It was near the Easter season, and they filled a basket with provisions, cakes and eggs, and asked to have them distributed among the poor.

From the time their mother died the daughters touched no particle of food, but buying a quantity of brandy, they induced the cook to drink herself tipsy, and then allowed her to go to the theater with her lover. While she was away they deliberately prepared themselves for death. Each was dressed in a white chemise and a black skirt.

The only reason given for their suicide was their abject misery.—Berlin Letter.

DRUDGERY IN LITERATURE.

Genuine Patient Work the Price of Literary Success.

Whether one shall find drudgery in literature or not, depends partly on temperament or circumstances and on the work one desires to accomplish. If a writer is content to let essays and stories bubble up easily from his mind, on such themes as may please him at the moment, or if he be in a position to stay his pen when he is tired and do nothing more until he is again inclined to work, then, no doubt, he may pursue the profession of literature without drudgery. All are not so lucky or indifferent or gifted as to be able to do this.

Walter Scott turned off his inimitable "copy" in a few hours each day, with people and dogs making noise around him. But Dickens had to drudge to such an extent that his health was imperiled, even before he tried to carry out his ambition of being a country gentleman. Thackeray confessed that he never set himself to the task of novel writing at his desk without a terrible effort, and that he always laid down his pen with a sense of glad relief.

Notwithstanding the delicious "literary gossip" paragraphs, which assure us that four or five hours a day will suffice for the production of masterpieces, George Parsons Lathrop says, in the New York Independent, most of the authors whom he has known are obliged to work hard for twelve or sixteen hours a day at least, which leaves them very little time for leisure or pleasure. They are compelled to do this even at times when they would rather rest or sleep, or eat and drink and be merry. "I, myself," says Lathrop, "have often bowed to this necessity of working continuously without sleep or meat or amusement; and should long since have concluded that it must be owing to my own stupidity, but for the fact of discovering that other authors who are much more in the world's eye, have to do the same sort of thing. I love my kind of work, I revere the art which I serve as earnestly as any one can; but when my fingers have clutched a penholder for eight or ten hours at a stretch, and the whole of such brain and nerve power as I possess has been brought to bear during that time, I confess that a due regard for veracity will not allow me to assert that the process has not involved drudgery. A redeeming and inspiring charm there always is, even in such arduous labors. I have found comfort in toilsome hack work, because it is always satisfactory to perform even obscure service thoroughly and to the best of one's power, and because by such work I could earn time to do higher and better things, which were quite certain not to win for me that cash compensation whereby the mortal part of a man is kept going. But, simply on the ground that there is a great and enduring delight in the severest literary exertion, to spread a notion that the professional author need not undergo drudgery seems to me mischievous. It arouses false hope in young aspirants who have not yet measured the tremendous problem of performing the best work under endless discouragements and at the cost of ceaseless, patient toil."

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrivel and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties
are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that affect the weaker sex. It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Socialite) Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, specially suited for dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.
See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.

THE NEW RILEY.

The fad among the poets now is imitating Jim;
They make their verses tumble down in sections, just like him;
The Whitcomb Riley wording leads you down to its rhyme:
This.
Line
Up
Suppose we change the thing and boost 'em
Suppose you are describing how you met a summer girl
And wooed, and won, and lost her, in Narragansett's whirl;
You thought you had your heiress hooked and landed high and dry,
High.
Sky
Shooted
But she was fooling, and your plans got
Perhaps you're on the street, and make your plans to be a bear;
You buy a lot of wheat "dirt cheap," and then you get a scare;
You let it go for nothing, and before quotations close,
Goes.
She

It takes a sudden spurt, you see, and
And scores of things might be described with like poetic wiles,
The theater hat, the bonnet's bill—all Eiffel tower styles;
With novelties and mark-down sales, and bargain lots to rhyme,

THE WEDDING RING.

Its History Runs Back to the Beginning of Recorded Time.

In Ancient Days It Was Used as an Emblem of Betrothal—The Important Part It Plays in the Marriage Ceremony of the Present.

It is an incontrovertible fact that every woman feels a certain interest in the subject of wedding rings. And, indeed, it is natural enough that this should be so. Type and symbol beyond aught else of the most important crisis in a woman's life, the wedding ring must necessarily be fraught with fascination for wife and maid, for old and young alike.

Every one knows that rings were worn in old Bible days, though what part they originally played in the nuptial ceremony is not so clear. But at any rate they form an important portion of the wedding service among the modern Jews, the regulations in force among them on this head being very strict. The ring must in every case be examined and certified by the officiating rabbi of the synagogue, to make sure that it is of the prescribed value, and the simple operation of placing it upon the finger is so binding that this alone, apart from any other portion of the ceremony, is considered to constitute a legal marriage.

In point of fact, however, it is not from the Jews, but from the Romans that the nations of modern Europe derive their wedding ring. Among the ancient masters of the world, rings were commonly used as part of the rite of betrothal. But it is worth while to notice that there was one special difference between the ancient and the modern use of rings in this respect. In their original employment they were really not wedding but betrothal rings; that is, they were given and taken as the public expression of a man's promise to a woman that he would marry her. As a learned writer has told us in regard to the early Italians, "a man who wished to pledge his faith to a woman, placed a ring upon her finger, which is at the present day preserved for the benediction of marriage."

Two points are thus to be remembered—that in the old days there were two distinct ceremonies—the betrothal and the actual wedding—both of which were equally essential to the full solemnization of a marriage; and also that the ring was originally used, not for the second ceremony, but for the first. Such was the custom during the pagan era; and so it remained throughout the early centuries of Christianity. Marriage even then, and for a very considerable period afterwards, was regarded in the light of a civil contract only, and was entered into before a magistrate; while the ring itself was used as the symbol of promise in the preliminary rite of betrothal.

Gradually, however, these two ceremonies became merged into one by the loss on the part of the betrothal of its first formal character. For some time after this, and, in consequence of it, there was no small uncertainty in the use of the ring, which was not unfrequently left out of the business altogether. But, after awhile, it reasserted its importance, and once more came into general use. Moreover, it now began for the first time to limit itself habitually to the single hoop of plain gold—a form which has become inseparably connected with all our modern notions of what the wedding ring should be.

It will thus be seen—to the surprise, doubtless, of not a few readers—that the wedding ring is not a Christian institution at all, but rather one which we have inherited, along with so much else in our ceremonial, directly from classical antiquity. This leads the writer to mention a curious point in connection with its common employment. In pagan Rome the betrothal ring was worn on the third finger (the one next to the little finger) of the left hand, as it is to-day. This position is said to have been chosen from the belief—unfounded, of course—that there was a vein or nerve running directly from that finger to the heart, a belief that was accepted, not alone by the ignorant masses, but also by the learned men—the doctors and philosophers of the time. But in early Christian days a good deal of confusion seems to have prevailed upon the matter, as a result of which the ring was often placed and worn upon the woman's right hand. In the old Saulsbury Manual is found specific reference to this fact in a very singular passage, which throws some interesting light on the subject of the wedding ceremony in general. From this we learn that the bridegroom was to receive the ring from the priest, who had blessed it (and this blessing, it may be remarked, is still hinted at in the marriage service of the English Episcopal church); and, then holding the right hand of the bride in his own left hand, he was to recite the words: "With this ring I thee wed." Then he was to place the ring on the right-hand thumb, saying: "In the name of the Father;" then on the first finger with the words: "and of the Son;" then on the second finger, adding: "and Holy Ghost," and finally, with the words closing: "Amen," on the third finger, where it was to remain. But in course of time uniformity was established in favor of the left hand, and there is no longer room for question concerning this important point. Of course, no one acquainted with the marriage service of the English Episcopal church needs to be told that it is absolutely necessary, according to the rites of that church, that a ring should be employed. But beyond the simple ordinance that a ring there must be, the church makes no specific conditions, so that (curious as it may appear) a ring of any size or weight, material or pattern, will serve the purpose perfectly well. It is naturally enough not often that one has to chronicle any departure from recognized custom in this regard; but such departures do from time to time occur. A story is told of two persons who came to church and requested to be married with the church key, as the parochial authorities had not furnished them with a ring." The clerk, it is said, not unnaturally, felt "some delicacy" about this, and finally found another way out of the difficulty. He fetched an old curtain ring from his own house and with this extraordinary article the loving couple were duly united in the bonds of holy matrimony. But, though this particular clerk saw fit to hesitate, the church key has been employed, and that more than once, in place of the ring during the last hundred years. Even the Duke of Hamilton "was married at May Fair with a bed-curtain ring." Nor does this by any means exhaust the list of eccentric makeshifts. To give my one other instance, it is a matter of history that a lady was once married with a ring of leather cut transversely from the finger of the bridegroom's glove.

Thus the plain gold hoop now sanctioned by long usage and surrounded as it is by untold associations, is by no means so essential to the marriage ordinance as most people suppose. Indeed, it is only during more recent years that it has been accepted as the only proper form of wedding-ring; for in former days rings used for marriage were frequently chased, or set with stones, or inscribed on the inside or outside with names, initials, or mottoes. One might give a long list of these mottoes, or posies as they were called, but it would hardly be found interesting or instructive; for they were not as a rule distinguished by great poetic ability or marked originality of thought.

So it appears that the wedding-ring, like all things human, has its history and its romance. Nowadays it may indeed be said that its adventures are well-nigh over. Perhaps so. But, be that as it may, the writer feels safe in prophesying that so long as hearts beat in unison to the same hopes, the same aspirations, the same desires, so long will the wedding-ring keep its hold upon us all, as the enduring symbol of faith and sacrifice and love.—Detroit Free Press.

THE PROFESSOR AHEAD.

Scholastic Jokes That Worked on the Boomerang Principle.

A teacher's standing, says the Lewiston (Me.) Journal, frequently depends more on his ability to deal with human nature than with the intricate problems of the text-books, and this applies to colleges as well as primary schools. A well-known professor of one of our Maine colleges has always been dreaded more by the incoming freshman class than any other man on the faculty. This feeling wears away somewhat during the last part of the course, but there is always an awe-inspired atmosphere as thick as a Down-East fog-bank in this man's class-room, be it filled with quaking freshmen, or self-satisfied seniors. Jokes have, however, frequently been tried on him, since college boys are very brave when they think their tracks are covered, but the jokes have usually been found to have a double back-action kick, like an old flint-lock musket.

With the expectation of getting an "adjourn" from his recitation the next day, some scamp one night broke into this professor's class-room and painted every seat in the room with fresh paint. When the class assembled the next day, the professor said very blandly: "You can sit down, gentlemen, or stand up, just as you please. Mr. A——, will you please demonstrate—," etc.

The class stood for the full hour, its members finding relief by standing first on one foot and then on another.

On another occasion when the mercury had dropped below zero another attempt was made to get an "adjourn." The stove and every window was removed from the recitation-room, but the professor was found there at the usual hour seated comfortably in his chair with overcoat, winter cap and woolen gloves on, and without discomfort to himself conducted a recitation of an hour's length, with heaven's breezes wandering uninterruptedly through the room.

RESCUED FROM SLAVERY.

Congo and Angola Blacks Who Live Far From Their Old Home.

Scattered along the coast of West Africa in Sierra Leone and Liberia are a number of settlements known as Angola town and Congo town. The ancestors of the people who live in these little hamlets were born hundreds of miles south of the places where their children are found to-day. They were natives of Angola and the Congo region. Many of them belong to the great Bantee family, and they know very different languages from those of the negro tribes among whom they now live.

These handfuls of Southern African people scattered among the inhabitants of Liberia and Sierra Leone are more fortunate than many thousands of their friends who toiled away their lives as slaves on the plantations of the West Indies and Brazil. For these settlements were made by rescued slaves, who were taken by the cruisers of the civilized nations from the holds of slave vessels. They were bound for the West Indies or Brazil, for very few of the Congo or Angola blacks were brought to this country. Probably ninety-nine in a hundred of the black residents of this country came originally from the west coast, between Senegambia and Cameroons, while Brazil received most of her hundreds of thousands of slaves from Congoland and Angola.

So these more fortunate captives, who were rescued before they had been taken far from their native land, were settled far north of the Congo at points where they could be protected against slavers. There they have lived ever since, and not a few of the children born in their new homes still talk the languages of the southern tribes. Many of them have been Christianized, are tolerably industrious, and their lot has been quite fortunate, considering the terrible fate they so narrowly escaped.

Awhile ago Mr. H. Chatelain visited the Angola settlement at Sierra Leone. He says in the African News that the style of the houses, the methods of the field cultivation, and the features of the people carried him at once back to Angola, where he had long resided. In one house he found an old man, to whom he spoke in Kimbunder, one of the languages of Angola. The old man was surprised and overjoyed, and, opening his shutters, called out to his neighbor to come and see the man who had been in Angola and spoke Kimbunder. They crowded around, and were greatly surprised to see a white man who could talk with them in a language they had not heard from others since they were shipped from Loanda as slaves.

Chatelain found that they had entirely discarded their old belief in charms and fetiches, and have espoused the faith the missionaries taught them. Some of these people wished to return with their white friend to the old home of their fathers, but he could not take them. There are thousands of these people in the West Indies and Brazil who have vivid recollections of Angola and Congoland, but never expect to see their native shores again.

The people of Paynesville, Liberia, are nearly all released slaves of Congo origin. About two years ago many of them were seized with a craze to return to the Congo. The Congo State was glad to encourage this immigration, for the Liberian Congoese are industrious, and have made considerable progress. About fifty of them went back and settled near the mouth of the river. The Congo Government gave them ten acres of land each and rations for a year. They are not pleased, however, with the change they have made, and have written discouraging letters to Liberia that have stopped further immigration. Bishop Taylor reports the Paynesville Congoese as saying, after they had heard from their friends: "We no go to Congo no more. Liberia is the home dat God give us, and we stop here till He calls us."—N. Y. Sun.

LONDON'S NOTABLES.

Well-Known Englishmen Seen in Hyde Park.

Sir George Chetwynd, Lord Curzon, Lord Dudley, Sir John Astley and Many Others Who Are Known All Over the World.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
(Special London Letter.)

The vast size of London is in no way more plainly shown than by the number of men who rise to the surface of its social sea for a period, and after a short summer of notoriety disappear and leave not a ripple behind them. London is the capital of a mighty nation, and its social world is the social world of Great Britain and its colonies. No other city can claim this, not even Paris, although the latter comes nearer to it than any other.

A seat in Hyde Park in the Row costs but a penny, and yet the show provided for that small sum exceeds any thing the most generous caterer to public amusement can show. All the world's a stage, we hear, and all the men are players. On this mimic and microscopic stage, not twenty feet wide and half a mile long, can be seen a multitude whose histories would, if written, fill more books than have yet been written, and outrival the strongest works of fiction that have yet been presented.

Here comes Sir George Chetwynd. Well-dressed, good-looking and debonair. His history shows that he knows the seamy side as well as the sunny side of life. His face recalls the fracas between Lord Lonsdale (he of the Violet Cameron opera troupe fame), and Sir George over the disputed question of a photograph of the Jersey Lily which the Baronet had in his possession and declined to give up.

Behind him walks a man of a very different stamp—Lord Curzon. The future heir to a wealthy earldom, he has taken to politics, and leads a quiet and cleanly life. A quiet, well-mannered man, he takes walks abroad with comfort, sees his friends, watches his wife driving a four-in hand as only Lady Curzon can drive one, and goes home to his luncheon with comfort and contentment. He floats on a calm and peaceful sea, and tempests that threaten to wreck others do not come near him.

Another character of a very different kind is W. B. Lloyd Price, one of the best-known sportsmen in England. His hobby is shooting, and at his Welsh country seat the annual slaughter of game is immense. Three and four thousand rabbits a day are often killed, and his cook is as great an artist as his gamekeeper is a game preserver.

A tall, dudish-looking figure with a round face and dark hair and eyes, well dressed, with a distinct air of fashion, but the indescribable roue air of fast life about him, and yet a good-natured, boyish face withal, shows that Lord Dudley is in London and has come out for a stroll. FOR THE BABY.

Some Valuable Suggestions Concerning Warm, Sensible and Comfortable Clothing.

Ill-fitting and uncomfortable clothing is responsible for much of the ill nature displayed by men and women, and has made many a baby cross and fretful, that suitably clothed would have been happy and contented.

The material of a baby's clothes should be soft and fine. When the cost must be carefully counted, it is wise to discard all trimming and put the money thus saved on the quality and quantity of material. Plenty of garments are necessary, for a healthy, playful child and dirt seem to have a mutual attraction for each other.

Pretty percales, soft cambrics and flannels, in these days of low prices, can be bought very reasonably. Neatly made, and when the time can be allowed, finished by hand, they are dainty enough to satisfy any one.

When laundried, no starch ought to be put in any of baby's clothes. Indeed, soft, graceful folds are now so much admired that stiff starched dresses and skirts are things of the past for any one.

A wrapper of white cambric, like Fig. 1, is a most useful garment for a baby. It is cut in two pieces only. The seam is in the middle of back. A hem an inch wide should be allowed for around the bottom and up each side of the front. A narrow frill of soft lace is put around the neck and the bottom of the sleeves. A row of feather-stitching ornaments each side of the front. It is worked just inside the hem with crochet cord, No. 12. The wrapper is buttoned with small, white, pearl buttons.

Percale with a white ground, over which there is a small figure of blue or pink, will make a pretty wrapper, simply finished with a hem. Such a garment will be found very convenient to put on baby in the morning until ready for its bath.

In winter, when additional warmth is desirable, a blue or pink flannel wrapper will prove to be a thing not only of beauty but comfort also. When flannel is used, the edge should be finished with a binding of narrow ribbon of the same color as the material.

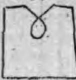

FIG. 2. DIAGRAM FOR CUTTING.

The diagram (Fig. 2) shows exactly how the wrapper is cut. The front edges are straight and the back seam is bias. It is best to first cut a paper pattern the exact size wanted, then there is sure to be no waste of material. Unless the goods are very wide, twice the length of the wrapper will be required. The sleeves can be cut out of the pieces that come off of the sides and should be loose enough to slip on easily.

A pretty sack (Fig. 3) can be cut by this same pattern, by making it shorter and rounding the corners. Flannel or cashmere are suitable materials.

Cream white flannel makes a very dainty sack. It can be finished with a narrow roll hem and an edge crocheted of cream white two-threaded Saxony yarn. Cashmere in any pale shade looks well in these little sacks, and another pretty finish is a small scallop buttonhole stitched with silk of the same shade as the cashmere.

An apron for a child two or three years old can be cut by this same pattern. Fold the print or gingham in the center of the width and place the straight edge of the pattern on the fold. This will make the apron bias at the back. Larger or smaller gores will have to be put on at the lower part of the back, according to the material used.

The apron is hemmed around the bottom, and the neck finished with a narrow ruffle. Buttons and buttonholes close it at the back. The bias edges on which the buttons are sewed and in which the buttonholes are worked are faced with a straight strip of the material. This prevents them pulling out of place when laundried. Such aprons are easily made and serve to protect the dress.—Margaret Ryder, in Country Gentleman.

THE FULL COUNTY TICKET.

The Democrats of Union county have completed their ticket, which [illegible] exceptionally good [illegible] the fact that the Republicans [illegible] that [illegible] in Convention [illegible] their [illegible].

In the person of Frederick C. Marsh for State Senator, the people of Union county have a candidate to be proud of. His brilliant career in the Legislature, [illegible] of Trenton, where [illegible] the recognized leader of his party, [illegible] him to the front rank as an honest and faithful public servant, and the [illegible] nomination [illegible] by the Democratic Convention last Monday, [illegible] of his worth and [illegible]. He [illegible] becomes a Democratic Senator from Union. Mr. Marsh was born at Elizabethport in 1857, and is therefore thirty-three years of age.

William H. Hicks, the candidate for Sheriff, was born in [illegible] county, this State, in 1837, and is a [illegible] merchant in Elizabethport. He is a man that will be no tool of any party, and has sound business views. His [illegible] nomination for Sheriff by [illegible] the present Convention, [illegible] of his popularity and worth. That he will receive many votes from his political opponents, [illegible] and his triumphant election [illegible] fact.

The gentlemen nominated for Assembly in the three districts—John Carroll, of Elizabethport, in the First; Thomas F. Lane, of Summit, in the Second, and Alfred B. Cook, of Rahway, in the Third, are all of well-known ability and worth, and should receive the hearty support of the voters of the county.

Now let us all pull together and elect the splendid ticket [illegible], which will be found in full at the head of our columns.

THE CAUSE OF THE PEOPLE.

The Democracy is the party of the people.

It was organized for the [illegible] purpose of maintaining [illegible] a government of the people and for the people, equal protection and [illegible] for all people, irrespective of birth, [illegible] condition, and in opposition to [illegible] ideas of class [illegible] which found [illegible] advocates before and even after the formation of the Constitution of the United States.

That was the original mission of the Democratic party, and along that pathway of patriotic duty it has [illegible] marched onward to the present day, keeping its ranks [illegible], its banner unfurled, and bravely [illegible] against every [illegible] kind of [illegible] and persecution.

Many Democrats [illegible] have been routed and driven from the political field, while others, [illegible] different garb, but [illegible] by the same [illegible], have renewed [illegible] the [illegible] defenders of popular rights.

Various have been the [illegible] to abridge the [illegible] of the people, the [illegible], since the Federal party [illegible] that the "rich and well born" should alone be permitted to wield the [illegible] of governing authority, and [illegible] for special privileges [illegible].

Now, under the [illegible] pretence of protecting American labor, a [illegible] plan has been [illegible] in Congressional and Executive [illegible] through the operation of which the [illegible] millions must stagger under [illegible] increased living expenses, [illegible] in order that the [illegible] may [illegible] of public bounty.

It is the same old [illegible] which a [illegible] of honest labor.

That is a condition, not a theory, and all the McKinleys, Reeds and Wanamakers in the land cannot [illegible] out the ugly fact.

The rights of the people are still in jeopardy.

The party of Democracy continues to be their [illegible] defender.

Democrats and Independents! Do your whole duty for the cause of equal and exact justice!

Democrats [illegible] never had a better [illegible] to rebuke [illegible] Republican rule [illegible] in the nomination of Fred. C. Marsh for Senator and William H. Hicks for Sheriff.

That was a [illegible] made by [illegible] James E. Martine, at the [illegible] of the Democratic Convention on Monday at Elizabeth. "When [illegible] for high honors?"

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.

Fred. C. Marsh Nominated for Senator and William H. Hicks for Sheriff.

The Democratic County Convention held in Elizabeth, at Library Hall, on Monday was the most harmonious gathering held in years.

The Convention was called to order at 2 P. M., by Thomas D. [illegible], Chairman of the County Executive Committee, and City Attorney [illegible] Berry, of Rahway, was elected Chairman. The following were chosen Vice-Presidents: Ex-Assemblyman Peter L. Hughes and Alderman [illegible], of Elizabeth; Robert J. [illegible], of Summit; William McManus, of Rahway. Justice Charles Lambert, of Rahway, and [illegible] Edward Nugent, of Elizabeth, were elected Secretaries.

The following Committee on Credentials was then appointed by the Chair: Gen. J. Augustus Fay, Alderman P. H. Gilhooly, [illegible] D. Moffett. The Committee reported the credentials of all the delegations as correct. New Providence had no representative and the vacancy was filled by the Convention.

The Chair appointed as the Committee on Resolutions Editor Thomas F. Lane, of Summit; James E. Martine, of Plainfield; Alderman David D. [illegible], of Elizabeth.

The Committee on Resolutions reported the following, which were adopted with tremendous applause, particularly that portion arraigning the Republican Freeholders:

Resolved, That we, the Democrats of Union county, in Convention assembled, take this opportunity to affirm our fidelity to the principles of the Democratic party and warmly indorse and approve the [illegible] of our Representatives in Congress [illegible] the poor for the benefit of the rich.

We oppose all [illegible] in the expenditure of public funds, whether by National, State, county or city [illegible].

We condemn the reckless extravagance of the Republican Board of Freeholders in the county road system, and [illegible] that the strictest economy and most rigid [illegible] shall be practised in all expenditures of public money.

We denounce the [illegible] of the Republican [illegible] the truth as to the [illegible] of the services of our representative, [illegible].

We pledge our [illegible], undivided and hearty support to the candidates of this Convention.

On a call for nominations ex-Judge Gilhooly, of the First Ward, Elizabeth, in an eloquent speech, presented the name of Frederick C. Marsh for Senator.

Esquire Louis F. Wadsworth, of this city, ably seconded the nomination of Assemblyman Marsh, and every ward and township followed suit. The nomination was made by acclamation amid wild applause.

Nominations for Sheriff was then called for. The Sixth Ward of Elizabeth and Union and Springfield townships named Freeholder George W. Doty.

William H. Hicks was nominated in an eloquent speech by John C. Ogle, of the Second Ward, Elizabeth, amid loud cheers. Hicks was seconded by seven wards of the eight in Elizabeth and by most of the townships. Plainfield made no nomination.

Mr. James E. Martine made an impassionate appeal for harmony, and moved that the nomination be made by acclamation, but the delegation from Union would not have it, their Chairman saying that they did not want any of Czar Reed's choking of the minority to prevail in a Democratic convention.

This remark was greeted with uproarious applause, and a ballot was ordered, which resulted: Hicks, 119; Doty, 8. On motion of [illegible] Sayre, of Union, the nomination of William H. Hicks was then made unanimous amid prolonged cheering, and the band struck up a stirring melody.

Dr. W. C. Boone, of Plainfield, and Dr. Walter Clark, of Rahway, were nominated for Coroners.

Messrs. Louis F. Wadsworth, Judge Gilhooly, Gen. A. Fay and Mr. Ogle, were appointed a Committee to present the candidates before the Convention. Upon their appearance they were greeted with prolonged cheers. Both gentlemen made ringing speeches, and Mr. Marsh promised, if his health permitted, to stump every ward and hamlet in the interest of the ticket. The music was furnished during the proceedings by Nichol's band of Elizabeth.

James E. Martine addressed the Convention in a rousing speech, scoring the Republican press for the libels circulating about Congressman Geissenhainer, and as refutation of their charges read a personal letter from Mr. Geissenhainer fully explaining his attitude on the Elizabeth Public Building bill and showing that it was solely owing to Speaker Reed's obstinate refusal to recognize him that the bill was not acted upon, as it was on the calendar.

The nominations made at the Democratic County Convention in Somerville, on Monday last, were as follows:

For Senator—William J. Keyes, of South Branch.

For Assembly—James Bergen, of Bridgewater.

For County Clerk—Matthew Vanderveer.

John Carroll, of the Second Ward, Elizabeth, was on Monday nominated for Assembly, in the First District.

The remarks of Jas. E. Martine, Esq., and Judge Louis F. Wadsworth, at the late Democratic County Convention at Elizabeth, were received with the loud applause they deserved.

Another defection from the Republican party is announced. Howard McSherry, a prominent politician of New Brunswick, has announced his severance with the party he has affiliated with for years.

* * *

The Democrats of Somerset county have put in nomination excellent candidates for Senator and Assemblyman in the persons of W. J. Keyes for State Senator, James G. Bergen for member of Assembly, and Matthew Vanderveer for County Clerk. They will be elected by rousing majorities, as they deserve to be.

The Republican campaign managers are [illegible] through the mails [illegible] and brightly printed cards, bearing the words—"The G. O. P." and "The Grand Old Flag," all intended to attract the eyes and feelings of the voter. This is a very gross and very glaring violation of one of the last laws passed by the late session of Congress, namely, one making it a misdemeanor to use the United States flag for advertising, or any other than patriotic purposes. The penalty for the violation is $50, to which may be added imprisonment for the period of thirty days. The law is in keeping with public sentiment and should be strictly observed and enforced.

A WESTERN SKETCH OF EX-MAYOR RANDOLPH.

[illegible] His Biography in the [illegible] in the History of the Illinois Central Railroad.

There has just been published in Chicago a Historical Sketch of the great Illinois-Central Railroad together with a brief biographical record of its incorporators and some of its early officers. The volume is by William K. Ackerman, who has been connected with the company in various capacities for a period of nearly thirty-two years—being its President from 1877 to 1883. Among the officers honored with a biography is L. V. F. Randolph, the best Mayor Plainfield ever had. Here is what the book says of him:

Lewis V. F. Randolph was born in Somerville, New Jersey, May 16, 1838. He came of a family which had then dwelt in New Jersey 200 years and was descended from an English gentleman, Edward Fitz Randolph, who had espoused the Puritan faith and whose wife, Elizabeth Blossom, was also one of the earliest arrivals of the Pilgrim stock. His mother was of an old Dutch family whose ancestors had come to Long Island and afterward to New Jersey, long prior to the American revolution. Lewis studied hard at Plainfield, a pleasant town near Somerville, and made good progress in mathematics and the languages. His father died when he was but ten years old and he, being an only son with several sisters, left school while still a boy, turning from the alluring offer of a university education made by kind friends, to throw his youthful energies into business activity. At first, he was cashier and salesman for a mercantile firm, and afterward spent nearly ten years—1854 to 1863 inclusive—in the American Exchange Bank, New York, rising through various clerical positions from year to year. About the latter end of this period of service, he enlisted as a soldier in the Union army and served in it until after the confederates were driven back from their sally into Pennsylvania. In 1864, he entered the president's office of the Illinois-Central Railroad Company as private-secretary, and was soon afterward sent to the company's money-department at Chicago. Later on, he was recalled to the financial office in New York and elected assistant-treasurer. In 1873, he was chosen a director by the stockholders and, in 1874, he was elected treasurer of the company.

Besides discharging the duties of the positions above named, Mr. Randolph has filled other places of public trust, including that of mayor of Plainfield, New Jersey; he is also known as a public speaker and writer.

Mr. Randolph was as an office-manager a careful disciplinarian. Being thoroughly versed in analysis and an accurate and efficient accountant, these qualifications rendered his services to the company, at all times, most valuable but especially at certain important periods in its financial affairs. He was ever punctiliously correct in all transactions involving financial operations, and in these his banking education and experience served him well. He was conscientious in his devotion to duty; and no officer of the company ever enjoyed more fully or continuously the confidence and respect of the board of directors. In 1884, he declined a reelection as director, and, in 1885, resigned the treasurership of the company. He is still a trustee of several mortgages on the company's lines. After spending a short time in a successful quest for health among the higher altitudes of the Rocky-Mountain Country, he returned, in 1887, to New York and accepted an offer, from the executors of Hon. Samuel J. Tilden, to assist them in the care of the large estate committed to their management.

Patrick Boyle's Hand Broken.

There were three accidents at the Potter Press Works, Monday, but only one was serious. Patrick Boyle was so unfortunate as to have a rack hanger fall on his left hand and mash it. It was dressed at Muhlenberg Hospital.

An accident seldom happens at Potter's, and when it does the benefit association formed among the employees, contributes to the victim's support while he is laid off.

Mr. Titsworth's Life Saved.

Conductor Bowlby, of the drill crew of Engine 30, saved the life of Edward B. Titsworth, Tuesday morning. As the 7:59 train for New York was running past the station to back up for the coaches on the siding, Mr. Titsworth, who is an aged man, stepped from behind some coal cars right in front of the rushing locomotive. Bowlby seized him just in time to drag him from the jaws of death. Those who saw it lost their breath.

Nothing Has [illegible] Stirred the People in Years.

The talk of the town since Saturday, has been the publication in The Press of the documentary evidence of the deal between the Water Works company, that has a contract from the city, and the Water Supply company, that has a charter from the legislature.

Meanwhile all work is stopped, and it is even betting that Plainfield won't have water in five years. Public indignation is yet but rumbling, still it grows hourly in the deeps and will burst forth with a mighty noise in time.

Plainfield Methodists Say Let the Women Vote.

The vote of the Plainfield Methodist Episcopal church on the question "Shall women be eligible to election as delegates to the electoral and general conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church?" was in favor of all church members, whatever the sex, being eligible as delegates. The result of the voting on this question among the congregations throughout the State will be reported to the local conference, and will have an influence on the action of the conference in the matter. In this connection the Newark Advertiser remarks as follows:

> Votes are being taken in the Methodist churches of this city to determine whether they desire to have women eligible for membership in the General Conference. The [illegible] is very [illegible] negative, and the [illegible] fact is that a majority of the voters are women. It is another illustration of the usual indifference of the gentler sex to the rights of suffrage. The ladies do not vote because they don't want to vote. Nothing else hinders them.

Plainfield's First Delinquent Tax Prisoner.

Those who are of the opinion that the law for imprisoning citizens who refuse to pay their taxes is not in operation may learn a lesson from the case of Edward Birmingham, of Sixth street, who has just been experiencing the hardships resulting from obstinacy. Birmingham owed the City of Plainfield for several years' poll tax and interest, but after repeatedly declining to settle with Delinquent Collector Nash he was warned that he must pay or go to jail. This seemed to be received by him as an idle threat, and as a result he was arrested at his place of employment, the Potter Press Works, and taken to Elizabeth. Justice Nash, Judge Codington and Constable Moffett all offered him every advantage, but he refused, even with the doors of his cell in the County Jail in sight, to accept any terms whatever, declining both the offer of a loan and the opportunity to pay the debt by weekly installments of fifty cents. After spending two or three days in confinement, however, he recognized the fact that the law providing for the imprisonment of delinquent taxpayers was a sober reality, and upon reflection he decided to pay what was owing. On receipt of the proper amount, the authorities released the prisoner.

JUMPED FROM A FLYING TRAIN.

A Young Married Man from the South Meets with Disaster in Plainfield.

Emil Proger, a young man who has a wife at Cumberland, Maryland, was seriously injured on the Jersey Central Railroad between the Netherwood and Plainfield at three Tuesday. He was stealing a ride on a train, and jumped when he saw a brakeman coming towards him. The train was moving at rapid speed, and it was at first feared that he was killed outright. The thigh of one leg was fractured, and the knee of the other was terribly cut. He was also bruised severely about the body, and received several gashes from the sharp edges of the rock-road ballast against which he was hurled. He was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital and placed under the tender care of Matron Walrad.

A STRANGER, AND THEY TOOK HIM IN.

South Plainfield Philistines Fleece a Waterbury Watchman.

Thomas O'Rourke, whose history for several hours past is to him a total blank, is a patient at the Muhlenberg Hospital, and is enjoying himself so much, in spite of a severely sprained ankle, that he isn't greatly sorry that he came.

Thomas says that his home is at Waterbury, Conn., where he followed the profession of night watchman, but for some time he has been at work in the neighborhood of this city. Tuesday morning he reached the delectable region of South Plainfield with $15 in his inside pocket. The discerning denizens were not long in recognizing him as a man of wealth, and speedily they introduced him to their friend, the keeper of the village tavern. O'Rourke remembered that his new acquaintances were a jolly lot, and that they made him drink a good deal of beer and give them his money, but what happened after that he doesn't recollect. When he dimly recovered his senses this morning the sun was rising and he was being deposited by two men from a resting-place in the bottom of a wagon to a berth on the flooring of the Muhlenberg Hospital steps. There Matron Walrad found him, groaning with the pain of his ankle. Now he occupies one of the most comfortable cots in the institution, and his ankle is nicely dressed. But he doesn't know how he got hurt.

The Same After All.

The Summer Girl has gone her way;
The bathing suit is laid away
To shine again another day.

And now the Winter Girl has come,
So changed is she that we are dumb;
And yet she keeps on chewing gum.

What Possible President Depew Thinks of Grover Cleveland.

At a recent dinner given in New York City to Gen. Roger A. Pryor in honor of his appointment to the judicial bench, Mr. Chauncey M. Depew paid the following tribute to Grover Cleveland:

"If I were asked to name the most forceful character in American life, the man who best represents the energy, the unswerving determination and the courage of the true American, the man who knows duty, and it alone, when public service commands it, the man who wars in war and is for peace in peace, I would name Gen. W. T. Sherman; but if I am to name the typical American, the man who loves and believes in his country beyond anything else, the man who, determining once in what direction his duty leads, cannot be swerved from the path—the man who is doggedly persistent in what he believes to be right—the man who thinks not of self, but of his country and its needs, I would name Grover Cleveland. What he has accomplished is the very highest tribute to the possibilities of American citizenship. A country lawyer in the city of Buffalo, he shed lustre upon the high profession which he had chosen. As the mayor of his native city he presented as his record a clean and economical administration. Coming into the highest position in the land without previous experience and with scarcely a precedent to guide him in the conditions which surround him, he won the affection of his party and commanded the respect and admiration of his opponents. I find myself in one of the proudest positions of my life in being permitted to present to you Grover Cleveland as the typical American."

The great force of this eulogy lies in the fact that it was uttered by one of the leading Republicans of the nation who knew that his words would be reported and might be used to the advantage of a political opponent.

A Dish of [illegible] P's.

P stands for Pudding, for Peach and for Pear,
And likewise for Pastry and Prune;
The Parrot, the Pigeon that flies in the air,
The Pig with a ring in his nose;
For Pepper and Pea, for [illegible] and Prune,
For Physic, and People who eat it;
But when you are sick, to relieve your distress
Take at once Pierce's Purgative Pellets.

Oh, yes, indeed! These are the P's for you, poor, sick man or woman. Nothing like them for keeping the bowels and stomach regulated and in order—they, [illegible] granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds. They work gently but thoroughly.

A YELLOW LUNCHEON.

Sir Ambrose and Mrs. Shea Entertained by Mrs. Gilbert.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Gilbert, at their home on Eighth street and Central avenue, recently gave a luncheon to Sir Ambrose (Governor of the Bahamas) and Lady Shea. Covers were laid for sixteen, including Mrs. Herring, Mrs. Ludlum, Mrs. Munn, Mrs. Clinton Randolph, Mrs. Hugh Hastings, Mrs. Rowland Cox, Mrs. Charles Wadsworth, Miss Randolph, Mrs. Randolph, Mrs. James Grindlay of Utica, Miss Nelson of Montreal, and Mrs. Wm. B. Wadsworth.

Most of the guests had been entertained at the Government House, Nassau, and the luncheon was delightfully informal. Marsel served, and yellow was the prevailing color—tea rose buds tied with yellow ribbon, large bowls of nasturtiums upon the table, with marigolds for decoration around the dining room.

There were frozen oranges, with leaf and blossom attached; but, prettiest of all, several tea rose buds, real leaves, real stems, and real outer petals, with the inside of the bud taken out, and frozen creams, the exact color, filled in, made a course "fit to set before the Queen," and so real that every one exclaimed at the perfection of art thus offered them.

A steady downpour of rain prevented a driving party which was to have preceded the luncheon, much to the disappointment of hostess and guests of honor, especially as Sir Ambrose and his party sailed the following day for their Southern home.

His Fall was Fatal.

In spite of the operation described in these columns of Saturday, Patrick Kelley died that evening at 8:30 o'clock. He was just in the prime of life and leaves a wife and seven children. The Press has already told of the accident that cost him his life.

He was employed by George H. Burgess of Central avenue. Thursday, the 2d inst, he was trimming the trees about the grounds. A heavy limb he was sawing broke before he expected it to, and in its fall it knocked the ladder on which he was standing, from under him. Kelley fell twenty-five feet to the ground and sustained a compound fracture of the elbow joint. The bones were shattered into fragments. Drs. Boone and Hedges attended him.

Locked-jaw subsequently set in, and on Saturday morning Dr. Field performed an operation, but without result.

Dunellen Doings.

C. Schepflin has gone South for three weeks.

Frank Corey and Miss Hannah Johnson, both of Dunellen, were married at the home of the bride Saturday evening, by the Rev. Mr. Seran, pastor of the Methodist church. The fife and drum corps serenaded the wedding party.

Chas. Carpenter is again employed by the Central Railroad, as operator in the main office.

Jackson avenue has been macadamized, and the sidewalks have been improved.

All three of Mr. Welsh's new houses are now occupied.

Mr. Hand expects to build a house on his lot adjoining Mr. Merrell's.

The anniversary of the Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian church will be celebrated next Sunday evening.

The fourth anniversary of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor will be held at the Presbyterian church Thursday evening. After the exercises refreshments will be served.

J. H. Dryden and family have moved to New York for the Winter.

Mr. Bush has recovered from his illness and is now at his old place in Goodman Brothers' store. He has worked in the same store for more than twenty-five years.

Mr. and Mrs. Churchill have been visiting friends in Brooklyn during the past week.

Miss Fannie Smith and Miss Minnie Swackhamer are teaching in the new school building.

Closing the Season With a Fine Exhibition.

The chilly weather of Saturday kept a large number of base-ball lovers away from the players' benefit. The visitors were the Ridgewoods, but they were not in it. Livingston was knocked out of the box by the Crescents, and the Plainfield team played a brilliant game in the field. Lee and Martin made one-hand catches of hot liners. McIndoe hammered one way over the fence, and Jones got a three-bagger. The game should have closed at the end of the seventh inning, 6 to 1 in favor of the Crescents but another inning was played in the dark, and two runs were made by the visitors through the inability of the infield to see the ball. The score:

ELECTRIC LIGHTS FOR THE BOROUGH.

North Plainfield Willing to Pay $400 Extra Each Year for the Sake of the Better Service Promised by Competition.

The Plainfield Electric Light Company is to have a rival, and both city and borough anticipate a speedy improvement in public and private lighting service. The bringing of a new company into the borough will require an extra cash outlay on the part of the Borough Council, but it is expected that because of consequent competition benefits will accrue of sufficient importance to outweigh all objections against the seeming extravagance, as the following report, submitted by the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps to the Borough Council at last Friday's meeting, would tend to show:

To the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield:

Your Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, to which was referred the matter of electric lighting for the streets of the Borough, beg leave to report as follows:

Two formal propositions have been made to light the streets of the borough, and a third proposition of an informal character has also been received.

The first proposition in point of time is that made by the Edison General Electric Company of New York. This company offer to erect an electric lighting plant in the township of North Plainfield, to be operated by water power, and to enter into a contract with and furnish a satisfactory bond to the Borough of North Plainfield for one year or a term of years, to furnish, erect and maintain in first class manner, and light all and every night 200 twenty-five candle power lamps (their first offer was of twenty candle power lamps, but they will now agree to furnish twenty-five candle power lamps), for the sum of $3,600 per annum or at the rate of $18 per lamp.

This company also offer to bind themselves to sell the said plant to the Borough at a reasonable price and within reasonable time, if the Borough so desires.

The second proposition in point of time comes from the Plainfield Electric Light Company, which offers as follows: To enter into a contract with and furnish a satisfactory bond to the Borough of North Plainfield for one year or a term of years, to furnish, erect and maintain in a first class manner and light all and every night the following lamps:

Two hundred twenty-five candle power lamps for the sum of $3,200 per annum, or at the rate of $16 per lamp, and if it is desired to have the lamps furnished of less than twenty-five candle power, then a lower price will be made.

The third proposition in point of time is from the Fort Wayne Electric Light Company, but it is informal and presents no definite figures, the representation of this company claiming that no honest offer can be made at a rate as low as sixteen dollars per lamp.

In regard to the third proposition your committee would recommend that it be left without consideration for the reason that it is of so indefinite and informal a character as to preclude action upon it.

As to the second proposition—that of the Plainfield Company—your committee would state that while it appears upon its face to offer the cheapest system of lighting now under consideration, yet there are several features in connection with this offer which do not recommend it to your committee.

In the first place, this company once had a street lighting plant within the borough, and its conduct in relation to the same was not such as to win the confidence of our citizens.

In the second place, its present offer is made only after it has learned that a proposition had been made by another company, and after the terms of that offer had been published; and the prices now offered by the Plainfield Company, are so far below the market price as to indicate that the offer is made for the real purpose of preventing the establishment of a competitor, instead of furnishing the Borough with a satisfactory light. This idea receives additional force from the fact that your Committee and the Council have always been open to the public, and that the Plainfield Company was at liberty to present an offer at any time in the past, had it so desired, any statement it may make to the contrary notwithstanding.

The offer of the Edison Company is at a price $400 per year higher than that of the Plainfield Company, but in considering that question your Committee take into consideration the following facts:

The Edison Company's offer, if accepted, will result in the erection and maintenance within the township of an electric station and plant which will cost a large sum of money and will produce a considerable revenue to the township in the way of taxes, which your Committee think, will reduce the $400 difference nearly, if not quite, one-half.

The Edison Company would be entirely subject to our own control, while the Plainfield Company is subject to the power of the City of Plainfield to such an extent that adverse action of the city may seriously affect its usefulness in the Borough.

It would be impracticable for the Borough to acquire the ownership of the Plainfield company in any event, while it might readily become the owner of the proposed Edison company, if such a result were deemed wise.

Monopoly is always undesirable to all except the monopolist, and it will hardly be desired that with competing companies located in the City and in the Borough respectively, the public welfare, as well in relation to private lighting as to street lighting, will receive much more consideration than would be the case if one company had a monopoly of both places; in other words, that we will receive more for our money.

Your committee would further report that it has heard expressions of opinion upon this subject from a large number of borough citizens and taxpayers, and that the public feeling in the borough is largely in favor of a competing company with its plant located within our own township.

It may be well to add that either company will agree to have the light in operation by January 1, 1891. So far as the question of the advisability of adopting a system of electric street lighting is concerned, your committee is already of the opinion that the naptha light should go. Either of the propositions above considered provide for a much better light, both in quality and quantity, and the time has come when the present number of lamps must be increased to keep pace with the growth of our borough.

Therefore, as a result of a careful investigation and consideration of the questions submitted, your committee would recommend:

First—That one or the other of the two propositions above considered, be accepted.

Second—In view of all the circumstances, and with the belief that the financial and physical welfare of our citizens and taxpayers will by such a course be the best served, your committee recommend that the proposition of the Edison Electric Co. be accepted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. F. SEBRING,
N. B. SMALLEY,
of the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

Councilman Emmons, the third member of the Committee, did not sign the report, and stated his reasons for withholding his autograph.

I think, he said, that the price ought to have something to do with this question. The fact that the Plainfield company offers to give for less money the same service that the Edison company promises, causes me to differ from the opinion of the committee. Furthermore, I am not impressed with water power for electric lighting; and understand that the water power is insufficient. I also think that the representative of the Ft. Wayne Company has been misrepresented. Instead of his questioning the honesty of the Plainfield Company he said that he didn't see where there was any money in such a low bid. The Plainfield company is ready to go ahead and have the streets all lighted January 1, when our present contract expires. I don't think the Edison Company can be ready by that time, and I understand, from what experts tell me, that it is impossible for the proposed system of the Edison company to give indoor lighting.

Councilman Sebring said that the Superintendent of the Edison Company had already answered the charge against inside lighting and had pronounced it utterly false. As regards the Ft. Wayne quotation, both Councilmen Sebring and Smalley said that the words in the report were just what the Ft. Wayne man had said. As there seemed to be objection to putting such charges on record, however, the quotation was stricken out, on motion of Councilman Hegeman.

Mr. Smalley presented a resolution, which was seconded, that the proposition of the Edison General Electric Company be accepted and that the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, with the assistance of the Borough Counsel, be authorized to prepare a contract with the Company and submit it to the Mayor and Council at an adjourned meeting, Friday, October 17. Mr. Emmons moved to amend by striking out the name of the Edison Company and inserting the name of the Plainfield Company. A long discussion followed, in which all but Mr. Emmons held the view that the Plainfield Company was willing to sacrifice money for the sake of keeping out competition, and that the introduction of a rival company, even at an originally higher figure, would be cheaper and better in the end.

The proposed amendment was lost by the following vote:

In favor—Councilman Emmons—1.

Against—Councilmen Buckle, Hegeman, Sebring, Needham, Smalley—5.

The original resolution was then carried by the same vote of 5 to 1, Councilman Emmons voting no.

The contract that will be submitted Monday night will be thoroughly discussed, and perfected in every detail—even to the matter of using sightly poles—before final adoption.

One other important matter that took place before adjournment was the adoption of a motion to have a contract drawn up for the Council's consideration between the Borough and Jas. S. Lunger and J. P. Emmons for the erection of a lock-up. The bids of Messrs Lunger and Emmons were the lowest submitted—Lunger's $319 for the carpentry work, and Emmons $585 for the masonry work.

OBITUARY.

William E. Jones.

The death of Wm. E. Jones, Director of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders, occurred at his home on Somerset street, North Plainfield, at 9:35 o'clock on Monday. He had been ill several weeks, from cancerous affection of the liver; and his death, though an event which brings sadness to the entire community, was not unexpected.

Wm. E. Jones was born in Herefordshire, England, December 10, 1825. At the age of twelve he was brought to America by his parents, his father having met with financial reverses through the Crimean War, and being desirous of starting anew in a new country. After spending two or three years in New York the family removed to Somerville, and, later, to Mt Bethel, where William found a wife in Amanda Kirkpatrick, a daughter of an old Somerset family. In 1866 William received a legacy from an uncle and removed to Plainfield. Two years later he was elected a member of the Board of Freeholders, on the Republican ticket, and has been a member of the Board almost continuously ever since, having been a candidate at every election, and having been defeated but twice [by Martin W. Schenck and Chas. Shepard], in twenty-four years. He was Director of the Board during several terms, and held that office when he died. Early in life he was a Whig, but soon identified himself with the Republican party, and was one of its stanchest adherents. He was a member of Noah Dove Encampment, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the Exempt Firemen's Association. In the old Fire Board days he was its President two years. His wife died five years ago. He leaves a son, Frank, of the firm of Powlinson & Jones, and a daughter, Sarah D., who is the wife of Mr. Powlison. The funeral services will take place this afternoon; from his late residence, at 2 o'clock, and from the First Baptist church at 2:30. The Rev. Dr. Yerkes will preach.

Dr. Ketcham Preaches at New Jersey's Banner Church.

In connection with the meeting of the Presbytery of Elizabeth at Lamington, Somerset county, October 8, was celebrated the 150th anniversary of the Lamington Presbyterian church. Displayed on one side of the church walls was the list of its pastors, who during the entire century and a half numbered only seven, showing that the term of each must have been long. Opposite this record was a list of the 17 who have entered the ministry from the Lamington church. This is the banner record of the State, if not of the country. During the afternoon the Rev Dr. Mancius H. Hutton, of New Brunswick, delivered a masterly oration, and the Rev Dr. K. P. Ketcham, of the First Presbyterian church of Plainfield, preached a highly interesting sermon on "The Influence of the Country Church," both of which the visiting clergymen asked to have published in pamphlet form.

In the evening the Rev. Dr. Kempshall, of Elizabeth, gave a biographical sketch and eulogy of the Rev. Dr. John McDowell; the Rev. Dr. Teal, of Elizabeth, on the Rev. Dr. Wm. McDowell; the Rev. John T. Kerr on the Rev. Dr. Blauvelt, who was Lamington's pastor fifty-six years; and the Rev. I. A. Blauvelt, of Roselle, on the Rev. Dr. Sutphen, at one time pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

Nearly all of Lamington's pastors have been prominent figures in church history and public life, and the clergymen of the Presbytery thoroughly enjoyed devoting the day to a study of their lives and methods. Besides Dr. Ketcham the Rev's W. E. Honeyman and W. R. Richards attended from this city.

A Good Time for All Boys, and It Doesn't Cost Them a Cent.

Eleven boys enrolled their names on the books of the Boys' Club October 8. The rooms were in charge of H. B. Wells and Wm. T. Broadway, who told the young people what advantages the organization would give to them. Next Monday night General Superintendent Collins will [illegible] be present, and will bring with him the Plainfield Superintendent. Books and games will be distributed the same evening. Meanwhile, the rooms are open every night, giving boys an opportunity to enroll their names and receive the membership tickets which open the way to many privileges, free of charge.

Permanent [illegible] for the Crescents.

The Plainfield Crescent League has leased the five [illegible] plot of five acres just off [illegible] street and between [illegible] and Grand View avenues. It will be fitted up as a permanent base ball ground, and commodious stands and [illegible] erected. There will be [illegible] from Somerset street [illegible] Linden avenue. The distance from the [illegible] is exactly the same as the present grounds—a few yards over half a mile.

To Be Buried With His Bugle Was His Dying Request.

The last request of Nicholas Gi[illegible] was that his [illegible] should place in his [illegible] beside him [illegible], before lowering it into the grave, the bugle with which, in the army of his native land, he had sounded [illegible] of alarm and victory. The last time he sounded the bugle was during the [illegible] celebration of the downfall of the Bastile. At his funeral Tuesday, [illegible] the Rev. [illegible] officiated, his dying wish was fulfilled, and the soldier and [illegible], both now mute forever, were laid away in peace together.

High [illegible] Score a Victory.

The High school base-ball team defeated the "White Caps" Friday in a well-played game by the score of 7 to 2. The "White Caps" are a regular organized team, while the High school team have not played in over two years. Only a few of the old team are now [illegible], including [illegible], Steele, Long and Lowrie. The following was the [illegible]: High school, [illegible]; [illegible], 2b.; Carey, [illegible]; Long, [illegible]; [illegible], 1b.; Morgan, [illegible]; [illegible], l.f.; Lowrie, p.; [illegible], r.f.; [illegible] Vail, 2b.; A. The Rev. Mr. Newell, who has been preaching at Hope chapel the past four weeks, [illegible] October 8 examined by the Presbytery of Elizabeth for ordination to the Gospel ministry. His examination was highly creditable to him, and the Presbytery [illegible] unanimously [illegible] to ordain him [illegible] day in the [illegible] church. The Rev. Mr. Go[illegible] of Cranford preached, and proposed the constitutional questions; the Rev. W. E. Honeyman of North Plainfield, made the ordaining prayer; and the Rev. W. R. Richards of the Crescent Avenue church, gave the charge to Mr. Newell; after which each member of the Presbytery took Mr. Newell by the hand and welcomed him to the ministry.

30 Days [illegible]

Thomas Kelly, a ne'er do well from Hopewell, who has been visiting his uncle, Michael Kelly, of this city, for some weeks, during which time they have both been [illegible] drunk and disorderly, was arraigned before Judge Codington Wednesday. He was so drunk Thursday that he had been thrown out of [illegible] saloon, [illegible] asked to plead he said, "guilty, [illegible]!"

Mrs. Michael Kelly was the complainant [illegible] her will. She had her husband [illegible] for having his nephew arrested [illegible] only had two rooms to live in and [illegible] had been drunk in [illegible] weeks past and kept her awake [illegible] with the "[illegible]." Thomas [illegible] $10 which he didn't, so he took 30 days. When Mrs. Kelly left the court room her husband started after her, [illegible] to give her another [illegible]. Captain [illegible] detailed Officer [illegible] to watch [illegible].

[illegible] This [illegible] the Drink.

In the city court Wednesday [illegible] was [illegible] over Nellie Hopper and she was told to take her things out of Mrs. Flynn's house and keep away thereafter. The witnesses for the prosecution all testified that "Nellie was a lady" when she kept away from the drink.

Mrs. Hopper's story was that Mrs. Flynn [illegible] her house and tried to drive her out. She said that Mrs. Flynn was the [illegible] that first gave her whiskey to drink. She said she had buried six children and had only been arrested twice during the three months she lived in North Plainfield. One of these times she got 30 days in the Somerville jail.

Sergeant [illegible] testified that when he went after her she resisted him, and he almost [illegible] his neck out of joint getting her before the stamp. Judge Codington told her if she ever came before him again she'd catch it. She said she was very much obliged.

[illegible] of Respect.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of "The New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society" held in the office of the Secretary in this city, Tuesday evening, October [illegible] the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, In the wisdom of the Supreme Architect of the Universe, it has pleased Him to remove from our midst our esteemed fellow citizen and associate, William E. Pope; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of William E. Pope, "The New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society" loses not only an honored member and officer, but a true friend to the interests and objects of this organization, which he has been associated with since its formation, as Treasurer.

Resolved, That the sympathies of this Society are extended to the bereaved family of our [illegible], associate and friend, and that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, a copy sent to his surviving family, and published in the city papers.

Is it any wonder that nearly every household in the country should be acquainted with the merits, virtues and the [illegible] of [illegible]? For years it has been the standard [illegible] of those who [illegible] a delicious [illegible] beverage. It [illegible] up the system, helps nature, and is just what all [illegible] in bad [illegible]. A [illegible] package [illegible] five gallons. [illegible] everywhere.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. Wm. G. E. See, of East Front street, is spending a few days at Tarrytown, N. Y.

Friends of Harry G. Adams will be pleased to know that he is in the city for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Mallinson and family, are home from a pleasant visit at Mamaroneck.

Dr. W. C. Boone, of this city, was nominated for coroner at the Union County Democratic Convention at Elizabeth, on Monday.

Walter Selby, one of Omaha's most successful real estate agents, is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. VanEmburgh, of East Second street.

A. W. Haviland and family, of Rockview avenue, are at home again after a Summer spent at St. Andrew's, New Brunswick.

Miss Jennie Munger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Raymond Munger, arrived from Europe, Thursday noon, after a very stormy passage.

Irving West, of this city, was an usher at the wedding of Miss Ida M. Gardner of Lansingburgh, N. Y., to Tristram Coffin of Poughkeepsie, Thursday.

Anna Spelling, daughter of Mrs. Rachel Spelling, died Tuesday in the 27th year of her age, at her home, corner of Fourth and Sycamore streets.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Wright Stover—nee Miss Lillian Marvin Simons—will be at home, on Tuesdays, the 21st and 28th insts, at 40 East Ninth street.

Randolph M. Steele and Francis E. Marsh, executors of the estate of Manning Steele, have transferred to Aline E. Abbott, land on Central avenue, 200x150 feet, for $1.

The Democrats in convention at Somerville, Monday, elected Wm. N Pangborn and Abram King, of North Plainfield, members of the Somerset County Executive Committee.

Alford B. Cook, who was nominated Tuesday for the Assembly from this district, is a popular business man of Rahway who will add strength to the rest of the ticket in that city.

The Westfield correspondent of the Elizabeth Journal says "Welcome, Judge!" and states that Judge John Ulrich, of Plainfield, has leased a house on Clark avenue, and will take possession of it the last of this week.

Henry George wants to find the Plainfield man who wrote and asked him to discuss free trade, on the last Friday of this month, in this city. Mr. George consented, but has forgotten who it was extended him the invitation.

Louis Bleecker Mumford, the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Mumford of Arlington avenue, died at 10:30 o'clock Monday a. m. He was twenty-two years of age Sunday. The cause of death was consumption. He was able to be out with his father on Saturday last.

Judge Ulrich is not going to give up his $3,000-a-year law practice in this city, just because he's going to build himself a handsome house in Westfield. He will be here in his office all day, but he wants a dead, quiet place where there is nothing going on, to sleep in, and Westfield fills the bill.

Wm. D. Murray, President of the Y. M. C. A., has been induced to accept the position of Superintendent of the Crescent Avenue Sunday school, in place of Henry B. Newhall, who has resigned after fourteen years' service. Mr. Murray's acceptance will be welcome news to teachers and scholars.

Miss Mary Howe, the $300-soprano, who will sing in this city in January at the first concert of the Melopoia, had a narrow escape from death, Saturday, while carriage riding in Worcester. Miss Howe, who was one of the soloists of the Worcester Festival, will make New York her future home.

Geo. Hosmer, the champion oarsman of New England, who is the feature of the "Dark Secret" Company, was a guest of his old friend, J. R. Miller, during his stay here last week. Mr. Hosmer has issued a challenge to row any oarsman in the World, weighing 145 pounds, for any part of $5,000.

At the county Republican convention held in Elizabeth, Thursday, Dr. J. A. Allis of this city was most highly honored by receiving a vote for Coroner that came within four of nominating him. The unusual compliment to so young a practitioner, evidences Dr. Allis' rapid strides in personal popularity.

A friend of the contracting parties remarks an interesting coincidence in connection with the wedding of Dr. Charles E. Thiers of Plainfield to Miss Florence Pullstreen of Brooklyn, in the fact that the bride's father is named Charles, her brother has the same name, and each of the three sisters of the household has married a Charles.

At Seminary Hall, Friday evening, the 31st inst., there will be an entertainment under the auspices of the Guild of the Church of the Holy Cross. Miss Murphy, the rector's daughter; Mrs. George C. Evans, of Washington avenue; and Messrs Walter M. McGee and William L. Saunders, will render the farce, "A Bilious Attack;" clever Marshall Wilder will tell stories; and there will be vocal and instrumental music.

Mr. and Mrs. Moses H. French, who for fifty-three years have lived at their Washington Valley Mills, removed Thursday, with their daughter, into their Borough property, 29 Craig place. The first year of their marriage Mr. and Mrs. French moved five times, finally into the house where they have lived more than half a century. Mr. French has disposed of his business to his son, N. Whitfield French, of Fourth street.

The New Brunswick Home News, delving into local ancient history, has unearthed some interesting stories connected with old New Brunswick houses, and in speaking of a remodeled building which now serves as a flourishing dry goods store says that in the old Dutch residence days it was the aristocratic home of the Ackerman family, of which Warren Ackerman, the Scotch Plains linen king, "who has acquired great wealth, and who is noted for his charitable contributions," is a descendant.

G. W. VanBoskerck, father of Mrs. Wm. Bloodgood, of Netherwood, with his family of Westfield, moved to this city last week, with the intention of making it their future place of residence. "By the change," says the Leader, "Westfield loses one of its oldest and best residents, Grace church one of its staunchest and most active supporters, and society in general one of its most prominent and highly respected members. While sincerely regretting their departure, we can but wish them the utmost satisfaction and contentment in the new home."

His Youth Saved Him from Heavy Punishment.

Thomas Peterson, the colored young man who was arrested on a serious charge made by Lizzie Courtney, was given a hearing before Justice Nash Saturday. As it was shown that the offense was committed when Peterson was under the age where the law holds him responsible, the case was dismissed; but he was warned that he might have been sent to prison for five years and heavily fined had not this legal loophole appeared.

One of the secrets of life consists in knowing what to do and in doing it at the right time; an opportunity once lost may never come again. This is especially true of the care we give our little ones. If they are suffering from insufficient nutrition, we cannot expect them to be strong as they grow up. Mellin's Food is perfectly adapted to their wants and they gain at once when fed upon it.

PRESIDENT MARTIN, OF PLAINFIELD.

Reports Addresses and Election, at the Conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union.

The Rev. Mr. Schenck's church on West Second street, was well filled Friday night by delegates and friends of the Christian Endeavor Societies of Union county, who had met in annual conference. The President of the County Union, Mr. J. D. Lowden, of Elizabeth, presided, and the meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Goodrich and scripture reading by the Rev. Mr. Buckle.

Secretary N. E. Gayle, of this city, read the report of the last annual meeting as published at the time in THE PRESS. This was followed by three-minute reports from presidents of societies throughout the county. W. B. Hamilton, of Elizabeth, read a well written paper on "The Missionary Committee, Its Opportunities;" the Rev. George H. Payson, of Rahway, spoke impressively and earnestly on "The New Pledge;" the Rev. W. H. Shermer delivered a grand and inspiring argument on the "Manliness of Christianity;" and the Rev. John T. Kerr, President of the New Jersey Union, told of "The Society in the State."

An Enrollment Committee was appointed consisting of, W. T. James, Elizabeth; Joseph Moss, Plainfield; Wm. Freeman, Rahway; H. Foster, Dunellen. A nominating Committee was also appointed, consisting of, E. E. Anthony, Plainfield; John Williams, Rahway; T. E. Cannell, Elizabeth; E. M. Cave, Dunellen; and the following officers were elected:

President—B. J. Martin, Trinity Reformed church, Plainfield.
First Vice President—A. C. Ridley, First Baptist church, Elizabeth.
Second Vice President—Albert Wilson, First Baptist church, Rahway.
Third Vice President—E. S. Foster, Cranford Presbyterian church.
Secretary—Carter Vandervoor, Third Presbyterian church, Elizabeth.
Treasurer—Miss Florence Petrie, First Presbyterian church, Plainfield.

The conference was an entire success, and filled with interest and enthusiasm. The exercises closed with a benediction by the Rev. Frank Gardner, of Elizabeth. A feature of the evening was the choir singing by Miss Bessie Blair, Miss Fannie Mattison, H. J. Martin and B. T. Barnes, led by organist A. L. Titsworth. During the meeting a hearty vote of thanks was tendered the Trinity Society for the Christian reception the conference had received. President Martin accepted the office flatteringly tendered him in a happy speech. There was not a person present that doubted he would make an efficient officer and be a strength and credit to the Union.

Refreshments were subsequently served in the lecture room of the church to the visiting delegates and members by a committee of young ladies of the Trinity Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor.

HYMENEAL.

Miller—TenEyck.

There was a quiet wedding ceremony performed at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Israel D. TenEyck, on Liberty street, this city, Wednesday. The contracting parties were Wallace V. Miller and Miss Ida Dora TenEyck, the nuptial knot being tied by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes. In consequence of the serious illness of the groom's mother, the wedding was a private one, only a few of the members of the families of the contracting parties being present. The happy couple started on an extended tour to Niagara Falls and Toronto on the 9:30 p. m. train, followed by the best wishes of a host of friends.

HAND—HONSINGER.

A large gathering of friends and relatives assembled at the residence of Mrs. Frank Honsinger, of Scotch Plains, October 8, to witness the marriage of her daughter, Annie, to Edward L. Hand.

The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Dr. J. H. Parks, of the Scotch Plains Baptist church.

The bride was handsomely attired in white India silk, and was attended by Miss Emma Schriener as flower-girl. The "best man" was J. E. Flannery.

A wedding dance and banquet followed the ceremony, and the guests maintained a whirl of festivity till early morning. The happy young couple received many valuable presents, and were showered with congratulations and good wishes.

Plainfield Wheelmen to Join in the Frolic.

A delegation from the Plainfield Bicycle Club will visit the county seat Friday evening as the guests of the Elizabeth Wheelmen, and will participate in the bicycle lantern parade of that organization. The Wheelmen have issued invitations to thirty-three clubs, and as they are famous entertainers they will doubtless have a large response. At the close of the parade a reception will be given in the handsome new club house.

A Woman Pleads for Reform.

One of the most interesting meetings ever held in Reform Hall was that of Sunday night. The first speaker introduced was Mrs. C. S. Whitney, of New York, whose life is devoted to religious work, and whose remarks caused profound attention. With pleasing manner and fluent and appropriate language she pleaded for individual devotion to the will of God in all things, doing whatever and going wherever He commands for the reclamation of mortals from sin to salvation, and thereby discharging a debt we owe to God and humanity. She also presented as living truths the evils of liquor drinking and the blessings of total abstinence.

The Rev. Mr. Dwight followed, making feeling allusion to the excellent remarks of Mrs. Whitney, and adding thereto several touching incidents coming under his personal experience, as a Western pastor, of the sad havoc wrought by the demon of strong drink. Close attention was given to his speech from commencement to close.

The President announced that Mrs. Whitney would be glad to meet visitors Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, in the basement parlors of Reform Hall, and that a meeting under her leadership would be held in the main auditorium Tuesday evening of this week, at 7:30 o'clock, to which all were cordially invited.

He also gave notice that next Sunday evening the speakers would be Samuel A. Haines, of Netherwood, and his subject: "Facts: What Shall We Do with Them?"

President Harper presided, the Rev. Mr. Dwight read the Bible lesson and offered a fervent prayer, and the music was rendered in choice style by a full choir lead by Mr. Vanderbeek, with Miss Doremus as accompanist. With the benediction pronounced by Mr. Dwight, the meeting closed.

—The Borough Common Council will meet this week Friday evening for the purpose of considering the proposed street lighting contract with the Edison General Electric Company.

—Albert Brown, of the Borough, has had a man who gives his name as David Vail arrested on the charge of stealing a buckboard. Vail said he had a horse, and needed a wagon, and was too poor to buy one.

John have you seen that woman lately? John is dumbfounded! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column, and read about it; the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

TERMS OF THE DEAL.

$15,000 in Cash and $15,000 in Stock Promised by the Water Supply Co., for the Driven Wells, the Walls of the Pumping Station and the Contract of the Water Works Co.

[From The Press of Oct 11.]

Today for the first time, the people are permitted a look behind the scenes where the contract to furnish them with water is being juggled and traded. Through the enterprise of THE PRESS the whole community is permitted to read the terms of the bargain and sale whereby the Water Supply company hopes to secure for itself the possessions of the Water Works company.

You have been told in contradiction of articles on the subject already published in these columns, that the contract was so unfavorable to the contractors that capitalists would not invest money in carrying it out, and it has also been intimated that the work already done would all have to be done over again.

Yet you will see by the following agreement that the instigator of just such tales is one of those who are willing to give $30,000 for the worthless plant and the discouraging contract. More than that, one of the members of the Water Supply company tells a PRESS reporter that if they get the contract they will carry out its every provision. An unbiased engineer in the person of Mr. Bush, of Jersey City, has in the interests of the Water Supply Co., gone over the work already done, and reports the wells satisfactory and sufficient.

All this proves that Contractor Moore was doing his work well, and that the contract was not a suicidal one to assume. But others wanted it, and caring nothing for the people's convenience nor the city's interests, organized a campaign of rule or ruin—with ruin somewhat in the lead just now.

Contractor Moore was coaxed to break his faith with the people and his friends, and then threatened. All sources for securing capital were stopped by Supreme Court proceedings that cast a shadow on the legality of the contract. Even his private affairs were brought into public print. But he seems to be filled with sand, and the following terms that were undoubtedly dictated by him, prove that he was courageous enough to win against all the forces brought to bear against him.

This agreement, made this thirteenth day of September eighteen hundred and ninety between Charles K. Moore of Fanwood, New Jersey, and the Water Works Company of Plainfield, party of the first part, and the Plainfield Water Supply Company of the second part.

Witnesseth, That the said party of the first part hereby agrees to convey or cause to be conveyed to the said party of the second part, the strip of land twenty-five feet wide by one thousand feet long lying along the Northerly side of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, a short distance East of the Netherwood station, on which twenty driven wells have recently been sunk, and also the lot of land one hundred feet wide extending from said strip to North avenue, on which a stone pumping station is now in course of erection, by a good and sufficient deed of conveyance, and to assign, transfer and convey all the personal property on the said land heretofore purchased by said Moore or by said Water Works Company for use in the construction of said pumping house or station, and all doors, windows, window frames, stone, bricks or other material intended for said pumping house or station heretofore purchased or contracted for wherever the same may be.

And it is hereby further agreed that the said party of the first part shall assign, transfer and deliver to the said party of the second part, all surveys, estimates, drawings, plans and other papers made by the said Moore or the said Water Works Company or under his or their authority in projecting, or for the purpose of constructing water works in or near the City of Plainfield, New Jersey; also all lists of the names and residences of persons and corporations who have agreed to take or purchase water from the said party of the first part; also a certain contract or agreement made by and between the said Water Works Company and the inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, dated December twenty-seventh last; for the construction of water works; such assignment of said contract to be made to such person or party as the said party of the second part may nominate, in case the said party of the second part shall desire such assignment to be made. Said Charles K. Moore to join in said assignment in case he has any interest in said contract. Said assignment to be made subject to the consent of the authorities of the City of Plainfield if necessary.

And the said Charles K. Moore hereby agrees to assign a certain contract for the construction of water works in and near the City of Plainfield, made by and between him and the said Water Works Company on or about the thirteenth day of February last, to such person or party as the said party of the second part may nominate in case said party of the second part shall desire such assignment to be made.

And the said party of the first part agrees to apply to the authorities of the City of Plainfield for the rescision of the said contract made December twenty-seventh last and for the surrender of the bond given to secure its performance; and will urge and recommend the making of a contract between the said City and the said party of the second part for supplying the said City with water.

In consideration of the above the said party of the second part hereby agrees to pay to the said party of the first part the sum of thirty thousand dollars as follows, twenty-five hundred dollars when the deed for the said lands above mentioned shall be delivered, said deed to be made out to the said party of the second part, or to such person as Frank Bergen shall nominate; said deed to be delivered at the time of the execution of this agreement; the sum of twelve thousand, five hundred dollars in cash, on the execution of this agreement, of which the sum of eleven thousand dollars the said party of the first part hereby directs to be paid to the National State Bank of Elizabeth in satisfaction of the following promissory notes now held by said bank, namely, a note of five thousand dollars dated July nineteenth last made by Charles K. Moore to George Kyte; a note of three thousand five hundred dollars made by Charles K. Moore to the order of James Moore now held by the said bank and which will mature on September fifteenth instant; and a demand note of twenty-five hundred dollars dated this day, made by Charles K. Moore to the order of John Kean, Jr., the balance of the said sum of twelve thousand and five hundred dollars to wit; the sum of fifteen hundred dollars to be paid in cash. The balance of said sum of thirty thousand dollars to wit the sum of fifteen thousand dollars to be paid in full paid up capital stock of the said party of the second part, to be issued and delivered to the said Charles K. Moore at the office of Frank Bergen in the City of Elizabeth, New Jersey in manner following: To the amount of fifty-nine hundred dollars upon delivery to the said Bergen of a receipt in full from the Hydraulic Tube Well Construction Company for sinking, constructing and connecting the said wells, and for the appurtenances thereto; to the amount of five thousand dollars upon the execution of this agreement, and the balance, to wit, to the amount of four thousand and one hundred dollars upon delivery to the said Bergen of receipts and affidavits showing that no claims exist for which a lien may be placed upon the said pumping house or station or upon said wells, or on the other property hereby agreed to be conveyed.

It is hereby further agreed that the said party of the first part, either as a corporation or otherwise, hereby reserves the right to collect from the city of Plainfield the sum of six thousand dollars heretofore paid to the said city by the said Charles K. Moore, said right to be reserved and protected, in any assignment that may be made of either of the said contracts of December twenty-seventh or of February thirteenth last, unless the authorities shall insist upon the relinquishment of such claim as a condition of the recision of the contract of December twenty-seventh, and the making of a new contract with the said party of the second part.

In witness whereof the said Charles K. Moore has hereto set his hand and seal; the said The Water Works Company of Plainfield has caused its corporate seal to be hereto affixed, these presents to be signed by its President and attested by its Secretary, and the said The Plainfield Water Supply Company has caused its corporate seal to be hereto affixed, these presents to be signed by its President and attested by its Secretary the day and year first above written.

[illegible] That Noah Didn't Tell the Kangaroo.

When Miss Wood, teacher at the Irving public school, asked her class, the other day, who it was that built the ark and ran the menagerie connected with it, one well-versed little tot was quick to answer "Noah!"

"Pleathe, ma'am,"—lisped an eager baby voice—"that'th yite, but 'tithn't all yite. 'Toth why? 'Toth hith other name wath Barnum."

No Doubt of Its Benefit to the Borough.

Mayor Male and Councilmen Roberts, Smith and Johnson, constituting the Street Committee, met the North Plainfield Borough officials Thursday, and went over the proposed route of the extension of Peace street. The Plainfield officials were of the unanimous opinion that property owners of North Plainfield would be much benefited if the street was extended through to Mountain avenue. A report will be made at the next meeting of the Common Council.

A Shorter Seashore Route for Plainfield.

The officers of the Raritan River Railroad have assured the Board of Trade of New Brunswick, in answer to a request to extend the line to Bound Brook, that they have favorably considered the matter, and will soon take action in the premises. If the proposed plan is carried out, the road will connect with the Pennsylvania Railroad at New Brunswick, the Central at South Amboy, and the Lehigh Valley road at Bound Brook; and Plainfield will have a shorter route to the seashore.

Mr. Schepflin Gets the Medal.

The Dunellen Bowling Green Club held their annual contest for the Stevens gold medal, Thursday, on New Jersey's only bowling green, C. Schepflin's lawn. After some very exciting playing, the medal was won by C. Schepflin, who having won it three times in succession, now holds it as his individual property.

The following is the score:

First Tie—C. Schepflin, 21, Mayor Haynes, 15.
Second Tie—Jas. Smith, 23; F. P. Haffner, 20.
Third Tie—Wm. Elliott, 23; Geo. Haynes, 14.
Fourth Tie—Jas. Smith, 14; Wm. Elliott, 21.
Final Tie—C. Schepflin, 21; Wm. Elliott, 18.

The Trinity People Have a Pleasant Time.

The fifth anniversary of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Trinity Reformed church was celebrated Thursday by a highly enjoyable sociable. The large cheerful lecture room was decorated with jardinieres of cut flowers, furnished by the young ladies, and presented a very attractive appearance. The evening was spent very happily. An excellent five-minute talk was given by E. E. Anthony on Christian Endeavor work. Master J. Bartindale, who possesses a fine boyish voice volunteered a solo, and sang so acceptably that he had to again later in the evening. He was accompanied, on the piano, by Mrs. T. H. Bartindale, his mother. Harvey Dayton read Mary Ann's funny story of the Haythen Chinee. The Secretary of the Society, James Connelly, read his annual report, showing gratifying growth and progress. Miss Maude VanDyke recited "Who'll Buy?" A reading by Miss Fannie Mattison was greatly enjoyed. There was hearty singing by all, during the evening, led by H. J. Martin, and accompanied by Miss Alice Smith as pianist. Lemonade and cake were provided in abundance.

Marriage of the Great-Granddaughter of Plainfield's Postmaster of Old.

The chief society event of last week in Middletown, N. Y., was the marriage of Miss Lillian C. Douglas, daughter of Chas. A. Douglas, cashier of the First National Bank of Middletown, and great-granddaughter of the late Postmaster Dewey, of this city, to George M. Millspaugh, of the hardware firm of William Millspaugh & Son. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride, which was elegantly decorated for the occasion with flowers and autumn foliage. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. A. F. Pierce, pastor of the First Congregational church. The maids of honor were Miss Adaline Puffer and Miss Josephine Bruce, of Medford, Mass. The best man was W. K. Stansbury, of Detroit. The bride's costume was of white faille Francaise, trimmed with point-lace and ostrich feathers, and with diamond ornaments. There was a large attendance of distinguished society people, among whom was the bride's aunt, Miss Carrie Dewey, of this city. The wedding gifts were numerous and handsome. The collation was served by Maresi, of New York. The wedding journey will include Niagara Falls and points of interest in the West.

Seven Years for Curtiss.

George W. Curtiss, who pleaded guilty to the theft of $6,000 worth of goods from the New England Company, an importing firm at Broadway and Leonard street, was Thursday sentenced to seven years in State Prison by Judge R. B. Cowing.

Curtiss is a young man. He is the step brother of John F. Plummer, formerly of Netherwood, and was for thirteen years in the employ of John F. Plummer & Co. as a confidential clerk. When that famous firm went under Curtiss obtained a situation with the New England Company at $1,300 per year. He remained with the firm but a short while when his speculations were discovered.

His method of robbing his employers was by sending out goods on memorandum to firms whom he knew did not want them and subsequently disposing of them to other firms at figures below their value.

Curtiss for many years was a resident of the Seminary, West Seventh street. He was a frequenter of the best society of the city, and led the germans at Netherwood Hotel. His bringing up as a clerk was under Wm. S. Darling who is accused of having absconded with a half-million dollars belonging to the late firm of Plummer & Co.

JACKSONIAN SENTIMENTS.

North Plainfield to take a Firm Stand.

Ex-Borough Counsel, John H. Jackson, is quoted as saying: "North Plainfield, the richest and most enterprising township of Somerset county, intends to take a firm stand in the Senatorial fight this Fall. It is not going to become an obstructionist, but is going to be independent and intends to let its independence be felt, not by insisting upon the nomination of any particular person, but by demanding that no party hack or mere self-seeker shall receive the nomination to office, no matter what politician asks it. Its delegation will go the Convention unpledged to any nominee, but pledged to stand firm by this principle, that no one will receive its vote whom it does not consider in every way the most proper candidate for the office. It is thought that in the numerous candidates who will likely be named in the Convention and have followers there, that the solid vote of this delegation adverse will prevent the nomination of any one of them, and that thus the neglect heretofore heaped upon North Plainfield may result in to some extent elevating the Senatorial canvass and forcing the Convention to nominate some one whose true merits, according to the Jeffersonian test, entitles him to be a candidate for so important an office. At least the attempt will be made and if it results in a failure, it will be a failure in a good cause."

$4,000 for Music This Winter.

It is estimated that the Plainfield people have subscribed $4,000 for their musical entertainments during the coming season. There is not another seat left in Music Hall for the Choral Society's concerts, although applications are still arriving. The Melopoia's treasury is also full.

The Officers From This City.

City Clerk Coward was one of the secretaries of the Republican convention at Elizabeth, Thursday; F. A. Dunham was appointed to escort Major Hicks to the chair; Geo. W. Moore was one of the committee on rules, and John W. Murray was one of the committee on permanent organization.

Comrades Enjoy Themselves.

Major Anderson Post had its first open-house entertainment at its rooms, on Thursday; there was a large attendance of Grand Army men from the other Plainfield post with their wives, and also a visiting delegation from the New Brunswick post accompanied by a drum and fife corps.

Mrs. Asa Collier and Miss Anna Boice sang, Miss Livermore recited, Miss Jessie Utter played and Comrade Titsworth also favored the audience with a song. There was a bountiful spread of refreshments, too.

Another Lamp Needed at the Station.

The necessity for a lamp on the platform at the North avenue railroad station where the express wagons back up to receive and deliver their loads grows nightly more apparent. Thursday a boy fell off the platform to the stone pavement below, sprained his wrist, and gashed his forehead. Only a few nights ago Mary Dougherty, a Front street servant, walked off the platform, in the darkness, and was stunned so that she had to be taken home in a hack. Immediately afterwards an elderly gentleman fell in the same place and broke his eyeglasses.

Found a Victim With a Willing Heart and Ready Purse.

Victor Hedrich, who runs a barber shop on Liberty street, is a generous-hearted man, as is evidenced by his kindness, recently, to a stranger who went to him for aid. The man wanted to borrow three dollars to pay his car fare to the bedside of a dying brother, and Mr. Hedrich believed him and lent the money. This morning the man sent a friend, another stranger, on a similar errand, and got two dollars more. Now Mr. Hedrich learns that he has been duped, and has joined the countless thousands who mourn, according to Robert Burns, at man's inhumanity.

A Plainfielder Dies of Heart Disease.

Benjamin F. Lowe, seventy-eight years of age, and father of W. E. Lowe, of Plainfield, was found dead on the floor of his room at the Grand Union Hotel, New York city, Thursday morning, and Deputy Coroner Weston decided that he had succumbed to heart disease. Mr. Lowe, who was an insurance agent, retired with a comfortable fortune in 1875. He went to the Grand Union Hotel in July because the house of his son, on Park avenue, where he had been residing, was undergoing repair. He had another son in Colorado, and a daughter in one of the Southern States. Mr. Lowe was born in Boston, Mass. His body was removed to Plainfield [illegible] day.

Two Votes Left in a Ward That Once Elected Him to the Council.

An election was held in the Fourth Ward, the other evening, to fill a vacancy in the County Executive Committee that occurred by the expiration of the term of Mr. Carey, a former policeman. It was the same ward where he was once elected a Councilman by the efforts of J. B. Miller and other leaders whom he subsequently rewarded by persecution.

Mr. Carey was a candidate to succeed himself on the City Executive Committee the other evening, yet he got but two votes. These two votes, it is said, were cast by a man by the name of Titsworth who nominated him, and a man by the name of Mitchell, who works at Potter's or Pond's. Even the support of the Art Gallery politicians seems to have fallen away from the man with the foul mouth.

Thought the Baby Was Killed.

A baby carriage was trampled to pieces by a horse on Peace street, near the railroad bridge, last evening, and those who saw the accident cried out "The baby's killed!" There was no baby in the carriage, however, as the mother, Mrs. David B. Nestor, had taken the child out of the vehicle and had deposited several purchases of dry goods and groceries in it instead. She was trundling it along East Third street when the child by her side stumbled, and to save the little one from a fall she released her hold on the handle of the carriage and made a grab at the youngster's arm. The carriage rolled merrily onward just in time to get in the way of one of Michael Higgins's stages. The horse had his feet tangled up in the perambulator before his driver could bring him to a halt, and in an instant fragments of the smashed wheels and framework were distributed freely about, with remnants of the packages from the stores. Mrs. Nestor scolded young Higgins, the driver, and said she'd have him arrested.

Spare our loved ones. Hear the pleading
That goes up from aching hearts.
But grim death, our plea unheeding,
Pierces with his fatal darts
Those who wish we fain would tarry,
Those we love so much to keep,
And we long their forms to carry
To the grave so dark and deep.

Pleading with death avails nothing. We must do something to ward off the dart he aims at those we love. We must protect them from him. When the hacking cough, the hectic flush, or a pain in the side or chest gives indication of a consumptive tendency, act promptly. Go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This remedy allays the inflammation of the delicate lung-tissues. It heals the irritated parts. It strengthens the blood, and tones up the debilitated system, and in this way death can be forced to relinquish his hold upon our friends. It is guaranteed to cure, if taken in time and given a fair trial, or money paid for it will be refunded.

MACHINISTS ENTERTAINED.

A Reception at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms, Where the Best Was That Which Was Contributed.

The reception given Thursday by the Young Men's Christian Association to the machinists of the city, was perhaps more heartily enjoyed than has been any previous social gathering held at the rooms. After spending some time in social intercourse all were invited to the hall, where the following programme was most acceptably rendered:

Zither Solo……Gustav Schwarz
Hand-Bell Solo……Prof. F. Milner
Feats on horizontal bar……Prof. E. W. Logan, and members of the Orange Y. M. C. A.
Tumblerconicon Solo (musical glasses)……Prof. F. Milner
Zither Solo……Gustav Schwarz
Club swinging……Prof. Logan, Instructor in Orange Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium
Hand Bell Solo……Prof. Milner
Tumbling……Prof. Logan and others
Address……President Murray
Zither Solo……Gustav Schwarz

Mr. Murray, in his address of welcome, took occasion to speak of what the Association seeks to do for the social, intellectual and spiritual welfare of young men, and extended a cordial invitation to all to visit the rooms at all times. While the programme as a whole was enthusiastically received, the zither solos of Gustav Schwarz are deserving of special mention.

The Reception Committee served the refreshments prepared by the Ladies' Nine.

Falsehoods They [illegible] Their Susceptible Countrymen With.

When the series with the Crescents was first arranged the Crescent's managers guaranteed that the West End team should have courteous treatment, and that sufficient police force would be provided to suppress any annoying language or behaviour upon the part of the spectators. Saturday's game simply demonstrated the truth of what the West End members have so often declared, viz.: that the Crescents dont want to control their crowd. But, then, after the O'Rourke episode, the West Ends might have looked for anything.—Somerville Gazette.

All the disorderly persons arrested by the police, Saturday, were from Somerville, and if it had not been for the protection of Plainfield friends more would have been put in the jail. There should have been a guarantee that Plainfield would receive courteous treatment from the West End heelers.

The Plainfield Press charges that Manager Mack of the West Ends had bought the umpire with a promise of ten dollars, and then proceeds to give the lie to its own charge by admitting that the umpire's decision at the critical stage of the game was against the West Ends. This insinuation against "the boss manager of the boss club" is in perfect consonance with the usual policy of that journal towards the West Ends.

THE PRESS did not charge Manager Mack with anything of the sort. It merely stated that Umpire Golden said, "Mr. Mack promised to pay me ten dollars out of his own pocket." This, Mr. Mack has confessed himself, is true. That's all.

Three of Plainfield's Fastest Horses Try Their Speed.

The best and fastest races of the season took place at the Gentlemen's Driving Park, Saturday. The events were as follows:

The first race was between the Woodbrook Farm "Colonel" and Mr. Fosher's "Amboy." "Amboy" won the first heat and "Colonel" the second. Time—2.48½ and 2.48½. The final heat was postponed till next Saturday.

The second race was between the Woodbrook Farm "Peter" and M. Quinn's "Kitty Pilot." "Kitty Pilot" won the first heat and "Peter" the second. Time—2.55½ and 2.57½. The final heat was postponed.

The third race was between John Hayes' "Andy" and Peter Osborn's "Blanche Warwick." "Andy" won both heats, in 2.44 and 2.44½.

The fourth race was between Compton C. Vail's "Frank S.," Mr. Fosher's "Frank F.," and O. T. Waring's "Copeland," three of the fastest horses in Plainfield. "Frank S.," won each of two heats in 2.32½ with "Frank F" second and "Copeland" last. If "Copeland" had been in good condition the result would have been different.

The fifth race was between M. Quinn's "Shamrock," driven by Rob't Fairbairn, Jr., and C. Brower's "Aala." "Shamrock" won in 2.47½.

Glass Watson & Co. Extended Their Broad Street Store Through to Market Street and Put in Their

Handsome beveled plate brass trimmed show windows for the express purpose of displaying their new styles of hand-cut garments, very few young men who want the latest cuts and patterns, will venture to buy a single garment until they first see what new styles Watson & Co. are showing.

Just now those windows are very attractive as the Fall styles are out and some very stylish black and dark blue dress cutaways are shown there at $7, behind the long line of $4 royal satin striped pantaloons, and almost every hour handsome new patterns are added, as Watson & Co. like to please young men who want new things, and the correct fashion plate cuts. Tell your friends that they can buy Watson's hand-cut perfect fitting garments for less than the usual run of machine-cut work is selling for, and it makes a great difference in your dress appearance which you wear.—Newark Press. 9-18-2m

—The latest addition to the expert machinists in the Potter Works, is J. McGuire, of Toronto, who will make his permanent home here. He is an experienced vise hand.

VACATION'S UP AND SCHOOL OPEN!

This is the season for a brisk demand in CHILDREN'S CLOTHING During the months of Summer enjoyment they have played the dickens with their clothes, and usually have little left fit to appear in school with

We have always made the clothing of the little ones a specialty, and this Fall we shall strengthen our well deserved reputation of keeping the best stock of these goods in Newark. You'll find it to be money in your pocket and the saving of no end of trouble to come straight here with your children and fit them out for the coming season. We can not only show you all the styles to be met with elsewhere, but many novel conceits which we have designed exclusively for us. Our prices for the newest styles are no greater than you'll pay for the old ones, and as to reliable work there isn't a store in the country that is more particular than we are, especially in children's goods. We know, in advance, the strain to which the little garments will be put, and every safeguard against a sudden coming from together is taken advantage of.

It's a pleasure to talk children's clothing just now; it's a pleasure to show it. We've got something to show and talk about.

HOW CAN THE LONG
A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A. St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation," read it and resolve to accept the golden

AN OSAGE WEDDING.

Interesting Preliminaries Before the Bride Is Secured.

[illegible] beyond the seasons in one white pinto pony on the bridal [illegible] but [illegible] for the first time he is brought to [illegible] with one of the serious propositions of life; but on this, as on every [illegible] occasion of his career, the Indian [illegible] nothing, but puts himself completely in the hands of his friends.

In the first place his relatives—and the word includes the third, fourth and even the fifth remove—get together and discuss his character and prospects. He has no voice and is not even in the gallery during this debate. Finally it is concluded that he better marry, and that being decided, the next question is, who? The belles of the band then have a rapid and merciless overhauling and the discussion of their merits is warm and long. But a conclusion is reached at last and a select deputation of dusky diplomats is sent to feel the pulse of the maiden's father in the matter and learn if, under proper arrangements, he will consent to the [illegible] nuptials. He is taciturn and reticent, but by grunt and shoulder [illegible] half intimates a belief that he could very probably live through the ordeal. It will be presently seen that the father, from the standpoint of the girl's father, presents some dark and gloomy business propositions not to be lightly passed on.

Satisfied on the point of a probable willingness of the girl's family, back [illegible] the delegation to the waiting household of the buck and recounts the interview. Next on the list a very important interrogatory claims an answer. "How much will they give for the girl?"

The meeting is a wizard one—squaws and bucks—and numbers perhaps thirty people. When the affair of "price" is on the carpet, they first engage themselves in solemn thought and silence [illegible] for fifteen minutes. At last some old buck, whose age and standing give him title to consideration, commences a talk which has for its burden the merits of the intended bride and groom and the propriety of their union from a family as well as a personal point of view. He concludes his oration in a practical way by donating three ponies towards making up the "price" of the girl. He is followed by [illegible] others, and the termination of each [illegible] is a statement of what the speaker will contribute in ponies, blankets, [illegible] or any form of savage wealth to the blessed end in view.

When the number of ponies and amount of other property is settled, an intimation of a certain day is given to the other side, who are at home for the [illegible] and at the time intimated a procession starts, from the wickey-up of the coming Benedict, leading the ponies and bearing the blankets and other bric-a-brac decided on as a just and fitting "price." This property they leave just outside the lodge of the bride's father, tying the ponies—say thirteen—to [illegible] near at hand. Should the bride's relatives regard the "price" as too small [illegible] deference to dusky etiquette the [illegible] proffer is generally so considered. As soon as the procession is withdrawn some old squaw of the household of the girl, perhaps her aunt, comes out and turns the ponies loose. This is significant of refusal and the groom's relations [illegible] again and add a couple of ponies, making fifteen in all.

Fifteen ponies is quite a "price" for a girl as the market now stands and indicates a very high grade of girl. Four, five and six is about the proper caper, and I mention fifteen simply because it was the mark reached for the daughter of [illegible] Strike Axe while I was with the Indians. This girl struggled under the disadvantage of being a graduate of Carlisle University, and, ordinarily, with such a handicap, would not have brought two ponies; but her father was a wealthy Indian and had a nice [illegible], and besides she had two younger and very handsome sisters, all of which counteracted the unfortunate effect of her enlightenment and [illegible] the figure "way up."

The second offer of fifteen ponies is accepted, notice of which is given by bringing the ponies nearer to the bride's lodge.

Then, the groom's people cook up an immense feast and carry it to the family of the bride. Having distended their [illegible] stomachs therewith the bride's people cook up an immense feast and carry it to the family of the groom, who thereupon get their ten claws into it with grunts of satisfaction.

This is the first time the game has come their way, and they play it [illegible].

Then, a day is appointed for the final [illegible] of matters so far [illegible] and it has come now to the last [illegible] and wind-up. On the day set the groom, who has taken about as much part in the affair as the balls do in a game of billiards, arrays himself as nearly like the sun as his wardrobe will permit and pulling over all a look of [illegible] idiocy, walks off to a little distance from the scene of action and [illegible] on a rock, with his back, as [illegible], to the future. His bride to be is loaded with gewgaws, trinkets, jewelry and good clothes until every one of her pegs is full, and mounted on a splendid pony a pistol is fired as a signal, and she is started slowly in the direction of the groom's home. At the [illegible] of the pistol three of the groom's relatives, not of his immediate family—two squaws and one buck, start in a race for the approaching girl. The one who gets there first, who is generally very [illegible] the buck, gets her pony, and the other two—the squaws—coming up [illegible] take the girl from her saddle, tear her finery from her in a trice, and in an instant she gleams in the sun like a statue of some bronze Diana. These squaws divide her purple and fine linen. She is not allowed to embrace the [illegible] for any prolonged period, but is quickly wrapped in a blanket and borne to the groom's home.

There she is splendidly enrobed in an [illegible] entirely new, which the buck has provided, and is installed in a comfortable seat on the ground, while a banquet is prepared. When the viands are ready the groom is called in, and, without noting the presence of his bride, takes a seat near her, looking inexpressibly silly. When thus seated they are made to eat their food from the same dish, and that settles it—they are married tight and fast.

Referring to the importance of the question to the girl's father, it is proper to add that in deference to Osage law and custom the old man, following the wedding, at once turns over his home to be always and forever the property and possession of his son-in-law, the old fellow being constrained to hustle around for a new one, if he has not had the foresight to do so already.

Another effect is that when a buck is wedded to a girl, by the same ceremony he is wedded to all of her sisters also, down to a baby of a year old, if one exists in that relationship. They are all his—his wives or property. At a proper age he takes them as his wives in fact without any more fuss and feathers; or, if he don't feel so disposed, he sells them to some other buck who fancies them.—Kansas City Star.

A PECULIAR WAGER.

The Novel Way in Which a Philadelphian Raised Twenty-Five Dollars.

Man's weakest point often lies in his memory, or rather, want of memory. An individual who is in business among the [illegible] down on Third street, says the Philadelphia Inquirer, not long ago wagered a basket of champagne that he could hustle around among his friends for a couple of hours and in that time raise twenty-five dollars by making them believe they owed it to him. The two parties in the wager, with several friends, were seated in a down-town cafe. The man who made the wager said he would have to go alone, and pledged himself on his honor to act fairly and report truthfully. So off he started, and had not gone half a block before he met his friend Jones.

"Hello, Jones," he exclaimed. "I say, Jones, it's awfully [illegible] for me to ask for it, but I'm a little short, and would like to have that five I loaned you about two weeks ago."

Jones looked at him in amazement.

"Why," he exclaimed, meditatively, "[illegible] I've no recollection of borrowing any of you."

"Well, so long as your memory is so bad, we'll let it go. Good-bye. I'll see you [illegible]"

"[illegible], not at all. Here, old boy, is your five. Seems to me now that I did borrow of you, but [illegible] fellow, I'd quite forgotten it. Should have paid it long ago. Awful obliged for the accommodation, doncherknow. Ta-ta."

And so the bettor went on. From Smith he secured ten dollars, from another five dollars, from another two dollars, and from still another three dollars, all in half an hour or so. He went back to the cafe, displayed his ill-gotten wealth, and helped to drink the basket of wine. The following evening he invited his victims to drink with him at the Bellevue. When the coffee and cigars were brought on Jones ventured the opinion that the host had made a big winning. This the host denied, and then explained that he was going to pay the bill with the money he had extorted from his hearers and told the story of his peculiar wager.

THIS "TALE OF WOE."

Hub Smith, the Popular Song Writer, Is a Jolly Bachelor.

The Rapid Rise of a Washington Department Clerk—His Erratic Methods of Work—The Origin of "Listen to My Tale of Woe."

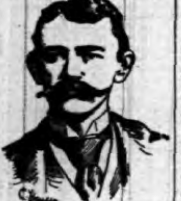
[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

[Special Correspondence.]

Hubbard T. Smith is not yet very widely known perhaps, but everybody knows his music—knows it and whistles it. His "Listen to My Tale of Woe" has probably been sung and whistled and tooted and played more than any other song that has been written since the earlier Sullivan operas. Indeed, it is an open question whether it has not been played in more lands than even Sullivan's most popular airs, for it is arranged for bands all over Germany, Scandinavia, and other parts of Europe, and in Australia it has had a long and very popular run. One of Mr. Smith's friends, recently returned from Japan, says it is played by everybody in Tokio who can play any instrument, and is whistled by everybody who wears a puckering-string in his lips. But this is only one of Mr. Smith's popular songs. Up to date he has produced two hundred and thirty-five pieces of music, most of which have been published, many of which have been sung with telling effect on the comic stage. Among these are such as "Hush-a-Bye," the lullaby which Francis Wilson has so successfully interpolated in the "Gondoliers;" "The Song That Breaks My Heart," sung in "The City Directory," and a dozen other popular farce comedies; "The Little Pie," which always makes such a hit in "Bluebeard, Jr.;" "Swinging in the Grapevine Swing," which is one of the attractions of Donnelly & Girard's "Natural Gas," and a long string of this sort.

Mr. Smith is a department clerk in this city, a man of not more than thirty years, nervous, active, full of fun and not ambitious beyond his powers, unless some of his attempts on the stage be taken as an evidence that he would like to be a great comedian, which he is not. But he is as full of jinglesome music as a watermelon is of sap. Set him at a piano, and if the mood be on him he will improvise catchy airs by the hour, many of them as strikingly original as that of the "Tale of Woe," of which nobody has thought of saying such things as everybody says of Sullivan's music—that it is only recast from old and forgotten airs found in ancient music books taken from the British Museum.

"I can not remember when I could not play the piano," said Mr. Smith, the other day, "though with the exception of two or three lessons taken when I was ten years old I never received any musical instruction; and to this day I know absolutely nothing of the theory of music. I had a quick ear, and even when a small boy could catch and play without any pains pieces of music that teachers give to advanced pupils. I also from my earliest recollection had the knack of improvising, and if I chanced on a theme that pleased me I would play it over and over until it became fixed in my memory, give it a name and add it to my repertory. I do the same to this day, with the difference that now I write out and publish the improvisations."



HUBBARD SMITH.

This, together with his general jollity, accounts for the fact that Mr. Smith, ever since he came to Washington, has been in demand in society, for he could always entertain with something new. His repertory was boundless, since if on taking his seat at the piano he did not happen to think of one of his set pieces he would sail out on some uncharted sea with as much confidence as the conventional pianist strikes into one of his worn and wearing stock-pieces which society generally enjoys mainly because they furnish good cover for confidential chat.

Going back to the beginning of his success as a song-writer, Mr. Smith says: "I was playing over a number of my stock pieces one evening for a friend, when I struck one that pleased him, and he asked me to have it written out for him. Accordingly I secured the services of a musical friend, and we found so much pleasure in the task that we wrote out perhaps half a dozen. I had them published more for the fun of writing 'With compliments of the composer' across the title page, than any thing else; and for this fun I paid half the cost of publication, receiving in return nothing but one hundred copies of the printed music. To my surprise and delight they became quite popular, and I was encouraged to further efforts. In the publication of the second lot I fared better. I received one hundred copies of each piece and did not have to pay any of the cost. That gave me the fever bad, and I went into writing songs, polkas, waltzes and all sorts of things at a terrific rate, and received [illegible] sums for such manuscript. That was in the summer of 1884. Among the first of those for which I received compensation was 'Listen to My Tale of Woe.' It did not have immediate success. Indeed, it had very little success until Francis Wilson and Marie Jansen took it up."

These were the circumstances under which the song was written. Away back in Eugene Field's early days of newspaper work he wrote (I believe for a St. Louis or a St. Joe paper) a bit of verse entitled "The Little Green Peach." It went the rounds of the papers and dropped out of sight, preserved only in a scrap book here and there (one of which, by the way, was Slason Thompson's scrap book, and that is how the verses came to be preserved in the collection which Mr. Thompson many years later published under the title of "The Humbler Poets"). After many years the verses were started on the round of the press again, this time with no credit mark upon them. Mr. Smith found them in this form and put them into a scrap book which he kept for the same reason that most people keep diaries, and that is no reason at all. One day in 1884 he was looking over this scrap book when, in reading the lines of "The Little Green Peach," he was struck by a tune that seemed to fit them and stepping to the piano he played the tune. Then he played it again and again, and the more he played it the more he liked it. Finally in a sort of ecstasy of enthusiasm he hopped upon his bicycle and rushed away to the house of a friend.

"I've got it," said he to the friend, who thought he was crazy. "I've got a tune now, and a good one. Listen to this," and he sat down at the piano, but could not think of a note of it. He felt worse than humiliated; he felt that he had lost fame and fortune, and so, in a sense, he had. He "struggled and grasped," but nothing would put the tune into his head. Finally he gave it up as lost and sat down with his friend to drink a bottle of beer which had been brought in by a servant. The subject of conversation was changed and Mr. Smith had well nigh forgotten his loss when suddenly he slammed his glass down, jumped up like a tennis ball, rushed to the piano and played the tune. For almost an hour he played it over and over and over, until his friend, who was at first delighted with the air, told him that if he played it again he would turn in the police alarm. The music was published precisely as it was played the first time. As soon as it became popular a number of persons came forward to claim the authorship of the words, but Mr. Smith detected the falsity of their claims, for none of them referred to the fact that the words had been slightly changed to suit the music and the catch-line "Listen to My Tale of Woe," wholly added by Mr. Smith. Eugene Field, however, in response to a request from Marie Jansen, gave her a handsomely engraved copy of the original verses with a humorous dedication by "the author," and Mr. Smith in the next edition placed Mr. Field's name by permission on the title page.

After his success in song-writing, Mr. Smith ventured upon an opera. Mr. Albert Riddle wrote the libretto and the piece, under the title of "The Debutant," was presented at Ford's Theater (Harris Bijou) in this city. Montaya made an offer for the opera, but some financial misunderstanding caused a split all round and Riddle withdrew the libretto, while Smith took the music. The score has since been sold to Ellis & Co., and Mr. Bayly, the managing partner of that firm, says it has in it more catchy music than any light opera he has ever heard. He is, I understand, having a new libretto written for it.

I asked Mr. Smith what he regards as his best production.

"Francis Wilson," he answered, "says 'Hush-a-Bye' is the best from a musical standpoint, but my own favorite is a plaintive little ballad entitled: 'My Mother's Songs.' It is also the favorite of the musical members of the Columbia Club. This song has never been published or sung on the professional stage."

In his music-writing Mr. Smith is as erratic as genius usually is. Sometimes a month, or even two months, will elapse without any attempt on his part to write a note. He says that at such times his mind shuts up and there is no music in him. He does not go near a piano and never thinks of music. Then all at once the fever lays hold on him and he goes at composition as if there were only a few moments left between them and nowhere. During these "spells" he rattles off manuscripts at a tremendous rate. In one day not long ago he composed ten pieces, wrote them out and sent them to the publisher. One of them was "Swinging in the Grapevine Swing," which has become popular.

"I can not force myself to compose," he says; "I have tried it time and time again, and the results have always been very unsatisfactory. I have a little [illegible] jar on the mantel at home, and when I chance across a bit of poetry which I think will go well to music I clip it out and put it in the jar. Then when the fever comes on I read my collection over and get to work. Sometimes when at a loss for words I write them myself, although I never dare dignify them with the name of poetry. Some of these, however, have been surprisingly successful, and I am quite willing to plead guilty to the authorship of them—for example: 'The Song That Breaks My Heart' and 'Hush-a-Bye.'"

Mr. Smith has also written two operettas, "The Lottery Ticket" and "A New Year's Reception," several burlesques, not especially noteworthy, a melodrama and a farce comedy. The latter, entitled "Paradise Flats," was successfully presented in Washington a few weeks ago under the auspices of the Columbia Club. This farce comedy, which the author regards as his best dramatic production, is based upon the somewhat novel experiences of Mr. Smith's manner of living, especially on a dinner given at Paradise Flats, as his bachelor home is called, in honor of Miss Bate, the charming daughter of Senator Bate, of Tennessee. Senator Bate and his amiable wife figure in the play as Uncle Larry and Aunt Jane respectively, Miss Bate as Susie and Miss Marshal and Miss Clare, of this city, as Fannie and Clara respectively, while the author's two chums, Charles M. Staley and Robert W. Jennings, are the originals of Charlie and Rob. The character of China is the housekeeper of the bachelor quarters, and though the play she is a very comic person, she is not over-pictured.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

BOLTING-CLOTH FAN.

This Makes a Pretty and Useful Article.

The foundation of this lovely and peculiarly delicate fan is the common Japanese paper fan, not the kind which opens and shuts, but that having a bamboo handle, the upper end of which is split into fibres, forming the supports for the paper covering.

As a large handle is rather clumsy, select a smooth, unsoiled one of medium size.

First unfasten from each end of the curving, bow-like base of the fan, the ends of the strings that are interwoven with the ribs, then, just above the string and parallel with it, cut the ribs with sharp scissors, taking care to leave whatever paper comes below the cut, as that helps to keep the ribs in place. This is illustrated in Fig. 1.

Pull out of the handle the curving base from which the strings were removed.

The next thing needed is a strip of rattan one-eighth of an inch in diameter. It can be bought at a harness shop, and comes in pieces about a yard long. This is to be the circumference of the fan, and the bolting-cloth is fastened to it. Decide how large you want it by bending the rattan into circles of different sizes until one in good proportion to the handle is found. It is well to have it correspond in size with a plate, as that can be used afterward in making it perfectly round, and also in marking the exact size of the fan on the bolting-cloth. Measure the circumference and add to it about four inches extra for splicing.

The splicing is very simple. Make a long, slanting cut on the upper side of one end of the rattan, and a corresponding cut on the lower side of the other end, as shown in Fig. 1. Pass one end through the hole in the handle and bend the other over to meet it. Fit the ends nicely together, wind the joint with thread, and shape the whole into a circle, using the plate as a gauge. Then tie the loose ends of the string to each side. As the rattan is much smaller than the curved base removed from the hole in the handle, the remaining space in the hole must be plugged with a very short wedge on each side. One long wedge will make the whole thing "skew" in a way that is very difficult to manage.

The bolting-cloth cover is the next thing in hand. Nearly every one knows that this cloth is the same as that used in flour-mills. It is literally bolting-cloth, but in spite of its utilitarian name it is an exquisite fabric, extremely delicate and yet quite strong. It is always white, but there are at least two qualities, and the coarser woven should be used for the fan, as it is easier to paint on, and for this purpose oil paints are considered the best.

The design being a matter of individual taste, it is only suggested that pink or white flowers are particularly well adapted for this work. A branch of pine and cones have also been used with good effect.

As the fan is covered only down even with the strings, cut the cloth accordingly and press it smooth with a warm flatiron. The design may be traced in pencil as the cloth is almost transparent.

In painting always keep a piece of writing paper behind the cloth, and stretching it. Use plenty of turpentine in the paint, for the meshes of the cloth must not be clogged with it; only the threads should be colored. The paper behind absorbs most of the paint, but an unglazed paper absorbs too much. The paper should be changed frequently. If the cloth begins to "fill up" with the paint, go over it with the turpentine alone.

Fix the painted cloth firmly and smoothly to a board and having smeared one side of the rattan with glue, press it to the cloth, taking care to preserve the circular form. Keep it in place with needles pushed slanting into the board. They are longer than pins, and do not make perceptible holes in the cloth. The gluing is only to get the cloth on smoothly, and when dry it must be sewed over and over.

The rattan is then bound with silver braid, beginning at the point where the strings are tied, and ending at the opposite point. The binding requires some care as the edges of the braid are sewed through the cloth and pulled together tight.

A strip of narrower braid is used to cover the strings and tops of the ribs. It is placed on both sides of the fan and sewed on through the cloth. The fan is finished, as shown in Fig. 2, by a bow of ribbon at the handle.

The braid can be bought of a silversmith or a manufacturer of regalias, and comes just the right width to cover the rattan.—Youth's Companion.

ELECTRICITY'S ECCENTRICITIES

A LARGE chestnut tree measuring eighteen feet in circumference at the base was struck by lightning near Frederick, Mo., and split in the center from top to bottom. There was no storm at the time.

A TREE in Nashville caught fire from an electric wire. One limb was burned entirely off. A policeman threw water on the burning limb with a hose, and when the water struck the fire he experienced a severe electric shock.

GOTTFRIED LAWRENCE, of Greenwood, Pa., was struck by lightning and instantly killed. The queer fact in connection with his death is that he was sitting between two other men and neither of these two men were injured in the least.

JOHN FESS, of Medaryville, Ind., was struck by lightning, every bone in his body being broken. Downey Knotts, seated on the wagon seat beside him, escaped unhurt, as did the horses Fess was driving, but a dog trotting under the wagon was killed.

DURING a thunder-storm a thunderbolt came down out of the clouds into the back yard of Peter Shugarts, of Clayville, Pa., and struck his pump. It was a new wooden pump, and the lightning knocked it into splinters and ran down the sucker rod until it reached the water, when it jumped off.

LIGHTNING struck the house of Fred Kapper, in Houghton County, Mich., and the bolt passed within a few feet of his wife, who for years had been a sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism. She was violently shocked, and felt, as she says, "as if ten thousand pins had punctured my flesh." Since that moment her rheumatic pains have left her.

WHILE services were being held in a church in Twiggs County, Ga., there came a vivid flash of lightning, accompanied by a quick and terrific peal of thunder. The lightning struck a tree thirty yards from the church, under which thirteen negroes were gathered. One was instantly killed and ten wounded. The entire party was hurled to the ground senseless.

DURING a recent thunder-storm in Philadelphia, the lightning indulged in some strange freaks in the vicinity of Chestnut and Twelfth streets. Balls of fire darted through the air, and two of them passed through a window into the fourth floor of Darlington, Runk & Co.'s dry goods store and exploded, creating intense excitement. Another ball entered the establishment of the S. S. White Dental Company and shattered an electric light.

DURING a thunder-storm in a Colorado lumber camp a Mexican was struck on the head by lightning, which ran down one side of his face, over the shoulder, transversely across the breast, down around one leg and out through the shoe top. His face was badly burned, and the course of the current over him was marked by a red brand. His clothes were torn from him and the sole of the shoe completely torn off. He lay apparently dead, and was left at the place until the storm was over. After lying in the rain for two hours he was resuscitated, and is now as well as ever except for the burn.

RICH ARCHÆOLOGICAL FINDS.

AN urn containing a mixture of dark mold and fragments of bone was brought to light recently by the workmen engaged in making a railway cut near Botley station, Hants, England. It is believed that the vessel is a Celtic cinerary urn.

A FARMER of Joanna, near Reading, Pa., in digging an excavation unearthed a large iron plate three feet square, bearing date April 4, 1570. Two Indians are represented on one side of the plate and a pair of anchors on the reverse side. The plate also bears an inscription in German. It is believed that the iron plate was part of a stove made in Germany or Holland 320 years ago.

WHILE prospecting for borax recently in Salt Well valley, Cal., Dr. Woodin found some petrified bones of an extinct animal. The ball part of the hip joint is nearly as large as the crown of a Derby hat. The corresponding bone of of an ox is about the size of a hen's egg. The size of the extinct animal may be inferred from this comparison. Other parts of the skeleton of the same animal were found.

AN interesting Indian relic was found recently near Clark's station, Wilkes County, Ga. It is an earthen pot that will hold a little more than a gallon, burned hard, and in almost a perfect state of preservation. Some think it was shaken in a willow basket, as the small indentations all over the outside indicate. Portions of the outside are blackened from being used on the fire. This pot was buried under a field that has been in cultivation for perhaps half a century, and the washing of the soil discovered it.

THE excavations in a hill on the plain of Marathon by the Archæological Society of Athens have resulted in the discovery of charred bones, believed to be the remains of the one hundred and ninety-two Athenians who fell in the famous battle. Several years ago Dr. Schliemann made excavations at the same place, but he met with no success, and renounced the work. The charred bones were found at a depth of thirty-nine feet, near the base of the hill. In addition to the remains urns were found, which according to a custom of that time were buried empty. At a later date the ashes were placed in them. The excavations are to be continued.

DR. J. F. SNYDER, a Virginia, Ill., archæologist, has just returned home from Schuyler County, Ill., where he opened an Indian mound. The corpse was in the tumulus of a chief. The corpse had been laid with the head to the east. On the forehead of the decayed skeleton was found a crescent-shaped ornament of thin, hammered copper. On the breast had been placed a large sheet of mica, that no doubt had served as a mirror. On one side of the skull was a small pottery vase of peculiar form. In one hand was a small stone axe and in the other several arrows and spearheads of flint, a few bone awls and fragments of a large sea-shell.

AN UNDERTAKER'S TALK.

Metallic Coffins That Cost From Fifteen Hundred to Three Thousand Dollars.

"A new style of coffin is becoming very fashionable, if the term can be used in this connection," said Fred Kissner. "Some of these new styles are made like a box, square in shape, but they are beautifully trimmed in colors—in drabs, tans, purples, ashes of roses, pink, lavender, steel gray and red. The material used is broadcloth or plush, and they are ornamented with cords of the same color in festoons. These coffins are quite expensive, but there is a decided demand for them. The bronze coffin is covered also with these colored goods if desired, but as the cost of the metallic coffin is from $1,500 to $3,000 they are used only in exceptional cases. The advantage gained by the use of this latter coffin is that before final burial in the earth they are sealed so as to be absolutely air-tight, and as a result there is not likely to be any decomposition of the remains for years to come. I think that at present there is a tendency toward private burials. A good many people object to the pomp and display of the conventional affair and prefer a ceremony that is more quiet and more in keeping with the solemnity of the occasion. Many people attend funerals who will not sit in the same room with the corpse, and for many reasons like this it has become quite the thing to conduct funerals in a private way. Besides this, it is a great saving in the funeral expense.

"Do I often have calls for coffins from people who can not pay? Oh, yes. Such requests are occasionally made. There are many poor people who will not allow the remains of their relatives to be interred by the county authorities in the cheap and rude fashion that marks these pauper burials. So they come to me, state their circumstances and ask me to furnish them with a coffin and wait until they can pay. I generally oblige them and take my chances on getting the money. Sometimes they call afterward and settle, but in many cases they never pay me. But my failure to get reimbursement was not the result of any deception, and so I am perfectly willing to accept the situation without complaining. I have the consciousness of having done a kind deed to console me and compensate me for the financial loss."—Chicago Evening Post.

ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS.
Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
This Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hanging until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties
are unsurpassed by any other Wine. [illegible]
It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Socialite) Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

THE LORD DOES CARE.

"Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."—I. Peter v., 7.

What can it mean? Is it aught to Him
That the nights are long and the days are dim?
Can He be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?
Around His throne are eternal calms,
And strong, glad music of happy psalms,
And bliss unruffled by any strife.
How can He care for my poor life?

And yet I want Him to care for me,
While I live in this world where the sorrows be;
When the lights die down on the path I take;
When strength is feeble, and friends forsake;
When love and music that once did bless,
Have left to silence and loneliness;
And life-long changes to sobbing prayers—
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares.

When shadows hang o'er me the whole day long;
And my spirit is bowed with shame and wrong;
When I am not good, and the deeper shade
Of conscious sin makes my heart afraid;
And the busy world has too much to do
To stay in its course to help me through,
And I long for a Saviour—can it be
That the God of the Universe cares for me?

Oh, wonderful story of deathless love!
Each child is dear to that heart above;
He fights for me when I can not fight;
He comforts me in the gloom of night;
He lifts the burden, for He is strong;
He stills the sigh, and awakens the song;
The sorrow that bowed me down He bears,
And loves and pardons, because He cares.

Let all who are sad take heart again.
We are not alone in our hours of pain;
Our Father stoops from His throne above
To soothe and quiet us with His love.
He leaves us not when the storm is high,
And we have safety, for He is nigh.
Can it be trouble which He doth share?
Oh, rest in peace, for the Lord does care.
—The Christian.

A CHRISTIAN EXAMPLE.

Let Not the Hand of Sorrow and Affliction Ruffle Your Spirits.

In no form does Christian example seem more attractive and win more honor to the Christian name and character than in patience under severe trial and suffering. It is one of the latest and fairest fruits of the Spirit. It can not be acquired by self-culture. Unsaved people are destitute of it, and are deeply impressed by the exhibition in others of a grace that they are unable to exercise themselves; in-so-much that the manifestation of patience under sore trial and provocation is to them the most convincing proof of a genuine Christian character. When such people wish to know whether a man is a Christian they do not inquire what is his creed, or what are his professions, but if he endures the injuries and contradictions which they find it impossible to bear with serenity and patience. Nor are they satisfied with a placid and saintly deportment in prosperity. They must see how he bears himself in adversity, under injustice and unprovoked abuse, and if he endure these things with patience he is regarded as a follower of Christ in deed and in truth. And a healthy man can be patient and cheerful in prosperity, when he has few or no crosses and losses to bear; but touch him in his dearest earthly interests, bow him down under affliction, add to that insult and injury, and if he then maintains an unruffled, forbearing, forgiving spirit, and manifestly dwells in inward peace and quietness, there is no room for doubt or caviling. He who bears the ills of life patiently and clothes them with cheerfulness, furnishes the most conclusive proof of the power of the Christian religion to save and bless humanity.

Now it is the duty and privilege of every Christian to be just such a witness for Christ; to endure trial of every kind with Christ-like serenity and patience. By so enduring it he greatly weakens its force, and may even be happy in the midst of it; not, of course, on account of it or because of it, but in spite of it, and because of the sustaining grace of God. For He hath said: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be;" "My grace is sufficient for thee;" and "In Me ye shall have peace." It is not merely for its spectacular effect, or to furnish an exhibition to an unbelieving world of the saving, sustaining power of faith in Christ that Christian patience is divinely given. Another and equally important reason for patience is that it is necessary in order to receive the benefit from our trials which God intends they shall minister. "Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise." We are called to endure tribulations with patience, because much endurance yields a precious harvest of moral excellence, strength and purity. The great object of life, and the ultimate purpose of all our Heavenly Father's dispensations, is the development in us of a character fashioned after the model of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is indispensable to our greatest usefulness in time and blessedness in eternity, and requires a constant discipline of occasions—crosses, hardships, tribulations. It is in enduring these in the spirit of Christ, and by the help of grace which He imparts, that we attain to the spiritual symmetry of perfect manhood in Christ Jesus. Hence it is written: "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trial of your faith worketh patience; and let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

This, then, the faithful Christian may believe without any shadow of doubt—and it is his greatest incentive to patience—that all hardships, injuries, sufferings, will be occasions for magnifying the grace of God in him, for developing in him that likeness to Christ which is the supreme end of our earthly existence; will increase that treasure which is within and indestructible, and goes far toward making the true Christian superior to any outward calamity. Thus he will be enabled to say with the apostle: "We glory in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience;" and "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;" "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us."—N. W. Christian Advocate.

A BURDENED LIFE.

The Pathetic Story of the "Elephant Man"—An Illustration of the Beauty of Christian Pity.

The strange story of a poor man who recently died in England illustrates the beauty of Christian pity, and its power to alleviate human distress, even in its most repulsive forms.

The subject of this sketch was not one of that class so morally low that they never dare to "look themselves in the face," but a physical affliction made that phrase literally true to him. His personal deformity so separated him from his fellow-men that Job's sorrow must often have furnished him words: "They abhor me, they flee far from me. * * * I am a brother to dragons. * * * Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul."

By one of the "cruelties of nature" Joseph Merrick was born with an elephant's head; and yet, strange as it seems, this misshapen being had the gift of speech, was intelligent, learned to read and write, and grew to maturity. By whose care or under what circumstances he reached the full age of understanding and feeling, with such an intolerable affliction upon him, this is no place to inquire; but whatever sufferings he endured in childhood could bear no comparison with his later experience, when he met everywhere, and could realize, the neglect and aversion of mankind.

All homes and all employments were shut against him, and at last starvation drove him to hire himself to a London penny show. Here Dr. Frederick Treves found the "elephant man," spoke kindly to him, and undertook to arrange a home for him in the London Hospital. Neither this or any other hospital would receive him. With a pathos hardly to be matched, the poor creature begged that he might be put in a blind asylum.

The London police prohibited his exhibition by showmen, on the ground of public decency, and this took away his one means of support. His only alternative was to pick up his living like a wild beast.

After a few months, thanks to his friend, the doctor, Merrick's case reached the public through the Times. The Prince and Princess of Wales, Mrs. Kendall and Mr. Gladstone interested themselves in a subscription for his benefit, and with the money thus secured an apartment was built for him in a remote wing of the London Hospital.

Here, surrounded by books, flowers and gifts of kindness and taste, he passed between three and four years in privacy and comfort. The friends who had helped him came now and then to see him, and he sincerely loved them all, but best of all good Dr. Treves, the man who, as he said, gave him the first kind word he ever had in his life.

Many persons would think it little worth their while to develop the soul, or even to attend largely to the bodily comfort of a "freak;" but to the humane surgeon of London Hospital the charity of a quiet retreat, and even of mental, moral and religious culture to sweeten the solitude of poor, repulsive Joseph Merrick, was neither a useless task nor a sentimental notion.

The "elephant man" loved to read the hymns of Doctor Watts, and sometimes wrote verses himself, verses which occupied his time, and often—like the following lines—expressed the gratitude he felt:

I thank the pitying friends who cheered,
My days with kindness true,
When the rude world despised and feared,
And called me monster too.

I thank the sheltering walls that hide
In peace, unashamed, unknown,
This face so dire to others' sight,
And hateful to my own.

I thank the Lord, Whose eye of love
Can look from Heaven and see
A real human soul within
A hideous thing like me.

And soon this body loathed of men,
This life so hard to bear,
Will perish at His word—and then
His touch will make me fair.

Joseph Merrick died before he was quite twenty-eight years old. His life was long enough for the bearing of such a burden. And we can believe that his hope is fulfilled, and God's touch has made him fair.

They who shrink from unattractive objects of benevolence may well envy the joy of the benefactors who brightened and blessed the last days of one who was a human brother, though he scarcely wore the human form.—Youth's Companion.

THE CONVICT'S SON.

How a Young Australian Surprised His English Friends.

A Story Which Shows That a Man May Be a Convicted Prison and Yet Be Innocent of Any Crime—Every Man's Honor in His Own Hands.

The young men were practicing archery on Mr. Howson's lawn and Bob Markham had astonished every one with his skill as a marksman, says a writer in the New York Morning Journal. "Why, you shoot like an Indian," said Jim Crawford.

"I am worse than that," said the other, calmly. "I was born in Australia, the son of a convict." Frank Howson and the other young men drew away. The young host flushed angrily.

"What do you mean?" he asked. "You know very well that if you're the son of a convict we can't associate with you, and so I'll tell the coachman to have the carriage ready for the five o'clock train."

His young host's plain speaking did not seem to give the other any uneasiness, for he answered, with a short laugh:

"All right—as you please. But you may change your mind about my not being good enough to associate with after you've heard my story."

Frank looked uncertain at this moment, and then sat down and looked uneasily at the other, who began:

"My father was arrested twenty-eight years ago on the charge of killing his uncle and tried for the murder. The testimony, which was entirely circumstantial, was not sufficient to hang him, but was so damaging that, in spite of his most solemn protestations of innocence, he was transported for life to the penal settlements of Australia.

"He was taken there, and for ten years worked like a slave, with a chain and ball dragging at his heels.

"At the end of that time another convict died in the same prison, where he had been sent for highway robbery, four years after father was transported. On his death-bed he confessed that he murdered my father's uncle, and gave minute details of the crime, and even told the place where he had hidden the knife which he had used in the crime, and also where he had hidden the murdered man's watch and pocket-book.

"Of course my father was released and every thing done for him by the Gov*ernment of New South Wales to show* how deeply every one regretted that an innocent man should have suffered for so long.

"In a year he married the daughter of a merchant who had visited the prison very often and been a ministering angel to him and to the other convicts.

"After living a short time in Melbourne his dislike of the city as being the place where he had suffered so much unjustly drove him to move away, and with my mother he went far up into the interior, in the brush, miles away from any human beings, except the natives, and there built a log hut and lived for twelve years.

"I was born soon after our new home was finished, and in less than two years after my brother came. We grew up together, with no companionship but each other and the few natives who lived in the mountains near us. From them we learned how to throw the boomerang and draw the bow, until, young as we were, we excelled even them in their use. We could bring down the kangaroo with the bow at one hundred yards, even if it was running at full speed, and smash a bottle set behind a tree one hundred feet away with the boomerang.

"When I was thirteen and my brother eleven father discovered gold on his farm, which by that time had grown to thousands of acres, and in two months the country was flooded with miners and he was worth $500,000.

"My mother prevailed upon him to move back to Melbourne, where he is now the Governor of New South Wales and one of the richest men in Australia."

"I beg your pardon, my dear fellow," exclaimed Frank, eagerly extending his hand, while the others crowded around him with equally profuse apologies.

But, to their astonishment and chagrin, he did not seem to notice any of the proffered hands, but, with a quiet smile, turned to Frank.

"Now that you know how I came to handle a bow so well—as also how a man can be a convicted felon and yet be innocent of any crime—it would make your stock of information still more complete if you could learn that even if a father is guilty of crime it does not make his son any the less honorable or fit to associate with the world. Every man's honor is in his own hands, and is not affected in the slightest by what others may do—it is by a man's own deeds that he will be judged by his Maker! And now, my dear Frank, I will go to your house and pack my valise, and if you will have the carriage ready for the five o'clock train I will relieve you of my presence."

And, in spite of his friend's protestations, the boy that afternoon shook from his feet the dust of the Howson estate.

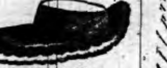
THE REALM OF FASHION.

The Latest Productions of the Designers and Colorists.

The Philosophy of Hats—An Era of Parisian Headgear—Feather Toques and Pocket Muffs—The Novelties for Hat Decoration.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

While the gods may give nothing to men without great labor, the merest accident has often been sufficient to provide women with the desire of their hearts as far as the whims of fashion are concerned. Gloves were devised to cover the ugly, red hands of a queen; the necklet was made to conceal a scar on a snowy throat, and as the Rabagas hat was traced to a titled lady and leader of fashion who, on a hot summer's day, threw back a hat which burdened her forehead, so the little close bonnets might have been suggested by crowds and high winds, and the scooping shapes by driving rains. Had not Jonas Hanway been bold enough to carry his umbrella we might still be going about in a green silk calash, beneath which it was said that every full face was charming and every side view correspondingly ugly.



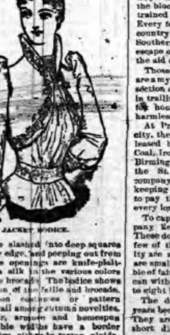
FALL SHAPE IN FELT.

The fall season as to millinery is precisely like its predecessors. The keen eye may trace the outgrowths of a previous season, and those who desire only novelty need not be disappointed. The touch of Parisian taste is unmistakable in the new hats and bonnets, the former being so large and the latter so small as to suggest serious apprehensions for the later arrivals when the fashionable shapes shall have reached their respective maximum and minimum.

When a felt hat is bordered with narrow ostrich feather trimming, a pocket muff of velvet is made in the same colors, with a bunch of small feather tips at one side. Cloth crowns, imported of course, have brilliant birds applied flat upon the surface, with wings outspread, as if flying. These are made up in toques with feather bands or rolls of velvet, and aigrettes of heron plumes. Feather toques are accompanied by collarettes which extend well down at the front and back, and are made of the same feathers as the hat. Impeyan is the most brilliant for this purpose.

None of the conceits and fantasies heretofore introduced by the designer and the colorist have equaled those now displayed in the newest Pompa*dour brocades. Light and shadow, dis*tance and depth, are all expressed upon their beauteous surfaces. In the new supply, fruit is evidently the temporary fancy of fashion, with a preference for *pomegranates, olives, cherries, lady-*apples, grapes, plums and currants. For brides' dresses flowers chiefly are supplied in plain brocades, that is, those not decorated with pearls or cut jewels, such as trumpet lilies, uncurling fern fronds, sprays of wheat and oat straw, the most graceful of all cereals, being leading patterns in ivory and cream white. A very beautiful brocade for brides has for design a tiny flying swallow, the bird itself being an Oriental emblem of happiness. There are also Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette designs and styles which copy Escurial laces. One brocade of this description has a ground of Flemish blue satin, patterned with a black lace beading, which is seemingly tied in true lovers' knots.

It is made up with a plain skirt and fan-plaited back, and is accompanied by a Louis XV. coat of black velvet, edged with black ostrich trimming and a full jabot of fine French lace down the front. The sleeves, however, match the skirt, and are in leg o' mutton shape, with a fall of lace at the wrist. Another brocade in black is patterned with rosy-cheeked pippin apples with twigs and leaves. Plain black faille supplies the front of the skirt, while the brocade is fan-plaited at the back. The front breadths are slashed into deep squares on the lower edge, and peeping out from between the openings are knife-plaitings of India silk in the various colors shown in the brocade. The bodice shows a combination of the faille and brocade.



JACKET BODICE.

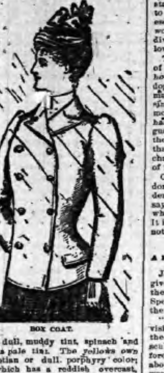
Combination costumes or pattern dresses prevail among autumn novelties. Camel's hair, armure and homespun cloth in double width have a border along one edge, either in tartan plaids, rows of narrow velvet interwoven to look as if sewed on, bands of astrakhan or frise stripes. Sometimes there will be Vandykes of braiding in combination with astrakhan, and the most expensive of all pattern robes has sleeves and corsage trimmings wrought on to resemble passementerie. Other wool materials are pleasantly suggestive of the bourettes so popular several seasons back. Whether as bison cloth the roughest will be more attractive than soft bourette, or camel's hair with a rough finish, is questionable, but the fabric promises satisfaction from its quality, colorings and general character.

An elegant example of the Louis XV. Jaquette is made of velvet or faced cloth and brocade. Mouse gray velvet for the jacket with rolling collar fastened just below the bust with two buttons, and a close-fitting waistcoat of silver gray brocade, over-run with a little steel and silver, is an elegant combination for this form of garment.

The waistcoat is fastened to the throat with smaller buttons than those upon the jacket, and they should be the traditional Louis XV. buttons, which are enamel paintings of beautiful female heads set in cut silver. Portfolio pockets of the velvet are placed on the waistcoat so as to show half beyond the coat-fronts, and the jacket has close sleeves with deep cuffs of the brocade. A full jabot or double cascade of lace is added to the throat and falls just below the bust.

It is rather early to look for shades which are most beautiful under artificial light, yet there is no lack of rich and novel colors designed for the trying light of day. The most of these are classified and graded, too, saving the eye and the judgment from confusion. Red is now a popular hue, and the shades in use are many, including Magenta, Solferino, Eiffel, Frontin, a brilliant cherry, salvia, dahlia, and the fuchsia reds, so much admired, which are heavy and have a purple overcast.

New pinks are topaz, a tint advised for brunettes; flamingo's wing, a red pink, pomegranate, old rose and trocadero, a pale shade. The browns are Sienna, golden russet, marron, a pale chestnut, and a new whitish brown, called coconut. Greens this season include forest green in changeable tints, and the mallard hues called canard and canette. Cresson green has blue tints. There are also Egyptian green, a dull, muddy tint, spinach and willow, a pale tint. The yellows own an Egyptian or dull porphyry color; tunis, which has a reddish overcast, and imperial, a brilliant hue. Tonquin and oriole are also brilliant, while jonquil and primrose are delicate evening shades. The favorite blues are mazarin, marine, azure, king's blue and French ultra-marine, known also as St. Cyr. Grays are especially the favorites of fashion, and display mouse, steel, granite, acier, with a blue cast; iron gray, trusterelle or turtle-dove and seagull—in fact, the shades of gray are almost numberless.



BOX COAT.

Among the odd tints there are fumee, a smoke color bordering on brown; poussiere de coral, or coral dust, citron, poppy, petunia and capucine.

All fawn and almond, mignonette and mastic shades remain with us, as also do the copper and currant tints, the garnets, blue plum and bronze shades. Evening colors show the same pale tints already familiar, but another month will bring out novelties for later fall and winter, which, with those already mentioned, will make a very choice variety from which to select.

The novelties in fall gloves are the gray shades which Parisian women call "sad" and "tender," and which importers offer in preference to the long-favored tan colors. The latter are still admired, however, and begin at a yellowish russet shade, with dull chamois and ecru for the lightest tints. Of the new colors suggested for street wear, pearl gray shades with black stitching and in glace kid are the ultra in style. The latest novelties in Parisian gloves are displayed in a Broadway window, and a recent addition to the list is a blue, of that peculiar shade found only in the wing of a Brazilian butterfly. Flowering almond is the fashionable tint in pink, and oat-straw the selected shade of yellow, for gloves worn with full-dress toilettes.

L'ETOILE.

CATCHING CONVICTS.

How They Are Run Down by Hounds in Alabama.

The Proverbial Convict-Catching Bloodhound Is Nothing More Nor Less Than a Small Fox-Hound Trained with Considerable Care.

Bloodhounds are inseparably associated with slavery in the South. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and other stories and dramas of that character would lose half their interest without the horror-inspiring bloodhounds. Since the war the bloodhounds in the South have been trained to chase escaped convicts. Every few days newspapers all over the country publish telegrams from some Southern city giving an account of the escape of a convict and his capture by the aid of bloodhounds.

Those convict-catching bloodhounds are a myth. There are no such dogs in this section of the country. The dogs used in trailing escaped prisoners are small fox hounds, a very insignificant and harmless animal.

At Pratt Mines, five miles from this city, there are twelve hundred convicts, leased by the State to the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company, writes a Birmingham (Ala.) correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The company is responsible for the safe-keeping of the convicts, and is required to pay the State a good round sum for every long-term man who escapes.

To capture those who escape the company keeps a large pack of hounds. These dogs are small red fox hounds. A few of them are spotted, but the majority are a solid, dull red color. They are small, slender-limbed animals, capable of fair speed and endurance, and they can without difficulty follow a trail five to eight hours old.

The dogs at Pratt Mines have for years been in charge of R. H. Crosswell. They are kept in a large stockade a short distance from the prison, and never taken outside the inclosure except when wanted to trail escaped convicts. In appearance these hounds are as lazy and cowardly as any "yaller dog" in existence, but when once they strike the trail of a convict they become all life and animation. From puppyhood these dogs have been taught to follow nothing but the trail of men. They are never allowed to hunt game of any kind, and would pass over the trail of fox or deer without notice.

To get the dogs on the right trail a coat or hat belonging to the escaped convict is obtained if possible and held to the nose of each dog, while Trainer Crosswell by signs makes them understand that is the scent they are expected to follow. They are then taken to the point where the convict made his escape from the mine or prison, or to the place where he was last seen. The moment they scent the trail they recognize it and give a sharp yelp. Their lashes are then slipped off, they are told to go and the race begins. Guards on horses follow close behind Trainer Crosswell, who rides a fleet horse and keeps right with the dogs. As soon as the trail is struck the baying of the hounds begins and the music they make would stir the blood in any old hunter's veins. The dogs follow closely at first, but as the trail grows warmer they increase their pace. The fleeing convict may run through a crowded street, double on his track, enter houses and mingle with crowds of people, but he can not dodge the yelping pack of red dogs on his trail. There is only one chance to escape them, and that is un*certain if they are close behind*. By taking to water the dogs can be thrown off the trail. If the convict can reach a small creek and wade through the water in the middle of the stream several *miles he may be able to escape the keen-*scented pursuers. They can not follow him in the water. If the dogs are close behind this plan will fail, because the guards separate the dogs and follow both banks of the creek, often a distance of several miles, in the hope of striking the trail again.

Trainer Crosswell is proud of his dogs. Once fairly started on a trail they never lose it unless thrown off the scent by a hard rain or the convict taking to water. They have trailed men through the principal streets of this city where thousands had passed over the trail and finally run the fugitive down. They never make a mistake. If they are started on the right trail they follow it to the end. When several convicts escape together and separate in the woods when pursued the dogs are divided and the separate trails all followed.

The harrowing stories told in novels of men being torn to pieces by blood*hounds have no foundation*. When the dogs overtake an escaped prisoner they make no effort to attack him, but simply circle around while their deep-mouth-baying tells the guards the game has been run down. As soon as the guards come up and secure the prisoner the hounds immediately relapse into that state of lazy indifference which characterized them before the opening of the long chase.

On several occasions these dogs have done good service in trailing down murderers and burglars. Trainer Crosswell says he can take any ordinary fox-hound when young and teach it to trail men. It is entirely a matter of education and not of breed.

THE YOSEMITE VALLEY.

A Few Pictures of the Beautiful Scenery to Be Found There.

John Muir, writing in the Century, gives one of the best word paintings of the Sierra scenery ever put in print. Speaking of the Sierra range in which the Yosemite valley is situated, he says:

"In general views no mark of man is visible upon it, nor any thing to suggest the wonderful depth and grandeur of its sculpture. None of its magnificent, forest-crowned ridges seems to rise much above the general level to publish its wealth. No great valley or river is seen, or group of well marked features of any kind standing out as distinct pictures. Even the summit peaks, marshaled in glorious array so high in the sky, seem comparatively smooth and featureless. Nevertheless the whole range is furrowed with canyons to a depth of from 2,000 to 5,000 feet, in which once flowed majestic glaciers, and in which now flow and sing the bright Sierra rivers.

"Though of such stupendous depth, these canyons are not raw, gloomy, jagged-walled gorges, savage and inaccessible. With rough passages here and there, they are mostly smooth, open pathways conducting to the fountains of the summit; mountain streets full of life and light, graded and sculptured by the ancient glaciers, and presenting throughout all their courses a rich variety of novel and attractive scenery—the most attractive that has yet been discovered in the mountain ranges of the world. In many places—especially in the middle region of the western flank—the main canyons widen into spacious valleys or parks of charming beauty.

"The most famous and accessible of these canyon valleys, and also the one that presents their most striking and sublime features on the grandest scale is the Yosemite, situated on the upper waters of the Merced at an elevation of 4,000 feet above the level of the sea. It is about seven miles long, half a mile to a mile wide and nearly a mile deep, and is carved in the solid granite flank of the range. The walls of the valley are made up of rocks, mountains in size, partly separated from each other by side canyons and gorges; and they are so sheer, in front, and so compactly and harmoniously built together on a level floor, that the place, comprehensively seen, looks like some immense hall or temple lighted from above.

"But no temple made with hands can compare with Yosemite. Every rock in its walls seems to glow with life. Some lean back in majestic repose; others, absolutely sheer, or nearly so for thousands of feet, advance beyond their companions in thoughtful attitudes, giving welcome to storms and calms alike, seemingly conscious, yet heedless of every thing going on about them. Awful in stern, immovable majesty, how softly these mountain rocks are adorned and how fine and reassuring the company they keep—their feet set in groves and gay emerald meadows, their brows in the thin blue sky, a thousand flowers leaning confidingly against their adamantine bosses, bathed in floods of booming water, floods of light, while snow, clouds, winds, avalanches, shine and sing and wreathe about them as the years go by! Birds, bees, butterflies and myriads of nameless wings stir the air into music and give glad animation. Down through the midst flows the crystal Merced—river of mercy—peacefully gliding, reflecting lilies and trees and the onlooking rocks, things frail and fleeting and types of endurance meeting here and blending in countless forms, as if into this one mountain mansion nature had gathered her choicest treasures, whether great or small, to draw her lovers into close and confiding communion with her.

"Sauntering towards Yosemite up the foot-hills, richer and wilder become the forests and streams. At an elevation of 6,000 feet above the level of the sea the *silver firs are 200 feet high, with branch*es around the colossal shafts in regular order, and every branch beautifully pinnate like a fern leaf. The Douglas spruce and the yellow and sugar pines here reach their highest developments of beauty and grandeur, and the rich, brown-barked libocedrus, with warm, yellow-green plumes. The majestic sequoia, too, is here, the king of conifers, the noblest of a noble race. All these colossal trees are as wonderful in the fineness of their beauty and proportions as in stature, growing together, an assemblage of conifers surpassing all that have yet been discovered in the forests of the world. Here, indeed, is the tree-lover's paradise, the woods, dry and wholesome, letting in the light in shimmering masses, half sunshine, half shade, the air indescribably spicy and exhilarating, plushy fir boughs for beds, and cascades to sing us asleep as we gaze through the trees to the stars."

How to Keep Ice.

There are three or four things that will help to keep the precious nugget of ice from melting away if the housekeeper will only remember them. One is that to keep ice warm is the way to keep it cold. A piece of ice in a pitcher, with a pail over the pitcher and a rug over the pail, will keep all night. A piece of ice in a refrigerator covered with a snug white blanket will cheat the greedy ice-man every day, and snap saucy fingers at the milk that does not dare to get sour or the beefsteak that dares not fail. These things are de*sirable in their way and should be* in every hatband, but the greatest trick of all is newspapers. With plenty of newspapers above, below and on every side the way a piece of ice will keep is a joke.

of Elizabeth.
For Coroners,
Dr. W. C. Boone, of Plainfield.
Dr. John J. [illegible], of Rahway.

HONORABLE NOMINATIONS.

The ticket presented to the voters of Union County by the [illegible] Democracy is in every particular deserving of popular support.

The nominations are honorable, because they all fully meet the grand old Jeffersonian requirements of HONESTY, CAPABILITY and GOOD REPUTE.

Such are the kind of men whose names head our ballot [illegible]. Men who as private citizens bear the badge of unsullied personal character, and who as public servants can be relied upon to honestly and fearlessly discharge duty for the welfare of the people, and not for selfish self.

Geissenhainer for Congress.

Marsh for Senator.

Carroll, Lane and Cook for Assemblymen.

Hicks for Sheriff.

Boone and [illegible] for Coroners.

Like the Democratic nominees, and a better selection was never made.

Without an exception, they come squarely up to the standard of trustworthiness.

SPECIAL PROTECTION.

The tariff act recently imposed upon the people of the United States by a Republican Congress and President is artfully framed, from beginning to end, to enrich capitalized monopoly at the public expense.

Professing to protect labor, it gives no guarantee that its producers shall receive enhanced reward, but, on the contrary, [illegible] robs them by compelling the payment of higher prices for the chief necessaries of life.

It protects, we admit, certain special [illegible] classes, but not the honest toiling millions.

The leaders boast loudly that sugar is admitted free of duty.

That is an arrant deception.

Sugar is not entirely free.

By the bill under review sugar duties are laid according to the Dutch standard of color, all under No. 16 of such standard, the low grade dark, fitted by refining, coming in free while the high grades of [illegible] for family use, are made subject to duty.

That single feature discloses the real character of the measure.

It is to benefit the Sugar Trust, one of the most objectionable of the many plundering combines.

The Trust can get cheap sugar for refining, and through the process so kindly provided by a Republican Congress, [illegible] out of the hard earnings of consumers enormous annual profits.

Free sugar would have been [illegible] to the poor man, but it should be absolutely free, regardless of color or grade, and untouched by Dutch standards or [illegible] Trusts.

The State election will be held Tuesday, Nov. 4.

The next Democratic Convention for the Third Assembly District will be held in Plainfield.

It behooves all voters who desire [illegible] government to educate themselves in the provisions of the new election law.

The Republican candidates for State and County officers are paying sly visits to different parts of the County trying to bolster up their cause.

What appropriations has Amos Clark ever secured for the Third Congressional District. If any, the Congressional Record is silent as to their existence.

The people of Somerset will remember the capability and worth of County Clerk, [illegible] Vanderveer, and reelect him again to that office. Mr Vanderveer is qualified for County Clerk.

A recently organized corporation asks for a charter as the American Purifying Company. What's the matter with their starting in on the Republican party, just to get their hands in? It would be a stupendous job.

Next week it is intended to have a rousing ratification meeting in Plainfield, at which will be present the Democratic candidates for Senator, Sheriff and Assemblyman. Prominent speakers will also address the meeting.

The Democrats of Plainfield are unanimous in their praise of the wise selections made for State and County officers and will show their appreciation of that fact on the 4th of November by reducing the majority in this Republican stronghold.

The outlook for the election of William J. Keyes to the Senate from Somerset county looks bright, and why should it not, with such a fitting candidate as Mr. Keyes. He is a gentleman of large property interests and sound business principles. He is no tool of any corporation or clique, and will be his own [illegible]. Vote for Mr. Keyes, citizens of Somerset, by all means.

WE DON'T WANT TWO OF A KIND.

The Central Times upholds Speaker Reed in the [illegible] line about our present and next Congressman, Hon. Jacob A. Geissenhainer and also quotes a short speech of acceptance made by would-be-Senator Reed, of Somerset County, in which the latter is made to say that "I was born a Republican, have always lived a Republican, and shall continue, please God, to be a Republican." "Well, Charley, one Speaker Reed, we have no use for you in Trenton."

CHESTNUTS ARE RIPE.

But they don't count in the Campaign.

Our esteemed young friend (in politics) of the Central Times gets off several "old chestnuts" in his last issue regarding the political complexion of the Democratic candidates for Congressional, Senatorial, Shrievalty and Assembly nominations in the coming contest for Peoples' Rights. We mean by the latter phrase that the Democratic party of Union County have nominated candidates who represent the people, not corporations or monopolists, and all the [illegible] of those who contribute to the [illegible] will not change the will of the people in the contest for good government on Nov. 4th next. Now here is one of the "chestnuts" which will be crushed on the above date:

"The picture of Want-to-be-Sheriff Hicks which appeared in the columns of the Press yesterday would indicate that the Democratic candidate was suffering from some dreadfully tormenting malady. There will be a more agonizing look on his face the morning of November 5, however."

The picture of the next Democratic Sheriff of Union County will be found in another column. There is nothing agonizing in his looks, either. He looks first-class.

Voters should see that their names are registered if they want to vote in the November election. The Boards of Registry and Elections will hold a final meeting for correction of registry lists October 28.

Mr. [illegible] Bergen, the Democratic candidate for Assembly in Somerset County, made an enviable record in the State Legislature while a member. He should be re-elected to that position by a handsome majority. He is eminently fitted for the position.

The voters of Union County should prove by their ballots Nov. 4, that they appreciate the efforts and worth of their present representative in Congress, Hon Jacob A. Geissenhainer, by giving him a rousing majority. Don't believe what the friends of Amos say. He cannot win this fight.

The citizens of Bernards township, Somerset County, say that on election day they will show the Republican candidate for State Senator how much they hold him responsible for the heavy taxes saddled upon them by his manner of conducting certain railroad land suits. They propose to put a Key on his actions in the future.

Who says anything against Mayor Rankin, the candidate for Senator on the Republican side, because he happened to become Mayor of the city of Elizabeth? Don't forget that honest little Fred. C. Marsh has done more for the County of Union than Mayor Rankin has ever done. Look at Assemblyman Marsh's record in the Legislature during his two terms of office. Actions and deeds tell for the people at large.

Another prominent Republican has withdrawn his allegiance to that party and come out squarely for the Democratic. State Senator L. W. Hubbard, of Buckingham County, Virginia, says he cannot stand the Bayonet bill, the seating of Langston and other tactics of the Republican party, and therefore leaves it. Others are following every day, and to quote an old chestnut, "the woods are full of them."

The Central Times says "this is a campaign of education and the voters of the Third Congressional District are learning much." Right you are. They are learning all about Amos Clark's promises and the fact that their present Representative in Congress, Jacob A. Geissenhainer, has done more for them during his term of office than even Amos' promises during his term of office, which ended some years ago. As the Times says—"this is an important election." Let every Democrat remember those words, and vote against advocates of Monopolies and Trusts.

While the Third Assembly District is overwhelmingly Republican in votes, it should be borne in mind that the same District has before been carried by the Democrats with a good nominee, against a poor one on the other side. The same chance is again open to the Democrats and the People. Our candidate for Assembly, Mr. Alfred B. Cook, of Rahway, can be elected if the honest voters of the District will only set their minds on it. A Kyte with a heavy weight on it can never reach the heavens, no matter how long a string it has attached to it.

VOTE FOR ALFORD B. COOK.

Right You Are.

We have good news from Union county, to the effect that the outlook for the election of Mr. Marsh to the Senate looks better and better each day. If the Democrats of Union suffer themselves to be beaten with such a [illegible], upon such an issue as prohibition, they will not deserve recognition from the rest of the State.—Trenton True American.

—The formal opening of the Club House of the Democratic League, at Trenton, Tuesday evening, was a grand affair. Prominent Democrats from all over the State were present, and a reception tendered Gov. Abbett and staff. All were delighted, and the League promises to be a great benefit to the Democracy in coming and future political contests in Mercer county.

All Signs of a Winter Predicted.

A Connecticut weather prophet predicts a very severe Winter. His reasons are the big hay crop, the hard, thick shells of the nuts, and the increased industry of muskrats in building their swamp houses. This prophet is an old sea captain. But the "other" captain says that the Winter will be a mild one because the Fall rains have stored up warmth. The New York Herald says: "the slight increase of [illegible] reported indicates that the Winter of 1890-91 will not be as mild as the preceding."

"ONLY A FARMER."

Say So in the Man Who will be Elected.

THE PRESS is indebted to the Somerville Democrat for some facts regarding W. J. Keys, the Democratic nominee for Senator of Somerset county, and a gentleman loved and honored by all who know him. About six years ago he purchased a farm near South Branch, his present place of residence. He immediately moved his family there and commenced improvements on his place, spending about $16,000 in this manner. Although a man of means, he is just as sociable, just as common with his neighbors, as though he was as poor as the poorest.

He has a large, open heart, and is always looking out to do favors for those with whom he comes in contact. Mr. Keys was born at Dobb's Ferry, N. Y., April 12, 1838, making him now 52 years of age. He started out to earn his own living when 13 years of age, and from that time to this he has been a hard working man. For twenty-five years he carried on the produce business in Washington Market, and in that way was in constant contact with farmers. He thus learned of their needs, and this experience would be worth much to him in the Senate. He has always desired to be a farmer, and when he finally purchased his place at South Branch, it was with the intention of ending his days on this, the place of his choice.

Mr. Keys did not want the nomination for Senator. It was pressed upon him. The office sought the man, not the man the office. He accepted of the same because urged to do so; because he was told that it would settle all factional fights; because it was thought he would carry his party to victory, and we believe he will.

Mr. Keys never turns a poor man away who applies to him for help. Even the poor tramps are always supplied when they apply for work. His neighbors say that he is one of the kindest-hearted men in that vicinity. They cannot say too much in his favor. Although now he has means, yet he is one of the most social and common men in his manners that you often come across. He always says: "I am only a farmer, the same as my neighbors."

A SHIP CANAL ACROSS NEW JERSEY.

A Plainfield Engineer Promises Success for a Scheme for a Short Route from Delaware River to the Ocean, and Plainfield Money Backs Him Up.

The New York newspapers are devoting considerable space to news of the project to construct a ship canal across New Jersey from the Delaware to the Atlantic, which has brought all the way from South America a young engineer of established reputation, now in Plainfield. Some months ago he received an urgent message summoning him from the mountain mines, where he had been developing a fortune for himself and others to embark in this Jersey scheme. He arranged his South American affairs so that he might take a long leave of absence without subjecting them to any risk, came North as speedily as possible and made arrangements to throw his entire skill and influence into the canal project.

The success of the scheme had been dependent on English capital, and he has undertaken to secure American capital instead. His large acquaintance and good repute among moneyed men seems to be making the task an easy one, for he now assures the originators of the project that success is certain, and is quoted as saying that considerable of the promised financial aid comes from Plainfield capitalists.

The scheme was first suggested by merchants of Philadelphia and Camden who wanted a shorter water route to New York, and an abbreviation of the journey of hundreds of miles down the bay and around Cape May to strike the ocean path to Europe. Most of the men whose commerce it would directly benefit were at first, however, chary of advancing the necessary capital, but they are now said to be among the very ones who are contributing to the constructing fund which the engineer and lesser merchants have been seeking to raise.

The exact route of the proposed canal has not been divulged, but it is understood that it will be a diagonal course across the State, passing near Mount Holly and entering the ocean near Shark River. This would require about sixty miles of excavation, but the engineering difficulties would be few, as the land the big artificial waterway would traverse is almost entirely flat, the soil is light and there are no hills to cut away or rocks to blast. A somewhat shorter route could be selected just below the fortieth parallel, reaching the Atlantic at Toms River, and this has received considerable favorable consideration.

News of the development of the enterprise, which, the engineer says, will certainly be begun at an early date, will be hailed with joy by the owners of the South Jersey land which the canal will develop. Its path will be directly through the great region of pines and cranberries.

A BRAKEMAN'S HORRIBLE DEATH.

A Plainfield Boy Torn to Pieces as His Brother was Before Him.

Christopher Hoagland, an unmarried man from Bound Brook, was killed by the cars at South Plainfield Thursday. He was a brakeman on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, and was caught between the bumpers while coupling cars. When the train started ahead he was released from the crushing embrace and thrown on the track. His body lay directly across the rails, and the low-hanging axles and brake attachments tore him to pieces. The remains when taken to his Bound Brook home were in so horribly mangled a condition that his friends could scarcely recognize them. Hoagland was a nephew of John Giles who works in [illegible]'s coal and lumber yards, in this city. He was the son of Calvin Hoagland, a former resident of this city. He used to be a paper boy on the Jersey Central. His brother, McClellan, was killed on a road in Omaha just two years ago, at the same age.

What a Plainfield Navy Chaplain Gets.

There are twenty-four chaplains in the United States Navy. There are only two or three of them really at sea, a number of them serving at the navy yards and receiving ships.

A chaplain in the navy ranks as a lieutenant and for the first five years is paid $1 500 while on shore, $1 800 while at sea, and $1,300 while "waiting orders." After being in the service five years, the chaplains get $2,800 a year. The position is for life, and the pay increases as the years "roll by."

There are a few upon the superannuated list. The late Joseph Stockbridge, of this city, had been fifty years in the service. The record shows that he was seven years at sea, preached ten years and spent thirty-one years "unemployed." He ranked as Commodore when he died and got $3,[illegible] a year.

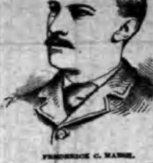
The Little Seed.

[illegible]

Be wise in time. Check the little cough, cure the little chill, dispel the little pain, cure the little ailment before the strong, unconquerable giant of disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, taken in time, is a remedy for these ills.

OUR CANDIDATES.

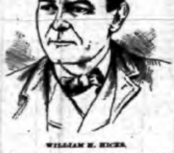
The Likenesses of Union County's Next Senator and Sheriff.



FREDERICK C. MARSH.

Born at Elizabethport January, 1857.

The subject of the above sketch, Frederick C. Marsh, is the candidate of the Democratic party of Union County for State Senator. We have before given a history of his career in business life and politics, which are of the brightest description, and now, since higher honors have been accorded him as the standard bearer of the Democratic party of Union County in the coming Senatorial fight, we show his face to the public. It is unnecessary even to again speak of his good qualities and requisites as a public official, because his party know them. There are many other voters however, who, dissatisfied with their party's nomination, will be glad to vote for a man who will represent them right in legislative halls. It is to them we call the attention of the sterling worth of the young candidate for higher honors. Fred. C. Marsh is not the tool of any monopoly or corporation. The city of Elizabeth accorded him the honor of being a member of the Board of Education for two years and its President for one year. In him, the County had an able official as County Attorney for three years. In the Fall of 1888, he was elected a Member of the State Assembly from the First District by a majority of 1,708, and the following year he was returned from the 2d District by a majority of 502. His career as a legislator at Trenton during these terms was such as to call forth the highest praise both from his own party and that of his opponents. He was recognized as the leader of his party and honored as temporary Speaker of the House during the absence of Speaker Heppenheimer at the closing days of the session. Outside of all these facts, Mr. Marsh is of that character the Democratic party always endeavor to elect to office—as "honest and capable man and a faithful public servant. It is the duty of every lover of representative government in Union County to vote for him.



WILLIAM H. HICKS.

Although the Democratic candidate for Sheriff of Union County is not so generally known as other candidates on the ticket, it is only necessary to say that he has excellent business qualifications, and has never aspired to any political honors. He is very popular where he is best known in business circles, Elizabethport. He was born in Warren County, of this State, in 1837, coming then to Elizabethport when but twenty years of age, where he has ever since resided. Mr. Hicks first entered the store of Lindenburg & Fishbough, dealers in shoes and general merchandise, as a clerk; but remained in such capacity for but two years only, then becoming a partner of Fishbough, the other partner having withdrawn from the firm. It was but a few years before Mr. Hicks became sole owner of the business, which he soon made that exclusive of foot wear. His store on First street is one of the best known and one of the most popular stores of the "lower wards," which clearly demonstrates what close attention to business and fair dealing will accomplish. He has a like establishment in Washington, of this State, and is also interested in a large store at Bergen Point, both of which are successfully conducted.

Mr. Hicks has from time to time had invested interests in the boating business, which has brought him much profit.

For the past ten years he has been the honored treasurer of the Elizabethport Mutual Building and Loan Association.

Although not a full member, yet Mr. Hicks is a regular attendant of the Fulton Street Methodist Episcopal church, to the sustaining of which he is also a liberal contributor.

The poor of Elizabethport know Wm. H. Hicks but to love and respect him, for he is one of those who do good by stealth and blush to find it fame.

A FARCE THAT COST $35,232.

Only One Precinct in the State Voted in Favor of Special Legislation.

The election officers at the special legislation on the Constitutional Amendments have not all made their returns as yet. Twenty out of twenty-one counties have been tabulated, but in many instances the returns were improperly compiled, and they have been returned to the election officers for correction. The computation has progressed far enough to show that both amendments have been overwhelmingly defeated, and the whole election was a farce, and at the same time a heavy expense to the State.

The amendment providing for special election was defeated by a majority of over 55,000. There was a trifle over 59,000 votes cast on this amendment. There were less than 4,000 votes in favor of its acceptance, and this leaves a majority of about 55,000. There was only one voting precinct in the State that returned a majority for it, and that was in Morris county.

The election was held in the 737 precincts in the State. There were four election officers to each polling place at $6 a day, and this amounted to $19,162. The messengers that carried the returns to the Secretary of State's office received from $2 to $4 and mileage, and this item will exceed $5,000. The cost of rent of polling places was $7,370. The publication of the proclamation cost $27 in each of the 100 official newspapers in the State. This amounted in the aggregate to $2,700. The cost of printing blanks and tickets and forwarding the same was $1,000. This makes the total cost of this election, according to the estimates, amount to $35,232.

He Still Rides the Buckboard.

David Vail, of the Borough, who was arrested at the instigation of Albert Brown, recently, on the charge of stealing a buckboard, says that came into possession of the vehicle honestly. His story is that he had been working for Brown, and that Brown gave him the wagon for wages due. Vail was to have had a hearing before Borough Magistrate Hardy Monday night, but Brown didn't appear against him, and the case was dismissed.

DENOUNCING THE RACE TRACK.

New Jersey Ministers Renew Their Crusade Against Gambling.

Circulars were read in most of the Protestant churches in this and other cities of the State Sunday, warning the people that another attempt was to be made at the next session of the Legislature to pass a bill legalizing gambling at race tracks, and appealing to them to defeat at the polls any candidate for the Senate or Assembly who would not pledge himself beforehand to vote against such a measure.

The petition is addressed "To the Moral and Religious People of the State of New Jersey," and, after denouncing the race tracks, goes on to say that success in passing the iniquitous measure means that New Jersey will sacrifice the moral interests of her citizens, and surrender her deserved fame for justice in rebuking wrong.

Attached to the appeal are the names of Bishop Scarborough of the Episcopal church, Prof. McCosh of Princeton, President Doolittle of Rutgers, Prof. Upham of Drew Seminary, Prof. Demarest of New Brunswick Theological Seminary, and 126 other clergymen, pastors of churches of various denominations throughout the State, including the Rev. W. R. Richards, the Rev. T. L. Murphy, the Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman, the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, and the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, of this city.

The New Jersey Jockey Club Saturday paid $3,000 for one year's tax on the property to the City Treasurer of Elizabeth. The same property formerly paid only $116 taxes to the city.

How the Funds are to be Raised to get It, and What It is to be.

(From The Daily Press of Oct 17.)

In addition to the particulars given exclusively in THE PRESS of over a week ago, there is presented today a picture of the model that the Vestry of Grace church have selected for the handsome new place of worship that is to grace the Rev. Dr. Rodman's parish and adorn the city. It is to be erected on the valuable site at the corner of East Seventh and Sycamore streets, owned by the church for some time. There is not a more aristocratic location in the city. Every day, now, long steps are taken towards this consummation so devoutly wished, worked and prayed for by the Grace parishoners. The vestry, through a committee consisting of W. E Lowe, O T. Waring C. P. Bull, state in their report, as published in full in these columns of the 6th inst, that it is entirely within the ability of the parish to contribute the funds necessary to enable the vestry to erect and inclose sufficiently for use a suitable church, leaving, if necessary, the finishing and furnishing for another effort; and the only question to be determined is whether those who attend Grace church, and are interested in its growth and prosperity, will do what they can.

A stone church of sufficient capacity can be erected and furnished for about $40,000. With the available funds (about $5,000) now on hand, and additional subscriptions of say $10,000, the vestry would feel justified in soliciting detailed plans and specifications, and proceeding with the work, relying on additional subscriptions of at least $5,000 before the building was inclosed.

On this plan the vestry would expect to borrow (mortgaging the church property) $15,000, which, with funds on hand and subscriptions before named, will enable them to erect the building and make it habitable, leaving a portion of the finishing and furnishing—estimated say at $5,000—for further subscriptions after the church can be occupied.

Two weeks from next Sunday, will be begun the celebration of the 20th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev Erskine M. Rodman. The ceremonies of Nov. 2, will be an early celebration of the holy communion at 7:30 o'clock A. M. At 10:30 there will be morning prayer, a historical discourse by the rector, and holy communion. The special feature of this service will be the presentation of contributions and subscriptions to the building fund of the new church. In the afternoon of this same day, Sunday, Nov. 2, there will will be a children's service at 4 o'clock, and the presentations of their offerings to the same fund.

There will be services on that Sunday evening, and every evening during the week, with sermons as follows:

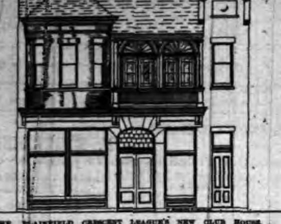
Sunday Night—By the Bishop of the Diocese.
Monday Night—By the Rev. Dr. Langford, General Secretary of Board of Missions.
Tuesday Night—By the Rev. Dr. Van De Water, of New York City.
Wednesday Night—By the Rev. Henry M. Barbour, of Trenton, N. J.
Thursday Night—By the Rev. Dr. Glazebrook, of Elizabeth, N. J.
Friday Night—By the Rev. D. R. Bunting, of Trenton, N. J.

The building pictured above has already been described in detail in THE PRESS. Mr. Gibson, the architect, is well known as the designer of the Cathedral in Albany, and whose design for the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, is the favored one. What has influenced the vestry most in their choice is the fact that, while the style of church recommended is very beautiful in its design, it is of economical construction. The style adopted is Gothic. The ground plan consists of chancel, nave, side aisles, with shallow transepts, narthex, organ room, vestry and robing room. Side aisles serve for passageways only, none of the congregation being seated behind pillars or other obstructions. This enables the pillars to be erected of a substantial design and also, giving the interior a dignified effect. The transepts are introduced to give variety and picturesqueness to the design and so as to enlarge the seating capacity near to the pulpit. The masonry work of the interior is of plaster, ornamented with mouldings and carved capitals. The windows at the west end in the transepts and chancel are large tracery windows, while those in the nave aisles are comparatively small and simple. The clere-story gives a double window to each bay division of the nave. The roof has open timber work of pointed arch form, all finished in wood and stained. The roof rests direct upon the pillars of the nave, which have no arches. This arrangement enables the clere-story to be used in a height which would not permit of it otherwise, with much more effect than is usually obtained, and at a moderate cost.

Externally the building will be of stone, rough dressed, with bold, pointed arches and water tables, and the trimmings of cut stone of fine quality. The handsome square tower designed for the front, and which will occupy a considerable part of the space, will rise in noble proportions and terminate in battlements, with turret running up the easterly corner and overtopping the battlements. The whole effect of the building, as viewed from the front, will be singularly massive and dignified.

A Base Man Shoots a Dog.

Sunday evening, shortly after 6 o'clock, while the the family were absent from the house, a young dog was shot on the premises at 24 Jackson avenue. The miscreant, whose commission of the deed was witnessed by the neighbors, was a large, tall man, accompanied by a woman considerably shorter than himself. The man was heard to make remarks that indicated he was the same person who a week previous had wounded the animal. The dog was not cross, and no complaint had ever been made against him. He was inside the yard when shot. The owner of the dog thinks a person guilty of recklessly shooting on private premises, of cowardly attacking a [illegible] animal, and of carrying concealed weapons, ought to be severely punished, and [illegible] any information leading to his [illegible] will be thankfully received.



THE PLAINFIELD CRESCENT LEAGUE'S NEW CLUB HOUSE.

TO COST ABOUT $6,000.

A Handsome Home to Rise From the Ashes of the Old.

(From The Daily Press of Oct 20.)

The new club house of the Plainfield Crescent League, the front of which, as outlined in the plans of the architect, pictured above, is to be one of the handsomest and most complete buildings of its kind in the State of New Jersey. The plans were only fully completed Saturday, yet THE PRESS gives a picture and a description of it all today.

The exterior is to be 31 feet front by 99 feet deep. The full height of the front will be 38 feet. A general entrance from Second street will be constructed at the centre of the building, and a private entrance will also be provided, as shown in the cut. At the second story will be two towers—one, at the left corner, round; the other at the right corner, square. Between the two will be a spacious balcony.

The material of the front will be Martinville stone, mounted by a French roof. A marble slab at the apex of the square tower will contain a crescent, the club symbol, and the round tower will be surmounted by a crescent finial.

The balcony will be approached by two pair of double glass doors, with circular colored-light transoms above.

The first floor will contain one clear story with not a column in it, and covering the extensive span 97x28 feet. This will be devoted entirely to four bowling alleys, of the best workmanship, and as level and smooth as man's handiwork can devise. Aside from the alleys will be two private conversational rooms, with commode, cloak and toilet rooms.

The second floor will have a handsome billiard room 28x48 feet without a column in it. This will contain billiard and pool tables to the number of four. Adjoining, and connected by sliding doors with the billiard room and two front parlors, will be a large parlor 17x27 feet. The parlors across the front will each open on the balcony, which will have a floor-space of 6 feet by 12.

Convenient to the parlors on the second floor, will be a ladies' dressing-room, which will be complete in every particular.

Every room in the building will be well lighted, and arranged so that every comfort and luxury may be provided, and the League's desire for a perfect club home consummated. The lower story front will contain handsome windows of plate glass. Open fire-places of handsome design will adorn the billiard room and parlors. The toilet rooms of both floors will be finished in marble.

The League, which has approved all the designs submitted, considers itself fortunate in securing B. Fosgate as an architect, he having been the architect of other handsome club houses, and creditable buildings in this city, among them the Love building at the corner of North avenue and Peace street, and being well-known as the architect of residences here. Judge Ulrich, who for his mother, Mrs Elizabeth Ulrich, owner of the property, has been looking after the matter of re-building the club house, is highly pleased with the plans, and says that the Crescent League will have one of the nicest club houses he ever saw. The building will occupy the site of the one burned, on Second street, near Park avenue

Caught By An Amateur Policeman.

An unidentified man who was begging from door to door in the borough, on Tuesday, and picking up whatever was in his reach, was subsequently caught by A. W. Demarest and turned over to Constable Conover. Young Demarest saw the man go into L. M. French's house empty handed, and come out with an umbrella. Then he grabbed the thief. The latter had a silver napkin ring that he had stolen from somewhere, and which he was offering for sale.

Cut a Piece of Lead Out of His Eye.

Dr. D. C. Adams successfully performed a delicate operation, Monday, by cutting from the eye-ball of T. O. Doane, Jr., a piece of lead that had been imbedded in it for about five years. The lead had recently been scratching into the eyelid from beneath, causing much pain. The doctors in a New York clinical college, however, told Mr. Doane that it was nothing but a little inflammation. Dr Adams knew better and removed the cause with great delicacy and success.

Local Real Estate Changes Hands.

A number of interesting events took place at the Gentlemen's Driving Park Saturday. The first race was between the Woodbrook Farm "Senator" and J. Fosher's "Amboy." "Senator" won the first heat in 2:54, and "Amboy" the second and third in 2:48 and 2:15.

Compton C. Vail's "Frank S." and J. Fosher's "Frank F." were the competitors in the second race. "Frank S." won. Time 2:38½ and 2:38. Frank S. was driven by Owens, and "Frank F." by Mr. March.

John Hayes' "Andy" and Philip Jenner's "Blanche Warwick" ran the third race. "Andy" won in 2:45.

Charles Brower drove M. Quinn's "Kitty Pilot" in 2:49.

"Kitty Pilot" won the blanket and hood in the four-year-old race, making the fastest time in a race. She has been in training about three weeks.

Edward Campbell drove the bay mare "Idlewild," owned by E. A. Campbell, in 2:48½, and repeated in 2:42. There will be racing next Saturday.

A BAD DEFEAT FOR LEAL.

Plainfield's Foot-Ball Team Lose a Game, and Two of Their Players Are Seriously Hurt.

The Leal foot-ball team opened the season disastrously in a game against the Pingry boys at Elizabeth on Saturday. The Pingry team had some players who had become expert at such institutions as Stevens' at Hoboken, and the Leal boys were somewhat afraid, and couldn't tackle them with their usual success. Before the Leal players could score a point the Pingry team had secured four touchdowns, counting five each, and had kicked one goal, counting two, and the score therefore stood 22 to 0 when an accident brought it to an abrupt close. One of the players had just been tackled on a brilliant play, and a magnificent run terminated in an ignominious tumble to the ground. Instantly everybody piled together in a heap and fought for the possession of the coveted ball. There was a sharp groan of pain, and a cry, "Somebody's hurt." Most of the players scrambled to their feet, but one of them, Frank Reynolds, lay helpless on the ground, suffering from what seemed to be a fracture of the leg, while another, John Bowman, nursed a broken nose. Both of the injured players were Leal boys, and it didn't require but a moment to decide that the game would have to be forfeited. The Plainfielders returned home on the first train they could catch. Bowman went to the home of his father, James Bowman, 46 East Sixth street, and had his nose put in shape. Reynolds was taken home by two comrades in a hack. He is the son of George S. Reynolds, of 40 Jackson avenue, North Plainfield. The cords and muscles of his leg were terribly strained, and he will not play football again in a long time.

Followed Her Offspring and Broke Her Neck.

A calf owned by Chas. Leland, of West Fourth street, wandered away from its mother during Thursday night, and the cow, trying to follow its offspring in the darkness, fell, broke her neck, and died at ten o'clock Saturday morning.

A Select Circle of Bowlers at Netherwood Heights.

The Netherwood Bowling Club, a select social organization which bowls every Tuesday night, takes its name from the fact that the majority of the members pass the Summer at Netherwood, where the club possesses alleys of its own.

Deacons and Elders of Trinity Church.

The annual election of officers was held at the Trinity Reformed church on Oct 15. A large number of the church members attended. P. P. Van Arsdale was elected chairman of the meeting, and D. Van Winkle clerk. Geo. L. Van Emburgh, John H. Van Winkle and Alex Willet were chosen elders, and D. Van-Winkle, H. E. Gayle and Alburtus Swalm were appointed deacons.

An Encounter Among Allopathists.

Dr. George Washington Endicott and Dr. William Cæsar Boone, two of the most popular, prominent and prosperous Plainfield physicians, of the school of allopathy, met on Park avenue, one day last week.

Dr. Endicott upset Dr. Boone's carriage and threw the latter in the street. There were no arrests, however, and the two doctors still speak to one another.

They Were Low-Necked Dresses.

The Rev. Father Gessner of St. Patrick's church, Elizabeth, has begun a crusade against low-necked dresses. On last Friday night he ordered some female members of his congregation to leave a sociable given by the Father Mathew Dramatic Corps in aid of the church because they appeared in the, to him, objectionable attire. He won't tolerate it at any affair given by the societies connected with the church.

Backsliding.

(From the Westfield Standard.)

A Plainfield man who gave up drinking, and joined the Plainfield Reform Club, and mixed with men of the church, and became President of the Plainfield Reform Club, and fought in that relation, not only the saloon but his appetite for liquor, now, after having fallen back ag-in, charges the men of the church who vote saloon license tickets with being the principal stumbling block in the way of Reform. Is the Christian man who votes to legalize the saloon a modern Cain?

Cora Anxious to See a Wedding.

"Cora," for many years Chimney Rock correspondent of the Somerville Messenger, referring to the recent marriage of Wm A. Coddington, of this city, and Miss Ida M. Wilson, of North Plainfield, writes as follows:

"The groom, who was until recently Superintendent of the Chimney Rock chapel, has the best wishes of hosts of friends here, and may a long happy life be his lot. Mr. Coddington is the third young man in succession who resigned the charge as Superintendent of our Sunday school and got married. This makes the position seem as though some sort of matrimonial noose were hovering near. Why don't some of the other young people follow the example of the Superintendents—not to resign, but to have a wedding? That's what we want in the chapel next."

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

When baby was sick we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Sought for the last hundred years; a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head, found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.

"IF WE ONLY HAD CHILDREN!"

But few words are needed to tell this tale. Two apparently perfect beings are brought together for life. They are surrounded with all that wealth can purchase. Every blessing has been showered upon them, save one; and cheerfully would they relinquish all for that blessing—a little child.

Sterility is often the result of carelessness, or, to put it stronger, ignorance. Nine out of ten cases are curable, if treated understandingly. The action of the Vegetable Compound in this direction has been phenomenal, and many a home, once desolate, has now "a baby."

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, never the [illegible] [illegible]!

—The foot-ball team of the Westfield Athletic Club will tackle with a team from Plainfield election day.

—Ground has been broken by the Lehigh Valley Railroad company, and the foundation begun, for the new station at Bound Brook.

—The local foot-ball team will play against the Pingry boys of Elizabeth, by whom they were defeated Saturday, in this city Nov. 1.

—James O'Neill had a dispute in the [illegible] confectionery Saturday night, and was arrested for disorderly conduct. He was tried today, and decision was reserved.

—The Union County Roadsters went to church at Rahway Sunday morning, and in the afternoon took a run to Westfield, passing through Fifth and other streets.

—There will be a Democratic mass meeting in Gossong Hall, over the bridge, Thursday evening. Gov Abbett is expected to be present. Seats will be provided for fifteen hundred people.

—A young pickelian commuter, speaking probably from sore experience, says the "club" cars are so called because if an ordinary mortal dares to enter the sacred precincts he "gets clubbed out."

—The Corporation Counsel acting upon instructions from President Moffett of the Council, has issued a notice to the Postal Telegraph Company that they shall not erect a single pole within the city limits.

—Holy Cross Choir Guild have arranged to give another of their delightful entertainments on the evening of October 30, in the Sunday school building. Admission, it is understood, will be by invitation only.

—A tree at the corner of New and Second streets was snapped off by the wind on Friday. A show-case in front of the hair dressing establishment of [illegible] was blown over and smashed, and $25 worth of false hair was spoiled.

—After the play, Monday night, the police were a little anxious because of the number of men that had assembled around the entrance to Music Hall. It was rumored that they had gathered there to lynch the clarionet player.

—The Temperance Gazette says the Prohibition Executive Committee of Somerset County has secured the famous "Gov" English to speak at Somerville, Bound Brook, Raritan, North Plainfield, Martinsville and Mechanic during the campaign.

—The drama at Amphion Hall [illegible] this week in which the Leonzo Bros., their company of actors and actresses, and their trained dogs appear, certainly deserves praise. They opened to a fine house Monday night, and everybody present was remarkably well pleased.

—A Washington Park household was thrown into consternation Thursday morning by the discovery of a full-grown opossum on the premises. The animal being good-natured, was easily captured and carried away, its discoverer not caring to go into the menagerie business.

—Stage manager Mattox of Music Hall has made arrangements with the owners of the stages running to New Market, North Plainfield and North Plainfield, so that on the evenings when there are attractions at the Hall the stages will make a regular trip to and from the city for those who wish to attend.

—The Y. M. C. A. has fortunately been able to secure the services of Ezra Lupton as instructor of a class in book-keeping and penmanship. The class will be organized on Monday evening next, at 8 o'clock. A $1.00 membership in the Association entitles to this and other privileges of the Association.

—Only two or three handfuls of people were present at Music Hall Monday night. As THE PRESS of Saturday said, the change the play from "The Honeymoon" as first advertised, to "Romeo and Juliet," was a mistake. The company was a specially good one, and besides Miss Mather, John Malone, as Mercutio, and Otis Skinner, as Romeo, deserve particular mention.

—Complaints are frequent of the number of boys on the streets who smoke cigarettes, and Police Captain Grant may follow the example of the chief-of-police of Cincinnati, who has [illegible] of violations of the law against selling cigarettes to boys, ordered the arrest of all small boys found smoking, and says they will be held as witnesses until the names of the persons who sold them the goods is given.

—The Plainfield Women's Christian Temperance Union have received subscriptions amounting to nearly $800 for their building fund, and have paid the money on their new lot, at the Northwest corner of Sixth street and Park avenue. The Union has now 250 paying members, and 18 honorary, is growing constantly, and is one of the largest and strongest branches of the organization in the country.

Can't Be Heard [illegible] Before Thanksgiving.

The Union County Grand Jury brought in a batch of indictments Wednesday. The Court announced that it would not discharge the jury till after Nov. 10, and adjournment was taken till next Monday. It is surmised that the Court's desire is to have the jury at hand constantly in order to proceed against race-track gamblers.

What Mr. [illegible] Says of Leland Powers.

"It was my privilege to hear Mr. Leland Powers tell the story of 'David Copperfield,' at Chautauqua, in 1888. It was the most remarkable impersonation that I ever witnessed, passing from one character to another most different, with wonderful rapidity. I at once engaged him for [illegible] Chautauqua Assemblies during the Summer of 1890, and at each place his entertainment was received with great enjoyment. At Chautauqua, last Summer, hundreds went two hours before the time in order to obtain good seats and were not disappointed in the entertainment.

"JESSE L. HURLBUT."

An opportunity to hear Mr. Powers in "David Copperfield" will be given Saturday evening, at the Crescent Avenue chapel. Tickets may be secured at Reynolds' Pharmacy.

An Interesting Meeting in Holy Cross Church.

The Autumn meeting of the Upper Division of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions, representing the diocese of the Protestant Episcopal church, took place October 15 in Holy Cross church. At 10:30 a. m. there was a short service in the church, of which the rector, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, spoke briefly about the Auxiliary and in the highest way praised its good work.

Following this the meeting opened and addresses were made by several [illegible]. At one o'clock luncheon was served in the beautiful Sunday school room, and at two o'clock Miss Sybil Carter, whose missionary labors have put a girdle around the earth, made a most interesting address to nearly two hundred persons about her experience among the Japanese, Chinese and Indians. She exhibited samples of Chinese household furniture and utensils with specimens of Japanese art, and surprised her audience by showing [illegible] the lace made by the [illegible] Indians. Delegates were present from Elizabeth, New Brunswick, [illegible] and almost every town in this diocese. The next meeting will be held at [illegible] in January.

PERSONALIA.

Dr. and Mrs. Chas. E. Thorn have returned from their wedding trip.

Felix Mack, of East Front street, has returned from an extended European trip.

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Hegeman of Washington Park, are at Washington, D. C.

[illegible] Park, of 22 Park avenue, who has been seriously ill, is slowly improving.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. A. Coddington are home from a wedding trip spent in New England.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Griffin, of Washington Park, are visiting relatives at Springfield, Mass.

Miles Ross Price, grandson of the Hon. Miles Ross, has been visiting Harvey Kinney Dunham of West Fifth street.

Leo Duff and family are in their home on Putnam avenue, again, after an enjoyable season at their Lake George cottage.

Recent arrivals at Van Court Inn, Renell, include Miss Edith Hyde of Plainfield, and Miss Daisy Shepard of Fanwood.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Wright Storer are home from their wedding trip. Their reception days will be Tuesdays, the 21st and 28th inst., at 49 East 81th street.

Herbert J. Reinherle has returned to his home at 39 Chatham street, North Plainfield, after a absence of seven months at Spokane Falls, Washington.

Judge Arnold, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, with Mrs. Arnold spent Saturday and Sunday with his old friend, John F. Wilson, of "Tunlaw," on the Greenbrook road.

Chancellor E. Ripley, LL. D., of Westfield, President of the New York post graduate chapter of Cornell University, presided at a college banquet at Ithaca, last Friday evening.

Dr. M. S. Simpson, while returning from a visit to a patient, Monday night, stepped into an excavation that was carelessly left uncovered, and badly sprained his right knee-joint.

A. M. Field, brother of Dr. C. M. Field of Broadway, has sent to E. P. Thorn of East Front street, a handsome rattlesnake skin, from the South. The skin is fifteen feet long and has four rattles.

A birthday party was held at the residence of Miss Lizzie Mattis, 16 Spooner avenue, Tuesday night. Friends were present from everywhere. Refreshments were served and an enjoyable time was spent.

John W. Murray has purchased the Hall property on Union avenue. The price paid was about $15,000, which is far below its cost. Mr. Murray, it is understood, made the purchase merely as an investment.

The Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, of the First Presbyterian church, has been appointed chairman of the Monmouth Presbytery Committee on Presbyterian Records by the State Synod now in session at Atlantic City.

Mrs. J. M. MacNaughton of Front street, and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, of Elmwood place, are in attendance at the State Women's Christian Temperance Union Convention at Atlantic City, as delegates from the Plainfield Union.

Mrs. W. E. Honeyman of North Plainfield has been elected President of the Woman's Synodical Society of Home Missions in the Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey, and Mrs. Samuel Milliken has been elected Corresponding Secretary.

A number of the friends of Miss Hattie Milligan, of Washingtonville, enjoyed a pleasant evening at the home of her parents, Maplewood Cottage, last week. It was the anniversary of her birth. Social games, music and singing passed the time only too quickly.

The annual meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey began at Atlantic City Monday, and will continue through Thursday. The delegates from this city are the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, the Rev. W. R. Richards and the Rev. W. E. Honeyman, pastors, and Samuel Milliken and F. C. Lounsbery, laymen.

Councilman Roberts, who was one of the invited guests who attended the firemen's parade at Perth Amboy, last week reports a good time and a royal entertainment. He says the Mayor and people were most gracious and cordial in their welcome, and the ladies prepared one of the finest banquets he had ever enjoyed.

The eightieth birthday of the Rev. John Carey, was celebrated at his home in North Plainfield, October 15, by a surprise donation party in which a large number of friends took part. Good judgment was shown in the quality of the gifts brought the old gentleman. Groceries enough to last him most of the Winter, now fill his closets to overflowing.

Funeral services over the remains of the late Lucy Myers, who died at Colorado Springs some week ago, were held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Myers, East Front street, at half-past one o'clock on Saturday. The Rev. W. R. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, and the Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss, of the Washington Heights Presbyterian church, New York, officiated.

A number of Plainfielders attended a highly enjoyable golden wedding at New Dover, near Rahway, last Friday, when Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Woodruff celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. The ceremony of a half-century ago occurred at the residence of James Thorn, a brother of the bride, in this city, October 17, 1840. The maiden name of the bride was Martha E. Thorn.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Weaver, of Orchard place, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage Tuesday by a highly enjoyable silver wedding. From sixty to seventy guests were present, each bringing a handsome gift of silver. The most cordial hospitality prevailed. In addition to the other festivities an elegant supper was served. Benjamin La Vere was master-of-ceremonies, and Franz furnished the music.

Several months ago Seymour G. Smith, Councilman-at-large, injured his hand bowling. Since then a growth of diseased bone has resulted, causing constant pain and inconvenience. Notwithstanding this, however, Mr. Smith's love of good sport is so strong that he could not resist the temptation to indulge in live-pigeon shooting at the recent Middlesex Gun Club tournament at Dunellen. The result shows that the enthusiasm was hardly prudent, for the injury to his hand has since grown considerably worse.

J. Marc Martin, whose serious illness was noted in THE PRESS last week, died Sunday at his home on Park avenue. He had been a resident of Plainfield many years, and had a large insurance business in New York. He leaves two sons, Frank L. C., captain of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, and Howard, besides two daughters, all children of a former wife, and a young son of his widow. The funeral services took place Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, from his late residence 226 Park avenue. Interment private.

Miss Mae & Agnes Bowers has been secured to lend additional attraction and tone to the programme of the entertainment that has been announced to take place at Seminary Hall, Friday of next week. Marshall P. Wilder will recite, and Miss Murphy, Mrs. George C. Evans, William M. Gaston and Walter McGee, will appear in the farce, "A Billiard Attack." The entertainment is under the auspices of the Guild of the Holy Cross church. A limited number of tickets will be issued to those having their names at Reynolds' pharmacy.

Fell from the Hay-Loft and Broke His Leg.

Mahlon Dunham of New Market, father-in-law of A. H. Burdick, an employe at Spicer & Hubbard's, fell one day last week from the hay-loft in his barn and landed heavily on his side, on the floor twelve feet below. Besides bruising his arm and shoulder severely, he fractured his thigh. Dr. Whitford of New Market and Dr. Jenkins of Plainfield attended the sufferer, who is now doing well.

An Anniversary at Dunellen.

Two stage-loads of Plainfielders went to Dunellen last evening, and participated in the celebration of the fourth anniversary of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Presbyterian church. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the Trinity Reformed church of this city, was prevented by illness from being present, but sent an interesting letter. M. Marvin Dunham and his choir from Warren Mission chapel rendered a service of song.

Westfield Wants a Rack at Plainfield Again.

Capt. in Howland of the Westfield foot ball team has called out all his men for practice today at 3 o'clock, at Drake's Park. The grounds are being put in first-class order. Every one interested in foot ball will be welcome, and the presence of any old player is especially desired. Next Saturday, October 25, a regular game will be played. Negotiations are already opened with the teams of the Corinthian Athletic Club, Staten Island; the Tabernacles, Jersey City; the Plainfield team and other prominent clubs.

Officers of the Relief Association for the Ensuing Year.

At the 12th annual meeting of the Plainfield Relief Association, held at their rooms Monday, the 6th inst., reports of the good work done during the year were read. The following officers were elected:

President—Mrs. E. L. Goddard
Vice President—Mrs. VanHost Talmage.
Treasurer—Mrs. W. W. Myers.
Secretary—Miss E. R. Leonard.
Board of managers—Mrs. Rowland Cox, Mrs. E. A. Hegeman, Mrs. C. W. McCutchen, Mrs. E. St. John, Mrs. M. W. Tyler, Mrs. J. E. Tracy, Mrs. C. E. Ryder, Mrs D. J. Yerkes, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Mrs P. Wyckoff, Mrs. H. F. Reynolds, Mrs. A. M. Rheon, Mrs. C. G. Cokefair, Mrs. A. M. Lewis, Miss C. E. Webster.
Executive Committee—Mrs. S. P. Dupee, Mrs. J. M. Myers, Mrs. W. L. Patton, Mrs. F. A. Pike, Mrs. J. P. Mason, Mrs. S. Huntington.

Two Calls a Minute.

The increase in the telephone business in this city under the management of Charles W. Runyon, is probably unequalled by any other place of its size. He studys to please, and his central office operators, Miss Lottie Morse, Miss Lottie Smith, and Herbert Chamberlain, are so courteous and willing that not a subscriber can name a fault with the service. The other morning during the hour from nine to ten o'clock, the two Lotties had 116 calls to answer and connect. This is about two a minute, and it may naturally be supposed that it was an impossibility to serve so many. Yet they did it and did it satisfactorily, although it kept the switch board very warm.

A Young and Foolish Thief.

(From The Daily Press of Oct. 21.)

The young clerk of tailor Doty of North avenue is missing as well as two hundred dollars worth of cloths, trimmings, etc. Some days ago Doty missed his watch, and could never trace it until today. It was pawned by this clerk, yesterday, for funds with which to leave the city on the 3:27 a. m., train this morning, with a big bundle of goods out of the tailor shop. Two policemen saw him go, and he will probably soon be overtaken. About five years in the State prison, will be his doom.

This young man, whose name is George Reidman, has a bright and rather handsome face, with clear black eyes and every appearance of gentleness, modesty and honesty. He first worked for Vanderveer the doctor tot, and afterwards for Engineer Dunham and others. It is said that after he came to Plainfield some persons from New York traced him here and made him give up some things he had stolen there.

Reidman seems to be the smallest kind of a thief, and the most foolish. Wherever he has worked he has the reputation of lifting all sorts of such little things as he could get his hands on. Nothing could be more foolish than his last action. He carried off property by which he can be traced, and which he cannot dispose of without being suspected and eventually arrested.

The Right Man and the Right Talk.

The voters of Somerset County begin to find out that in Mr. William J. Keys, the Democratic nominee for Senator, they have an aggressive man, and one who means to win. There is great unanimity among the Democrats over his nomination, and it is safe to say that the canvass is going to be an active one. Mr. Keys has many friends among the farmers of the County, who will vote for him in preference to his opponent, because they know his sterling worth. At the County Committee meeting at Somerville, on Monday, Mr. Keys said—"I have been reared in the school of poverty and have had to fight my way through the World step by step." "My friends have seen fit to nominate me for the high office of State Senator, without any solicitation on my part, and now that I have accepted, you may rest assured that I shall strain every nerve to lead my party to victory. I am happy to be able to tell the rank and file of my fellow-Democrats all over the county that I have made no pledges and am bound to nobody. I go into the fight as a Democrat free to act in accordance with the dictates of my conscience and best judgment, and should it be my good fortune to be elected I will represent the county to the best of my ability as a Democrat and a man." Governor Abbett will address meetings at Bound Brook and Somerville in the interest of Mr. Keys.

An Unusually Satisfactory Programme Throughout.

It was a comparatively large and an eminently intellectual audience that gathered in Music Hall, Thursday night, despite the heavy rain, and thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed the remarkably fine entertainment presented under the auspices of St. Andrew's Society of Grace church. The programme was an exceptional one and each number a gem.

The singing of the Dudley Buck Quartette was almost perfect—in fact, except in the closing strain of "Twilight," probably none but the "carping critics" could name a fault. As soloists they were also successful in winning the approval of the audience, and the recalls were earnest and sincere.

Charles Roberts, Jr., was particularly gratifying in his rendition of "King Robert of Sicily." Unfortunately it was his lot to lighten the programme. Humorous reading is not his forte, and his many admirers present regretted that he had not the opportunity to do his best.

The success of Mr. Adolf Glose's appearance in this city was unqualified and unquestionable. The Plainfield people have seldom shown such pleasure and satisfaction as was displayed by the faces and applause of the audience upon the close of Mr. Glose's first selection, the Verdi-Liszt "Rigoletto."

John have you seen that woman lately? Unh-ah! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column, and read about it; the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

HYMENEAL.

BARKALEW—KIRNAM.

At the home of the bride's brothers, Wm. and Bernard Kirnam, 14 Elm place, there was married October 15, at seven o'clock, Miss Fannie Kirnam and Milton C. Barkalew, of Emily street, North Plainfield. The Rev N. E. Cadwell, of Westfield, officiated. The bride was dressed in traveling costume of ashes-of-roses eoulan cloth elaborately trimmed with gilt passementerie, and carried a fragrant bouquet. The wedding was a quiet affair, attended by only a few invited friends and relatives. The presents were very many and valuable. Supper was served directly after the ceremony and Mr. and Mrs. Barkalew left for Washington. Upon their return they will live at the groom's home on Emily street. Mr. Barkalew is the senior member of a well known firm of North avenue grocers.

Plainfield's Yale Prize-winner.

At a meeting of the Plainfield Yale Club held Tuesday, Oct. 14, Samuel Huntington was elected President, John M. Whiton, Vice President, and Howard C. Tracy Secretary and Treasurer. It was voted to hold the annual banquet during the Christmas holidays. The prize of $25 offered to the Plainfield boy who should pass the best entrance examination was awarded to George F. Van Slyck.

Local Amateurs Also on the Programme.

In connection with the appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Firth Wood, at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Friday evening, under the auspices of the Whatsoever Circle of the King's Daughters, there will be instrumental and vocal music by well-known local talent.

Robert Gorton and Bethuel Barnes will sing solos, with a double quartette consisting of Messrs Stevens, Randall, Van Arsdale, Teal, Gordon, Smith, Freeman and Barnes. Miss Lilian Force and Miss Lizzie Vanhart, will give piano selections.

Stanley Coming to Plainfield.

A positive engagement has been made for a lecture by Henry M. Stanley in this city. The people of Plainfield may feel very proud of this, as his stay in America is short, his lectures limited, and the largest cities are bidding against one another to secure him.

The price of tickets to see and hear him, are as high as five dollars in Boston. But those who have been able to bring him to Plainfield, will sell a course ticket at probably $3.50, which will include a seat at a talk by Bill Nye, a concert by Ollie Torbett and her company, and possibly a sermon by Talmage.

King's Daughters Arrange a Feast of Song.

The Young ladies composing the Whatsoever Circle, King's Daughters, are arranging for a delightful entertainment to be given in Y. M. C. A. Hall, Friday evening, Oct. 24, for the benefit of a fund to start a poor Southern minister and family housekeeping. The admission fee will be but fifty cents, and some excellent special features are being provided. Besides musical and literary contributions from the local talent that has been secured, including a quartette from the Crescent League, humorous and pathetic selections will be rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Firth Wood, who have already delighted Plainfield audiences. Marion Harland says that "No more attractive entertainment can be imagined than that arranged by Mr. and Mrs Wood. They are genuine artists, refined, versatile and altogether charming."

For the Starving Poor in Ireland.

A letter from Bishop Wigger was read in all the Catholic churches and throughout the diocese of New York, ordering that a special collection be taken up next Sunday at every mass in all churches of the diocese for the starving poor of Ireland. Bishop Wigger calls upon Catholics to be as generous as possible in this emergency.

Postal Telegraph Wires Follow the Brook.

The route of the New Jersey Postal Telegraph Company through North Plainfield, after crossing the mountain from Washingtonville, is from the foot of the old Washington Rock road to Green Brook, and along Green Brook to Somerset street. Thus has been settled the problem aroused by the Borough residents' opposition to poles and wires along the streets.

Wrecked Her Wheel, but Escaped Harm Herself.

Miss Emma L. Adams, Public Librarian, had a narrow escape from being trampled under a horse's feet Saturday P. M. She was riding her bicycle along Eighth street and turned into Central avenue directly in front of a horse driven by T. O. Doane, Chief Engineer of the Fire Department. The horse was reined in an instant, but too late to prevent a collision. The fore-wheel of the machine was wrecked, but she was saved from bodily injury.

Acquired Concentration the Great Benefit.

The Rev. Wm. R. Richards gave an interesting talk at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms, Tuesday. He told about the homesick freshman, and the famous Yale rushes. Amusing stories were mingled with good advice. Athletics, of course, were a prominent topic, and the speaker told how the college faculty now is in sympathy with those engaged in healthful sports. Acquiring the power of concentration, he said, was one great benefit acquired from college life. A goodly number of young men listened to the talk and roundly applauded the speaker at the close.

Catholic Young Men Incorporate a Lyceum.

The Catholic Young Men's Lyceum of Plainfield has filed articles of incorporation with the County Clerk, and announces as one of its main objects the promotion of the moral, intellectual and physical condition of its members. The trustees selected to manage the affairs of the association are W. M. Wigger, P. E. Smyth, Thomas Carty and John J. Kenney. The Lyceum has purchased of Emma Falhaber, for $3,100, as announced in Tuesday's PRESS, a plot of land, 64x181 feet, at the corner of Fifth and Liberty streets, and will build itself a handsome home.

Killed Three Deer in One Minute.

Albert V Nolen, of Broadway, when about starting on a pleasure trip recently with sport in his eye, asked Counselor W. K. McClure, his neighbor, where was the most likely place for him to shoot a deer. The Counselor said the surest place to shoot them was just behind the fore shoulder. But Mr. Nolen wanted to know the best location of country to find the game in.

Mr. McClure therefore gave him credentials of admittance to the premises of the Megantic Club, way up in Canada, where Messrs McClure, Brower and Livingston of this city, are members. Mr. Nolen arrived on Saturday, spent Sunday looking for a church, and started out with a guide on Monday. The two arrived at the lake they started for, about noon, and sat down to luncheon not expecting to find any game in broad daylight. The guide, however, discovered some deer feeding across the water and paddled Mr. Nolen as near as he dared. Raising his rifle when he saw he could get no nearer, Mr. Nolen fired and one of three deer that were browsing on the lily pads at the edge of the lake, dropped dead. The two others, who were yearlings, were so startled that they stood stock still. There were two more sharp reports from Mr. Nolen's repeating rifle, and the three deer lay dead, side by side.

The cleansing, antiseptic and healing qualities of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy are unequaled.

EX-PRESIDENT KIEB MAKES

A "suggestion" to the Members of the Plainfield Crescent League.

Although the subject of politics is not mentioned in the Constitution and By-Laws of the Plainfield Crescent League as one of the athletic pursuits of the League, yet it would be well, perhaps, for some of the older members, the originators of the Club, so to speak, to remember the action of the Republican candidate for Assembly, George Kyte, in a certain proceeding in the Fanwood Club on charges brought by C. C. Burnett, and defeat him, for incompetency, untrustworthiness, unreliability, not to say unscrupulousness.

It is hardly necessary to set forth in detail the minor incidents of that trial, except upon challenge, when the writer of this article will cheerfully respond. The members of the Plainfield Crescent League, who were then members of the Fanwood Club, and who resigned their membership in consequence of the impartial (?) action of George Kyte, as President of the Club, should now use their influence with their fellow-members, friends and neighbors, to obtain votes for A. B. Cook of Rahway, who is an honorable gentleman, and a sharp, shrewd business man, entirely fitted, mentally and physically, to represent our district in the State Assembly.

Every member of the Club should make this a personal matter, and use his utmost endeavor to elect Mr. Kyte to remain at home.

ERNEST C. KIEB.

Only Broke a Toe.

A jack-screw fell from a wagon on the foot of S. O. Doane, Saturday, and broke one of his toes. He is able to be about, however.

The Country Republican Press Not All in Accord with the Postmaster General.

The Elizabeth Journal accuses THE PRESS of a mess of inane twaddle about the "Republican Tariff," which winds up with this childish statement, "Here in Plainfield our factories are running night and day, but we don't say that it is due to a protective tariff, though that has been a great help."

Now THE PRESS never said a word of such nonsense. It knows as little about the bearing of the tariff on the Pond Tool works, or the Scott Press works, as the Journal or any other paper does, and is honest enough not to twist facts that have no bearing, into evidence one way or another.

The same paper, however, that did publish the item the Journal quotes, published this on Oct. 6: "The new tariff bill goes into effect today, and importers and wholesale dealers are announcing in their circulars advance in prices."

Even the Republican Postmaster-General makes use of the same sentiment in his advertisement of his Philadelphia shop. Here is one of them.

WORKINGMEN KEEP THIS IN MIND.

Tinware is advancing in cost, and very soon the manufacturers will have their way, and you and we will have to pay very much more.

In view of this state of things, we made some time since a large purchase of kitchen tinware at what was a low price then, and would be far lower now in the face of the advance in maker's prices.

This lot goes on sale today at prices that will not be seen again for a long time to come.

JOHN WANAMAKER.

A Burst of Babbling Bellow.

The entertainment to be given by the Whatsoever Circle, King's Daughters, at Y. M. C. A. hall Friday evening, will undoubtedly receive the liberal patronage it deserves. Of Mrs. Henry Firth Wood, one of the artists who will appear, Marion Harland writes as follows:

"'The Baby's Soliloquy,' as rendered by Mrs. Wood, is an inspiration. The gradations from bewilderment and speculation to righteous wrath and an overwhelming sense of injury; and the expression of the same in an outburst of bubbling, babbling, bellow, are utterly and convulsively funny. The recitation is a unique. The appeal to the heart and memory of every mother is irresistible."

Notes from Dunellen.

That the borough of Dunellen is in a thriving condition is evidenced in various ways. Its population is constantly increasing, its provisions for educating the children and youth are becoming better every year, its roads and sidewalks are becoming the pride of the borough, its church privileges are ample, covering quite a variety of religious preferences.

The new school building on the North side of the Central railroad is a credit to the town.

The new parsonage for the home of the pastor of the Presbyterian church is a fine structure. The Rev. W. C. Stinson has already taken possession.

John F. Richters has sold his property in Dunellen and will remove to Newark.

Gains in Local Registration Lists.

The registration of voters this year is different than ever before, in that a house-to-house canvass for voters was made, so that there should be no excuse for a man's name not appearing on the lists to be used election day. Under the new ballot reform law containing this provision two days were set aside for the revision of the house-to-house lists. One of these days was October 14, and as the lists now stand they are supposed to be very complete. The final revision will take place Tuesday, Oct. 28. Below is a comparison of the registration this year with that of last:

Watson & Co. Extended Their Broad Street Store Through to Market Street and Put in Their

Handsome beveled plate brass trimmed show windows for the express purpose of displaying their new styles of hand-cut garments, very few young men who want the latest cuts and patterns, will venture to buy a single garment until they first see what new styles Watson & Co. are showing.

Just now those windows are very attractive as the Fall styles are out and some very stylish black and dark blue dress cutaways are shown there at $7. behind the long line of $4 royal satin striped pantaloons, and almost every hour handsome new patterns are added, as Watson & Co. like to please young men who want new things, and the correct fashion plate out. Tell your friends that they can buy Watson's hand-cut perfect fitting garments for less than the usual run of machine-cut work is selling for, and it makes a great difference in your dress appearance which you wear.—Newark Press.

Hires' Root Beer is here again, and we think it time to call the attention of our readers to that well-known brand. It is made from the genuine roots, barks and berries. Not like a great many others that are doctored imitations of it. One 25 cent package makes five gallons. No trouble to make. Directions simple, and, if followed, the most sparkling, cooling and refreshing drink in the World yet produced. It is time to lay in a stock, and we recommend an order from your wholesale house at once.

THE VOICE OF "THE VISITOR."

The Rev. Mr. Hincher's Methodist Episcopal Church Paper, Greets His People This Month With the First Number of Its Third Volume.

Mrs. Susan Collins is visiting her son, who is in poor health, at Leipsic, Germany.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Griffin are away among New England hills enjoying their Autumn vacation.

Mrs. J. C. Pierson, of West Front street, has been enjoying a visit from her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Baker, of Asbury Park.

The pastor and wife spent two delightful weeks in August at Maplehurst, the beautiful country-seat of Mr. P. Mixture Smith, located in Sullivan county, N. Y.

Mr. Geo. L. Mahon and family have returned from their cottage at Asbury Park. Mrs. Mahon has been much improved during her stay at the sea-side.

Rev. Herbert Welch and wife, of Bedford, N. Y., recently visited their parents here, Mr. and Mrs. James McGee. We hope soon to exchange pulpits with Mr. Welch, thus affording our people another opportunity of hearing our talented young friend.

Mr. Harry D. French, of Willow avenue, is enjoying a brief visit from his parents, who reside in Cincinnati.

The Rev. Mr. Hyde, of the New England Conference, has recently moved here with his family from Boston. His home is on the corner of Madison avenue and West Sixth street. We welcome these good people to our church, and hope that Mr. and Mrs. Hyde may find this locality as healthy as they have been led to hope. Ill-health is the cause of Mr. Hyde's temporary rest from ministerial work.

The following were united in marriage by the pastor: July 5, George Robert Devine to Fanny Elizabeth Pfeiffer; Sept. 11, Joseph Frederick Wharton to Alice Conover Gleason; Sept. 15, John B. Sharp to Josephine Talliant; Sept. 24, William R. VanCleve to Johanna Schenck; Sept. 24, John F. Kulp to Augusta Voehl.

The pastor rejoices that so many of our young people are anxious for a higher education. This year Miss Clara Burt is at Wellesly; Frank Cokefair and his cousin, Abram Albertson, are in Columbia; Clifford McGee is at Yale; Charlie Hurlbut is in Wesleyan University; Minnie French is at the Woman's College, Baltimore, and Harry Jenkins soon goes to Wyoming Seminary.

The pastor was gratified to learn that a majority of our local church voted for the admission of women to the General Conference. Those who compose two-thirds of our church membership, who are most active in all helpful ways to the pastors, and who are already in the councils of the local church and the Electoral Conferences, have a right to be in the councils of the law-making body of the church; and we cannot but regard their rejection from the General Conferences as an impertinence and an insult to womanhood. The church has already decided that a woman may be a Sunday school superintendent, a class-leader a steward, or a trustee. As such they are members of the Quarterly Conference, can vote for delegates to the Electoral Conference, may be elected to the Electoral Conference, and it is an insult to their character and intelligence to say that they can be useful in the above capacities, but are disqualified to sit in the General Conference. Only two of our church papers are opposing the women. Miss Willard was one of the strongest candidates for the place now occupied by the editor of one of those two papers.

"Just Hear That Child Scream!"

Said Mrs. Smith to her sister, Mrs. Davis, as the sound of a child's shrieks came across the garden from a neighbor's house. "What kind of a woman have you for a neighbor? Does she abuse her children?" "No, indeed," replied Mrs. Davis. "She is one of the most tender mothers in existence. But you see, she believes in the old-fashioned style of doctoring. When a child needs physic, she fills a spoon with some nauseous dose, lays the little victim flat on her lap, holds his nose till he is forced to open his mouth for breath, when down goes the dreadful mess. Then come the yells." "No wonder," said Mrs. Smith. "Why don't she use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets? They are effective without being harsh, and are as easy to take as sugar plums. I always give them to my children." "And so do I," said Mrs. Davis.

THE SUN FOR
1891.
Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; but everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.
Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.
Eighteen hundred and ninety-one will be a great year in American politics, and everybody should read THE SUN.

VACATION'S UP AND SCHOOL OPEN!
This is the season for a brisk demand in CHILDREN'S CLOTHING. During the months of Summer enjoyment they have played the dickens with their clothes, and usually have little left fit to appear in school with.
We have always made the clothing of the little ones a specialty, and this Fall we shall strengthen our well deserved reputation of keeping the best stock of these goods in Newark. You'll find it to be money in your pocket and the saving of no end of trouble to come straight here with your children and fit them out for the coming season. We can not only show you all the styles to be met with elsewhere, but many novel conceits which we have designed exclusively for us. Our prices for the newest styles are no greater than you'll pay for the old ones, and as to reliable work there isn't a store in the country that is more particular than we are, especially in children's goods. We know, in advance, the strain to which the little garments will be put, and every safeguard against a sudden coming from together is taken advantage of.
It's a pleasure to talk children's clothing just now; it's a pleasure to show it. We've got something to show and talk about.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?
A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. MRS. BYME'S MANAGEMENT.

The Entire Family Was Quite a Disagreeable Lot.

"[illegible] time after the Eleventh of July I'll be ready to go to the beach," said little Mrs. Byme to her husband.

"What are you going to do about Delia?" he asked.

"Oh, tell her we shan't want her any longer, of course."

"You don't mean to pay her wages while we're gone?" Mr. Byme turned on her sharply.

"No, indeed; I'm astonished, Theodore, that you should ask such a question. Did I ever throw away money like that, I'd like to know?" She was as sharp as he, and quite as unpleasant in manner. "I don't want Delia next fall," she continued. "When I hired her in May I only expected to keep her till we went away. But she didn't know it."

Mrs. Byme gave a shrewd little and pleased laugh. But her husband [illegible] a twinge at her.

"You're a cool one, Matilda," he ejaculated, after a long whistle. "You beat [illegible] in sharpness."

"Don't I?" cried Matilda, in a pleased way. "Well, I've done better than that—I've engaged Mrs. Ellis' splendid girl, who has been there nine years, to come to me in September, when the Ellises break up. What do you think of that, Theodore?"

"I suppose you pay her a great price?" said Mr. Byme, cautiously.

"Indeed I don't," said his wife. "I shall only give her what I pay Delia, three dollars, and she's to do all the work."

"You're a smart one," cried Theodore, admiringly. "I'd trust you every time."

"Well, there's the breakfast bell," said his wife, setting a pin in her neck-lace. "Now, don't let a word of this escape you, Theodore, for if Delia heard a [illegible] of it, like enough she'd be off and leave me with all this work on my hands, and it's only the first of July."

"I suppose she ought to get a place," said Mr. Byme, giving a last glance in his dressing mirror.

"I suppose so," said Matilda, carelessly. "Well, come, or the breakfast will be cold as a stone."

In two weeks they were off. Delia, a good-natured Swede girl, credulous and [illegible], had struggled hard with the [illegible] that always falls upon the maid-of-all-work when a family is preparing to go away for half of the summer, and at last confronted her mistress with a beaming smile and the observation: "Indeed, Mrs. Byme, I s'pose ye'll do the right thing by me, and pay me a little wages while ye're gone," to be met with the truth, and told to pack her trunk and say good-bye for all time.

The evening after the Bymes' house was bolted and barred the whole neighborhood was invited to a concert, furnished by poor lonely, indignant cat, who [illegible] all the selections. Many a [illegible] rolled on an uneasy pillow, and [illegible] all sorts of mishaps to the Byme family for the benefits of that vacation [illegible].

"Just like that Mrs. Byme," said more than one housekeeper at the breakfast table, "to go away and lock up her cat. She's mean enough for [illegible]."

"The society for the prevention of cruelty to animals ought to be after her," said an indignant member of one family [illegible] who had scarcely slept a wink all night.

"Well, I shall call in that cat and give it its breakfast," said a tender-hearted little matron, the next-door neighbor of the Bymes. "Dear me! I couldn't swallow my own to think of a half-starved creature hanging around. There it is now, sitting on their back steps and scratching to get in, peering through the blinds into the adjoining yard."

When the Bymes reached the boarding-house to which they were bound on [illegible] Hill beach they found to their great delight that an invalid lady who had spent the previous summer there had not arrived.

"We shall take her room, then," cried Mrs. Byme, fixing her cold, black eyes on the bronzed face of the landlady. "According to agreement, Mrs. Dobbs, you remember that if she wasn't here by the Eleventh you would give it to us."

"It's queer we haven't heard nothing from her," said Mrs. Dobbs, twisting her apron nervously between her fingers. "She's been here for seven years now, and she always writes if she ain't comin'. Wouldn't you just as soon wait another [illegible] in any other room."

"Nothing to hear would make no difference," said Mrs. Byme, severely. "The agreement was that we should have this room if Mrs. Carroll didn't come by the Eleventh."

"Well, that's because she always got here by the first of July," interposed the landlady, wearily. "I hain't never known her to make a miss before."

"Which only proves that she isn't coming this year," said Mrs. Byme. "At any rate, this room is mine." They were standing in the doorway and she now advanced in and threw her parasol on the bed with the air of a proprietor. "Send up my boxes, Mrs. Dobbs, and be so good as to get them here quickly," and the landlady found herself going downstairs with the consciousness that Mrs. Theodore Byme was ensconced in her best room, and that not any power in the household could get her out.

That evening came a letter from the invalid, Mrs. Carroll, that had in some unexplainable way [illegible] around a week before reaching its destination. "I have been delayed in making my summer plans on account of the serious illness of my son. I will be with you the sixteenth of July, and shall be glad to get back my [illegible] room, for I am really worn with watching and worry."

Mrs. Byme, out on the piazza playing a game of whist, heard the news as it was [illegible] and [illegible] to hold her ground and keep the room, which she did in the face of all arguments and entreaties that could be brought to bear upon her. And Mrs. Carroll, arriving sick and exhausted with the journey the next day, quietly forbade Mrs. Dobbs to make any more fuss, and she settled into the only remaining room, a hot one at the back of the house.

[illegible] Byme, Mrs. Byme's eldest daughter, was learning to play on the banjo, so she picked at it steadily by her window whenever it struck her fancy to do so, till the other boarders [illegible] they should go wild over the [illegible], and all afternoon sleep [illegible] up by the [illegible] of the [illegible]. And Joe and Jim, the [illegible] twins belonging to the [illegible] and howling over the vacation, leisurely annoying all those whose [illegible] failed to entertain.

Mrs. Byme throve on it all, and grew fat and rosy, and congratulated herself on her good management, and when the first of September arrived she paid her bill (always attending to such details instead of Mr. Byme), saying complacently: "I won't engage board for next summer, Mrs. Dobbs, because I don't exactly know whether we shall go to Europe or not, but if we don't, why, we shall come to you of course."

Mrs. Dobbs straightened herself up and looked the successful woman all over, then said, without any twisting of the apron: "I don't have any room vacant next season, Mrs. Byme."

"You surely don't mean that you engaged them all?" Mrs. Theodore Byme was guilty of squealing—"without speaking to me?"

"The other boarders had the first say," replied the landlady, without the ghost of a smile, "and they've took 'em all."

When Mrs. Byme returned home and opened her house, her self-complacency so rudely shocked returned in full force, and she contemplated, with no small degree of satisfaction, the stuffy, shut-up rooms and empty kitchens.

"It will be delightful, though, when Mrs. Ellis' Louise has been here a day or two—what a lucky woman I was to get her!"

A letter was handed in that evening, rather badly spelled and not quite faultless as to grammar.

"Mrs. Byme," it said, "I ain't comin' to live with you. I've changed my mind and hired out to Mis' Smith. Delia, who lived with you, is my cousin, and you took her in, and you might take me in some time, so I ain't comin'. Yours respectfully, Louise Myers."—Margaret Sidney, in Congregationalist.

FITNESS OF THINGS.

Furnishing a Room to Harmonize with the Occupant's Complexion.

Only a few years ago there was such a narrowed understanding of the niceties of interior decoration, that people actually laughed at the idea of furnishing a room to harmonize in general color effect with the complexion of the occupant, says the Upholsterer. The humorous columns of the great dailies were full of decorative jokes: the woman who would dress herself to harmonize with her home surroundings, or, rather, dress her home in harmonize with her appropriate colors, or the man who would throw the weight of his individuality into his study furnishings, were held up as subjects for hilarious ridicule.

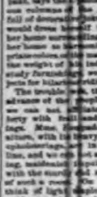
The trouble was, the subject was in advance of the people. But nowadays we can not affiliate the fair-fat-and-forty with frail and delicate furnishings. Mme. Pompadour's style of furniture, with its heavy rolls and massive upholsterings, are in the fat-and-forty line, and we can not associate the tempting, maidenish impulses of a fair girl with the sturdy and solid surroundings of such a room. On the contrary, we think of light, simple wood-work, cobwebby curtains caught back with pink and blue, cream walls and Japanese rugs.

We would say that a girl of a dead matte color, who furnished her room in rose pinks and steel grays, was egregiously ignorant, or wished to appear at her worst, and nothing is more woefully out of place than a healthy, vigorous, masculine man in the intricate bewildering chaos of a gingerly-furnished Louis XVI. room.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

GRANDMA'S SOLDIER.

How Teddy Ran Away and Gave His Dear Mamma a Terrible Fright.



"IS I YOUR little soldier, danma?"

"Yes, darling."

"Does you like soldiers?"

"Yes, dear."

"Is them beave?"

"Yes, precious, most of them are."

The little golden haired boy stood in deep thought for a few moments, and then the questions began again.

"What is beave, danma?"

Grandma drew the tiny man to her side, and twined her arm around him, looked down with a love unspeakable shining in the depths of her brown eyes into the trusting blue ones and said, softly:

"It means to be good and noble, and courageous, Teddy, and—"

But the little fellow interrupted her.

"Don't they fight?"

Teddy had been taught that it was wrong to fight, and if so he could hardly understand how a soldier who fought could be very good or noble.

The grandmother paused a moment before answering the eager little questioner, lest she might impress his young mind wrongly, and then with a light sigh she answered him:

"All soldiers are supposed to be brave, Teddy, and when they fight it is generally in a war, for some good to a country or nation, but you are too young to understand, darling. When you are older you will know how it is."

Little Teddy looked hurt, and stepped away from his grandma's twining arm.

"What is it, darling?" she asked.

For a moment he did not speak, and the red lips pouted, while a most decided wrinkle came between his brows.

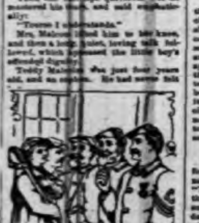
"Ook, Teddy," said his grandma gently.

Then the full lips quivered, but he mastered his tears, and said emphatically:

"Tourse I understands."

Mrs. Malcolm lifted him to her knee, and then a long, quiet, loving talk followed, which appeased the little boy's offended dignity.

Teddy Malcolm was just four years old, and an orphan. He had never felt the loss of either parent, for Grandma Malcolm (whose only son his father had been) was perfectly devoted to the tiny boy.



GRANDMA'S PLAYING SOLDIER.

Mrs. Malcolm was very wealthy, and Teddy and she were alone in the world, so far as relatives were concerned.

She was a wise, judicious woman, and Teddy was carefully guarded and nurtured, and [illegible] too well.

He was a very thoughtful child, always inquiring into the whys and wherefores of things. A few days before the [illegible] a lady friend had given Teddy a handsome picture book, filled with pictures of soldiers, and the little fellow's mind became absorbed in it, and he was never weary of hearing his grandma tell the stories or explain the meaning of the pictures.

For days he carried the book wherever he went, even taking it to bed with him.

It was the custom of his grandma, and Teddy as well, to take a nap every afternoon. So, as usual, upon this particular day, after placing Teddy on his little cot, and sitting by him awhile until he appeared to be asleep, Mrs. Malcolm left him to go to her own room, which adjoined his.

In a short time she was gently sleeping, but not so Teddy.

His grandma had hardly gone from him, when he, with his new book under his arm, without the least noise, crept off his cot, out of his room down the stairs, out of the street-door and into the street.

It was such a dreamy summer day that Mrs. Malcolm slept much longer than usual; indeed, it was quite time for their early tea, nearly five o'clock, when she woke up.

She arose, feeling very much refreshed, and looked at her watch; surprised at the lateness of the hour, she hastily made her toilet and repaired to Teddy's room.

Teddy was not there, of course, but where was he?

"He probably awakened long ago," was her thought. "Agnes, (one of the servants) has taken care of him."

She went down the stairs, looking about her, expecting every moment to hear a shout of laughter or a merry cry, but the silence was oppressive, no sound of Teddy anywhere.

Just then came the tinkle of the tea bell.

Going into the dining-room she met Agnes.

"Where is Teddy?" she asked.

"Teddy?" repeated the girl. "Why, I thought he was with you. I haven't seen him since dinner time."

All thoughts of supper vanished now.

"Where was Teddy?" This was the first time in his life he had been away without some one of the household knowing where.

The servants were questioned, but all gave the same answer: "I do not know."

Mrs. Malcolm grew very pale, and while others searched the extensive grounds covered with shrubbery, she looked the great house over thoroughly, but no little smiling face surrounded with golden curls appeared.

"Teddy! Teddy! Teddy!" she called, until the shadows of night crept down.

One after the other of the servants returned, without the little boy.

The Malcolm estate lay in the suburbs of a beautiful Southern town, two miles from the village proper.

"Agnes," said Mrs. Malcolm, when convinced that the child was not on the premises, "remain here, do not leave the house; Martha, John and Hiram must still keep about the grounds, while I will go with William to the city and procure some experienced persons to assist in the search."

Soon Black Prince, Mrs. Malcolm's favorite horse, was harnessed and hitched to the light phaeton. The lamps were lighted on either side and an extra lantern was carried in William's hand.

Teddy's grandma did not forget to take her darling's hat and wrap, for the night air was heavy and damp.

There was no moon that night, but a dewy sweetness pervaded the air, and a light breeze rustled the leaves of the trees.

Mrs. Malcolm's distress was terrible.

Again and again she called her darling's name, and William frequently left the carriage to search some wayside nook.

Then it suddenly occurred to her he might have been stolen by some wicked person in the hope of getting a large ransom, her wealth as well as her great love for the little boy being well known.

"Oh, my darling, my darling," she moaned, while the great tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Have you any idea where he could have gone, William? Or do you think it possible that he is stolen?" she asked her driver, who, as well as the other servants on the estate, dearly loved the kind and affectionate child.

William shook his head.

"I don't believe he is stolen, ma'am," he answered. "I think he just wandered off, and I feel sure we will find him. I mind now," he went on, "seeing him about three o'clock. He was standing on the side porch, and he had his book of soldiers in his hand."

"Three o'clock," echoed Mrs. Malcolm. "Why, that was just after I left him, as I thought, asleep."

And then the morning's conversation suddenly occurred to her; and also there came to her mind like a flash of light the remembrance of a recent visit she and Teddy had made to the barracks near the city.

"William, drive to the barracks," she said, and William turned Black Prince's head in that direction.

There seemed to be something unusual going on when they arrived there to judge by the laughter and shouting.

William sprang to the ground, but his mistress was out of the phaeton before he could help her, and in a moment more they both entered the barracks, and what do you think they saw?

A long table stood in the center of the mess room, and on this, decked out with a soldier's cap and fatigue coat, and holding a sword, was Master Ted. He seemed perfectly happy and contented and was trying to obey the commands given him by the soldiers who stood around him.

When his grandmother saw him she nearly fainted with joy, but William began to laugh heartily.

The men seeing the lady, whom many of them knew, removed their caps and came forward to meet her.

They explained that Teddy had been with them but a short time.

He was very tired when he was brought there by a man who had met him trudging along and to whom he said he was going to the barracks to be a "soldier," and they had given him his supper and were about to send him home when Mrs. Malcolm arrived. When he caught sight of his best friend, he shouted merrily: "See, danma, see, I'se your really 'ittle soldier."

It took much persuasion and many promises of future visits, before Teddy would consent to doff his regimentals and return to civilian life, but he finally yielded, and Grandma's "soldier" slept close in her arms again that night.—Detroit Free Press.

A Dove Attends Church.

A Massachusetts young lady reports that she saw an unusual attendant in a church in a rural Maine town, which she visited this summer. Hearing the cooing of a dove she looked around and saw a white dove perched on the organ and listening to the music with great appreciation. She learned afterwards that the dove had been a regular attendant at church for eight or ten years, being attracted by the music, of which it was very fond. It was twelve years old, and was the pet of a lady who lived near. After church the dove was taken to a Sunday-school class and seemed to enjoy the proceedings.

Going and Saying.

He sat and looked at the busy editor for about fifteen minutes steadily. Finally he yawned sleepily and remarked: "There are some things in this world that go without saying." "I know it," snapped the editor, "but there are too darned many things that say a good deal without going."

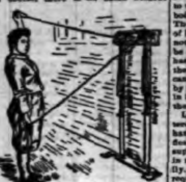
MUSCLE TRAINING.

Some Sensible Ideas Concerning Gymnastic Exercises for Women.

AS long ago as 1860, Louisa M. Alcott wrote, in that serio-comic way of hers: "This amiable town is convulsed just now with a gymnastic fever, which shows itself with great violence in the schools and young societies generally. Dr. Lewis has 'inoculated us with the disease,' and it has 'taken finely;' for every one has become a perambulating wind-mill, with all its four sails going as if a wind had set in. The city fathers approve of it, and the city sons and daughters intend to show that Concord has as much muscle as brain. Abby, the Meg of 'Little Women,' and I are among the pioneers."

Much the same interest is shown now, and so great is it and so widespread, that skeptical folk term it but a "fashionable fad." If it be a fad, it is the most sensible one that has yet arisen, and, unlike such fickle fancies, has come to stay and will not be blown aside by any newer thing that arises. What are its purposes, its benefits?—for, of course, there is no cause without some good or bad effect, and no woman would take gymnastic exercise and heartily indorse it unless she was sure of some good in the end for the time and effort put forth.



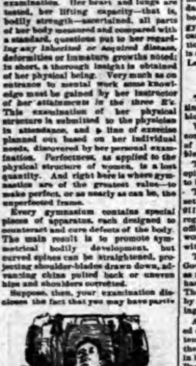
THE CHEST WEIGHT.

Those who understand and have tested the grand results of gymnastic exercise divide the methods and apparatus used to attain the latter into heavy and light gymnastics. The ends reached by light gymnastics are not as tangible, not as plainly observed nor so soon, though of equal importance, as the results obtained by heavy gymnastics. Their value and application to daily life will be discussed in a succeeding article.

When a woman or young girl enters a gymnasium she undergoes a physical examination. Her heart and lungs are tested, her lifting capacity—that is, bodily strength—ascertained, all parts of her body measured and compared with a standard, questions put to her regarding any inherited or acquired disease, deformities or immature growths noted; in short, a thorough insight is obtained of her physical being. Very much as on entrance to mental work some knowledge must be gained by her instructor of her attainments in the three R's. This examination of her physical structure is submitted to the physician in attendance, and a line of exercise planned out based on her individual needs, discovered by her personal examination. Perfectness, as applied to the physical structure of women, is a lost quantity. And right here is where gymnastics are of the greatest value—to make perfect, or as nearly as can be, the unperfected frame.

Every gymnasium contains special pieces of apparatus, each designed to counteract and cure defects of the body. The main result is to promote symmetrical bodily development, but curved spines can be straightened, projecting shoulder-blades drawn down, advancing chins pulled back or uneven hips and shoulders corrected.

Suppose, then, your examination discloses the fact that you may have partly known, that your lungs are not as strong as they should be, that you stoop a little, wear braces which are not a particle of use, and you learn that the upper part of your body is not as well proportioned as the lower. These are common defects, so common that ninety-nine per cent. of women can claim them.



THE QUARTER-CIRCLE.

The first thing in the gymnasium to be tried—for all can be overcome and cured—is that most useful of all pieces of apparatus—the chest weight. Its good results can never be numbered. Every muscle in the trunk of the body by its use can be called into action and some so perverse in their service, whose in the ordinary routine of life it fails to do. The course as laid out for use of the chest-weight is such that the chest broadens, the lungs grow stronger, the muscular force of the arm increases and the delicate, weak-lunged woman begins soon to feel the rich possession of health, an added force which permits her to lift, and an increase in flesh that at one time she deemed it impossible to acquire. Curvature of the spine is cured; kidneys and lungs have to do more active work to get rid of the waste products; the heart beats more vigorously in order to carry more blood to the tissues, and disease, lurking in various parts of the body, is sent to the right-about-face by the persistent use of the chest-weight.

Another machine, with which the gymnasium could not part, is the quarter-circle. Here, too, the chest is expanded, the breathing capacity of the lungs deepened. Every one stoops more or less, as their daily work pulls the shoulders over. To overcome this, the gymnasium has the quarter-circle exaggerating the backward position of both head and shoulders. For consumptively-inclined persons, no better advice could be given than a daily use of the quarter-circle. Lying flat on the machine, with it weighted to the amount prescribed by the directress, the pupil extends the arms over the head, pulls the weights down as far as the arms will allow, and repeats this as many times as instructed. For dyspeptics this exercise has proved beneficial, particularly in cases of stomach or intestinal dyspepsia.

The value of rowing as an exercise can never be told too many times. It reduces corpulency, produces perspiration, develops the arms and wrists, gives strength, color and fresh blood into the veins, in short does wonders to the body. And recognizing its worth, the rowing machine plays an important part in the well-equipped gymnasium. When time and place and weather will not permit of the actual oar being taken in hand, its substitute gives the same results.

For the pianist the gymnasium has the finger machine, a strengthener of the muscles she needs to span and slide over the keys of her instrument. The singer and elocutionist can improve the voice by another machine built especially for breathing, while for the worker who demands a wrist that never tires, there are the wrestling and wrist machines, which develop the muscles of the wrist principally, but reach in a measure nearly all the muscles of the body, legs and arms.

To be able to lift the weight of her own body is one of the conditions of a perfect physique in a woman. The appliances known as traveling-rings and flying-rings accomplish this and add dexterity and grace. The vaulting-bar gives these, too, to say nothing of an increase in courage, but at the same time, like the parallel-bars, strengthens the muscles of the legs, back and arms.

The appliances enumerated by no means complete the list, but are those in common use, and such as remedy common defects. But there is no limit to what can be done in benefiting the body by the use of gymnastic apparatus. The body, like the tree from the spring of life to its autumn, grows as bent. If not straight, strong and supple, it can be made so. Long years of experience has proved that exercise is requisite for the best health and the longest. If it can not be taken out of doors, it can be, by modern methods, and the gymnasium in its perfection of apparatus will give the same benefits.

Light gymnastics make a woman dexterous and nimble with her feet, her hands and her head. It helps a heavy, flesh-burdened woman to rid herself of superfluous avoirdupois, permitting her in time to move easier and more speedily. And courage is also added, for it requires some forgetfulness of that innate timidity and dread of criticism inherent in woman to attempt exercises with clubs, to jump across a vaulting-bar or to climb rope ladders hand over hand. It does a woman good to be taken out of herself, to forget how she looks; prepares her for great or trifling emergencies, gives her an exhilaration of spirit and a pleasure, which makes the exercise a delight and enables her to do more work with less weariness than before.

One bit of necessary advice. Follow all gymnastic exercises with a cold water bath, taken quickly. Cold water is the better; but to those not used to it, tepid water baths can be taken at first, gradually lessening the heat until the body accustoms itself to water of a lower temperature. Give the body a vigorous rub with a Turkish towel. Send the blood tingling from top to toe. All danger of cold is thus avoided, and the body reaps the highest benefits. With gymnastics, as with every thing else, care must be followed so far as moderation and proper treatment of the body is concerned after the exercise.—Ellen Le Garde, in Ladies' Home Journal.

IN AND AROUND ASIA.

WHEN the railway across Siberia is completed it is estimated that the tour of the world in fifty days will be feasible.

THE total annual home consumption of opium in China has lately been reckoned to be about 41,000,000 pounds.

THE oldest newspaper is the Pekin Gazette, which was first issued in the year 911 of the Christian era, and has been regularly published since 1351. It is the official organ of the oldest empire of the world, and the Chinese contemplate it with reverence and awe.

THE large sums of money that the Government of India devotes annually as rewards for the destruction of snakes has brought about an unexpected result. The snakes are being bred and reared by the natives for the purpose of obtaining the usual head-money offered.

A CURIOUS industry in Japan, handed down from father to son, is the systematic dwarfing of forest trees until they are mere plants of two feet or less in height. In the Tokio exhibit at the Paris Exposition was an eighty-year-old maple only twenty inches high, and several pines of twenty-four inches, which were one hundred and fifty years old.

THE Japanese ladies are in a worry. Some years ago European dress began to come into vogue in Japan, but a reaction has set in. The Japanese women are not satisfied with the ordinary dress styles of civilization, but they are unwilling to return to their old dress, and hence they are now considering "rational dress" advocated by the various feminine dress reformers.

A WRITER in the North China Herald, of Shanghai, asserts that the climate of Asia is growing colder, and its tropical animals are slowly retreating southward. In proof of this he quotes evidence, historical and referential, of the former existence of elephants, tigers and leopards in China. Tigers and leopards are, however, not yet extinct in China, and are common enough in Corea. The bamboo, it is said, formerly grew naturally in parts of the country where it now has to be taken care of.

THE British Consul at Port Said says that the traffic through the Suez canal has been decidedly increased since the vessels began to use electric lights, as is shown by the fact that in 1887, 395 steamers used the light; in 1888, 1,611, and in 1889 the list rose to 3,445. The time of passing through the canal has been also reduced by the same means. Twenty-two and a half hours is now the average time; but a passage has been made under exceptional circumstances in fourteen and three-quarter hours.

THE Japanese books begin where ours end, the word finis coming where we put the title page; the foot notes are printed at the top of the page and the reader puts in his marker at the bottom. In Japan men make themselves merry with wine before dinner, not after; the sweets precede the roasts. A Japanese mounts his horse on the right side instead of on the left. The mane of the animal hangs on the left side instead of on the right; the horse stands in the stable with his head where his tail ought to be. Boats are hauled upon the beaches stern first. The Japanese saw the plane toward them instead of away from them. Keys turn in instead of out. The best rooms of a Japanese house are always at the back, and architects, when building, begin with the roof.

Derivation of Cravat.

Cravat is a corruption of crabat or croat. It was introduced into France by some French officers on their return from Germany in 1636, says the Dry Goods Chronicle. The Croats, who guarded the Turkish frontier of Austria, and acted as scouts on the flanks of the army, wore linen round their necks, tied in front, and the officers wore muslin or silk. When France organized a regiment on the model of the Croats these linen neckcloths were imitated, and the regiment was called "The Royal Cravat."

How Much Is He Worth?

Of all current questions, this is the one most frequently asked. It is, in fact, the great question of the day. Nobody to speak of inquires: "Is he honest?" "Is he patriotic?" Every body puts the query: "What is he worth?" Money is not merely the commercial standard of value, but too often the criterion of social position and the touchstone of character.

A New Antidote to Cholera.

According to the British Medical Journal, M. Roux has tried to cultivate the cholera microbe of Koch in an infusion made from the refuse of malted barley left after extraction in the brewing of beer. It is a liquid in which nearly all other microbes grow well, except the one above mentioned. This not only will not thrive in it, but when immersed in it is quickly killed. He has therefore suggested to the Societe des Sciences Medicales, of Lyons, that the infusion might be of use in the treatment and prophylaxis of cholera.

HE HELD THE BAG.

But the Old Trick Didn't Work, for the Boston Man Caught the Rabbit.

Some time since a gentleman from Boston went to an Illinois town seeking rest and pleasure, says the St. Louis Republic. The gentleman knew all about Boston baked beans and brown bread, but very little about the long-eared Illinois rabbit. One afternoon a number of men and boys were discussing the matter of the great number of rabbits in the country this season, as it was thought they were all exterminated last winter. Some one in the crowd remarked that it would be good fun to go out "bagging" rabbits. The Boston man, not knowing what "bagging" rabbits meant, began to inquire. It was explained to him, and he expressed himself anxious to engage in such sport. It was arranged to go out to the timber east of the town that night and catch rabbits by the bagging process.

About 8:30 o'clock the crowd started. When about a half mile out of town they came to a hazel thicket where the rabbits were said to be numerous. The Boston man was stationed just outside of the thicket to hold the bag (a big coffee sack), while the boys went through the brush pretending to scare the rabbits out and run them into the sack. While going through the thicket the boys did actually scare up a rabbit, which ran directly into the bag.

The boys ran back to town and waited the coming of the bag-holder, who, they thought, would get lost in the timber and would be slow returning. They did not have long to wait, for in a few minutes in came the Boston man, the bag and rabbit on his shoulder, feeling happy, and remarking: "By gosh, I caught him."

Not yet discovering the trick that they had tried to play on him, he supposed that the rabbit was purposely driven in the sack.

The laugh was on the boys and the Boston man turned out to be the lion of the occasion, having bagged his game successfully. No more tricks have been played on the gentleman from Boston.

Gasley—Fledgely must be quite well off with the world's goods.

Gazzum—I've never had that impression. Why do you think so?

Gasley—He showed me a handful of diamonds last evening.

Gazzum—Do you mean it?

Gasley—Yes, I do; and he won the pot with them.—Jewelers' Circular.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., October 2, 1890.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County held on Thursday, October 2, 1890, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Russell, Sullivan, Thompson, Trabon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West—16.

Absent—Freeholder Bender—1.

The minutes of the meeting Sept. 4 and special meeting Sept. 22 were read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county.

In the matter of the death of Mary Dunbar of Union township.

Gentlemen—The coroner's jury in the above matter were in session four days, and as it was a case of special importance, and most of the jurors selected being business men and under the law entitled to only twenty-five cents each for their services we would recommend that there be an extra allowance of $2 for each juror, which you are permitted to grant in such cases.

ALFRED Q. DONOVAN,
WILLIAM R. WILSON, Coroner,
Prosecutor of Pleas.

On motion of Freeholder Doty received and ordered filed.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county.

Gentlemen—I hereby notify you that I have given Bernard Mahon, contractor for building Morris avenue, Union township, a certificate that the same is finished to my satisfaction as required of me by the contract and specifications.

Respectfully submitted,
F. A. DUNHAM,
County Engineer.

Freeholder Kyte moved it be received and adopted.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

To the Honorable Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union.

Gentlemen—I hereby call the attention of your honorable body to the following matter in connection with the county roads which it will be necessary to take some action upon to-day if you deem it advisable and that is in regard to the several contracts that have overrun the time called for in said contracts (that is the four months).

Bayway and West Jersey streets, city of Elizabeth; contract dated May 16, 1890, time expired September 20, 1890; Edward N. Lynch, contractor.

North avenue, Union township; contract dated May 16, 1890; time expired September 20, 1890; Edward N. Lynch, contractor.

Morris avenue, Springfield township; contract dated May 13, 1890; time expired September 23, 1890; Thomas A. Nevins, contractor.

North avenue, Cranford township; contract dated May 13, 1890; time expired September 23, 1890. Thomas A. Nevins, contractor.

Central avenue, Westfield township; contract dated May 21, 1890; time expired October 1, 1890; Hoffman & Hatfield, contractors.

Morris avenue, New Providence township; contract dated May 21, 1890; time expired October 1, 1890; Thomas A. Nevins, contractor.

Morris avenue, Summit township; contract dated May 21, 1890; time expired October 1, 1890; Thomas A. Nevins, contractor."

Respectfully submitted,
F. A. DUNHAM,
County Engineer.

On motion of Freeholder Roll, received and ordered filed unanimously.

A committee of citizens of the city of Elizabeth being present, Freeholder West moved they be heard in reference to the building of county roads.

Which was unanimously carried.

After remarks by Mr. Frank Bergen, F. S. Atwater, Mr. Battin and others, Mr. Bergen presented a petition from the residents and tax payers of Union county, requesting the board to take some action as to the use of clay on county roads, believing the use of clay will prove injurious to same.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson, received and ordered filed.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

To the Board of Freeholders of Union county.

Gentlemen—Your committee on Prospect avenue bridge, Plainfield, would respectfully report that they have examined the said bridge and find the water way too small to carry the water, would recommend that they build an iron I beam bridge of sufficient capacity to carry the water and at such time as your committee may deem advisable, cost not to exceed twenty-eight hundred dollars.

A. VANDERBEEK,
JAMES T. PIERSON,
GEORGE W. DOTY,
WM. H. BRIANT,
WILLIAM HOWARD,
Committee.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted as follows:

Ayes—Freeholders Briant, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Russell, Sullivan, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Wright—13.

Not voting—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Trabon, West—3.

Absent—Freeholder Bender—1.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union.

Gentlemen—Your committee to settle with the county collector, report that they have examined his books showing receipts and disbursements, together with his vouchers, bonds and coupons paid and bank books, and find that the same agree and are correct in every particular. His receipts and disbursements from the beginning of the fiscal year (including balance carried from last year) to Sept. 30, 1890, are as follows:

Receipts,	$903,985.52
Disbursements,	129,502.90
Balance in his hands.	$74,483.62

Respectfully submitted,
J. MARTIN ROLL,
GEO. W. LITTELL,
W. W. RUSSELL,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Howard received and placed on file.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the bill of James Moore for building bridge on Mountain avenue near the Lee farm be paid when properly sworn to, and audited by the committee, to be charged to special deficiency account.

Freeholder Doty moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Pierson:

[To be continued.]

RULERS GREAT AND SMALL.

THE Czar of Russia is so strong in the fingers that he can tear a pack of cards to pieces, fifty-two cards at a time.

QUEEN VICTORIA is very tenacious of the rule that she shall hear at least once a week from members of her family absent in other lands. She likes letters.

THE Empress of Austria, a London correspondent declares, buys some costumes without being measured for them, and is to be "seen in the streets wearing ready-made gowns." This is, indeed, harrowing news, but it is comforting to remember that, otherwise, her Majesty is an excellent woman.

QUEEN MARGARET, of Italy, is given to making unannounced visits to charitable institutions, particularly those devoted to the care of children, and is kindly critical about their management. This makes things lively for the attaches, but usually the inmates are correspondingly the gainers.

THE Czar's personal body-guard of private police consists of fifteen specially-picked Corsicans, mature and tried men, chosen and trained by M. Celertin Pietri, nephew of Napoleon III.'s Minister of Police. These men have to keep watch in the kitchens and private apartments, while some of them act as assistant cooks. It is intended gradually to increase the corps as suitable men can be found.

THE Sultan of Lahore is black as a coal, and his idea of feminine beauty is that a real Juliet must not weigh less than four hundred pounds. A lady who apparently weighed more than that was presented to him recently, and the Sultan was so enraptured with her corpulent charms that he proposed to cover her broad beauty with diamonds, much to the horror of his treasurer, who knew that the subsidy of one million dollars received from the British Government could not stand such drains.

THE Queen of Roumania, who was in London recently, is, at the age of forty-seven, still a beautiful woman. She is tall, with an extremely good figure, and but for the silvery lines which have dimmed the brightness of her golden hair still retains most of the beauties of her youth. Her eyes are quite bewitching, being large and blue, with a delicious dreamy look; she has a really classical mouth, exquisitely white, regular teeth, a finely cut nose, and small, well-shaped hands and feet. She is an indefatigable worker and rises every morning before it is day. She is firm in her refusal to allow her maid to attend her, but lights her own lamp and sits down at her table to spend an hour or two over her MSS.

The Profit on the Nickel.

There has been a good deal said, and properly, about the profit made by the Government in coining dollars out of 75 cents' worth of silver, more or less. But how about the nickel 5-cent pieces? It is said that these pretty coins cost the United States just about a third of a cent each, and are issued for 5 cents, or fifteen times their value—a profit of about 1,400 per cent. Made up on that ratio the silver dollar would contain between 7 and 8 cents' worth of silver.

RHYTHMIC RAYS.

The Rider Girl.

When she's older, she may know
Why she's [illegible] and petted so,
Why her cot is soft as down,
Why she never sees a frown.

When she's older, she may know
Where the stars in daytime go,
Why the rainbow never stays,
Where the sun goes, rainy days.

When she's older, she may know
Why [illegible] always grow
To [illegible], not so good
Her pretty [illegible].

Why she's sometimes sad, not gay,
Why she cannot have her way,
Why the world is made just so,
When she's older, she may know.

[illegible]

Time has bent his form with years,
And his legs are thinner
And less [illegible] than the sheets
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
But of that [illegible] vanished day
There are now few traces.

Yet he in his youthful pride
[illegible]

Many ladies [illegible]
[illegible] and ached for him,
[illegible]
But those [illegible] in death are dim
And those hearts are ashes.

Gran'pa has one sweetheart yet,
[illegible]
Whose two eyes of deepest jet
Still approve his features.
[illegible] name, you see,
And if I remember
What her age is, she was three
Some time last December!

Oft her hand, [illegible]
O'er his [illegible]
Tenderly, and with great care
Not to touch the glasses.
Oft his form I've seen her seek
And I've caught her saying:
"Gran'pa's such a handsome man"—
Thus her love betraying.

The Fair Tennis Player.

She wore a blue barred blazer jacket
That matched the cute cap on her head;
She handled a fourteen ounce racket;
Her cheeks were two June roses red.

Her play, which was all scientific,
Set off to advantage her charms;
Her volleys, at times most terrific,
Showed power in her brown, dimpled arms.

Her wee feet in tan tennis-slippers
Like mice scampered over the court;
She flew on those fairy-like trippers
And merrily laughed at the sport.

Unconscious of how she delighted
Those watching the game—and her face—
She played in a way that excited
Remarks on her vigor and grace.

In spite of Old Sol who was pouring
His rays on her bonnie gold hair,
She shouted the "love" she was scoring
While leaping for balls in the air.

Even when the young men, never lazy,
At tennis, were ready to drop;
She, feeling as fresh as a daisy,
Scorned all their suggestions to stop.

O, she was the girl who could hustle
At tennis from morning till night,
Developing beauty and muscle,
And, also, a grand appetite.

But when she was asked by her mother
To just for a moment assist,
Her strength, for some reason or other,
Gave out from her toe to her wrist.
—H. C. Dodge, in Detroit Free Press.

Half a Pair.

How sweet the charm that lingers
About a maiden's glove!
This one has held the fingers
Of Prudence whom I love;
And where the soft kid bulges
It hints a happy thing,
For there the glove divulges
The secret of a ring.

I hold the precious token
And dream of Prudence near;
Her words, so sweetly spoken,
Again I seem to hear.
I dream as any lover
Will dream of coming bliss
Who lets his fancy hover
Around a glove like this.

* * * * *

P. S.—Since this was written
I've learned a thing or so,
For she has sent a mitten,
Symbolical of "No."
So Prudence and her poet,
The glove and mitten fair,
Are all alike, and go it
Alone, each half a pair.
—Harper's Bazar.

Surprises.

As if, in dreary, desert way,
A beauteous rose should bloom;
Or gleaming golden, sunlight ray
Pierce a dark midnight's gloom;
Or anxious things in gruesome depths
Breathe rich and rare perfume!

So find we on life's hardest road,
And in its gloomiest hours,
God's sweet surprises oft bestowed,
Bright sunshine, royal flowers;
Or, fragrant scent through depths of woe,
A sudden joy is ours!

As when, with swelling clouds arise
And brew the storm burst wild,
Swift scattered, far the tempest flies,
The heaven is blue and mild—
God clears the threat'ning sky above
His waiting, shrinking child!

We brace our souls by faith and prayer
Some duty stern to do;
Lo! one is sent our work to share,
Or love, glad thrilling though
The spirit, sad and tiresome rounds
Seem strangely fresh and new.

We look for frowns of cold reproof,
And lo! a kindly smile!
We fear loved friends should stand aloof,
Their hands clasped warm the while!
We find choice things where only seemed
The worthless and the vile.

We plan glad, unexpected things,
Our cherished ones to cheer
So God, His hidden joys out-brings
For some in service here;
And rare and radiant surprise
Will light the Heavenly sphere!
—Gussie M. Waterman, in Chicago Advance.

Why Her Manner Changed.

Her face was a sweet one, young and fair,
Yet o'er it rested a weary air,
As of yearning long denied,
A look of one who has sought in vain,
Who, hopeless and saddened, seeks again
Still restless, unsatisfied.

Her hand, so small and white to behold,
Lay half concealed in her dress' soft fold,
Where, like a moonbeam it gleamed;
Then, without warning, her eyes flashed bright,
And her whole form quickened, alert and light,
Like a different girl she seemed.

What was it brought the light to her eyes
And touched her form with such keen surprise
That it almost seemed to shock it?
She had searched for something near and dear,
She had searched in vain for a whole long year,
And now she had found her pocket!

Cement for Iron Railings.

For the cementing of iron railing tops, iron grating to stoves, etc., the following mixture is recommended: in fact, with such effect has it been used as to resist the blows of a sledge hammer. The mixture is composed of equal parts of sulphur and white lead, with about one-sixth proportion of borax, the three being thoroughly incorporated together, so as to form one homogeneous mass. When the application is to be made of this composition it is wet with strong sulphuric acid, and a thin layer of it is placed between two pieces of iron, these being at once pressed together. In five days it will be perfectly dry, all traces of the cement having vanished, and the work having every appearance of welding.

ANY mechanic who feels like despairing because the world has not gone well with him should try, first of all, to figure out to what extent the world is to blame for his failure, and to what extent he himself is to blame. If he has not fitted himself for success, it is his own fault that success has not come to him.

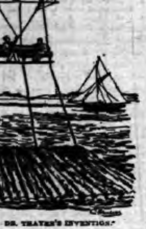
KITES OF TERRYTOWN.

An Enterprising Club of Kite Flyers and Its Achievements.

How to Build a Big Kite—Remarkable Things the Kite Can Be Made to Do—A Strange Ride by Water—Photographing from the Clouds.

[COPYRIGHT 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

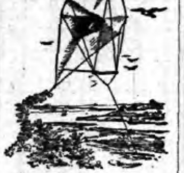
The history of the kite and the amusement to be obtained in flying it dates too far back for any definite opinion to be formed of its origin, or the primitive methods at first employed. We know that 1150 years before the birth of Christ the Chinese fired crackers and flew grotesque kites, and that is all. Every man and boy knows what a kite is, and how to fly one; but few are aware of the extraordinary progress made in connection with the kite in recent years, and there may be some of the rising generation to whom the making of a kite is a sealed book, and who are too far away from a town to buy one to suit them. The secret of making one that will fly all lies in the balance. To make a big one, get some well seasoned ash and cut from it two good stout laths an inch broad, one quarter inch thick and three feet long. Cross them like the letter X, and across the joint lay another lath about two feet long and bind them firmly into place. Now run a stout cord from tip to tip all around the frame. All that remains to be done is to cover it with strong, thin paper.



DR. THAYER'S INVENTION.

In doing this mind that any seams are neatly joined, and extend right across the kite to keep the balance true. A seam on one side and not on the other will spoil it. Good flour paste is the best material for fastening the paper. The kite is now made and wants stringing. From the two top points, the two side points and the joint of the laths in the middle, run light cords, six feet in length, and knot them together; then attach the flying string to this. The tail, every one knows about. Also the fun to be had in cutting four-inch square pieces of writing paper, putting them on the lower part of the line, when the kite is in the air, and letting them run as "messengers" to the soaring kite.

The most progressive and enthusiastic kite-flyers in America are to be found in Terryville, Conn., and they have introduced a novel idea that will probably be tried elsewhere. The idea was evolved during the fall and winter of last year, and this spring it was successfully carried out. A. Andrews (captain), Arthur and Leon Bunnell, Wallace Cook and John H. Deiter joined themselves into a club called the A. B. C. Club, the name being formed of the initials of the members, and set about making a mammoth kite ten feet high.



PHOTOGRAPHIC KITE.

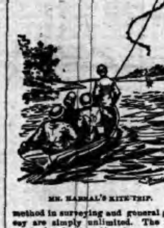
They finished it, and taking it out, set the neighborhood stirring; members flocked in to join, full of ideas. Middletown followed suit, and the craze has become general, a number of contests being arranged at various dates, the prizes to be awarded to the kites carrying up the most yards of string.

The Terryville boys are making great efforts to come in ahead, and have just finished a kite seventeen feet high, twelve feet wide, covered with fifty-four yards of canvass, and weighing fifty pounds. The tail is one hundred and forty feet long. The frame is bolted together with iron bolts and the canvas is attached to the frame on the hook-and-eye principle, so that it can be taken off and folded up for transportation. The cord is as thick as a clothes-line, it takes six members to "soar" the kite, and it is expected to run out two thousand feet of line when they get accustomed to handling it, and get the ballast right on the tail. At the trial trip it answered every expectation, and then a genius proposed some fun. A stiff breeze was blowing, and a light road-wagon was run out in which five young men seated themselves; the kite-rope was attached, and the conveyance began to move over the roads at a very fair pace.

Another youth followed on the horse's back, and after a run of about six miles, they picked the kite up and drove back. It is now proposed to make a huge kite of material saturated or coated with asbestos, to render it fire-proof, and utilize it for the display of fire-works to be ignited by slow matches or fuse of various lengths.

This is the biggest kite on record. The next largest one was that of Merchant William Harral, of Bridgeport, whose kite was nine feet high and seven wide, and whose long, light tail extended for nearly half a mile. Last summer while he and a party of friends were at his cottage on the Connecticut shore he brought out his kite and flew it until one of the guests proposed to get into a light lady's dory that was dancing on water, and take a sail with the kite. Mr. Harral agreed, got into the boat, passed the slack rope through the painter ring, and then, one by one, the people holding the rope on shore let go their hold, and in a second the boat was under way. Out into the sound they went, a man forward at the rope with a sharp knife to cut, in case of accidents, and so they ran across to Port Jefferson on Long Island; waiting there until the wind changed, and then returning.

M. A. Batut, of Enlaure, France, has invented a photographic kite, which consists of a small camera attached by means of a triangular support to the backbone of the kite. The camera is provided with an instantaneous shutter, operated by a slow method. This is lighted before the kite is sent up, and when combustion has proceeded a certain distance, it sets fire to a small thread, releasing the spring of the shutter, and an exposure is made. Another novel feature of this invention is the use of an aneroid barometer attached to the kite, so that the operator can tell to what height the kite ascended, and at which the exposure was made. The thread releasing the shutter of the camera also records the registered height, by means of the sun's rays striking the dial through an exposed hole and printing the shadow of two needles on the sensitized paper covering the dial. A piece of paper also flutters to the ground giving notice that an exposure has been made. The uses of this method in surveying and general geodesy are simply unlimited. The most original and unique idea, however, hails from Dr. David Thayer, of Boston, Mass., in which he uses the kite as a motor.



MR. HARRAL'S KITE TRIP.

The one great fault in this respect has been the amount of power expended in keeping the kite in the air. Every boy knows that in a light wind the simple weight of the cord will reduce the "pull" of the kite to a minimum. This fact has made kite propulsion only satisfactory in a stiff breeze. Dr. Thayer has remedied this defect by means of a raft made to float on the sea, having three main guys of rope attached to one end. These are sustained in the air by means of small balloons filled with gas. Below these are a number of sails, made fairly rigid by bamboo attachments (like the sail of a Chinese junk). These are about three times as long as they are broad, and fitted at each end with a species of wing, a proper manipulation of which directs the course of the machine. The main guy ropes are about forty feet long, and midway between the raft and the sails and balloons, is located the passenger car.

The balloons are powerful enough to hold up the sails, car and passengers, and the wind, catching the sails, forces along the raft which floats on the water. When it is wished to direct the course to the right, the wings on that side are drawn round at right angles to the rest of the sails, and vice versa.

This idea is also intended to be used on land, substituting a wagon for the raft, and the invention provides for the wagon being carried on the raft when not in use. It will thus be seen that the long-neglected kite has, during the past year, risen to such a plane that its future development will be watched with interest.

IN ARMY AND NAVY.

TWO squadrons of cavalry in the Russian army are to be formed exclusively of natives of the Caucasus.

AT L'Orient Arsenal, in France, a great iron-clad war vessel of 11,000 tons is nearly completed. It is strongly armed with immense cannon in revolving towers.

THIRTY tons of Kola nuts have been ordered for the German army, experiments having shown their utility in enabling men to endure severe and prolonged labor.

A NEW kind of lance has been introduced into the German cavalry regiments. Its peculiarity lies in the fact that it is constructed wholly of steel, the necessary lightness being secured by making the shaft hollow.

A NOVEL feature marks the English naval manœuvres this season. As each war-ship arrives at Devonport a number of officers and men are reported wounded and are speedily taken ashore; some in cots by steamers, special provision having been made beforehand for their reception in hospital.

THE introduction of a new rifle into our army, having a reduced caliber, and capable of being used as a magazine gun, is now a certainty; and as the Duponts have received an order for 100,000 cartridges with which to test small arms of thirty caliber, this introduction will hardly be long delayed.

It is stated that the English War Department has now definitely decided to have a permanent balloon depot at Lidsing, near Chatham. The proposal is an important one for the district, as, in the first place, it means an expenditure of £9,000 or £10,000 upon buildings and afterward the maintenance of a staff there.

INSTRUCTION in agriculture and forestry has been introduced into the Belgian Army, intended for such soldiers as expect to return to the farm on retirement from military service. Land for experimental and practical purposes is acquired near garrison towns. The scheme offers the double advantage of turning out scientific farmers and providing supplies for the army.

A DOCTOR of Vienna has invented a fluid, the use of which, he claims, will minimize the horrors of war. The fluid is to be placed in a shell, which is so constructed that it will burst in falling or striking any object offering but slight resistance. The fluid, upon being released, so affects persons inhaling its odor that they immediately become unconscious and remain in that state half an hour or more.

M. GERVILLE-REACHE, an official reporter in the French Parliament, has calculated that between 1871 and 1889 England spent on her navy, 4,335,916,-826 francs; France, 3,636,053,778; Germany, 1,000,134,404; Austria, 470,115,-677; Italy, 1,161,165,858; Russia, 1,979,-639,708. Of the whole amount expended by her, France devoted 23 per cent. to the construction of new ships; Russia, 30 per cent.; England, 41 per cent.; Austria, 44½ per cent.; Germany, 37¼ per cent.

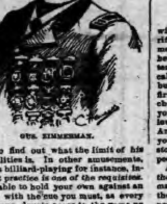
HE IS A DEAD SHOT.

What Champion Gus Zimmerman Knows About Marksmanship.

Ten Bull's Eyes in Fifty-Seven Seconds—How to Handle a Rifle—Some Phenomenal Scores—It Is All a Question of Nerve.

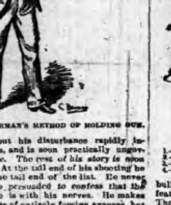
[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

The man who achieves success as a rifle shot will, at a very early stage of his experience, discover that a complete control of his nerves is essential to supremacy. It does not take a marksman long to find out what the limit of his possibilities is. In other amusements, such as billiard-playing for instance, incessant practice is one of the requisites. To be able to hold your own against an expert with the cue you must, as every one knows, devote years to the game no matter how thoroughly your nerves may be under command. This is not the case with the target. In a few months the novice may easily outstrip the veteran who for years has been trying to "get a line" on the bull's eye.



GUS. ZIMMERMAN.

He is, under ordinary conditions, an excellent shot. When there is nothing at stake on his rifle he can come pretty near hitting the mark every time. If he is not in competition with anybody he will roll up a most fascinating string of bull's eyes. Shooting for fun and for fun only, he will astonish all beholders, but match him against anybody and he goes all to pieces instantly. He understands every little point that is of service to the successful shot, and yet in a match we would not dream of assigning him to duty in any but a third-rate team. As a rule he begins well. For the first four or five shots his aim is reasonably sure to be unerring. After that, signs of a collapse appear. He can do nothing with his nerves. At this stage he is not altogether incapable of hitting the bull's eye, but his disturbance rapidly increases, and is soon practically ungovernable. The rest of his story is soon told. At the tail end of his shooting he is at the tail end of the list. He never can be persuaded to confess that the trouble is with his nerves. He makes all sorts of entirely foreign excuses, but we understand his case and accept them with grave faces. There is one phase of his failing which is as indicative as a whole sermon on marksmanship, and which is equally as amusing. If the match is one of only ten shots, he almost invariably finds a stumbling block in the ninth.

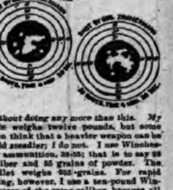


ZIMMERMAN'S METHOD OF HOLDING GUN.

There are occasions when a rifleman feels in better trim for shooting than at other times. My own experience is, however, that these occasions come through no influence he can bring to bear upon them. He may endeavor to get himself into trim and find that, in spite of all his training, he is altogether out of gear when the time comes. And the reverse is sometimes most surprisingly the case. Let us give an illustration. I recently returned from Germany, where I had the pleasure of encountering some of the European champions. I was fortunate enough to bring back with me some prizes worth carrying across the ocean, and I think I did my share toward upholding the reputation of the United States against all comers. On the day after my arrival I went down to Creedmoor and participated in the contest for the Tiffany emblem. Some of the best shots in this country would like to have carried off that emblem, and several of them entered for it. I have a good many friends, and they welcomed me home. They proved conclusively, that they were quite glad to see me. As a matter of fact my return provoked something very much like a celebration. When, at four o'clock in the morning, it came to a termination, many bottles of wine had been emptied. That the "reception," with all that it entailed, would make itself apparent on my score, any one might be pardoned for supposing in advance. It did nothing of the kind. I acquitted myself to my entire satisfaction on the first day, kept up the pace on the second and won the emblem on the third. I would not as a rule, however, prescribe celebrations as preliminaries to a match.

The finger must be trained to obey the will as though it were a completely independent member and when it is educated up to that point one great obstacle in the way of the marksman will have been removed. As to the style of holding the weapon, that is largely a matter of choice. It may be held one way or another with equally good results. I have seen men who scarcely bent the elbow at all, holding out the left arm at almost full length and beating all competitors in spite of that straining and uncomfortable position. My method is to let the rifle rest on the tips of the thumb and index and middle fingers of left hand. This enables me to hold the rifle high enough and yet bend the arm so much that part of it is supported by the body.

Some shooters seize the barrel as though the firmer they held it in the left hand the better would be their aim. That is a mistake. The mission of the left hand is accomplished when it has afforded support for the rifle and assisted the other arm in steadying it. I have been particularly fortunate in some of the scores which I have made at rapid firing. I would rather excel at that style of shooting than at any other because it certainly involves a severer test than even that of killing birds, unless, indeed, the marksman is blazing away pigeons against time. Rapid firing, even at a target, involves a tremendous strain, and, to an extent that would surprise the inexperienced, requires great dexterity and the control of almost every faculty. I use the Ballard rifle because it is so constructed that the barrel is easily unlocked and the process of unloading is simplicity itself. Some marksmen clean the barrel after every shot. I do nothing more than unlock it and blow the smoke out. When this is done the next shot clears out the barrel quite thoroughly enough for my purposes. Many a time I have used it for hours without doing any more than this. My rifle weighs twelve pounds, but some men think that a heavier weapon can be held steadier; I do not. I use Winchester ammunition, 38-55; that is to say 38 caliber and 55 grains of powder. The bullet weighs 255 grains. For rapid firing, however, I use a ten-pound Winchester of the same caliber, because all you have to do is to draw down the lever and it is ready for the next shot. An advantage of the Ballard rifle is that you can adapt it to almost any kind of stock, and marksmen sometimes have peculiar preferences in this direction.



A few riflemen prefer what are called the paper-patched bullets, but the majority of them have settled down to the ordinary greased article. English powder is much the same as ours, but in Germany they prefer wet burning powder. It is quicker in its action than our powder. Perhaps the hardest fight I had at the targets in Germany was a match in which out of 50 shots I made 49 bull's eyes. In that contest I would have certainly made a clean score but for the fact that, after firing five shots, each competitor had to retire to give the next man a chance to fire five rounds. This involved so much delay that the shooters lost track of the changing movement of the wind. It became quite puffy toward evening, and I lost one bull's eye in consequence. Another good score was that in which out of 846 shots, I made 601 bull's eyes. This was done inside of three hours shooting. In practice I have made 10 bull's eyes in 57 seconds, which is a feat not likely soon to be surpassed. The only obstacle to perfect shooting, if you concede that a man has perfect eyesight and nerve and a perfect rifle—which, of course, he never can have—is the wind, and the breeze of the fish-tail variety is the most exasperating. That will at times upset the finest calculations.

FRESH ETYMOLOGICAL FACTS.

THE word "honeymoon" is derived from the German, and has its significance from the fact that the Germans formerly drank mead—a sweet liquid made of honey—for thirty days after the wedding.

THE name "Johnny cake" is said to be derived from "journey cake," because emigrants journeying from New England to the West were obliged to bake their Indian meal cakes in the ashes of their camp fires.

MALCOLM TOWNSEND, the author of a book of "Curious Facts," says that the word Manhattan is traceable to the Spanish momas, drunkenness; monados, manadas, manatoes, a place of drunkenness. As a confirmation of this theory, Mr. Townsend says that Verrazanni, a Florentine navigator, who landed on the island in 1524, called it the Isla Manhatas because he gave the Indians lots of liquor and made them all drunk.

SOME religious journals are printing a paragraph to the effect that the late Prof. Hitchcock, of this city, held that tobacco was known to the ancients and that its name was derived from Bacchus, the god of wine, says the New York Tribune. The weed was offered to Bacchus as a votive offering, and as the dative case of Bacchus in Greek is "To Baccho," the narcotic gradually got that name. Of course any scholar will at once see that Dr. Hitchcock was too good a Grecian to have fathered such an absurd etymology. As a matter of fact the late President Hitchcock, of Amherst, made the suggestion in question as a bit of pleasantry in a humorous book which he once published.

EVERYBODY knows what a picnic is, but most people would find it hard to tell how it got its peculiar name. Yet the derivation of the word is simple enough and sensible, too. When a picnic was being arranged for, the custom originally was that that those who intended to be present should supply the eatables and drinkables. A list of these necessaries having been drawn up, it was passed round and each person picked out the article of food or drink that he or she was willing to furnish, and the name of the article was nicked, or ticked off the list. The open air entertainment thus became known as a "pick-and-nick." The custom is said to date from 1802, so that the picnic is wholly an institution of the nineteenth century.

History of Electric Lighting.

Electric lighting, says M. Fontaine, did not make its appearance until near the close of the year 1873. It was in Paris, in November, 1873, in the workshop of M. Gramme, that the first installation on a really industrial scale of electric lighting took place, by means of a continuous current dynamo and Serrin regulators. It was also in Paris, in 1877, that the Jablochkoff candle was first employed; sixteen lights, distributed over a distance of about 1,100 yards, being supplied by a single alternate current Gramme machine. Paris, therefore, had the honor of possessing the first public and private lighting produced by means of electric currents. M. Fontaine thinks that in 1891 or 1892 the electric lighting in Paris will require for its production motive force equal, in round numbers, to thirty-two thousand horse-power.

VOTE THE STRAIGHT TICKET.

It is hardly necessary for us to tell the intelligent voters of Union County how important it is for them to vote the straight Democratic ticket next Tuesday, and thereby redeem the County from Republican misrule. On the election of a State Senator from Union County may depend the selection of a United States Senator, and with such a splendid Governor as Leon Abbett, the Democratic County of Union should be represented by a Democratic Senator to assist him in upholding the laws as he so faithfully endeavors to do. In the nomination of Hon. Fred. C. Marsh, the voters of this County have a candidate for Senator that [illegible]

WORDS OF TRUTH.

[illegible]

Don't fail to vote next Tuesday.

Every voter, who fails to vote for the Democratic candidates next Tuesday, makes a mistake. These candidates are for Economy and True Government.

The National Democrat, of Washington, D. C., thinks the outlook splendid for an ample majority in the House of Representatives as an outcome of the approaching election.

We believe in protection and so are all Democrats, but it is not the kind of protection hungry wolves extend to defenceless flocks, as the McKinley tariff speedily proves so.

Thos. F. Lane, the bright young editor of the Summit Record, and a candidate for Assemblyman in the Second District, will undoubtedly be elected by a handsome majority, as he deserves to be.

The Democratic nominations in Union County are so unexceptionable, that partisan opposition can only assail them with idle invectives, which have no more effect on respectable voters than a Chinese fire cracker has against granite rocks.

King Kyte is the term applied to the high-toned candidate of the Republicans for Assembly honors in the Third District. He should be Cook-ed by the honest voters next Tuesday. [illegible] and for honest representation.

Young George B. McClellan made his first bow in politics by a speech at the Tammany meeting the other night. He has before him a promising field, for his father's name, and his own, is now dear to the people of New York, and they have a great fashion of lifting up those whom they like.

Plainfield's brilliant and popular young orator, J. E. Martine, has been and is doing yeoman's service for the success of the Democratic ticket in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. His talk to the farmers and laborers is of that logical character and directness which carries conviction with it.

"RECKLESS EXPENDITURE" CHARGED.

The Republican Freeholders Won't Publish Their Financial Report in the Newspapers Where the People can Read It, but Here are Some of the Figures.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

The committee of the Board of Freeholders to examine into the reports as to extravagance, etc., in relation to the engineer's department of the county road business, reported at the meeting last Thursday. Engineer Dunham is exonerated from receiving any more than his dues, but the report exposes a remarkable recklessness of expenditure in that respect, which cannot be justified by any fair reasoning. The idea of expending over $17,000 for the mere engineering and inspecting of the county road work is preposterous—especially such engineering and inspecting as has been done in a number of instances. The Republican county press is expressing much jubilation at what they call a refutation of the reports published against Engineer Dunham. We did not, in our criticisms, complain that Mr. Dunham had wrongfully appropriated any money to his own use—but of the large, and what we, as well as the public generally, so far as we have heard, deem to be an exorbitant expenditure for the purpose.

If the present Republican Board of Freeholders had not made such a great pretension of economy, probably this extravagance would not have attracted so much attention. But when they came into power in 1888, it was with a great flourish of economical intentions and the denouncing of the great Democratic extravagance by the previous board.

The old saying that "figures don't lie" applies in this case, and we have been enabled to get hold of some figures for the purpose of making a few comparisons. This has not been altogether an easy task, for be it remembered for economy's (?) sake the Republican board has refused to publish their annual financial statement in the newspapers, as was the custom with Democratic boards, and we had to explore the Freeholders' room at Elizabeth last week to find a copy of a pamphlet, recently printed, of the report presented in May last, which enables us to have the figures of last year before us; and by referring to the report of 1887, the last year the Democrats were in the majority and had the officers of the board, a comparison can be easily made as to the true economy of the respective administrations, in reference to the remuneration received by the members of the board (including their expenses on committees) and by the various officers appointed by the board, which is the proper test of [illegible]. HERE'S THE RECORD OF BOTH.

Will You Vote as Your Pastor Has Preached and You Have Professed, or [illegible]?

Just five months and nine days ago, the Elizabeth Journal said:

It is to the lasting credit of Union county and her representatives, that not a single vote of all that were given to legalize gambling at horse races was cast by any of the members of the Legislature from Union county. Senator Marsh was absent when the bill passed the Senate, but [illegible]. Assemblyman Ulrich of Plainfield, was also absent when the vote was taken in the House on Monday night, but the Plainfield Press says he "was detained at home because of grave illness in his family; and he expressed his sincere regret this morning to a Press reporter, that he could not be present and recorded, as he would have been, against the bill." Speaker Marsh earnestly voted against the bill, but is reported to have done all he consistently could, in his official position, to permit those who opposed the bill to have a fair hearing. But Mr. Voorhees took the floor and fought hard against the iniquity. He implored the [illegible] to disgrace the State by legalizing gambling, and said he was not surprised that [illegible] had the courage to stand sponsor for the amendments. A powerful lobby pushed the bill through the Senate, although the Senators at first held up their hands in holy horror at the provision which provided for a State tax. Pass this bill, he said, and we bow down to the gambling element, an element which proudly boasts that it controls the Legislature and the courts of New Jersey. It was a fight against tremendous odds, and the World of this morning says: "The votes which were not bought outright were controlled by the party bosses, nine-tenths of whom are financially interested in some race track." It is to the credit of Union county that its representatives fought against this bill, and are not under the imputation which attach, in the public mind, to those who voted for it.

Yet when the time came to reward Mr. Voorhees by a nomination for Senator, he was blotted out and Mr. Rankin, a race track man, put in his place. That he is a race track man is proven by his own words of five days ago, taken as follows from the same paper that published the praise of Mr. Marsh and others quoted above:

Dear Sir—I am in receipt of several letters from clergymen in different parts of the county asking me for an expression of my views about race track legislation.

It is my settled conviction that no candidate for legislative office should, in advance, tie his hands by any pledges with respect to his action upon any particular measure. And however unfavorable impressed with any bill that may come up for his action, I think his duty is to listen to debate, to hear the bill read, as provided by the constitution, and then give his decision.

I have yet to make the first pledge or promise to any individual as to what my official action would be. Both the present contest, I am absolutely without engagements, either expressed or implied, with any individual or corporation, as to what my action shall be with respect to the race courses or any other matter.

The only pledge I will make is that I will, on every measure, act conscientiously, without fear or favor, and will give my vote in the manner that will seem to me best calculated to promote the moral and material advancement of the people of the county.

Very respectfully,
JOHN C. RANKIN, JR.

There you have the record of both men—Mr. Rankin, the Republican candidate, and Mr. Marsh, the Democratic candidate—taken from the columns of one paper, the Elizabeth Journal, the organ of the Republican party of Union county.

The race track men threaten to defeat Mr. Marsh for his brave opposition to them. But they cannot do it without the votes of the clergymen and other christians, and the votes of otherwise honest and decent people.

THEY WILL VOTE FOR KEYS.

Counsel Reed of North Plainfield Accused of Saddling the Citizens of Bernards With Heavy Taxes.

A Somerset county correspondent in writing of Charles A. Reed, of North Plainfield, the Republican candidate for Senator, and William J. Keys, the Democrat candidate, goes on to say that ever since Mr. Keys was nominated the Republicans have worried themselves looking about for some weak point at which to attack him; but they have given it up at last and now content themselves with the cry that Mr. Keys is not a Somerset man, because he has lived in the county only five years. That is perfectly true; and it is equally true that during the five years he has probably paid more taxes than any other individual in the county.

It is not quite so with Mr Charles A. Reed, the Republican candidate. He is still a young man, rather young, who has dabbled in the politics of the county ever since he cast his first vote some years ago. He is a lawyer, a shrewd advocate and a pupil of one of the smartest members of the Somerset County bar. Law has been his trade, but upon his shrewdness he has always relied for success. The citizens of Bernards on election day, it is said, will show Mr. Reed by their vote how much they hold him responsible for the heavy taxes saddled upon them by his manner of conducting the railroad bonds suits. And so there are many individuals who purchased these bonds upon the information scattered broadcast by Mr. Reed and his associate in the suit. The bonds proved to be worthless, but that cannot be said to have been Mr. Reed's fault. There is an interesting story in connection with this bond suit which has never been published, although the citizens of Bernards have often heard it, especially when they applied in vain to borrow money on their lands in the township.

Those who are competent to make political predictions express the opinion that Somerset will give the largest Democratic majority she has ever given.

Not an Office Seeker.

(From the Somerville Messenger.)

When Wm. J. Keys came to Somerville to attend the Democratic Convention he had no idea that he would be the nominee of that Convention for Senator. Weeks before, when the subject was mentioned to him, he flatly refused to consider it for a moment. It required the earnest and united persuasion of the party leaders to induce Mr. Keys to consent to have his name presented to the Convention, and then even he did not appear to think the nomination would fall to him. It was truly a case where the office sought the man.

Enthusiastic Democrats.

South Branch was ablaze with enthusiasm and red fire Tuesday evening, when the Democrats held a rousing ratification meeting, which was addressed by candidates for Senate and Assembly, William J. Keys, and James Bergen, also Plainfields brilliant orator, James E. Martine. After the meeting a reception was tendered everyone at the handsome residence of Mr. Keys, the grounds about which were brilliantly illuminated. A brass band discoursed fine music, and the event was one long to be remembered by the voters of South Branch, who will give a good account of themselves on election day.

A Plea for Many Bon-Fires on the Street.

Those who place reliance in false prophets have themselves to blame if they are deceived. A faithless adviser has announced to an inquirer that there is no regulation against burning leaves or other rubbish on the streets. Those familiar with the city ordinances know that the making of bon-fires on the streets or public ways is at all times prohibited, and that anyone violating this injunction is liable to be fined any sum not exceeding twenty dollars. The ordinance is very generally violated, however, much to the annual discomfort of those who like to breathe pure air during the months of October and November as well as at other times of the year.

NO NEW WATER-WORKS CONTRACT.

THE CITY FAILS TO SEE THAT THE WATER SUPPLY COMPANY HAVE ANY RIGHTS.

Mr. Newhall Thinks the Contract Couldn't Be Sold Even Were the Council Willing—Mr. Marsh Blows at the Object of the Suit against Contractor Moore—Mr. Smith and Mr. Hetfield Want to Know about Those Thousand-Dollar Payments—"Chestnuts!" Says Mr. Hetfield to Mr. Smith—That Restraining Street Railway Makes Him Tired—Electric Wires Overhead and Underground—Speculation in Grave Lots—Teaching a Grasping Corporation What is What.

Just what rights are possessed by the Plainfield Water Supply Company the city's Water Board have not yet been able to determine; and it is quite evident, from what transpired at Friday's meeting of the Common Council, that water-works stamped by the approval of the municipal fathers are still a matter of dim futurity. Whether or not the Water Supply Company will proceed with the work of construction on the strength of their old-time charter, and in spite of the fact that the Common Council have not officially recognized the prerogatives they claim, remains to be seen.

"The Water Board"—reported Chairman Newhall, when the subject of water-works came up—"has nothing to report but 'progress'—and that means a very little progress. We have had a meeting with a committee from the Water Supply Company, including President Bergen, Mr. Murray and Mr. Waring, and have discussed with them, in an informal manner, their proposition for a new contract with the city. At that meeting they stated quite fully just what they were satisfied with and what not, in the old contract between the city and the Water-Works Company of Plainfield. We found, and told them so, that they were inclined to strike out and deprive the city of very much, in the existing contract, of what we thought was right and important. We added, however, that we were willing to receive from them any plan of contract, and in consequence they sent us a draft of such an agreement as they wished to make. The conditions of this proposed contract were such that I took the responsibility of replying—and the rest of Board approved of the course—that we could not recommend to the Council such a contract as was proposed.

"The plans for the distribution of the mains, and a copy of the proposed contract, are here to-night, subject to councilmanic examination, but they are not of such character as the Board can stamp with its approval, and we can only say that we hope the time will come when we can present something which we can recommend."

No one expressed a desire to examine the propositions of the Water Supply Company, and they remained in Mr. Newhall's possession, to be returned to the Company's representatives. Councilman Smith, however, seemed not entirely satisfied with the report of the Board, and stated that he thought something ought to be done "to straighten up the defaulting Water-Works Company's affairs, first."

Mr. Newhall evidently understood from this that Mr. Smith feared that the Water Board was paying too much attention to the claims of the Water Supply Company, for he responded that nothing but the most informal talk between the latter's representatives and the Board had been indulged in.

"We have not"—he continued—"officially recognized any rights on their part. We don't know what rights they have, though they claim pretty much every right one can imagine. They don't say that they have taken possession of the Water-Works Company's affairs. They only say 'We are in position at any moment to take possession.' They also, however, claim great rights under their old charter."

"But"—Mr. Smith insisted—"it seems, according to the public print, that they did get control. The newspaper reports [exclusively those of THE PRESS] have given the terms and specifications in full."

"Still"—was Mr. Newhall's response—"the Water Board has no official knowledge that such a transfer has taken place. We only know that so far as the Water Supply and Water-Works companies are concerned it may take place whenever the Water Supply Company wishes. My impression [this in response to a query from Councilman Hetfield] is that the existing contract between the Water-Works Company and the Council is of such a nature, and is drawn in such a way, that it cannot be assigned to a third party even by the consent of the Council." With this last view Mr. Hetfield coincided.

"It seems to me"—added Mr. Hetfield—"that all of our negotiations ought to be strictly with the Water-Works Company. We ought to have it definitely settled what they are going to do. We are not in a position to recognize any other company."

To this Mr. Newhall responded that the Water Board had no idea whatever that the Water-Works Company were doing anything or had any intentions to do anything towards fulfilling their contract. "We have not heard from them"—he concluded—"and we don't know where they are." This he said in a tone which seemed to imply that the Company had vanished on the winds, and would return—from where, oh where?—oh, nevermore.

But Mr. Hetfield still wanted to know why the Water Board paid so much attention to the Water Supply Company, and Mr. Newhall had to explain that the Board had been acting entirely under the direction of the Council—that Council had instructed the Board to confer with the Company concerning the correspondence of Contractor Moore, of the Water-Works Company, offering a plan for completing the water-works without further trouble or delay.

And when Mr. Hetfield's thirst for knowledge was satisfied, Mr. Smith had thought of something else he wanted to know, and this was—What about that $1,000 per month that the Water-Works Company was to pay?—Did the Water Board make demand for this every month?

"This matter of default"—said Mr. Newhall—"was referred to the Corporation Counsel, who thought it best to defer suit."

That more light on the subject might be had Mr. Marsh was given the floor, and spoke as follows:

"There is, as you know, a suit pending, to test the constitutionality of the law under which the Water-Works Company was organized. The Company has taken the view that the writ of certiorari in this suit operates as a stay of proceedings on their part. This view we hold to be an erroneous one, but the probabilities were that if we began suit while the constitutionality suit was still pending, an injunction might be obtained to set aside our suit till the other had been decided, and hence we have not begun litigation on the bond. We have, however, made demand for the payment of the $1,000 per month, and have forwarded to the Supreme Court a return writ in response to the writ of certiorari. This suit will come up before the Court probably Nov. 4. My own opinion is that the suit was brought for a particular purpose, and that if the Water Supply Company be granted a contract nothing further will be heard of the suit."

But if no faithful contract for the construction of water-works is to be made, at least street lighting is not to suffer, for the contract with the Plainfield Electric Light Company is to be renewed, with ten years' privileges, as soon as the present contract expires, November 1. The contract is to be but for one year, but its terms are deemed so favorable that the city reserves the right to renew it for an entire decade; and whether or not such renewal be made the Company will still have for ten years the right to maintain for private lighting its poles and wires along the streets. This is all settled by an ordinance that was adopted on its first and second readings last night, and that was ordered engrossed and advertised; and by a resolution, which was also adopted, with all voting aye but Councilmen Roberts and Smith, who voted no, that the Mayor be empowered to execute the public lighting contract. The opposition of Mr. Roberts was against giving the Plainfield Electric Light Company a monopoly of street wiring privileges for ten years, and that of Mr. Smith was against carrying the contract through, instead of holding it over till the meeting of Nov 3, when the present contract would but just expire.

Under the terms of the new contract and ordinance no course seems to be left for rival companies, such as the Edison of North Plainfield, but to bury their wires; and the poles of the Plainfield Company are to be for the joint service of the company and the city, which will use them for stringing its fire-alarm wires. A further part of the agreement is that the company will furnish free steam for the blowing of the city's new fire-alarm gong. This far-sounding whistle will be purchased at an early date, as a resolution to expend not more than $900 for one was last night adopted.

The rates for street lighting under the new contract range from $14.60 to $17.50 for each lamp, of 25-candle power, per year. The lamps are to be kept, as now, burning every night from sunset to sunrise. The average cost per lamp must not exceed $16. This is considered an important concession, as most of the new lights which will be added to the city's service from time to time will in reality be $17.50 lamps, being in the outskirts; and the average, without this stipulation, must needs be considerably higher than the price stated.

In connection with the street lighting matter the opinion was expressed, by President Moffett and others, that the Plainfield Electric Light Company deserved to be treated with especial favor, "since no electric light plant in the State comes anywhere near perfection so much as this."

The ordinance to macadamize Cemetery avenue, leading Park avenue to the main entrance at Hillside, was adopted on its third reading and final passage with no one voting against it but Mr. Hetfield, and he stated that the only reason for his opposition was that he favored macadamizing streets in the heart of the town before spending money on those in the outskirts. There was Third street, for instance, which was in a deplorable condition from Peace to Richmond, and which ought to have been put in shape long ago.

To this Mr. Smith suavely responded that the Street Committee, of which he was chairman, didn't macadamize Third street because they expected the new street railway to lay tracks along the thoroughfare and macadamize it inside and outside the rails, to the great economy of the city.

This made Mr. Hetfield say "Chestnuts!" and add that he had heard that chestnutty talk about postponing macadamization because of expected railway improvements till it made him somewhat tired. Mr. Smith smiled serenely, and voted in favor of the Cemetery avenue ordinance, with Councilman Dunham, Gallup, Jenkins, Johnston, Moffett, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore and Spangenberg.

The matter was not dropped, however, without developing a bit of sensation. Stories had been afloat, it seemed, that the Trustees of the Cemetery Association were making money out of the city in having the city pay for macadamizing the avenue leading to the Hillside gates, and Trustee John W. Murray was given the floor to respond to such unpleasant charges as he saw fit to notice.

Going back to the inception of the Hillside Cemetery plan, Mr. Murray stated that the Board of Trustees had devoted a great deal of time and energy towards bringing the matter to perfection, and at the outset had spent $10,000 more than the purchase price in developing the scheme. They had assumed personal responsibility for heavy indebtedness, and had taken on themselves a great deal of care, all for the public benefit, with no hope whatever of financial benefit. The only advantage the early projectors ever had in the matter was in being able each to purchase, as the charter stipulated they might, one family plot, strictly for their own family's use, at one-half price. Outside of this privilege the Trustees could not reap one cent's worth of benefit. The Cemetery was entirely a public project. It was the property of the lot-owners. Plainfield would always own it. The lot-owners could at any time remove the Trustees; the poorest lot-owners of all had just as much control over affairs and were just as much benefited by the income to the Cemetery as any others to the Association, and Mr. Murray regretted exceedingly that any charges of speculating in grave lots had been made. The Trustees could never, even if they desired, realize one cent through the Cemetery for all their services.

Councilman Jenkins asked if it wasn't true that the Trustees had been buying up the building lots on Cemetery avenue for speculative purposes. To this Councilman Smith replied that as he understood it the trustees had been compelled to buy the lots along the new thoroughfare from Woodland avenue to Park, in order to get the right of way for the street, but that all benefits from this property would go to the Association, not to the Trustees.

Mr. Murray stated that the Trustees had tried to get only what land was needed, but had had to buy other in order to secure the right of way, as Mr. Smith had said. But the land purchased belonged to the Cemetery Association, and the Trustees could obtain no private accruements through it, no matter what profits might result to the Association.

One other interesting matter came up before the Council adjourned, and that was concerning the maintenance of the news stand recently erected by the Union News Company at the North avenue station of the Central Railroad. The desire of the Company, as expressed in a petition, was to be permitted to erect the building already up, and Mr. Newhall was not long in entering vigorous protest. "I object"—he said—"to having these petitions come in this way after the building is already up. This building has been placed at the station contrary to law. It is not built in such a way as to warrant legal permission being given. This corporation ought to be taught a lesson. It ought to have ascertained the city's rights before beginning work."

Considerable discussion followed. Mr. Hetfield said that the building had been brought to Plainfield already constructed in sections and had been put up in two or three hours as a completed structure. As it was only a wooden affair, and was in violation of the ordinances, T. O. Doane, Chief Engineer of the Fire Department, had ordered the News Company to tear it down, and an interview between the Company's representative and Mr. Hetfield had resulted. The Company disclaimed all knowledge of having violated the ordinance, and was willing to do what was right, even to pay a fine and bear the building down; but if a compromise could be arranged—such as leaving the building up and covering it with slate or corrugated iron—that would be preferred.

Mr Newhall observed that the roof of the building was connected by a second roof, of wood, with the eaves of the telegraph and baggage rooms extension of the passenger station, which to his mind was very objectionable, as assisting the spread of fire. If it took—he said—only two hours to put the building up in sections, let the Company take two other hours, take it down in sections, carry it away out of sight and replace it with a less inflammable structure.

Mr. Newhall tried to get the matter referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings without power, but had no supporters. It was then referred with power, and the building will probably be made moderately fire-proof externally.

Gave Double What Was Asked For.

The American Board, which is the foreign missionary society of the Congregational denomination, at the annual meeting in Minneapolis, Oct 10, appealed to the churches for an increase of one-third in the contributions for this year. The Congregational church of Plainfield responded to the call last Sunday by an offering which was nearly two-thirds larger than that of last year.

A Destructive Deer.

Among the herd of deer at "Deerhurst," Scotch Plains, is a buck that, in beauty and authority, rivals Landseer's "Monarch of the Glen." At most times mild and gentle, he is at this season of the year a perfect terror to his mates and keepers. This morning his second victim, a doe, a noble creature, was found dead in the park, pierced by his antlers. The animal has now been placed in an enclosure by himself. "Deerhurst" is the residence of Dr. Abram Coles.—Newark Advertiser.

Almost Broke His Neck.

Alfred Compton, son of Halsey Compton, narrowly escaped death Monday. He was walking about on the beams of the second story of the house he is having built at Evona, and to steady himself seized hold of a joist which a careless workman had placed in position but neglected to nail firmly in place. The joist gave way, and Mr. Compton fell to the ground floor of the cellar, striking on his head and shoulder. It was feared at first that his neck was broken, but after spending two or three hours' constant work over his body his friends restored him to consciousness. Then a physician was called, and found a fracture of the collar-bone. The sufferer's head swelled to a terrible size. He is now pronounced out of danger.

Plainfielders Entertain the Washingtonvillians.

At a sociable tendered the many friends of the Sunday school, held in the Washingtonville chapel, Tuesday night, a number of Plainfield's most talented artists took part in a pleasing concert that was enjoyed by all.

An amateur orchestra consisting of Messrs Sattele, Carpenter, Davis, Moore, Pollock and Stevenson, played a number of overtures, marches and waltzes. Miss Ketcham sang a solo, accompanied by Miss Remsen. Refreshments were served.

Woman's Modesty.

Many women are prevented by feelings of delicacy from consulting a physician in those disorders of her peculiarly delicate organism; and the most serious results are often caused by this neglect. To such persons Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an especial boon as it offers a sure and safe cure for all those distressing disorders to which women are peculiarly subject, while it saves a modest girl or woman from the embarrassment of a personal consultation with a physician. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

LYDIA PINKHAM:—"My son, I was just thinking how our little group of three generations so strongly demonstrates and illustrates my theory of the transmission of health from mother to child, and what can be more striking than the fact that my vigorous health is reproduced in your darling children."

PERSONALS.

The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes was elected First Vice President of New Jersey Baptist Association Tuesday.

Recent arrivals at Van Court, Inn, Roselle, include Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Moore and Miss Charlotte Wellingspoon, of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace V. Miller returned from their wedding trip Oct. 22, and have taken up their residence with the bride's parents.

Miss Hattie Benedict, one of Newark's handsomest young women, is spending a week with relatives in Plainfield, including her uncle, W. R. Mattox.

Joseph M. Mather, formerly of Plainfield, but now of Wilmington, Delaware, spent Sunday in this city as the guest of his brother-in-law, ex-Judge Harper.

There is a rumor that the Board of Education will soon lose the efficient services of the Principal of Irving school, who will [illegible] Gilbert but a little while longer.

Miss Edna VanZandt's sixteenth birthday was celebrated at her home on Grandview avenue, by a number of invited guests, October 22. There was music, dancing and supper.

G. L. Applegate, of Syracuse, who has been stopping with F. W. Clark, of West Seventh street, returned home Friday. He came to Plainfield to act as groomsman at the Clark-Littell wedding.

The marriage is announced of Miss Lydia Birdsall, formerly of this city, and William H. Popham, of White Plains, N. Y. The ceremony took place in Grace church, White Plains, on Wednesday.

The Rev. George H. Stephens, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Berwick, Pa., with his wife and baby, spent Sunday at the home of J. F. Laire, 51 Broadway. Mrs. Stephens and Mrs. Laire, are sisters.

Miss Julia E. Bulkley, Principal of the Plainfield High School, and Chas. H. Ross, principal for the Borough, have been elected members of the State Council of Education. Their terms expire in December, 1892.

Mr and Mrs. Milton C. Barkalew returned from their wedding trip Oct. 22, and were given a reception by their parents at their home, Emily and Grove streets, last evening. The house was thronged with guests and the hours were passed very enjoyably.

The marriage of Sophia Dall Compton, of this city, and Dr. J. Howard Reed, of New York, will take place on Thursday evening, November 6, at seven o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Halsted C. Compton, 300 West Front street.

A party of ladies—including Mrs. Fred S. Green and daughter, Mrs. John H. Jackson and Miss Lillian Prime—left town on their bicycles afternoon Oct. 22, and had a splendid run over good roads to Westfield and through the surrounding country.

The marriage of Edward J. Connett, son of the late Samuel Connett, whose home was on Place street, this city, for many years, to Miss Ida Allen Price, will take place Tuesday evening, Nov. 11, at eight o'clock, in the Summer Avenue M. E. church, Brooklyn.

Dr. E. A. Jones, of 106 East Front street, has been in Plainfield but a short time, but has already won considerable public favor, and his friends and patrons will regret to learn that he has been called away, for a time, by the serious illness of his wife, who is prostrated at Colorado Springs with typhoid fever.

The Bound Brook Chronicle, announcing Saturday the services to be held in the Congregational church said: "The talented vocalists, the Misses Sarah and Harriet Manning, of Plainfield, will render some choice solos and duets. These ladies appeared in one of the Philharmonic concerts given here a few years ago."

A New York paper of Friday said that "One of the largest weddings ever held in Union county took place at the Littell homestead, near Fanwood, Wednesday, when Miss Hattie T. Littell was married to William H. Clark, of Plainfield. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Cadwell, of the Presbyterian Church of Westfield."

The Rev. Samuel C. Kennedy, pastor of the Congregational church at Sanford, Fla., accompanied by Mrs. Kennedy, spent the Sabbath with Mr. and Mrs. T. A. VanZandt, of Crescent avenue, and other friends and relatives in Plainfield and the Borough. Mr. Kennedy is a brother of Mrs. VanZandt. He sailed for his Southern home Monday afternoon.

At the reception given to the Rev. Mr. Ranney, of this city, by the people of his new church in Albany, Wednesday evening, the Rev. C. E. Dunn, of the Third Presbyterian church of that city, made a happy little speech in which he alluded to their both coming from Plainfield, both being graduated from the same college and both having married wives of this city.

Miss M. C. Burdette, of Chicago, Secretary of the "Women's Baptist Home Mission Society" of the United States, will address the "Young Ladies' Missionary Society" of the First Baptist church, Saturday afternoon at three o'clock in the lecture room of the church. She will be accompanied by a young lady graduate from the Training School, and the exercises will be very interesting. A cordial welcome will be given to all.

Mrs. Anna M. Spencer, of Manning avenue, leaves Plainfield today to make her home hereafter on 51st street New York. She and her sons, Howard, Tiffany and Willie, have a host of friends who greatly regret their going. The young men, however, are so engaged in New York in business that their residence there is absolutely necessary. Mrs. Spencer and her boys are all members and earnest workers of the Holy Cross church, and there, also, will their absence be felt.

The Scotch Plains Baptists are saying a great many nice things about their pastor, the Rev. Mr. Parks, about the handsome interior finish of their church, and about the recent improvement made to their property by the building of one of the finest church sheds in the State. It is [illegible] in the United States. The shed is 100 feet long by 25 feet deep. The frame is of hard pine, and the roof is of slate. The [illegible] of the shed is composed of Georgia pine and finished in oil. The work was done by and under the supervision of John Bowman.

The sudden death has occurred of Mrs. Lillian Cuthbert, wife of the late William Cuthbert, of this city. She has been living at the home of her son, John H. Cuthbert, corner of Fifth and New streets. Wednesday afternoon [illegible] of the room, she opened the cellar door by mistake and fell to the bottom of the stairs. She lay unconscious until next morning when she died. It may have been that she was seized with a paralytic stroke or vertigo, that caused her fall. [illegible] She was in the [illegible] year of her age, and leaves three sons.

Quite a number of the friends of E. F. Arnold, of the [illegible] department of this city, celebrated his birthday Thursday night by giving a dance at the home of Mrs. George Henry, [illegible] street. The fact that Mr. Arnold was entirely ignorant that his friends had such a pleasant surprise in store for him, lent added pleasure to the occasion. A table spread in the dining room showed quite a number of very handsome presents. Among the many guests were: the Misses Kate Gilbert, [illegible] Wm. [illegible], Moore, Peterson, Wm. Western of Philadelphia and many others. Music was furnished by Reilly's orchestra.

Ernest O. Chamberlin of this city who was recently chosen from the staff of the New York Sun to become city editor of the World, has given up that position to devote his entire time to the writing of the city political campaign. It is understood that when such work is ended, he will be appointed assistant manager of the World.

The marriage took place Friday night at the home of the bride on Prescott place, of John Arden, one of the employes of the Pond Machine Tool Company, and Miss Annie Clifton, whose sister is the wife of Foreman Foster of the Works. Miss Alice Burrows, of Brooklyn, was bridesmaid, and Hugh Smith, of this city, was groomsman. About fifty guests were present, and gifts were numerous.

Edward DeRussy Gillmore, who up to a year ago was a resident of this city, died Wednesday at his home, 152 Palisade avenue, Jersey City. Death resulted from an operation. He leaves two children and a wife who was formerly Miss Louise Cummens, of West Second street. He is a son of the late General Quincy A. Gillmore. He was 39 years of age and a lawyer by profession. Interment will be made in this city.

Miss Kate D. Street, principal of Bryant school, has accepted a position in the State Normal school. Plainfield's loss, however, will be fully supplied by the advancement of Miss M. Lillian Newman to the position. Miss Newman is the daughter of H. O. Newman, of West Fifth street. She is a graduate of the High School and has been trained at Framingham. The vacancy caused by her appointment will be filled by the return of Miss Florence A. Stowell.

Banager Schermerhorn Sets Us Right.

To Charles Schermerhorn, the Western Union company's representative in this city, is due the credit of obtaining the special time-service from the Washington observatory by wire, that indicates twelve o'clock noon exactly on the face of the self-winding clock in Dickinson's window, 13 Park avenue.

Had to Break His Wrist a Second Time.

Thomas O'Keefe, of West Fifth street, some weeks ago fractured his wrist by a fall. The break did not heal properly, and it was found necessary to put the patient under the influence of ether, break the wrist over again, and reset it. O'Keefe has suffered a great deal of pain, but the wound is now healing nicely.

Didn't Want to Cry, but the Pain Made Her.

The cover to a coal hole on Park avenue was left removed a considerable time afternoon Oct. 22, and the pitfall was guarded by only a frail peach basket. Against this slight framework several unwary feet stumbled, and presently a little girl who gave her name as Lizzie Rafferty walked briskly along, brushed the basket aside, and fell partly into the black depths underneath the pavement. She was bruised and cut so severely that in spite of her brave struggle to keep from crying, in the presence of the crowd about her, the tears flowed freely.

DeWitt—Martin.

Miss Jennie Martin, daughter of the Hon. Lebbeus Martin, deceased, of Deckertown, was married at six o'clock on Thursday at the home of her aunt, Mrs. C. S. Martin, 29 Craig place, to Benson De Witt. The Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell, of the M. E. church, officiated. The bride was most becomingly attired, and the groom was showered with congratulations upon his good fortune. Only the relatives and immediate friends of the families, were present. The groom had previously lived at Yonkers, but the new couple will make their future residence in Port Jervis where Mr. DeWitt is engaged in business.

Progress of Presbyterianism in Jersey.

The Rev. W. R. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, presented to the State Synod at Atlantic City, Oct. 22, the report of his Committee on Narrative. This report was a very interesting one, embracing points of interest from all the Presbyteries of Synod, detailing the state of religion and religious work in the various cities and towns in the State, and showing a comparison in collections with other years; the work of the missionaries within bounds of Synod in the different Presbyteries. Many of the churches within the past synodical year have been remodeled and beautified, and others have had additions built and otherwise improved. This year in the Presbytery of New Brunswick has been one of great interest, and many persons have been added to the churches on confession.

Borough Property Changes Hands.

Recent real estate transfers in this vicinity include the following:

Jacob B. [illegible] and wife to Henry D. Morrison, land in North Plainfield, $1,300.

Benjamin F. Champney, Jr., and wife to Newton B. Smalley, property in North Plainfield, $850.

William Uhrbahn and wife to William J. Chorey, property in North Plainfield, $1,300.

Emmons K. and Abram M. Vail, executors, to Sarah S. Line, lot in North Plainfield, $10.

Sarah S. Line to Abram M. Vail, lot in North Plainfield, $1.

James F. Hubbard and wife to Rosa Vossmann, land in North Plainfield, $900.

Mary A. Marsh and others to the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, land in North Plainfield, $225.

William R. Coddington and wife to David L. Smalley, land in North Plainfield, $467.

Under the Wreck but Uninjured.

F. E. Miller, proprietor of Hotel Netherwood, and his wife, were upset by their runaway team, Monday, but fortunately escaped with hardly a bruise. They were driving from Roselle to Plainfield, in a light buckboard, behind Mr. Miller's handsome team of young bays. Suddenly at sight of a heap of crushed stone, the horses sprang to one side and backed against a bank with such force as to snap the pole. They then plunged forward and started at a terrific gait down the road, but their driver swung them around by main strength into an embankment that stopped them but at the same time threw Mr. and Mrs. Miller out of the wagon and under the wreck. The horses did not get away again, and only one of them was scratched.

Mr. Powers, Miss Holmes and Miss Utter [illegible]

The gratification of the 400 present in the Crescent Avenue chapel, Saturday evening, was general and complete. Leland Powers' impersonations of characters in David Copperfield, were in some cases far beyond the efforts of many far-famed elocutionists. His Heep and his Micawber are unequalled, and his Ham, his Betsy Trotwood, his Peggotty and other characters, are [illegible].

The entertainment was given under the auspices of the Young Ladies' Mission Band of the Presbyterian churches, and the financial profit accruing will be even beyond expectation. Miss Blanche Fellows, the First Presbyterian church's contribution to the programme, did and sang, [illegible] the pleasure all took in the piano duets of Miss Utter and Miss Holmes of the Crescent Avenue church.

RANKIN DOES THEIR PRINTING.

That's Why He's the Willing Tool of Railroad and Race Track—Some Interesting Revelations at a Rousing Democratic Rally.

The facts and arguments which the orators at Wednesday's public meeting of the local Democracy presented to the people opened the eyes of more than one voter who previously had been trusting blindly and confidently in the candidates whom the Republican party are seeking to elect in the present campaign.

Amphion Hall was well filled with men of voting age. Most of them were of course stalwart followers of the party under whose auspices the meeting was held, but there were others, and not a few, who were of opposite political faith. Even these latter, however, were not long in becoming deeply interested in the things which they then heard and carefully thought about for the first time, and more than one outsider was persuaded that the Democratic candidates had excellent reasons for being strongly supported in their race for office.

Some of the men were accompanied by their wives, who seemed to relish the speech-making, and the cheers, and the inspiring music of the band, as much as did the veteran politicians.

James Martine, Plainfield's farmer-orator, as President of the Democratic Association called the meeting to order. On his motion Rowland M. Stover was unanimously chosen chairman, for which Mr. Stover expressed his gratitude.

Also on motion of Mr. Martine, the following additional officers, who were given seats of honor on the platform, were elected by a lusty shout:

Vice presidents—The Hon. Joseph W. Yates, the Hon. James Clark, the Hon. Robert L. Livingston, Tell A. Bognolia, Elmore D. Moffett, Leonard Spangenberg, Dr. Chauncey M. Field, Gen. William H. Sterling, Otto Arens, Joseph S. Culver, Louis F. Wadsworth, Seymour Marsh, Edward Oswalin, John Dayton, C. J. Feyral, Joseph G. Muller, William L. Force, Vincent L. Fraser, George M. Phillips, Sydney E. Flower, Augustus F. Hotfield, Henry Linthe, William E. Mortare.

Secretaries—Alburtus Swain, W. Duncan Morgan, Lewis E. Brown, Peter Flynn, Charles Sterer.

Honorary Vice Presidents from North Plainfield—Chas. Lyman, John Vosseriolo, John E. VanWinkle, Elisha Coriell, Fred. Stauer, John A. Thickstun, John E. Jackson.

Mr. Martine mentioned the name of the Hon. Jacob A. Geissenhainer, Democratic candidate for reelection to Congress, at which cheers resounded, and then read the following letter:

J. E. Martine, Esq.

DEAR FRIEND:—Your kind note inviting me to be present at your meeting upon Wednesday evening, received. I regret exceedingly that a previous engagement will prevent me from being with you on that occasion. I extend congratulations to the Democrats of Union county on the outlook. The people of our State are awake to the issue—that unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation, and on this issue are rallying to the standard of the Democratic party. Thanking the citizens of Plainfield for their courtesy and consideration, I subscribe myself,

Yours fraternally,

J. A. GEISSENHAINER.

When the applause accorded Mr. Geissenhainer's sentiments had died away the Chairman introduced the first speaker of the evening, the Hon Frederick C. Marsh, the Democratic candidate for State Senator, who was greeted with cheers and loud applause.

After telling why he was a Democrat—because of Democracy's true Jeffersonian principles, Federal unity, State sovereignty and personal liberty—Mr. Marsh devoted his attention entirely to the important local issues of the campaign, and discussed the personality of the several candidates. He advised the reelection of Geissenhainer to Congress because Mr. Geissenhainer had faithfully and uprightly served his party and the people during his last term. He advised the election of Alford B. Cook to the Assembly because Mr. Cook was an upright and honest man who would represent his constituents with the most upright zeal. He advised the election of William Hicks as Sheriff because Mr. Hicks was an honest man and would conduct the public business with the same probity of principle that had characterized his own business methods for the past thirty-five years, and rescue it from the partisanship grasp which had held it during the reign of the present incumbent.

On the Senatorial question Mr. Marsh was plainly outspoken, and took a fearless stand which won him much applause and admiration. The one great issue of the present senatorial campaign, he held, concerned the race-track problem, and he then reviewed his own record and that of his opponent, John C. Rankin, Jr., on this question.

The original bill presented before the Legislature last Winter was to regulate horse racing during the Winter season: for that bill he as Assemblyman had voted. Later the bill had been returned by the Senate to the Assembly, greatly mutilated by amendments, and with a new object in view—that of legalizing pool-selling, book-making, and other forms of gambling, at the tracks.

"Against this bill"—said Mr. Marsh—"I fought vigorously, and I was one of the six who out of sixty voted not to pass it. My record then is my platform now."

Loud and continued applause greeted this manly statement. Continuing, Mr. Marsh ventilated Mr. Rankin's history in the matter. When public feeling was first aroused against the bill, and the people of Elizabeth endeavored to hold a public meeting, they had asked Mr. Rankin to preside, as Mayor of the city, and show by his presence that he was opposed to the bill. He had refused to attend. Later he was asked to sign a petition against the bill, and again refused. He shirked his duty when he didn't preside; he shirked it when he didn't sign. Then he was appointed a member of a committee to go to Trenton to plead with the Governor not to sign the bill and make it a law. Again Mr. Rankin failed. And yet he posed as Elizabeth's Reform Mayor!

But not content with thus skulking away from his duty—the speaker continued—Mr. Rankin had actually given his consent to the running of a gambling ring on the race-track at Elizabeth, in that he permitted his policemen to go to the track and prevent the officers of the State from gathering information for the indictment of the gamblers. And now he came out with a letter and straddled the whole question. He helped the race-track people in the past, and now refused to say that he wouldn't help them in the future. He was, quoting from his letter, "absolutely without engagements, either expressed or implied, with any individual or corporation, as to what his action should be with respect to the race courses or any other matter."

Groans were accorded this quotation, and Mr Marsh continued to tear to pieces Mr. Rankin's remarkable letter, after which he explained away the charges the Republicans had made against himself. The charge that he was the attorney of the race track people and would work to their interests he pronounced unqualifiedly false. When the Jockey Club had first become incorporated he had conducted their legal business, just as he would conduct any other honest affair; had presented his bill, had been paid, a year and a half ago, and was no longer in their employ. The race track itself was a legal affair, incorporated to promote the breeding of horses and extend the practice of manly sport. The gambling feature was what ought to be suppressed, and he would always do what he could to aid in that suppression. In the Assembly he had fought against all such evils and had worked so hard and so continuously in favor of measures for the public good, and against measures which would bring disaster to the people, that he had finally dropped at his seat in utter exhaustion, and had to be carried out by his colleagues. If elected to be Senator he would try to be as faithful a representative in the past.

At the close of his speech, which was frequently interrupted with applause, Mr. Marsh was given ringing cheers as "Our Next Senator."

R. V. Lindabury also made a ringing speech on the race track question. With him, he said, it was a question of morals, not politics. The effort of the race track people and the railroads was to make New Jersey a gamblers' paradise—a dumping-ground for the people who had been driven from New York and elsewhere. The gambling den on the Elizabeth track was doing great harm to the people of the State—placing the homes of the land in peril of great disgrace. The people of Plainfield did not appreciate what a great public wrong the race track had become—did not realize how many of their own sons were being dragged down into the depths by the evil. The young men—and not a few of the young women too—were being ruined by the fascination of gambling den. The bright sons of the land, in numbers perfectly appalling, were visiting, in secret, this great foul den, and were wrecking their manhood and wasting their substance. And it was against this vast evil that Mr. Marsh had taken a firm stand, and in favor of which Mr. Rankin seemed to be working.

"A young man of brilliant promise"—continued Mr. Lindabury—"had justly aspired to Senatorial honors on the Republican ticket. His name was Foster M. Voorhees"—and mention of the name was freely applauded. "But the manly way in which Mr. Voorhees argued against the race track gambling bill cost him his political life. The 'boss' from Camden saw to it that his hopes were blighted, after he had taken that firm stand. The 'boss' wanted the race track bill to pass because it would help his railroad, and as honest young Voorhees, with honest young Marsh, fought against the railroad and race track combination, young Voorhees had to die, politically."

And what was Rankin's position in the matter? That of a straddler, from beginning to end. When the matter had first come up, for the public to fight against, some representative citizens of Elizabeth had tried to have Rankin meet with them at his office to proceed to the office of The World and enlist that paper's services. Rankin had utterly failed to help them. So he had failed in subsequent proceedings, as Mr. Marsh had told. Plainfield's grand old man, Mayor Male, and Rahway's executive, Judge Hyer, had with hundreds of others willingly signed the protest against the bill, but Rankin had refused. Further, it was Rankin's deciding vote which granted from the Elizabeth Excise Board, a license to the bar and gambling ring, under the flimsy guise of "inn and tavern," on the Dwyer race track, and it was Rankin's police force which kept order in the betting ring instead of arresting the gamblers. Rankin had said that he wouldn't take any stand in the matter, and had said that if Gov. Abbett refused to sign the race track bill it meant Abbett's political death. Well, Abbett hadn't signed. He had done his duty at the request of pleading Democrats and Republicans alike, and the Republicans didn't want to forget.

But why was Rankin so friendly to the race track and the railroad? Because he was the race track's printer, and the railroad's printer! That was the little joker! Considerable of his income was from the Jersey Central Railroad Company, and from the Jockey Club. His imprint appeared on much of their work, and if he assisted these people to get the law they so much wanted he would get more printing and more income.

Mr. Marsh had fought hard against the race track bill before any public clamor was raised about it. He had repeatedly asserted that under no circumstances would he vote for it. He had fought against it till his long and arduous duties made him fall at his seat. Then, too sick to arise from his bed, but with the people's interests still dear to his heart, he had written to Governor Abbett the first letter the Governor ever received from anybody asking him to veto the race track bill and keep ruin from the firesides of our homes. The second letter was that from Judge Vanfleet.

Mr. Lindabury's excellent speech was given unstinted applause, as was also a stirring Democratic address by Prosecutor Charles H. Winfield, of Jersey City, on the general issues of the day.

During the evening candidates Cook and Hicks presented themselves and made a very favorable impression.

THEY ARE MISSING.

A New York Paper Says That Republican Repeaters Fail to Appear in Plainfield.

(From the New York Times.)

Registration under the new law has affected surprising results in the local lists of voters, and the Democrats are hopeful of cutting down to a great extent the big majorities which for years have operated to make Plainfield nominally a Republican stronghold.

Former election times have brought forward what has always seemed an extraordinary number of colored voters, all of whom voted the Republican ticket with a suspicious eagerness and many of whom could not be found after election till the next voting day came to hand. The present registration pretty effectually establishes the fact that many former Republican voters have been generous repeaters, voting as many times as there were polling places, under different names and addresses, and a study of the registry lists tends to verify the suspicion that many a negro in the adjoining counties of Union and Somerset has been accustomed to serve as a voter in various parts of the different townships with fictitious residences galore. The house-to-house registration developed many interesting facts. Last year and for several years previous twenty negroes registered annually from 13 Cottage place. The dwelling is a small one in the colored district, and this year the canvassers found no one at the place but three old women, who said they wouldn't have a man around. Whole blocks, which heretofore gave an abundance of professional ballot depositors, this year have only an ordinary number, and some scarcely any. One neighborhood, which has never failed to furnish scores of Republican votes, turns out to be a servant-girl colony, with no men of age whatever. Things which were hitherto not even suspected now seem plain as day, and the Democrats archly open their eyes at one another and say: "What has become of all the Republicans?"

It is quite evident that skillful frauds have been perpetrated in secret in times past by those who fear to continue such practices now, and it is further evident that the ballot-reform law is doing away with them will give the Democrats a chance for signal victory in this black Republican spot.

E. E. Teeple Wins the Silver Trophy.

The fifth and final shoot for a handsome silver cake basket took place afternoon of Oct. 22, at Campbell's club house. Elmer E. Teeple, of South Plainfield, with his new Ithaca gun, was the winner, breaking 19 out of 20 blue rocks. Mr. Teeple is therefore the owner, having won it twice.

The following is the score of the shoot. E. Teeple, 19; Chas. Smith, 19; T. Brantingham, 18; A. Soper, 16; E. Campbell, 15; Force, 14; E. Manning, 14; S. G. Smith, 12; [illegible], 6. The former single winners were S. G. Smith, T. Brantingham and T. Kellar. Mr. Teeple's score for the entire day's shooting was 69 out of 80.

Much Land Changes Hands.

Among the recent real estate transfers in this vicinity are recorded the following:

Margaret Cowen of Hudson County to Job Male, of Plainfield, land in Plainfield, 155x75 feet, $2,000.

Evan Jones and wife to Job Male, of Plainfield, same tract, $1.

Frederick F. Glasby, Sheriff, to Bennet Brittin, land in Fanwood Township on road leading from Scotch Plains to Fanwood Park, 146x125 feet, $600.

Mary R. Loomis and husband, of North Plainfield, to Richard M. Bowne, of Oyster Bay, L. I., land on south west side of Bay street, Plainfield, 132x181 feet, $500.

Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company to Edmund A. D. Gable, wife and John B. Gable, land in Plainfield, 55x53 feet, $140.

Ferdinand Ruttmann and wife of Plainfield, to John Frederick Ruttmann, of New York, land in Plainfield on road leading from Plainfield to Rahway, 90x177 feet, $9,000.

Eugene T. Lynch and wife, of Flushing, Queens county, New York, to Thomas D. Jordan, of Jersey City, New Jersey, land in township of Piscataway, Middlesex county, and partly in Plainfield, New Jersey, corner of Fourth street and Clinton avenue, $1.

Sudden Death of One Who Left Plainfield to go to War.

Joseph Gowrie, a well-known baker, living at 22 Elm street, Newark, was passing through Commerce street about eight o'clock Tuesday evening, and was seen by some passing pedestrians to stagger and fall. As he was well-dressed, and had every appearance of being sober at the time, those who saw him fall carried him to Dr. Gillin's office, at No. 118 Mulberry street, where he died almost immediately after being laid on a lounge.

No one present knew him and the body was taken to Woodruff's morgue in the police ambulance, and there it was soon identified. He was about fifty years of age, and County Physician Wrightson, who was summoned, gave it as his opinion that Gowrie had died of heart disease. Later on the remains were taken to his late home. Gowrie was a well-known baker in this city in 1860 when he was but a young man. He had a shop on West Second street opposite what is now the Trinity church. He enlisted in the civil war with a number of brave Plainfielders, and never returned here.

No Stanley for This City Under Such Conditions.

Those who had engaged Stanley to lecture in Plainfield, found that his contract is a conditional one. He is to fill so many dates in America subject to Mrs. Stanley's whims. The contract reads in effect that he will keep the engagements made for him if his "family" is so inclined after arriving in America.

The probabilities are, therefore, that after delivering about twenty lectures in the big cities where he will be most glorified, he will break all other engagements exactly as he did when last in this country. The Plainfielders who had engaged him for this city, have resolved to protect the people from being victimized here and so have refused to take him under such conditions.

Little Daughters Raise $50 for Grace Church.

The little people's fair held Saturday afternoon and evening at the home of H. T. Smith, 27 Bay street, was the scene of much enjoyment to both old and young. The rooms were gay with festoons of bunting, flowers and other decorations. The piazza was adorned with Japanese lanterns. In doors and out everything was bright and merry. The lemonade well was a marvel of beauty. The fancy articles were handsome, and not costly. The eatables were nicely served by little waitresses wearing white caps and dresses. The donkey show had to give performances repeatedly. Through the kindness of all present and many absent ones, the Misses Mabel and Elsie Smith were enabled to increase the Grace church building fund by the amount of fifty dollars.

A Scheme for the Good of You All.

J. F. Loeser, one of Netherwood's most enterprising and philanthropic citizens, is just now, heart, hand and pocket, deep into another project for the advancement of Plainfield's beautiful suburb in particular, and the contingent interests of the city and the profit of its merchants in general. He is contemplating the publication of a handsomely illustrated album of photo-engravings of the prettiest and most elegant homes at Netherwood, with descriptive matter concerning that suburb and city, their present attractions and advantages and what the future has in store. Ten thousand copies are to be issued, and not only circulated thoroughly among the people here, but one will be sent to each family mentioned in the elite directories of New York and Brooklyn, and copies will be on distribution in all of the New York hotels where richly framed photographs of scenes and homes about Plainfield, will be hung. THE PRESS earnestly recommends Mr. Loeser and his scheme to all to whom he may present it.

Since Watson & Co. Extended Their Broad Street Store Through to Market Street and Put In Their

Handsome beveled plate brass trimmed show windows for the express purpose of displaying their new styles of hand-cut garments, very few young men who want the latest cuts and patterns, will venture to buy a single garment until they first see what new styles Watson & Co. are showing.

Just now those windows are very attractive as the Fall styles are out and some very stylish black and dark blue dress cutaways are shown there at $7, behind the long line of $4 royal satin striped pantaloons, and almost every hour handsome new patterns are added, as Watson & Co. like to please young men who want new things, and the correct fashion plate cut. Tell your friends that they can buy Watson's hand-cut perfect fitting garments for less than the usual run of machine-cut work is selling for, and it makes a great difference in your dress appearance which you wear.—Newark Press.

Symptoms of Catarrh.

Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Nasal Catarrh. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated, by physicians. Five hundred dollars reward is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. Remedy sold by druggists, at only 50 cents.

The Most Attractive Course Ever Offered.

The date of Explorer Stanley's appearance in this city will probably be fixed for January. The tickets will not be over four dollars, and will include seats for a talk by Bill Nye, a lecture by the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage and a concert by Ollie Torbett, the princess of the violin, and her clever company. Such an array was never before brought to the doors of Plainfield's people.

We know this to be a fact or we would not state it. We would like you to look at our stock this season, and especially these suits. We have them in single and double-breasted Sacks, in gray, stripes and checks and fancy mixed do. They're not leaders, although they lead a great many people who look at them to buy them at sight. But what we mean is, they are not gotten up as a bait to convey a false or unfair impression of the prices of the rest of the stock, but fair samples of the values we are giving all along the line. For a business suit they cannot be excelled. See them.

HOW CAN THE LONG
A line may be very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over [illegible] miles of road; magnificently equipped, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest, to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley, and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan, and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit, restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation" read it and resolve to accept the golden opportunity.

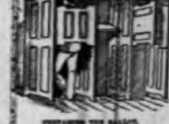
HOW YOU MUST VOTE.

Condensation of New Jersey's New Ballot Law.

THE PROVISIONS AND PENALTIES.

[illegible] Must Be Made—The Printing and Distributing of the Ballots—[illegible] the Ballot—How Secrecy Is Provided For.

According to the provisions of the New Jersey ballot reform law, passed at the last session of the legislature, the person of legal age who would exercise the rights of suffrage at any Jersey elections must first see that his name and address is properly entered upon the register books of the election district in which he resides not later than the Tuesday next preceding the day of election. The board of registry must first meet and register on the Tuesday four weeks next preceding the annual election, and within the week terminating on the following Saturday the board must make by canvass of inhabitants a complete list of all legal voters in said district. This list must be posted in [illegible] form in at least two conspicuous places in the district, where it may be scrutinized by all. Final revisions will be made on the Tuesday preceding the day of election, and the revised registry list must be filed with the clerk of the city or township not later than the Thursday following.



PREPARING THE BALLOT.

The county clerks must publish in not less than six papers in each county, divided as equally as possible as to politics, for at least two weeks preceding the sittings of the registry board, a notice setting forth the days and hours of said sitting for each election district in the county. Personal presence on the part of the voter is not necessary. Affidavits [illegible]

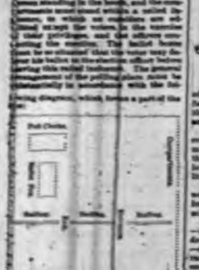
RECEIVING THE VOTE.

[illegible]



[illegible]

[illegible] from the booth, he must hand his envelope to a member of the election board, who must deposit the same in the ballot box in presence of the voter.

Any voter who declares under oath, and [illegible] to the satisfaction of a majority of the election board, that by reason of [illegible] physical disability he is unable to prepare his own ballot, may take a friend, whom he may select, to the booth whose duty it shall be to assist the voter in preparing his ballot.

Should the voter by any mischance spoil his first official envelope he can obtain a second, but no more. While the law provides that any voter may purchase of the county or municipal clerk as many official ballots as he can pay for, and the same may be circulated before election day, the official envelopes are retained exclusively in the polling room. In counting the vote the envelope containing the ballots shall be opened, the ballot removed, the names on the ballot counted and tallied, and the [illegible]

The law is fortified with severe penalties for a violation of any of the provisions of the act. For destroying or suppressing certificates of nomination or petitions a person may be imprisoned five years. For destroying ballots in the election booths or defacing the same a person may be fined [illegible] or imprisoned until the fine is paid. Any officer, under the act, who in any manner violates his duty, may be imprisoned three years. The printer who [illegible] the ballots, who shall misspell a name purposely or arrange the ticket except as specified under the law, may be fined $1,000 and imprisoned five years.

Any person who may mark any official ballot or envelope by any designation whereby any person may determine how any voter has voted may be fined $500 and imprisoned one year. Any member of any election board, or any clerk of the same, having any knowledge as to how a person voted, who shall reveal such knowledge to any other person, may be fined $1,000 or imprisoned five years. Any person who shall directly or indirectly offer money or any other consideration to a voter to vote or refrain from voting or registering may be fined $1,000 and imprisoned five years.

Promises of office or employment are considered just as bad, and the punishment is the same. [illegible]

BODY-DANCING A FAD.

The Ballet of the Future Will Need No Legs.

Graceful Carmencita Has a Rival and Both Are Captivating New York with Senseless Wriggling in the Spanish Style.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

Carmencita, the Pearl of Seville, the admiration of New York and the great chief wriggler of all creation, is going to become an actress. She will enlarge her sphere.

Carmencita is the name of 'it. Carmencita is no longer the only exponent of Spain's sensuous graces in the dance. Senora Otero has made a start in the very line of business, and the result is that [illegible] follows competition everywhere, namely, more of the commodity can be had for the same money.

This suggests the consideration of a remarkable peculiarity of Carmencita's success, the public has seen so very little of her. I am not now referring to the fact that she dances in skirts, but to the exceeding brevity of her performance.

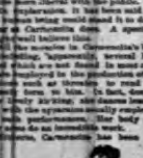
At Niblo's where she made her first appearance of New York, she danced not more than three minutes each night. At the concert hall, where she is now the leading attraction, she has been but little more liberal with the public.

In explanation, it has been said that no human being could stand it to dance long as Carmencita does. A spectator might well believe this.

All the muscles in Carmencita's body—including, apparently, several hundred which are not found in most of us—are employed in the production of gyrations such as threaten to rend her asunder, torn to bits. In fact, despite her lively kicking, she dances least of all with the apparatus usually employed in such performances. Her body and her arms do an incredible work.

Hitherto, Carmencita has been the



IN THE "CACHUCHA."

[illegible] winter amusements [illegible] is the pretty Spaniard's body to her [illegible].

And Carmencita, as officially advertised, as much as any about it the papers, is still a novelty. I was convinced of it when I saw her one evening last week. The hall was well filled an hour before her appearance while jugglers and funny men were occupying the stage. Then came "La Fille de Madame Angot," and when in the midst of it Carmencita was announced, there was genuinely enthusiastic expectancy. But the dance didn't [illegible]. It was over so soon that many had only begun to realize its unusual character. There were two or three recalls rewarded by just a few little kicks apiece, and that was all. A fifth of the spectators, perhaps, inquired if that was all of Carmencita, and then as those who have seen a curiosity and suppose that they ought to be satisfied. Two of the four "gaiety dancers" who appeared later in the evening had more personal admirers, if one might judge by applause. But if either of those girls had danced for one minute after the fashion of Carmencita, she would have been nothing but a mass of dislocations and fractures at the end of it.

"EYES SO TRUTHFUL."

She has a very supple figure. Not one woman in a hundred could ever learn, or would have been taught, if the lessons had begun in girlhood, to bend the spine as Carmencita can. If her movements were not so rapid their analogy to those of the ordinary contortionist would be perceptible.

Then she has been well trained. She talks a good deal about inspiration—says that she has only the general idea of a dance in her mind when she goes upon the stage—but careful work under a thoroughly competent teacher has made her what she is. To lapse into a descriptive "ball," she does very clever sleight-of-hand work with her body. She stands, let us say, with her arms extended as one of the pictures shows her. Then she bends backward, oh! so far backward, till you think her head will certainly fall off. Suddenly she turns her body a little to one side, but so quickly and with such a deceptive wave of the hands that your heart comes up into your mouth, for you think that her body has whirled clear around on her spine as on a nail.

She can do a hundred such tricks as that. The positions which she really assumes are not a thousandth part so miraculous as those she makes one think she has assumed.

As to her kicking, well, it is graceful enough, and not at all improper, but I will defy anybody to fix his attention upon that part of the performance. The spectator with any soul at all will watch Carmencita's body, not her legs. That body, writhing with a thousand undulations, has not only the grace but the charm of a serpent. And here again it is trickery, although thoroughly artistic and therefore pardonable.

BEGINNING "EL VITO." THE HAT DANCE.

Carmencita's grace is that of motion rather than position. I can not say that I admire all her poses. She has a queer way of getting into some of them with a snap that would break a less talented young lady in two. And her motions, as I have said, are so deceptive, so nearly impossible to follow. If it were possible to get instantaneous photographs of her most rapid twists and flings, I am inclined to believe that they would be as surprising to lovers of the dance as the pictures of the running horse were to "old sports" some years ago.

John A. Ross is urging Congress to appropriate sixty thousand dollars to install his patent electric voting machine in the House of Representatives. He asserts that during this session there have been over three hundred roll calls, each consuming thirty minutes' time, or an aggregate of thirty working days, and he asserts that by the use of his machine twenty-five days would have been saved.

Even the stenographers are apprehensive that mechanism may yet throw them out of work. The Metropolitan Stenographers' Association of New York recently held debate upon this question: "Is Mechanical Invention Inimical to the Stenographer?" They spoke of many of the dangers by which they are threatened, including the phonograph, the graphophone and the typewriter.

No Room for It in New York City—An Odd Scene in a Court-Room—Where Bears Come From and How They Are Trained.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

Charles Lamb, in one of his dainty essays, lamented the decay of beggars in the metropolis. What he termed the "all-sweeping besom of societarian reformation" was driving their picturesque tatters and lineaments trained to supplication from accustomed nooks and corners. A pathetic and graceful plea he put in to save the beloved vagrants. His sympathetic pen set out a rather seamy subject in soft and pleasing lights; its crude colors were shaded down with the conceptions of a gentle fancy; and the effect was charming, even to those irascible persons who regarded beggars as a nuisance, and welcomed their proposed extirpation. Elia declared the vagrant to be "the only man in the universe who was not obliged to study appearances;" that the ups and downs of the world concerned him not; that nobody expected him to go bail or surety; and that, in short, he was the only free man among us. In vain the beggar was invested with poetical associations that no one had discovered but the quaint essayist. The fiat had gone forth that the tatterdemalion must take himself and his physical and vocal importunities hence, and Charles Lamb in his daily walks to the bank began to miss many a familiar figure. One can imagine him returning to earth and lifting up his hands in horror to learn how precarious the ordinances of modern society have made the ancient trade of mendicancy in all its forms; how it has been hedged about by prohibitions and permits; and how the edicts extend even to instruments of melody and to dumb animals that afford mirth and innocent amusement to little children.

THE BLACK COAT PROTECTING THE LAW.

The writer well remembers a scene in Jefferson market police court, New York City, one Sunday morning. The benches were filled, as usual, with the friends of the slatternly and unkept prisoners who filed out from the stone cells to answer the same old charges of intoxication, disorderly conduct, assault and battery, etc. Fines were settled and outcast offenders were sent back to serve a day in durance vile for every dollar unpaid. Still the court-room did not thin out. Everybody was waiting to see what disposition was to be made of the case foreign to his experience. The prisoners—there was a whole tribe of them—made a picturesque group. There were three well-built, sturdy men, dressed in rough corduroy and wearing long boots. Each had a shock of black hair, blunt, vacuous features and a woolen comforter tied around his neck. Then there were as many olive-cheeked, sloe-eyed women, with squat figures and large feet shod with coarse boots. They were bright-hued shawls over their heads and massive gold ornaments in their ears. Four or five open-eyed children, who were small editions of their fathers and mothers in features and dress, completed this motley party. The magistrate surveyed them with an amused smile, and, turning to an officer, asked him what was the charge against these people.

"Leading bears through the streets, without a permit, your honor," was the reply, and everybody tittered at the enormity of the offense.

"Don't you know," asked the justice, with an affectation of sternness, of the oldest of the men, "that you have no business to turn the streets of this town into a circus?"

The prisoner addressed—he was a Savoyard—shook his head and then poured forth a torrent of patois, gesticulating wildly as he told the story of his wrongs in free America. Then there was a loud demand for an interpreter, and while one was being found the seedy lawyer, who had invited himself to defend the prisoners, told the magistrate that the Savoyards, who had dropped into the city no one knew how, were attempting to give a performance with their bears on a West street dock when arrested. Not one of them could speak English. The lawyer said their ignorance of the customs of the country was a sufficient defense, and he asked that they be allowed to go their way without fine.

By this time an interpreter had been found, in the person of a rag-picker, whose features still showed the traces of a night's debauch, for which he had paid into the city treasury the sum of five dollars as the price of his entertainment on the flagstones of a cell. With many a vernacular struggle he drew from the oldest Savoyard the story of the band. They had come over in the steerage of an Italian steamer from Genoa, bringing the bears with them. Previously they had heard dazzling tales of the fortunes to be made in America by exhibitions of performing bears, and how the natives, having more money than they knew what to do with, showered gold upon those who amused them. The Savoyards had no sooner landed than they prepared to gather the first fruits of their harvest. The three bears, after standing on their heads in a row, had just begun to dance a clumsy jig to the wild shouts of the natives, when a man in a blue coat and waving a heavy stick gave the party to understand, bears and all, that they must come with him. The tin cups had not even been passed round for the money.

"Are the bears in court?" asked the magistrate, with mock solemnity.

At this there was a general roar of laughter, and when it subsided the officer said the bears had been put into a stable on Barrow street, pending disposition of the case. The old Savoyard, in his grating patois, began to explain against the outrage of taking away his bears and locking the party up in cold cells all night. He thought it was a free country, where the foreigner met with kindness. As it wasn't, they would all go elsewhere if the judge would give them the bears. His honor said that unless the Savoyards had money sufficient for their present wants he would be obliged to ship them back to Italy, together with their animals. One of the prisoners produced a bundle. It was a knotted bandanna, and when he untied it a store of silver coins was disclosed. The magistrate thereupon decided that they must pay for the first experience in a free country the sum of five dollars, and he directed the policeman to see the men, women, children and bears over the Hudson river, at which the officer made a very wry face. Five dollars to these Old World vagrants sounded like a fine of cruel proportions, and there were tearful and complaining lamentations before they paid it.

The bear which these people exhibit for [illegible] is usually the cinnamon variety, found in the Pyrenees or Vosges mountains. Not being essentially a carnivorous animal—that is to say, feeding on fruit, honey, vegetables and smaller animals—he is easily managed, and if taken young learns a few simple tricks, such as climbing a pole at the word, footing a measure to the strains of an accordeon, counting up to ten with a movement of his paw, marching with a stick for a gun, catching a pole and making a salaam. He is by no means an intellectual animal, and it is only by a great expenditure of patience and constant prodding with an iron-shod staff that he acquires the tricks which so amuse the children. Old bears are not in demand for show purposes. In their natural state they serve to guide the mountaineer to the cave where their cubs are housed. It becomes an easy affair to capture the little fellows after the big ones are trapped. The cost of a cub is trifling to the French or Italian strollers. A few dollars will buy one in almost any town in the Mediterranean districts. In America the dealers make you pay dearly for the privilege of possessing a cinnamon bear. Out of curiosity the writer asked a well-known Park row dealer in wild animals what the market price of a young cinnamon bear was. "It will cost you $300," he said, "and you can't get one cheaper in this country."

The common black bear of America is sometimes carried around the country by the French Canadians. They cross the line in the spring and exhibit through the New England and New York country places, working their way to the factory towns, where they have compatriots. In the wilderness the black bear is almost as timid as a wild duck. You may hear him breaking through the bush in a lumbering run as you approach, and he will never face you unless he is come upon suddenly, or is rendered desperate by hunger. The dam, if her young are in the vicinity, is apt to show her teeth to the intruder—she has forty-two of them. In confinement the American bear—like a true lover of liberty—often grows morose and vicious. He does not prove so tractable as the brown bear of Europe. Not long ago a sinewy French-Canadian was earning a pretty penny by giving wrestling exhibitions with his bear, an unusually big black one.

Birds that can tell one's fortune have made their appearance in recent years, and the gentle creatures bid fair to eclipse the popularity of the monkeys. They are usually the property of a calm-eyed philosopher who has long ago awakened to the folly of shouldering his way through the hurly-burly to snatch an existence. With his infinite patience he teaches his little pets—they are canaries or small green paroquets—to hop off a perch on which they sit unconfined together, and, flying to a little cabinet, to select an envelope. Returning to their perch they allow the fortune-seeker to take the fateful decree from their bill. According as you are a gentleman or lady—that is what the bird proprietor calls you—these cunning creatures pick out a missive relating to good luck in worldly affairs or to matrimony.

BAKING BY ELECTRICITY.

How the Grade of Different Brands of Flour Is Ascertained.

The Minneapolis Journal says: "The millers sell flour under different brands, and, doubtless, many housewives have wondered how the grade of each brand continued uniform, generally making bread of the same quality. A visit to the 'dough-room' of the big Pillsbury flour mills would reveal the secret. Piled all around the room are little pasteboard boxes, each filled with wheat or flour, and each bearing a label. The 'dough man' takes the half-pound of wheat in one of the boxes, puts it in a small hand-mill and grinds it. The bran and starch are quickly washed out, leaving the gluten, which is worked into a sort of paste. This is baked in a small oven, and the height to which it rises determines the value for bread-making of the consignment of wheat of which the handful ground was a sample.

"When the attention of Electrician Hughes, who has charge of the electrical plant of the mill, was attracted to this baking oven, he observed that it took a long time to heat it to the baking point by means of the oil-lamps under it, and he at once formed the idea of baking the gluten by electricity, with the result that he has just applied a most interesting little device, which in its way is quite a wonder.

"The millers had always had trouble to secure an oven that would do this work satisfactorily, and the best one they could buy came from England. It is about fourteen inches in height, with a cement bottom two inches in thickness, and a door twelve inches high. It took one hour and forty minutes to heat this oven to the 500 degrees Fahr. necessary for baking the gluten, and then when the large door was opened to put in the gluten, about 100 degrees of temperature would be lost, and it required fifteen minutes to bake the dough.

"In the Hughes oven the small piece of gluten is placed in a cylindrical brass case, about an inch in diameter, which in turn is placed in the oven, also cylindrical in form, and at a temperature of 500 degrees the gluten is baked in four minutes, the entire operation, of heating the oven and baking, occupying less than twelve minutes. The test of the gluten is in the height to which it will rise. In the little cylindrical tube is placed a plunger bearing a weight of eleven and a half ounces, pressed down closely on the gluten, which, in rising, carries the weight upward. The higher it lifts it in the tube, the stronger are the bread-making qualities of the wheat from which the gluten was taken, and the milling of the proper proportions of the different grades of wheat, as determined by the gluten tests, produces the required standard of flour. It is in this way that the brands are kept even. Mr. Hughes simply connects his oven with the regular electric current in the mills, and acquires the desired result without tiresome and expensive delay. It can be heated to 600 degrees."

LIGHT AND LAUGHABLE.

"Will you marry me, Ethel?" said the youth. "My family is all that one could wish for." "Then why do you want me?"

Conductor—"Those people in this car who monopolize two seats apiece with their bundles are notified that hog cholera is raging in the next town we stop at."

Those Kentucky editors are good fellows. One of them published an editorial, another stole it, and the first one republished it and gave the second credit for it.

"Have you any thing to offer the court before sentence is passed?" asked the judge of a recently convicted man. "No, your honor, my lawyer took my last farthing," replied the prisoner.

"Can you forgive me and love me still," said the new-made bride, "when I confess that my teeth are artificial?" "Thank goodness!" cried the groom, as he snatched off his wig, "now I can cool my head!"

What a contrast there sometimes is between the adjective and the adverb. Reflect, for example, on the wide difference that exists between the man who is constant in love, and the man who is constantly in love.

Lieutenant—"Have you tried your new horse, yet, mam'selle?" Lady—"Yes, and the rascal acted as if he wanted to run away with me." Lieutenant (sighing deeply)—"A very natural feeling, mam'selle. I'm not surprised in the least. I'd feel that way myself."

FREAKS OF NATURE.

A CENSUS enumerator discovered a family of two children in San Francisco who were all club-footed.

FRANKLIN, Pa., has a child who sleeps every other three days. The case baffles the physicians. The child is in perfect health.

AN Indiana cow five years old has given birth to eight calves. At three years she gave birth to quadruplets, and the two following years to twins.

A PET doe at the Missouri penitentiary gave birth several days ago to twins. This is said by those who are up in natural history to be of very rare occurrence.

A MACON (Ga.) man has a frying-size chicken with not a feather, excepting a few on its wings. The chicken has been featherless ever since it was hatched and enjoys perfect health.

THERE has been discovered in Augusta, Ga., a wonderful spring which cures any kind of nausea and other stomach troubles. Its cures are pronounced immediate and remarkable.

A RADISH is on exhibition at a store in Tennille, Ga., which, with slight deformity, bears a perfect resemblance to a human hand with five fingers. It was grown on the plantation of F. H. Collins, who died about three weeks ago, and it is said by folks who visited Mr. Collins during his last illness that the radish is a perfect likeness of one of the old man's hands just before he died.

WILLIAM MARTIN has a curiosity in the shape of a gosling at his home in Eaton township, near Tunkhannock, Pa. This little "farm bird," about 1 month old, has two feet, but one of them is a perfect chicken's foot; the other is a natural "web" foot, and when placed in the water it goes around much like a top. This freak of nature is a new one, and we doubt if there is another like it in existence.

A FARMER of Switzerland County, Indiana, has on his farm there a lamb, which walks on two feet, and is an upright position. The fore legs are perfect, but the hind ones are only stubs and of little use in walking. So his lambship, when he desires to go up hill, just stands up on his fore feet and moves off. He presents a ludicrous appearance while on a jaunt about the farm for his morning constitutional, and is withal a remarkable freak of nature.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

(Concluded.)

By Freeholder Pierson:

Resolved, That the bill of A. B. Clark for building bridge on Springfield road near the late residence of Ephraim Clark be paid when properly sworn to and audited by the committee and charged to special deficiency account.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the two bills of B. M. & J. F. Shanley, one amounting to $885 52 and the other for $3,513 37, which have already been certified to by the county engineer be paid by the county collector when the same are properly sworn to and audited by the committee.

Freeholder Boll moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the bill presented by the committee of the county board of assessors, for assessing the county tax in the city of Elizabeth, amounting to the sum of $1,570 50 be paid to C. D. Ward, county attorney to be paid by him over to the proper persons entitled to the same, provided he finds the same correct.

Freeholder Trahan moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the thanks of this board be extended to E M. Wood, county collector; for the presentation by him of the bound copies of the laws of 1890.

On motion of Freeholder Howard adopted unanimously.

The resolution by Freeholder Jones in relation to building a wall in New Providence township was taken up, and on motion of Freeholder West the matter was laid over until the authorities of the township could give some definite information as to width of road.

Freeholder West moved that committee of the whole go over Morris avenue road, Union township, and examine same, and in future all roads to be examined by committee of the whole, before engineer gives certificate. Carried.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeck, the sum of $350 additional was granted to the committee on LeGrand avenue bridge Plainfield, N. J.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the engineer be and is hereby directed to forbid in future any clay to be dumped on any county road now in course of construction; such clay as is called for by the specifications, and no more, under any circumstances, may be used on said roads, provided the same be spread from wagon; and it is further resolved that no roller weighing less than five tons shall be used in any part of the work.

On motion of Freeholder Howard, adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Howard moved that when we adjourn we adjourn to meet on Thursday, October 16, 1890, at 2:30 o'clock P. M.

Freeholder Kyte moved that clerk be instructed to notify contractors on county roads that the board takes notice that contracts have expired.

CHARLES E. REED, Clerk.

—The Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, which was organized in 1878 with a membership of 700, and nursed and bred in Plainfield, has now 27,000 circles located in all parts of the world, including a branch at the Cape of Good Hope.

PEOPLE WIDELY KNOWN.

THE Russian pianist and composer, Rubinstein, has a pension of 3,000 roubles from the Czar.

SIR MORELL MACKENZIE, who gained his chief notoriety as the physician of Emperor Frederick, is coming to America to lecture.

MRS. GROVER CLEVELAND's inheritance from the real estate of her grandfather at Omaha is said to be one-sixteenth of $800,000.

EXPLORER STANLEY's medal is the first special medal which the British Geographical Society has ever given under such circumstances. It was presented by the Prince of Wales in person.

GLADSTONE and Salisbury differ in politics, but they agree in one thing—they both detest smoking. So do Parnell and John Ruskin, the poet Whittier and George W. Childs.

SECRETARY TRACY has sight in one eye only. When young he taught school in Northern New York, and an unruly pupil threw a slate at him, striking him in the eye and destroying the sight.

SENATOR STANFORD owes his first step to great wealth to a fire that destroyed his law library while he was practicing in Wisconsin, and drove him out to California at a time when he struck a tide that led on to immense wealth.

GENERAL SHERMAN is an inveterate theater-goer. If he likes a play, he enjoys seeing it a dozen times over, and no "first night" is complete without him. In evening dress, with his aquiline face and close-cropped, snow-white beard, he is a very noticeable figure.

MR. GEORGE W. CHILDS, of Philadelphia, who began life with nothing, and has become one of the richest and best known "newspaper men" in the world, says that the source of the greatest pleasure in the world is doing good to others, and that "being generous grows on one, just as being mean does."

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL's home in Cambridge is one of the historic houses of New England. It is a large, square, roomy mansion painted yellow, and was built over one hundred years ago in the colonial style of architecture. It was once the house of a Tory family, but for many years it has been the Lowell homestead. During the greater part of Mr. Lowell's residence in England the house was occupied by Ole Bull's family.

SHORTLY before his departure from Berlin Prince Bismarck visited a restaurant keeper who had been his cook for many years. Sitting at one of the little tables he ordered a cup of coffee, and then, making his old cook sit down at the same table, he told him that the coffee tasted all the better for being made in so big a cup: "especially," he added, "since I have been forbidden to drink any coffee at all!"

GENERAL VON CAPRIVI is described as a just man, thoughtful and almost tender toward subaltern officers in their straits. Simple and unassuming, as men of merit mostly are, he soon found himself beloved by the navy, although never concealing his preference for the army in general, and the Guards in particular; and popular in Parliament, although disdaining the use of even the slightest ornament in his speech.

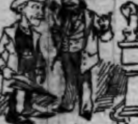
YE BONANZA.

The Story of a New and Seductive Drink.

It was a [illegible] stranger
Of goodly height and weight,
Who wore a [illegible] of whiskers
Most [illegible] to contemplate,
And the [illegible] of freshness
Brought from ye Golden Gate.

He came into my sanctum
One pleasant afternoon,
And hinted that we visit
Some neighboring saloon;
I made a [illegible] exception
And went with him full soon.

When we arrived, ye stranger,
Who hail-ed from ye Coast,
Drew forth a yellow eagle,



And shouted to mine host:
"Ho! mix us two bonanzas,
We fain would drink a toast!"

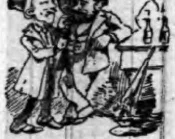
Then did ye skillful mixer
Two bottles set in line,
Ye one containing brandy,
Ye other yellow wine,
And these two pleasant liquids
Protected by [illegible].

Ye stranger eyed ye compound
With sigh of [illegible] bliss;
Then down his hairy gullet
It slipped with gurgling hiss,
And I did [illegible] a bumper
Into mine own abyss.

Then forth again we sallied
Into ye outer air,
When lo! this world seemed glorious,
This life a boon most rare,
And that [illegible] giant
A man divinely fair!

Quoth I: "This same bonanza
Puts fire into ye heart,
Return with me, I prithee,
Unto ye liquor mart,
And I, [illegible],
Will play ye buyer's part."

When next again we sallied
Into ye crowded street,
'Twas arm in arm we wandered



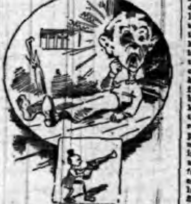
And lifted high our feet,
Ye while ye gracious pavement
Rose up our soles to meet.

Ye third time that we issued
From that enchanted den
A change was wrought within us,
Defying tongue or pen.
Each fire plug seemed a hogshead,
Each man looked like to ten!

And still a fourth bonanza
Each poured into his face,
Which caused ye mighty buildings
All round about to chase,
And made ye streets and alleys
Tie up and interlace.

Anon ye swaying sidewalk
Grew rife with wriggling things;
With lobsters, pterodactyls,
And toads with fiery wings,
With blue and greenish devils,
And snakes with twisting stings.

That night within ye prison
I slept as sleep ye dead;



My right arm for a pillow,
An oak plank for a bed;
And when I woke ye morrow,
I wondered at my head!

Since then within my pocket
I bear a [illegible] gun;
Perchance I may encounter
Again that Native Son;
And if he says "bonanza"
I'll either shoot or run!
—George Horton, in Chicago Herald.

PATHWAY THROUGH THE WOODS

'Twas only a little pathway,
  Bordered with marigolds sweet,
With the green leaves overarching
  The marks of unfrequent feet.
The golden tints of the autumn
  Brought one of my saddest moods,
As I took that lonely pathway
  Through the autumn, silent woods.

Chirp, chirp, said the wee, brown songster,
  As he hopped from limb to limb,
Stealing one look at the stranger
  Then seeking the shadows dim.
Anon, a sound that was sweeter
  With fairy like interludes
Came over my soul like ether
  And charmed that path through the woods.

Thereafter there came a vision
  As bright as a fabled fay,
A maiden of wondrous beauty
  Stood right in my narrow way.
She blushed, and twilight grew rosy
  Down through the [illegible] solitudes.
I had met my fate, and knew it,
  In the pathway through the woods.

Many happy years have blessed me
  Since that quiet gloaming hour,
And to-day, beside my home hearth,
  I dote on that woodland flower.
There is sunshine in her presence,
  No matter what care intrudes,
And dear for her sake, forever,
  Is that pathway through the woods.
—William Lyle, in Detroit Free Press.

HOW TO CLEAN HOUSE

Some Men Would Hire the Troublesome Work Done.

But One Unfortunate Head of a Family Seemed to Have Been Lured Into Attempting the Task Himself—Where the Reward Comes In.

DID you ever clean house? No? Then you have never lived. Not that the pleasure derived from the actual work is so excruciatingly funny that you can not get along without it, but the relief when the last tack is driven and the last piece of furniture placed is a thing that can only be experienced by one who has gone through the mill. And so, to appreciate all there is in this nineteenth century civilization of ours, one must go to work at the bottom and build it up from the chaos in which housekeepers always seem to take such fiendish delight.

For weeks the wife of your sorrows has said: "We will clean house Monday," and you have been led to think it a little, trivial thing, not worth worrying about, and so have not hired a man to do the heavy work because there seems to be no heavy work to do. But at last the fatal moment comes and you can escape no longer. You are asked with all the sweetness of an invitation to peaches and cream if you will help with the stove before you go down-town, and in a moment of weakness you consent. Then you are lost, even more effectually than the woman who hesitates. Once the stove is out you see the zinc on which it rested is easy to remove, and that comes next. The tacks have all been drawn from the carpet by your wife, whose forehead shows an enormous height, and then, while you are at it, you can so easily help them roll the carpet together and carry it out to the back yard so that the man who is expected every minute can beat the dust out of it to his heart's content. Of course he never comes, and when you have carried the parlor chairs out to the laundry and found you had missed the train, you go at it yourself and thump away for half an hour at the dust you were all winter treading in. Then you are hot and dirty and all out of patience, and when you go in the house for a glass of buttermilk and find the woman who was to have come is as far away as is the man servant you grow desperate, get a mop and bucket, turn up your trousers and fall to work. From then on it is you and your wife for it. No one ever found an alien assistant when there was a house to clean.

Bedsteads have to be set out in the shade and mattresses have to be hung in the sunshine: and when you have wrestled with one of those latter abominations you feel that Evan Lewis and his strangle hold would be an easy and welcome thing in comparison. You are allowed to wash the woodwork in the parlor while the man hangs the paper in the bedrooms, and when he is half done he warbles a complaint that there is not enough paper to go around. So you have to slick up a bit and go half a mile to the store for another roll, only to find when you get there that the merchant has no more of that exact pattern, but would be glad to fill your order from any thing else in the shop. By the way, did anybody ever find a match for wall paper already purchased?

The upshot of it all is that you buy a new outfit, pay the cash and carry it home, and are told when you get there that your wife has concluded to have the room calcimined, anyway. You can either swear and be a brute or hold your temper and be a saint—just as you like. Being a man, you choose the latter—clean house and say nothing.

One of the carpets has to be ripped and sewed over, and while you are busy with such little things as going without your dinner, lifting two-ton bureaus and full-length mirrors, carrying out wardrobes and base burners, that amiable woman, with a ragged calico dress on, sits down in the midst of the litter and sews like a Trojan. She tells you what a lot of lovely new things Mrs. Blank is going to get for her parlor, and harries you into promising a good deal better outfit, even though you know your salary is already overdrawn. You blister knees and knuckles scrubbing the floor, and fall from the step-ladder while trying to brush the dust from the ceiling. You knock the little statuettes from the brackets where they had gained a residence, and in a fit of impatience at pounding your thumb throw the hammer through the largest window pane in the house. You tear your clothes on nails that were never revealed before, and cut both hands on the butcher knife while struggling to prepare a lunch. Your ravenous appetite can find nothing but husks of a better living to feed upon, and not many even of them. A tailor comes and presents his bill, which he claims is due and has long been in that condition, and in the face of proof so positive you can not for a moment make your wife understand where all the money goes to.

When you have lived through three days of this sort of agony, going to bed at midnight, only to rise with a midsummer dawn, you find the house is cleaned and the things that were so hard to move out can now be moved in again. Though bruised and broken in body and spirit, you are still in the ring, and come up to the scratch with a readiness that would disqualify you for the prize ring any day in the week. Not a man, woman or child has appeared to help you, and it seems that neither love nor money can induce them to sell an hour's labor. The ice man stands on the back step of his wagon and laughs as you strain every muscle of your body escorting dray-loads of furniture to their places in the house, and even the neighbors stop and ask how you like it. They tell your wife on the quiet that she is fortunate, but she knows that and always has. You struggle through the setting up of stoves, the jointing of pipes and the stretching of stubborn carpets, and you swear when it is all over that you will never, so long as reason maintains her throne in your distracted globe—never clean house again.

But then comes the reward. Then comes the victory. The consciousness that you may pass a stove without being asked to lift it; that not one of the tables or chairs or bureaus needs moving for another year—and that you may manage to die before that time. All these things are sweet and soothing to the tired soul and the more than bruised and broken body. You may now sell what was once your Sunday suit to the old-clothes man and sit down in perfect peace to a meal of victuals cooked in the ordinary way. You may go to bed at the proper hour and not feel in your heart of hearts that smalle you ought to be up and fixing things so that there will be less to do to-morrow. You have earned your reward, and if you are wise you will never allow any woman to beguile you into such an indiscretion again. Henceforward you swear you would rather live in comfortable dirt than in the cleanest house that was roofed over—provided you have the cleaning to do yourself.—Chicago Herald.

THEN COMES THE REWARD.

THE BOWSERS.

Mr. B. Undertakes to Do the Family Washing.

MR. BOWSER came home the other day and wanted the hammer for something. He found it in the kitchen, where the girl had been using it as a poker for the range. Mr. Bowser gave expression to his outraged feelings. The girl replied with a good deal of spirit, and after supper she got her wages and walked off. Had I been the cause of her going Mr. Bowser would have read me a lesson forty rods long. As he was the cause it was all right. He'd like to see the hired girl who could run his house while he lived—didn't propose to take "sass" from anybody—wished he had discharged her outright, etc.

All this happened on Monday. Tuesday is our wash day. I didn't think of it until after the girl had gone. Then I said to Mr. Bowser:

"You'll have to hunt around in the morning and get me a washwoman. It would have been better to let the girl stay a day longer."

"SAY, OLD MAN, YOU'VE HIT IT."

"Not a minute longer!"

"But about the washing?"

"I'll find a woman or do it myself."

After breakfast he took a walk through the locality where washwomen abound, but his quest was a vain one. He come back to the house about nine o'clock and said:

"Mrs. Bowser, I have decided to do the washing myself."

"You wash?"

"I will. I'll do it as a matter of principle. I don't propose to have this house upset because one hired girl gets her back up and quits."

"Let the washing go and I'll find a woman to do it."

"Not by a jug-full! That washing will all be on the line before noon!"

"Mr. Bowser, you can't wash; you will only rub the skin off your knuckles, lame your back, and make a great muss of it."

"I will, eh? That's all you know about it. Now, then, I don't want you to come fooling around. Don't you show your head in the basement until the last rag is on the line."

Mr. Bowser got into an old pair of pants and a vest, changed his boots for slippers, and disappeared down-stairs and at once started a fire. I knew what the result of his efforts would be, and while he was at the barn for wood I ran down and rescued most of the fine clothes. He didn't notice the fact, and in a few minutes had the water heating. He had seen clothes boiling, and the water was no sooner hot than he filled the boiler helter-skelter. I heard him at it and started down-stairs to tell him that clothes must be rubbed first.

"Go right back," he yelled as I struck the first stair.

"But you are making a great mistake, Mr. Bowser, you shouldn't—"

"I know my business, and you go back. If I don't know more about washing in one minute than you do in a week I'll eat those sheets and table-cloths."

He boiled the clothes about half an hour, and then came up and rummaged around the pantry. I suppose he had read of some substance to put into the boiler to save rubbing, but he wasn't clear as to what it was. He therefore took a half-pound can of baking-powder and sifted it in to the last pinch. I heard him upstairs, and half-suspecting what he was after, ran to head him off, but too late.

"Mr. Bowser!" I called from the head of the basement stairs, "are you putting that sal soda into the boiler?"

"Sal—nonsense!" he growled in reply. "When I don't know my business I will apply for information!"

Mr. Bowser knew that bluing was part and parcel of the laundry business. He had even seen a tub of blue water. At what stage of the game this blue business came in he didn't know and he was too obstinate to inquire. He took the clothes direct from the boiler and souzled them into a tub of cold water, and, not knowing how much of the blue to use, he decided to empty in the whole bottle and be on the safe side. He had a pretty fair quality of writing-fluid when the water was stirred up. At this point I called to him:

"Mr. Bowser, how far along have you got?"

"Don't you worry about me, Mrs. Bowser. I'll have the whole shooting match on the line in half an hour."

He put the wash-board into the blue tub and began to rub the clothes in the cold water. He might have had a faint suspicion that something had been left off the programme, but he made up for it in energetic rubbing. He went wash! wash! wash! for about twenty minutes, and then there was an awful flopping and splattering, as if a dozen ducks were playing in the water. He was rinsing the clothes. He wasn't over five minutes about it, and then he appeared in the back-yard with a basketful of clothes to hang on the line. At sight of him I had to sit down. The clothes were plum-blue, and Mr. Bowser was plum-bluer. "The Great and Only Tattooed Man" couldn't hold a candle to him. Just as he appeared in the yard a farmer's wife, who sells us eggs, opened the back gate and walked in.

"Good Lor'! but what is this?" she ejaculated, as she stood with open mouth.

"It's only me," replied Mr. Bowser; "I've been washing."

"Washing what? Why, man, you've spoiled every thing there, to the last rag! Is your wife sick, dead, or run off?"

"Aren't these clothes right?"

"Man! Man! but even a heathen would know better!"

Just then one of Mr. Bowser's down town friends drove through the alley in a buggy. He could see over the fence and when he saw Mr. Bowser he pulled up his horse so quickly that the animal almost fell.

"Is that you, Bowser?" he called.

"Y-yes."

"Well, what in the name of past ages are you doing?"

"Oh, n-nothing."

"Nothing! I'll bet ten to one you're fitting yourself for a museum freak. Say, old man, you have hit it! Just file your teeth to a point and you'll pass for a genuine cannibal!"

He drove on and the egg woman backed out of the gate and said:

"I've been furnishing you three dozen a week, and I've never missed a Tuesday, but I give you notice that I don't come no more. It would be taking chances. A man as is light in the head may be all right one day and worry violent the next. Love to your excellent wife, and I'm sorry for her."

Mr. Bowser entered the kitchen in three jumps. I sat there laughing until I could hardly breathe. He towered above me like a mountain over a mouse, and after choking and gasping for a minute he roared out:

"Mrs. Bowser, you have finally done it, haven't you?"

"What have I done?"

"What have you done! Got me to do the washing and give myself away for an infernal idiot! Look at me! Look at them duds in the yard!"

"Mr. Bowser, didn't I tell you not to try it? Didn't I do my best to keep you from trying it?"

"No! Never! You encouraged me to go ahead!"

"Mr. Bowser!"

"Don't Mr. Bowser me! This is the end! The worm turns! We'll settle matters this very day!"

But Mr. Bowser is still with me, and I have no doubt we shall live and die together.—Detroit Free Press.

A Matter of Race Pride.

Scientific Parent (on a stroll)—You see out there in the street, my son, a simple illustration of a principle in mechanics. The man with that cart pushes it in front of him. Can you guess why? Probably not. I will ask him. Note his answer, my son. (To banana peddler). My good man, why do you push that cart instead of pulling it?

Banana Peddler—'Cause I ain't a hoss.—Chicago Tribune.

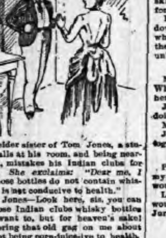
ABOUT CORN JUICE.



The elder sister of Tom Jones, a student, calls at his room, and being near-sighted, mistakes his Indian clubs for bottles. She exclaims: "Dear me, I hope those bottles do not contain whisky. It is not conducive to health."

Tom Jones—Look here, sis, you can call those Indian clubs whisky bottles if you want to, but for heaven's sake! don't spring that old gag on me about their not being corn-juice-ive to health.—Texas Siftings.

SOCIAL EQUALITY.

It Existed in China Eleven Centuries Before Christ.

In 1100 B. C. the Prime Minister of the Emperor Wou-Weng, Tcheou-Kung, constructed norias, or hydraulic machines of simple design and working, by which water was raised to a height to which it had never been carried before, and made reservoirs and canals for irrigation. Water was conducted, by means of machinery, from the wells to the dry hill-tops, and water provision was assured for times of drought. Agriculture, in consequence, flourished. Other measures of Tcheou-Kung comprised the promulgation of laws respecting the boundaries of properties and the prevention of trespasses. The fields were divided into squares called wells, from their resemblance to the Chinese character signifying a well, surrounded and furrowed by ditches so arranged that eight farmers, each tilling his own tract, united in cultivating the ninth, interior tract, which belonged to the state, and the produce of which paid their rent.

The system succeeded to a marvel. Each tenant was proprietor of about fifteen acres, the whole product of which belonged to him, while the state was really proprietor of the whole, and had, as a landlord, the income of the ninth tract. Besides this, each farmer had some 3,330 square metres of ground for his farm-yard and his mulberry trees. Thus he always enjoyed a surplus of provision, of pork and poultry for food, and silk for clothing. No one at this time was richer or poorer than another, but a complete social equality existed, and every one, they say, was satisfied.—General Tcheng Ki'Tong, in Popular Science Monthly.

FUNNY FREAKS.

A CHELSEA man put his patent incubator over a duck's egg and hatched a duckling with four eyes and two bills.

A DUCK with four feet is a curiosity owned by James Stewart, of the York road, opposite Guilford, Md. When swimming it uses one of its legs as a rudder.

WILLIAM HOFFMAN of Sebewaing, has four pigs that beat any thing ever seen in that locality. One has no trace of hind legs, another has no hoofs, but claws take the place of the generally thought necessary porcine appendix, and the two others have claws and toes and pretty nearly every thing else that pigs can very handily get along without.

BOARDING-HOUSE TALES.

Exchanging the Compliments of the Season With the Landlady.

"What do chickens look like, Mrs. Codhooker?" inquired the bank clerk of the landlady, as he inspected the drumstick on his plate.

"Are you in earnest, Mr. Wanks?" she asked.

"Look something like centipedes don't they?" he continued, fretfully.

"Certainly not. Haven't you ever been in the country and seen the chickens scratching?"

"Well, yes, but I've drawn only legs and pin-feathers for eleven months in your house, and I've sort of lost the shape of the bird."

"Well, ma'am," said the fisherman, playfully sticking his leadpencil in the lobster's claw, "the oyster season is here."

"I'm sorry," said the landlady, regretfully.

"How so?" he asked, in surprise.

"Well, I've been servin' them big clams of yours, stewed, all summer," she answered, "and whenever one of my boarders struck a clam in the soup as big as a biscuit he'd chew on it till he was too tired to eat any thing else."

"Isn't the price of a lamb much higher than it used to be, Mrs. Codhooker?" inquired the young gentleman boarder, as he struggled with a chop at breakfast.

"Indeed it is," rejoined the landlady, earnestly, "and going up all the time."

"I supposed so, ma'am. With Harlem growing so fast, there must be a great decrease in goats."

"In all my experience," said the old gentleman boarder, as he peeled a banana, "I never knew such a famine in fruits. You must be greatly embarrassed about preserves for next winter, Mrs. Codhooker."

"Oh! not at all," answered the landlady, cheerily. "I have just put up forty-nine jars of watermelon rind."

"I never can eat this dessert, Mrs. Codhooker," said the Georgia boarder, tremulously, pushing away a charlotte russe.

"I am surprised, Mr. Watson," rejoined the landlady. "Charlotte russe is regarded as a great delicacy."

"I know it—I—pardon my emotion—my mother's name was Charlotte."—N. Y. Tribune.

THE COUNT'S DESPAIR.

End of a Nobleman and Beginning of a First-Class Organ-Grinder.

"Ha! So there is no hope-a for me-a Miss Manyrox?"

"No, Count, I am sorry to say there is not. I confess I love you, but—"

"Then fly-a with me-a, my queen-a."

"You forget, Count, that I have no private income. My father opposes our union, and without his consent we can not marry, for we should have nothing to live on."

"I will plead-a with him! He must consent-a!"

"No, Count, it is useless to try to move him. He declares that unless I marry an American he will disown me and cut me off in his will without a dollar."

"This is terrible! It makes me-a—what you call desperate—it will drive me to—"

"O, Count, not to suicide! You will not kill yourself! Promise me you won't!"

"Not suicid-a! O no! It will drive me to borrow money and buy an organ and a monka!"

And the Count tore himself away from his sweetheart to put his rash resolve into execution.—Munsey's Weekly.

MR. ACKOM, living in Van Wert County, O., brought a queer freak to town. Mr. Ackom is a breeder of thoroughbred Poland China hogs. In a litter of pigs farrowed recently was one which very nearly resembled an elephant. It had enormous ears, a long trunk and one tusk. It was the color of an elephant and its feet turned up in a peculiar way. The trunk started from the forehead and extended out and down over the mouth. It is one of those peculiar freaks which occasionally occur in the animal world.

OF three goats born in Cincinnati two are perfectly natural, but the other is not so fortunate. Its body is natural except the head, which is double. It has four eyes, two mouths, two tongues. Its ears are set back further than usual. While all regularly formed goats have no upper teeth, only a hard gum, this one has a set in the upper jaw of each head, making it have four sets of teeth. In the middle of the two heads there is one eye-socket, with two eyeballs. The mother actually disowns it, pays no attention to it and seems to be utterly oblivious of the fact that it is her offspring.

A PECULIAR looking reptile was captured at Cordele, Fla. It was about three feet long, of a yellow striped color, but had scales all over its body like a fish. Its eyes were exceedingly small, and an investigation of its mouth showed an entire absence of fangs, but instead small, fish-like teeth. When placed on dry land it squirmed and twisted about, but could not crawl like a snake. The conclusion of all who saw it was that it was a hybrid—half snake and half fish. Nothing like it has ever been seen before in this county, and the oldest inhabitants never knew that the waters of Gap creek contained such a speci-

WE ARE THE PEOPLE!

Democracy's Principles Are Upheld by the Voters of the Country.

It Was an Uprising Against Bossism.

Grand Old New Jersey!

The Whole Country is Dissatisfied With Republican Management.

Congressional Gains in Every State.

No More McKinley for the People.

ALL ONE WAY.

CONG. GEISSENHAINER,
SENATOR MARSH,
SHERIFF HICKS.

RANKIN BURIED UNDER A THOUSAND MAJORITY.

Now for 1892!

[illegible] efforts for the Democracy [illegible] something extraordinary. From all [illegible] the country comes the tidings that the infamous [illegible] perpetrated by the party in power have been rebuked. Congressional gains have been made by the Democrats all over the land. We have a net gain of [illegible] United States Senators and a majority of over one hundred in the House of Representatives. McKinley and Quayism have been severely rebuked. Pennsylvania elects a Democratic Governor, and so does good old Massachusetts. Glory enough for this [illegible].

The latest returns from the State show that the Democratic gains have been larger even than the [illegible] expected. The Senate instead of being a tie, as was shown by the first imperfect figures, will be composed as follows: Democrats, 12; Republicans, [illegible] and [illegible], [illegible]. The latter [illegible] are to the effect that Senator Roe, Republican, has been defeated by [illegible] H. Barker, Democrat, in Gloucester county and that James Butcher, Democrat, has been elected over Richard T. [illegible], Republican, in Salem. In other words, the Democrats captured seven out of the eight [illegible]. Camden is the only county that elected a Republican Senator. The Republicans, however, are still hoping that Roe and [illegible] may pull through.

In fact, the Democrats made almost a clean sweep all over the State, as they have captured five out of the seven Congressmen elected. The gain was even larger in the Assembly, as [illegible] out of the [illegible] candidates returned were Democrats. Many of the big [illegible] of the Republican party, especially the Senators who perpetrated the fraud of [illegible] McDonald, are [illegible].

The Democrats having a majority in the [illegible] Senate, it has been decided to [illegible] Edward F. McDonald was ousted [illegible] last Fall. [illegible] was his opponent [illegible] The Republicans [illegible] McDonald [illegible] although after [illegible] all the [illegible] votes McDonald was elected. The Democrats [illegible] will give McDonald [illegible] back to him. He may remain [illegible] in the Senate until the beginning of his term in Congress and then resign [illegible] Senator. The Democratic victory in New Jersey this year is very important. In the first place it insures a Democratic successor to United States Senator Blodgett two years hence, for all the Senators elected Tuesday will have a vote then. In the next place the two most important offices in the State not controlled by the Democrats fall into their hands, viz., the offices of State Comptroller and State Treasurer, and [illegible] the long contemplated plan of the Republicans to gerrymander the Assembly [illegible] Democrats [illegible]. Gen. Sewell's dream of succeeding Senator Blodgett at Washington is [illegible]. Major Anderson, the present State Comptroller and Gen. Sewell's [illegible], must vacate his [illegible] at the State House, and Major Anderson's [illegible] Col. John J. Toffey, at present State Treasurer, [illegible] into political retirement. They will make room for good Democrats.

The following tables, according to the latest returns, show the successful candidates for Senate and Assembly:

SENATE.

[illegible]

ASSEMBLY.

[illegible]

The total [illegible] up—Democrats, 40; Republicans, [illegible] or a Democratic majority of [illegible].

During the present year the Senate stood eleven Republicans and ten Democrats, but as has been already stated this is all changed. The result was an upheaval that the Republicans never dreamed of. The following tables will show the complexion, so far as the latest returns permit, of the Senate for this year and next:

The Ballot Reform law worked splendidly in Plainfield, Tuesday, as it also did in other sections of the county. There was a total absence of the crowds of heelers, strikers and ward workers that formerly swarmed around the polling-booths and made things decidedly uncomfortable for the voter who wanted to deposit his ballot and go about his business, and who had to run the gauntlet of those political vultures who would pounce upon and buttonhole him right and left. These men's occupation is gone, and they were conspicuous by their absence.

The voting was quiet but it got there just the same. The natural Republican majority of over 400 was cut down in the case of Rankin, to 111. The latter's cowardly position in relation to the licensing of race track gamblers, turned many honorable Republicans against him.

Over the brook the Republican majority was wiped out altogether, and Reed failed to carry his own town although politically in his favor. The daily organ of the Republicans there helped defeat him because of its advocacy, and his many mistaken methods of personal warfare against his opponent, were of no effect except to make Keys' election surer.

But few Republicans could be found Wednesday who had anything to say concerning the overwhelming defeat of their party throughout the country, but they all recognize it was a result of monkeying with the tariff. The infamous McKinley bill did it. The people would not stand the jobbery and robbery of it any longer. Of the Republicans who had anything to say, were Freeholder Vanderbeek who said, "It's an off year!" James C. Pope thought the result was "Democratic. [illegible] turned on the light." Gep Frazee said, "If a few more ministers would take a hand in, and the Mills meetings continue, Plainfield would go Democratic by big majority."

Even Elizabeth jumped on Rankin, her "Popular Mayor." He is buried under a majority of over a thousand. The majorities of Congressman Geissenhainer and Sheriff Hicks are about the same.

In Somerset county also the Democrats elected the entire ticket. Keys majority for Senator is 391; Bergen for Assembly, 440; and Vandervoer for County Clerk, 302.

The Democratic victory in the State is complete. For the first time in years the Democrats have control of the State Senate, and they have increased their majority in the Assembly.

TARIFF TAXATION.

The unfounded declaration of the McKinley Republicans that the tariff is not a tax upon consumers is being thoroughly exposed by existing facts.

The American people, not foreign exporters, are now compelled to pay enhanced prices for nearly every indispensable article of household use and personal comfort, and to augment injury, the weight of such taxation is made to fall heaviest upon those least able to bear it.

Such is the direct and positive effect of the McKinley tariff.

It opposes an oppressive and needless tax upon the toiling masses.

It is spoliation, not protection, and all the partisan sophistry in the land cannot obscure the disreputable fact.

A leading dry goods firm in Chicago have by circular-letter notified their customers that, on account of the McKinley tariff, prices of imported woolen goods heretofore costing fifty cents a yard will be increased to over eighty cents, and the cheaper the quality of goods greater will be the percentage of advance in price. They go on to say that manufacturers have already announced a considerable advance on domestic woolens, and still greater advances will be made in the future.

That distinctly reveals the odious features of the plot.

It is to make monopolistic nabobs richer and hard-working wage-earners poorer.

The least the people have of such miscalled protection, better will they be off in pocket and in store.

Summit's Republican Candidate Arrested for Bribery.

The political sensation of the day in this county Tuesday was the arrest at Summit of Stephen R. Mullen, Republican candidate for member of Assembly in the Second District, on a charge of bribery. The arrest was made at the instance of William J. Curtis, a strong supporter of Thomas F. Lane, the Democratic candidate. Curtis says Mullen gave him money on condition that he would vote the Republican ticket. Prosecutor Wilson was telegraphed for at Elizabeth to go at once to Summit, but he was unable to do so and telephoned to admit the prisoner to bail pending a hearing.

Pointers by Wise Editors.

Jacob, we hear you voted against the anti-lottery bill. The voters in this district do not like that sort of thing, but you will know more about that after the election.—Central Times.

It is almost universally conceded that John C. Rankin, Jr., will be elected by the biggest majority this county ever gave.—Elizabeth Journal.

The picture of Want-to-be-Sheriff Hicks which appeared in the columns of The Press yesterday would indicate that the Democratic candidate was suffering from some dreadfully tormenting malady. There will be a more agonizing look on his face the morning of November 5, however.—Central Times.

A Word for the People, to the Water Supply Company.

A correspondent asks, "Why THE PRESS has not published the news that the Water Supply Co., is going to begin to lay mains through the streets, at last."

Weeks ago the bill of sale, signed and sealed, whereby the Water Supply Co., became possessed of anything and everything belonging to the Water-Works Co., was published in these columns. Nothing has happened since to authorize any such statement as the correspondent makes. In fact the moment the water company put a pick or spade in the street, Chairman Smith of the Street Committee will stop them. They must have the Council's permission when they go so far.

As to building stacks or stand pipes on their own property, that is entirely there own business. But they must change the specifications for the completion of the pumping station so far as the roof is concerned. THE PRESS has its eye—which is the people's eye—on the Water Supply Co. President Bergen can't fool the Plainfield public while this paper lives; and his company must do everything possible for the interest and protection of the people. Consequently there must be no wood in that pumping station roof. Make it all iron. Then there is no danger of fire stopping the pumps when they might be most needed.

Can a Man Swallow a Cannon Ball?

Well, "that depends." He can if his throat is large enough and the cannon-ball not too large. The question really arises worthy of some consideration in view of the size of some of the pills that are prescribed for suffering humanity. Why not throw them "to the dogs," and take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets? Small, sugar-coated, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, in glass, and always fresh.

A Good Bag of Rabbits.

A party of seven hunters from Netherwood, Saturday, shot twenty-seven rabbits. They report the "cotton-tails" plentiful, and in good condition. Ernest Nash, Netherwood's crack shot, who was one of the party, succeeded in bagging eleven of the twenty-seven. Considering that there were several old hunters in the party, that was a good showing for a youth who is not yet out of his teens.

A Big Fire in the Country.

The extensive barns and stables at College Farm, the annex of the New Jersey State Agricultural College, situated about two miles beyond New Brunswick, were burned to the ground Sunday, with all their contents. Thirty head of cattle were destroyed, and a man named Gordon was suffocated and may die. The light of the fire illuminated the country for miles around, and on the country roads as far as Bound Brook, that at seven o'clock, just previous to the outbreak, had been very dark, the light was as strong as clear full moonlight, enabling one to see all the figures on his watch distinctly. People in Plainfield saw the reflection of the flames and thought the fire was at New Market. From various points of view just outside this city the blaze, though twelve miles distant, could be seen leaping high into the air and illuminating great volumes of smoke.

Plainfield Cases in the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court opened at Trenton Wednesday. The Court appointed Wm. S. Greenwood of Newark and Craig A. Marsh of this city, to conduct the examination of candidates for admission to the bar, either as attorneys or as counselors, at the next term of court. The appointees continue in office one year.

The only Plainfield cases of general interest were the certiorari to test the constitutionality of the law under which the Water-Works Company of Plainfield organized, and the appeal of Mr. Carey from the decision of the Police Board. The first case was put off for the term on application of Collins & Corbin and Wallace, Edwards & Bumpstead, attorneys respectively of the prosecutor and the Water Company. The Corporation Counsel objected, and on behalf of the city urged the necessity for speedy disposition of the case, but the Court intimated that the case was of so great importance not only in this instance but in its effect on eighteen other companies which, it was said, were organized under the same law, that additional time should be granted for preparation. The other case referred to will be argued this term.

The certiorari case of J. B. Miller vs. the city has been argued on brief, and opinion was expected Thursday.

Helping Our Health Guardians Fight off Disease.

The month of November is the period of the year when typhoid fever is most common. The disease is propagated, it is said, by germs, most frequently carried in water. Too much care cannot be had for the protection of our wells from contamination of surface nuisances. Infection from drains, privy vaults and cesspools, is usually instrumental in spreading the disease. Decaying vegetation offers a sure breeding-ground for the germ, though it may not originate there. Every case of typhoid fever is due to a bacillus coming directly or indirectly from some previous case of typhoid fever. The importance of collections of deleterious substances such as occur in cesspools in relation to typhoid fever, is first, that they are especially liable to receive the deadly germ, and second, that they are especially favorable for preserving it alive for many months, and favoring its growth and multiplication.

The Board of Health of Plainfield, in a quiet way, are having constant inspections made throughout the more thickly inhabited parts of the City, to prevent the accumulation of offensive and dangerous material. For the purpose of maintaining a high sanitary standard, they have enacted ordinances requiring the emptying and cleaning out of all cesspools and privy vaults, at least once every year. And strict watch is kept on the growing ash-heap, piles of rubbish and promiscuous dumping grounds.

Citizens will confer a favor upon the inhabitants generally by reporting to the Board of Health the existence of any unsanitary nuisances within the corporate limits.

Plainfield Listens to Woman's Reason.

A well attended meeting was held in Reform Hall, Sunday evening, President Harper occupying the chair, Chaplain Honeyman conducting the devotional services, and Mr. Vanderbeek's full choir, with Miss Alice Smith as accompanist, rendering the musical selections.

The principal speakers were two women, Mrs. Woodbury, of New York city, and Mrs. Partington, of Portland, Maine, both of whom earnestly, and at considerable length, advocated total abstinence and liquor prohibition, and clearly set forth the lines of practical duty along which they claimed all professing Christians should be found laboring for the glory of God and the welfare of humanity. Mrs. Woodbury commenced her discourse by quoting a portion of the twenty-first chapter of John, and, enlarging thereon, presented to her hearers truths of living worth. In conclusion, she gave an interesting account of the great growth and excellent results of the Demorest medal contests. Mrs. Partington, with the boldness of a moral crusader, and in a clear ringing voice, antagonized the liquor traffic as the giant evil of the age, and in vivid word-pictures described numerous instances of misery and ruin wrought by it. She also denounced as false the assertions of interested parties that prohibition in Maine was inoperative. Mr. T. Richards, of Brooklyn, N. Y., followed, and in a short but spirited address bore additional testimony on behalf of the beneficent and saving cause of temperance.

The President announced that in just recognition of the evangelical work of Mr. Mills Reform Hall would not be opened next Sunday, but that the regular monthly business meeting of the Club would be held Thursday evening of this week, in the basement parlor, at 8 o'clock.

WATER-WORKS UNDER THEIR THUMB.

Plainfield's Councilmen Crush the Supply Company's Defiant Independence, and Dictate What It Shall and Shall Not Do—Not a Spadeful of Earth to be Turned on the Streets Till the Council Says So—The Old Contract, or a Better One, Must be Fulfilled—Any New Contract Must Give a Sewerage System Too—An Electric Street Railway Assured—The Freight House Still a Fixture—Other Municipal Matters Acted on.

That the Plainfield Common Council is getting the Plainfield Water Supply Company entirely under its thumb is evidenced by the action taken in water-works matters at the regular November session of the Council Monday night.

Ever since the Plainfield Water Supply Company obtained control of the Water-Works Company of Plainfield the Supply people have taken a highly independent course. Their idea seemed to be that the Council would readily grant to them all the privileges they might ask, and they gave evidence of considerable surprise when they found that the City Fathers were opposed to the ideas they presented. Finding that the Council was determined to have the original contract with the Water-Works Company—or one very like it—fulfilled strictly in every particular, and that it was decidedly opposed to the mutilations of the contract which were proposed—mutilations which the Councilmen thought would be detrimental to the interests of the people—the Supply Company announced that they would proceed under their original charter of years and years ago, would at once begin to construct Water-Works according to its own ideas, and would operate them in accordance with its own plans, whether the Council consented or objected. This defiant assertion was issued through an irresponsible source, and THE PRESS promptly published the following:

> The moment the Water Supply Company put a pick or spade in the street, Chairman Smith of the Street Committee will stop them. They must have the Council's permission when they go so far.

That THE PRESS was again right is now officially declared by the Common Council. At the Monday night session Councilman Newhall, chairman of the Water Board, in the laudable desire to establish more firmly the city's power to do just what THE PRESS said would be done, presented an iron-clad ordinance which effectually prohibits the Water Supply Company, and everybody else, from laying pipes, whether for water, gas, or what not, along the public streets, and from digging up the streets for the purpose of laying pipes, without the consent of the Common Council. Under this ordinance the Council strengthens the supreme right which it already possesses of saying just where and how pipes may be laid, and anyone, whether person or corporation, who lays any pipes, or digs up the streets for laying them, without first securing from the Council the necessary consent and the required designation of what streets may be used and how the pipes shall be laid, must pay various fines of $100, must instantly restore the disturbed thoroughfares to their former condition, and must heed the further provision compelling him to contribute to the city treasurer the sum of $20 for every day he neglects to take up his pipes and put the streets again in order. The ordinance of course contains its own provision that it shall not tend to prevent the repairing, and the tearing up of streets to repair, gas and other mains already laid.

But besides establishing the prerogative of the Council to protect the city's streets against the encroachments of designing people, the proposed ordinance goes a step further in bringing the Water Supply Company to terms.

No one—it says—may construct and operate in Plainfield a system of water-works without at the same time providing an adequate system of sewerage to carry off waste water and other sewage refuse from the waste pipes of its water-works system. But—it adds—and herein lies a power for compelling the Water Supply Company to adopt in its entirety the old Water-Works Company's contract, or one as advantageous to the city—this shall not interfere in any way with the fulfilling of the contract already granted to the Water-Works Company of Plainfield.

This ordinance seemed to meet with the approval of every Councilman who heard it on its first reading. Councilman Smith, Chairman of the Street Committee, who anticipates being in the thick of the promised fight for the possession of the city's streets, suggested that instead of $100 fines $5,000 ones ought to be provided—an opinion in which Councilman Spangenberg heartily concurred. Mr. Newhall said that as he had prepared the ordinance very hastily he desired it referred to Corporation Counsel Marsh for his advice and revision, and this was done.

In the matter of giving Plainfield a street railway the Council took a big stride forward by adopting a resolution which calls for decisive action where has been so much inactivity. The resolution was one introduced by Mr. Spangenberg. It announces point-blank that in the opinion of the Common Council an electric street railway ought to be established in Plainfield at the earliest practicable moment, and provides for the publication, at once, in The Electrical World, of an advertisement soliciting engineers to submit to the city propositions for the establishment of an electric railway system and the organization of a company to operate it. Reports on this matter must all be in hand by Nov. 24, and the Council may be trusted to give the people rapid transit as soon after the bids have been examined as is consistent with good judgment and management.

But though the street car cometh the freight house moveth not. That nuisance we have ever with us. Too many blessings at once would bewilder the long-suffering people. The special committee appointed from the Council to confer with the Central Railroad Company on this subject reported, through its chairman, Mr. Newhall, that the Company had given the committee polite attention at several conferences, and had at length decided that it could do nothing definite this season. At an early time next year, however, Mr. Newhall said, the Company would, it promised, look into the matter. Various papers connected with the case were therefore given to the City Clerk to be referred to the Council of '91 and to be brought up by that body at the first February meeting, and the committee was discharged from further service, after placing on record the fact that they had submitted to the Company a number of petitions from the citizens of Plainfield asking for the removal of the freight house to a less objectionable quarter.

Among the various routine matters that came before the Council for action was the application of Austin B. Fletcher and others for a franchise to construct and operate a water-works system in Plainfield. This was filed for future reference.

The request of Gazelle Engine Company, No. 1, to take its apparatus from Plainfield Thursday, Nov. 6, to participate in the firemen's parade at Westfield, was granted.

The ninth report of progress of supervising engineer Rudolph Hering was filed. It presented a review of the work done towards the construction of water-works, and submitted various maps and papers which may be useful in the future in completing the work.

To place the fact on official record that he was personally concerned in the affairs of the Water-Works Company of Plainfield, Wm. D. Hill, legal adviser of Contractor Moore, wrote, from 52 Wall street, that he had an interest of $15,000 in the bonds and capital stock of the concern. This communication too was filed.

The fact that the members of the police force needed new suits of clothes was reported by Mr. Spangenberg, who presented a resolution providing for the expenditure of $175 for new garments. A difficulty arose, however, in the announcement that the balance left of the appropriation for police expenses was very low, and where the money for the clothes was to come from was not quite clear. The suggestion of Councilman Dunham, that the fines collected from coming arrests be utilized for the purchase, and his comment that the police would, with this personal-improvement object as an inspiration, put forth renewed zeal, secure many prisoners, and soon earn in this way the money for their suits of blue and gold, was not given the cordial reception which its brilliancy deserved, and Mr. Dunham sank back into his chair to commune with his perennial, bland, cherubic smile, while a boy on the street whistled that Tony Pastor idyll resurrected successfully by Evans & Hoey in "The Parlor Match," this season, and entitled "They're After Me!" It was finally decided that the clothes must be bought, and that they would be paid for by an extra appropriation.

That the city is covetous of the money paid annually by Plainfield's one pawnbroker to the Union County Courts for a license seemed quite clear when Mr. Spangenberg introduced an ordinance providing that no one should conduct a pawnbroking establishment in town without the consent of the Mayor and Council and without paying to the city an annual license fee of $50. The ordinance further provided that each local pawnbroker must give the city a bond for $2,000 as a guarantee that he would conduct his establishment according to law. The ordinance was adopted on its first and second readings and was ordered engrossed and advertised.

During the evening the fact transpired that the appropriation for street lights was practically exhausted, and that therefore no more new lamps may be placed in position this year.

It was reported that a new street-lighting contract with the Plainfield Electric Light Company had been made, as authorized at the previous meeting of the Council, and that the bond of the Company had been increased from $1,000 to $10,000.

The sum of $126.50—the balance of the $200 given to Tunis J. Carey, ex-Captain of Police, for use in the detection and prosecution of illegal liquor-selling—was placed at the disposition of Captain Grant for the same purpose.

On motion of Mr. Newhall the City Treasurer was authorized to borrow $3,500, in anticipation of taxes, for the use of the general fund, and to renew a $500 note which the poor fund would soon have due.

Edward F. Schirmer and Frank Coude were appointed special policemen.

Those present at the meeting were Councilmen Dunham, Gallup, Hetfield, Jenkins, Johnston, Newhall, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg. Mr. Hetfield presided. The session was very harmonious.

BEGINNING THE GREAT REVIVAL.

Great Interest Aroused by the Preaching of B. Fay Mills.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills, evangelist, is now fully engaged in the great revival work in Plainfield for which the Christian people of the city have been so earnestly preparing, and from which they expect, in answer to their prayers, exceeding great results.

The special evening services were begun in the First Baptist church Monday, under the most favorable circumstances. The spacious building was filled, there was a large chorus choir in attendance, the ministers of every church gave testimony, by their presence, of their approval in the work, and there was every evidence of intense interest in the opening of this great religious crusade.

In appearance Mr. Mills is a very young man, but he talks like a man with a thoroughly matured mind. He has reason for the faith that is in him, and knows how to impress his reasoning home to the minds of his hearers.

At Monday night's meeting the Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, presided and made appropriate remarks. The opening prayer was by the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. After singing by the choir and a solo by Mr. L. B. Greenwood, who is the evangelist's singing companion, Mr. Mills read, and explained in a clear, interesting manner, the Psalm CXXVI, after which he gave a very powerful discussion of the text "But first gave their own selves to the Lord," from the eighth chapter of II Corinthians, a part of the fifth verse. He urged on such of his hearers as were not already professing Christians the necessity for a reconsecration, and from his remarks the exercises took the nature of a consecration service. Mr. Mills' own re-consecration of himself was one of the most touching scenes ever witnessed in a Plainfield pulpit. The service throughout was very impressive, and the action of the hearers gave indication that the benefits of the work were already spreading.

The first woman's prayer meeting was held in the Trinity Reformed church Monday afternoon. Mrs. J. C. Fernald was the leader. The attendance was large, and a deep spiritual interest was manifested. Owing to Mr. Mills not being able to be present the first general afternoon meeting was not held Monday, but Tuesday, when large numbers flocked to hear the famous preacher.

The business men's meeting of Monday was held in the Young Men's Christian Association rooms at 7:30 in the morning and was led by William D. Murray. The subject was: "First gave their own selves." Tuesday morning's business men's meeting was led by A. C. LaBoyteaux. Subject—"Compel them to come in." At the woman's prayer meeting in the afternoon the same topic was used. This morning's service was led by Seely Edsall. Subject—"God's Love." At all of these services there was a large attendance, and great religious fervor seemed to prevail.

Tuesday night's meeting every seat was occupied, and many stood along the side walls. Prayer was offered by the Rev. C. L. Goodrich. A powerful sermon was preached by Mr Mills on "What do ye more than others?"—Matthew v—part of 47th verse. The choir, led by Mr. Greenwood, gave splendid music. After the sermon Mr. Mills invited all Christians who wanted to consecrate themselves to the Lord to meet in the lecture room. The room was well filled, and a true spirit of consecration prevailed. Four persons who were not professing Christians, were in the audience, and stood up and signified their desire to begin the Christian life.

The Committee on Good of the Order, Have Engaged Three Great Attractions.

Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, should be congratulated upon being able to secure Fred Emerson Brooks, the California poet, humorist and reciter, for their entertainment which will take place on Nov. 18, in the Council rooms. Mr. Brooks is a host in himself, and frequently recites for a full evening's entertainment, but the Committee on Good of the Order, have obtained other talent as well. Brother D. W. Robertson, of Fulton Council, Brooklyn, the tumbler-cuion soloist, and F. W. Isenbarth, whose performances upon the zither none can excel, will both participate.

CAN DEFEAT ANY WESTFIELD TEAM.

But Imported Heavy-Weights Who Can't Kick a Goal, Push Plainfield Players off the Field.

The game of foot-ball played by the team from the Plainfield Bicycle club at Westfield Tuesday morning, resulted in defeat for the Plainfielders by a score of 8 to 0.

The Bicycle boys lined up as follows: R. F. Murray, left end; E. W. Erickson, left tackle; F. W. Walz, left guard; L. Mack, centre; M. S. Ackerman, right guard; A. A. Tilney, right tackle; E. L. Walz, right end; H. Beebe, quarter-back; E. Tracy, (captain), and Wyckoff, half-backs; A. Cox, full back.

Just who the Westfield players were no one seems to know, but the fact is patent that they were not Westfielders. They were imported from New York, Brooklyn and other places to counteract the strong scientific points which it was known the Plainfielders were masters of.

The game was called at 10:20, with Westfield in possession of the ball. After two or three beautiful tackles by the Plainfield end rushers the Westfield men saw that they must give up trying to play a scientific game and trust to enormous weight, but by wonderful blocking the Plainfield team held the heavy-weights of Westfield from pushing forward, and finally secured the ball.

Two or three runs by Plainfield brought the ball close to Westfield's goal line, only to be lost again to Westfield. When the ball was put in play Tracy secured the ball and made what Plainfield claimed was a touch-down, running the whole length of the field; but on some technicality the referee would not allow it to be scored. After taking the ball back, it was again snapped back by Westfield on their 25-yard line, and by mere weight they gradually forced the ball to the middle of the field.

Plainfield again secured the ball, and by the runs of Wyckoff and Tracy the ball was again in Westfield's territory, where it stayed until the end of the first hold.

After ten minutes rest the teams exchanged, and play was resumed with Plainfield in possession of the ball. Fine blocking on the Plainfield rush-line assisted the half-backs in making some fine runs, bringing the ball up to Westfield's 25-yard line. Here occurred the only accident of the game, E. L. Walz, Plainfield's right end, sprained his ankle. His place was taken by Bowman.

The Westfield's got the ball and again began their pushing game, when the spectators cried "Play foot-ball!" "You daren't try to run with it!"

The weight of the Westfield rush-line here told on the Plainfield line, for after about twenty attempts the Westfield team scored the first touch-down. The Westfield's tried for goal but failed. Score—4 to 0.

The ball was again put in play on the Plainfield's 25-yard line, and by good blocking and kicking by Cox the ball was again in the middle of the field, then the Westfield's line began pushing (not playing) and their sheer weight again forced the ball over the Plainfield's goal line, and scored another touch down for Westfield. The try for a goal again failed. Score—8 to 0.

Plainfield again put the ball in play on their 25-yard line. By good blocking, and passing and running, they carried the ball to the middle of the field, where it stayed until time was called, with the score 8 to 0 in favor of Westfield.

For Plainfield, Wyckoff, Tracy, Walz, Murray, Cox and Tilney showed up in good form, while the centre guards and tackles did the heaviest part of the work.

The Westfield team was made up of old college players while only one man on the team has the honor to live in Westfield. Dart, the Westfield centre rush, weighed 250 pounds while the whole team out weighed the Plainfield team on an average of 25 pounds to the man.

As far as playing goes the Plainfield team out-played the Westfield team in every point except pushing.

After the game the Bi-Club boys were most royally entertained by the generous President of the Westfield Athletic Club, A. A. Drake, at his home. The Plainfield boys told the Westfielders that they could defeat with ease any eleven men actually residents in Westfield, at genuine foot-ball, and the Westfield people didn't dare deny it.

Mr. Coddington was referee of the game and J. W. Sanford was umpire.

Watch Those Pole-and-Wire Impostors.

The citizens who are submitting to the encroachments of pole-and-wire fiends under the supposition that the wires are for fire-alarm purposes, are informed that fire-alarm wires are not yet being strung, and will not be till THE PRESS gives due notice. The men now claiming to represent the city's fire-alarm system in reality represent something else.

"OH, IF MOTHER WERE ONLY ALIVE!"

All through life she has known a mother's watchful care. She now is a young mother, and gains strength but slowly. She would "give worlds" to do everything for her precious baby, but cannot; the doctor is so strict, and does not sympathize with her, "as mother always did."

That baby has unfolded in the young mother's heart, new emotions. She has a living responsibility, and requires strength to enable her to perform a loving duty. At such a time, too much care cannot be taken, and the Vegetable Compound is indispensable.

—The first musicale of the Melopeia Society will be at The Casino, Dec. 3. The first concert of the Choral Union will be at Music Hall, Dec. 30.

—Charles E. Hand and wife have sold to Elizabeth S. Apgar, lot on DeKalb avenue, 120 feet Northwest from North avenue, 140x50 feet for $800.

—Snow fell in Plainfield early Tuesday morning—not enough to make good sleighing, but still sufficient to remind one that Winter is at hand.

—William M. Thomas and wife, of New York, have sold to Aaron Butler of Castleton, Richmond county, N. Y., land in Plainfield, [illegible] of an acre on Rahway road for $12,500.

—William E. Lowe's coachman, Charles Barber, was kicked in the face by a horse, recently. Some of Barber's teeth were loosened and had to be taken out. Otherwise he escaped very fortunately.

—The parade of the victorious Democracy in this city, was enthusiastic, complete and splendid. The cornet band headed 200 torch bearers, from both city and borough, all of whom have hoarse throats this morning.

—The Young Men's Christian Association convention of the Fourth New Jersey District, will be held at Westfield, Nov. 29-30. Information may be obtained from Stephen [illegible] of the District Committee, or at the Association rooms.

—The Whatsoever Circle, King's Daughters, who gave such a pleasing entertainment at Y. M. C. A., Hall, Friday evening, made a gratifying success, and report a net gain of [illegible], which was given to help a poor minister's family in the West.

—Ed. F. Thorn caught Friday what he has been looking for all Summer, a black bass of the Oswego species, which weighed four pounds and three ounces. The fish was viewed by many persons at Mr. Thorn's place of business, 17 Park avenue.

—Mrs. Dr. Edwards, the clairvoyant, who has made so many friends during her stay in Plainfield, leaves to-day for a few weeks' visit at Nelson's Hotel, New Market. Those desiring her services will find her a lady, and one possessed of remarkable occult powers.

—The dead body of Salvador Vigura, an Italian, was found in a gulch at Bedminster, near Somerville, Tuesday. It had been there apparently about three weeks. A fellow workman has been arrested on the charge of having murdered him. The object of the supposed murder was to get $12 which Vigura had.

—The Elizabeth Wheelmen had a fine run over the new county roads Tuesday, and took dinner in Plainfield. Other cycling parties, including a number of ladies, also visited the Crescent City, and added to the gaiety of the streets. A great many pleasure-parties tested their horses along Plainfield's superb driveways and the [illegible] coaches were constantly darting about in every direction.

—The indications are that the Methodist Episcopal churches in the Middle, New England and Southern States east of the Alleghany Mountains, representing about one-third of the membership of the church, are decidedly opposed to the admission of women as lay delegates into the General Conference; and it is believed by those who have the best means of gauging church sentiment on this question that the church as a whole will pronounce against it. The voting on the question will go on during the present month. Plainfield's vote, as already recorded in THE PRESS, was in favor of admission.

$1,000 Fire at Westfield.

Fire broke out in the kitchen of the dwelling apartments over Dr. Gale's drug store at Westfield Wednesday and caused $1,000 damages, fully insured. The firemen did good work.

Her Body Ground to Pieces.

Mary Gilroy, of White House, Somerset county, and who is well-known in this city, was killed by the cars on the Central Railroad Friday. She stepped out of the way of one train, near the White House station, just as another passenger train came along on another track. She was ground to pieces.

A Visit From Their Newark Brothers.

Perseverance Lodge, No 74, Knights of Pythias, with C. C. DeCamp in the chair, entertained as guests Friday night, P. C. Hitchcock, P. C. Anthony, P. C. Jacobus, P. C. Hagar and C. C. Martin, of Puritan Lodge, No. [illegible], of Newark, and P. C. Wm. Pfeiffer, of Henry Clay Lodge, No. 41, of Newark. There was a grand good fraternal time, and a collation after the meeting.

Married by Two Bishops.

At the Church of the Heavenly Rest, N. Y., Wednesday, the Rev. S. P. [illegible], of this city, assisted the Rev. D. Parker Morgan at a marriage ceremony, an unusual feature being that one divine performed the betrothal and the other read the marriage ceremonial, this being strictly in accordance with the rubric of the Church. The occasion was the marriage of Miss Carrie [illegible] Schenck and Dr. James Henry Clark of Newark, N. J. Among those present was Gov. Leon Abbett.

A Merry Time at Fanwood.

The recent cobweb party at the home of the Misses Poste, Fanwood, was a delightful affair. The house was filled with invited guests.

Strings were run all through the rooms, up and down the stairs, over chandeliers, under chairs, and into every nook and corner, giving the interior of the house the appearance of a gigantic cobweb. Each guest was furnished with two strings. It was their duty to follow up the strings in their various windings and turnings, rolling them up as they went until at last they reached the end, possibly only a few feet away from where they started, although they may have first wandered through all of the rooms. At the end of each string was a handsome prize. Much merriment was created, especially when the strings crossed and re-crossed each other, and at times became tangled in a most bewildering manner. After the prizes had all been secured, some refreshments and dancing. Among those who were present were Miss Hobbs of Chicago, the Misses [illegible] Plainfield, Miss May Poste of New York, Augustus Smith of Morristown, Mr. McMahon, of Brooklyn, Mr. Stevens, and the Misses Poste.

PERSONALIA.

Miss Henrietta Coale, of Dubuque, is the guest of Miss Emerson, of Central avenue.

John A. Demarest, recently principal of the Westfield public school, receives a salary of $1,800 in his charge in Jersey City.

Miss Louise Bovey, of Somerset street, arrived home on the steamer "Aller," Saturday, after a three months tour of Europe.

Oscar Fay Adams, son of W. F. Adams of Duer street, has an article on "The [illegible]," in The North American Review for November.

Miss Alice B Spangenberg, of Netherwood, has been elected a member of the Executive Committee of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union.

M. O. Runkle, James Martine, Alex. Gilbert, Robert Livingston, D. S. Roberts, J. B. Dumont, are possible candidates for the Mayoralty nomination.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills, the noted evangelist, and I. E. Greenwood, the sweet singer, are guests at Miller's Hotel. They are accompanied by Mrs. Mills.

J. B. [illegible], pastor of the First Church of Christ, immersed twelve converts to his faith, in the Park Avenue Baptist church, Sunday afternoon—seven men and five women.

George A. Oakes, of Plainfield, has been chosen by his Sophomore classmates at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, Historian of the class for The Scarlet Letter, a famous college annual.

The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church of Plainfield, preached the annual sermon at the New Jersey State Baptist Convention at Camden, Wednesday of last week.

Howard Gray, for many years a resident of this city during his connection with THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, is just now rejoicing over the coming of a baby boy to his home in Norwich, Conn.

A. L. Titsworth, of Madison avenue, was suddenly stricken with pneumonia on Friday morning. The services of two physicians and a trained nurse were immediately secured, and today his condition is slightly improved.

A S. S. Institute will be held in Grace church on Thursday next commencing at 3 P. M. The Bishop of the Diocese will preside. The Rev. Messrs. Holt, of Fordham, Bunting, of Trenton, Embury and others will take part in the exercises.

F. H. Martin started Monday on the 4:[illegible] Washington express, for Denver, Col. M. M. Thorn, who goes to visit his daughter at Santa Barbara, accompanies him. Mr Martin intends looking into some lines of investment, and may eventually send for his family and permanently settle there.

The organist at Trinity Reformed church, Sunday morning and evening, was Louis Newman. This young performer is in great demand wherever a vacancy occurs, since his debut at the Crescent Avenue church some weeks ago. He has talent, and is improving every day in method and a knowledge of effects and expression.

The last of the handsome residence sites on West Eighth street, along the frontage where Messrs Runkle, Crane and Curtis have already built, has been sold. Charles I. Ames is the purchaser, and the lot is the one beyond Mr. Crane's. The sale was made through E. C. Mulford, who is the broker that has sold every one of the lots on the block from Jacob Kirkner's corner to Plainfield avenue.

Among the prizes of the annual Chrysanthemum show of the New Jersey Floricultural Society, now being held in Orange, are two consisting of $10 and $5, offered by Richard Purdue, of East Orange, for three best plants, chrysanthemums, to be grown by a lady. Mr. Purdue is a celebrated grower of these flowers. He is the father of Miss Purdue, assistant principal of the North Plainfield school.

George Wharton Edwards, of Madison avenue, has a profusion of characteristic illustrations in The Century Magazine for November. "A Legend of Old New York"—another interesting story from the pen of Miss Anna Eichberg King, who produced "Joltrow Van Steen," with illustrations by Edwards, a year ago—is greatly benefited by his brush, and he contributes considerable conventional drawing, in initials and tail-pieces, to the number.

At the Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning preceding the regular preaching service, the following persons were ordained as Elders and Deacons for the term of two years each: Elders—A Willet, J. H. Van Winkle, G. L. Van Emburgh. Deacons—D. Van Winkle, H. E. Gayle, A. Swalm. Following the installation the pastor, the Rev. C. Schenck, delivered an able and impressive discourse, his thoughts being gathered from the first part of the fourth verse of the second chapter of 1st Thess.

The funeral of Mrs. Caroline Miller, widow of the late George Miller, took place Wednesday, from the late residence of the deceased, Miller's Hotel, this city, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives, although by request of the family the funeral was a private one. The Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham officiated, and the remains of this most estimable wife and mother were interred in the Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield. The pall-bearers were Councilman D. S. Roberts, ex-Postmaster W. L. Force, Wm. H. Egbert, I. D. Ten Eyck, Andrew D. Jennings and Louis Calligann.

Almost $20,000 So Far.

The fund for the building of the new Grace church has now reached a total of $19,800, and subscriptions are coming in daily. Ground will be broken as soon as Spring opens, by which time all plans and details will have been arranged and the work can be pushed forward without a delay.

A Crane that Picks up Many Tons with Ease.

The powerful new electric crane at the Pond Machine Tool Works was tested Monday, and was found to be capable of lifting and handling with ease twenty tons and three hundred-weight. This tremendous strain broke several large chains, but the crane gave evidence of possessing backbone for even a much larger load.

Mr. Milligan's Return.

Festoons of carrots, onions, tomatoes and other agricultural trophies, surrounded a magnificent portrait of the Hon. Edward Milligan at Steffen's, 14 Vesey street, New York, last Saturday evening; the occasion being a reception tendered to that gentleman by his friends on his return to civilization from the primitive wilds of Jersey. The Milligan ancestral mansion is beautifully situated in Washington Valley, near "Aunt Sally's Notch," just back of this city, and to this delightful retreat Mr. Milligan retires in the early Spring, returning to the metropolis about the time when the chestnuts get ripe.

Among the friends who greeted Mr. Milligan were artist Bob. Andrews, a member of Co. D. 9th Regiment, who, in his younger days, was quite a sprinter, having made the fastest time on record from Bull Run to Arlington Heights; Sergeant T. P. Mac Keone "The Little Grenadier" noted for his famous triangle drill; Mr. Capen and son; Major Baldwin; Mr. Venino, of Plainfield; Fred Bond, of Hoboken; Mr. Parker, Sanitary Engineer; Mr. Bowker the builder, and many others. Amid speeches and toasts and a bountiful repast of black pudding and pickled tripe, a pleasant evening was passed and the party broke up at an early hour, going home at peace with mankind generally and with Mr. Milligan particularly. Altogether the affair was a decided success.

OBITUARY.

Caroline Miller.

Mrs. Caroline Miller, wife of the late George Miller, died at her home on West Front street, on Monday, at the age of fifty-eight. She was long a resident of this city, and had been a most successful hotel matron, having had charge of the excellent cuisine of the various hotels her husband owned in his lifetime, as well as of Laing's Hotel after her sons took charge of it. Among the hotels she and her husband conducted was the famous Sheridan House at Elizabeth and the noted "half-way house," on the road between Plainfield and Dunellen, which was burned years ago. She had been ill a long time, and was a patient sufferer. Four sons, Joseph B., George, Wallace and William, survive her, as well as two daughters, the one the wife of Charles Roberts, son of Councilman Daniel Roberts, and the other unmarried.

A Great Ball Town, is This.

The gate receipts at the ball games of the Plainfield Crescent League, in this city, during the past season, were $4,691.65. Hatfield, McIndoe, Jones, Lufbery, Lee and Martin, will be signed for next season's team.

The Crescent's New Home to be Started.

Ground was broken Wednesday for the new club house of the Plainfield Crescent League. The carpenter work is to be done by Pearson & Gayle, and the contract calls for completion by January 15. Architect Fosgate is empowered to put on as many extra men as he may think necessary to finish the building by the time fixed.

Their Resignations Received With Regrets.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Education, Monday evening, Principal Bulkley reported the amount of tuition from non-resident pupils, for the first quarter of the term, was $487.80. The receipts of taxes for September and October were $2,673.27.

The resignations of Miss Stout and Miss Gilbert, already told of exclusively in THE PRESS, were discussed with a sincere appreciation of their loss. The Board decided to meet on Monday evening the 17th inst., and consider the question of enlarging the Bryant school so that the scholars might be brought down from the third story of the Franklin. Otherwise the Board must obey the State law requiring fire escapes where there are class rooms above the second story.

Trustee Probasco reported that two tons of coal had been stolen away from Irving school the other night. The thieves had crawled in a window, carried the coal out the front door and carted it away in a wagon. He also said a load of lumber had been stolen from the same neighborhood where the new Methodist chapel was building. President Kirkner said: "There's a chance for you to do some home missionary work, Dr. Hurlbut, instead of going to foreign shores." Trustee Hurlbut replied: "That's what we are building a chapel there for." President Kirkner exclaimed: "You won't build much of a chapel if they steal all your lumber."

No More Lottery Money by Express for Plainfield.

Harry F. Skiff, Manager for the United States Express company in this city, is a most affable gentleman for his patrons or anyone else to meet. A PRESS reporter interviewed him yesterday on the order recently issued by the company to all of its superintendents and agents forbidding them to receive or forward any lottery tickets or advertisements, or any packages which they had reasonable ground to believe contained such articles or money intended for the purchase of lottery tickets.

The reporter learned that the Adams Express company has taken the opposite ground, that it has no right to inquire about or suspect the character of packages offered to it for carriage. The consequence of this is that nearly all of the lottery business today is being carried by the messengers of the Adams Express company, and its agents are receiving and distributing the money and lottery tickets of the Louisiana State Lottery throughout the Northern States. If the Adams Express company were to issue the same orders that have been issued by the United States Express company, the business of the Louisiana Lottery would be at once almost entirely confined to the city of New Orleans.

Manager Skiff says that to the company this step, it is said, means a sacrifice of $100,000 worth of business annually. This is a large sum, but undoubtedly the express people will, in the end, be amply repaid for whatever temporary loss they may sustain.

Councilman Smith Has His Shooting Clothes On.

E. E. Teeple of South Plainfield, having won the silver cake basket that was shot for several times at Campbell's club house, thought his new Ithaca gun was sure of holding all local championships, and under that delusion issued a challenge to T. H. Brantingham to shoot a match for $10 at 10 live birds (31 yards' rise, 50 yards' boundary, and one barrel), which Mr. Brantingham accepted. H. B. Manning was stakeholder and judge. The money was deposited the evening of the cake basket victory, and the match was shot Thursday. The following was the result:

Brantingham	1 0 0 0 1 1 1 1 1 x—6
Teeple	1 0 1 0 1 0 0 0 x x—3

Mr. Brantingham therefore won by killing his ninth bird. He also killed two which fell dead just out of bounds.

Then there was a small sweep shot, $1 entrance, two moneys, at three birds:

Brantingham	1 1 1—3
Manning	1 1 0—2
Teeple	0 1 0—1

The balance of the afternoon was spent by the club in sweepstake shooting at targets, 25 cents entrance, at six blue rocks. The following are the scores:

First Event—A. R. Soper won first money with six killed; Manning and Smith won second money with five killed; Teeple and Brantingham won third money with four killed.

Second Event—Soper and Brantingham won first money with six killed; S. G. Smith won second money with five killed; Teeple won third money with four killed.

Third Event—Teeple won first money with six killed; Brantingham won second money with five killed; Manning, Smith and Soper won third money with four killed.

Fourth Event—Soper and Smith won first money with six killed; Manning won second money with four killed; Teeple and Brantingham won third money with three killed.

Fifth Event—Brantingham won first money with six killed; Smith won second money with five killed; Teeple and Soper won third money with four killed.

Sixth Event—Manning, Brantingham and Smith tied for first money with six killed. They shot at six birds on the tie, and Brantingham and Smith divided by breaking five each. Teeple and Soper tied for second money with three killed. They shot off the tie and Teeple won.

A large gathering witnessed the shoot, and the occasion was very enjoyable to all.

Don't You Know

That you cannot afford to neglect that catarrh? Don't you know that it may lead to consumption, to insanity, to death? Don't you know that it can be easily cured? Don't you know that while the thousand and one nostrums you have tried have utterly failed, that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a certain cure? It has stood the test of years, and there are hundreds of thousands of grateful men and women in all parts of the country who can testify to its efficacy. All druggists.

LOVE SO GREAT THAT DEATH WAS JOY.

Many Hearts Quickened by the Story of the Saviour's Sacrifice.—Re-Consecration and Conversion Follow the Coming of the Noted Evangelist.

The hearts of Plainfield people have already been deeply touched by the words of the evangelist who began in this city Monday night his mission to save men's souls from eternal wrath. It is yet early to look for great results from the local crusade now being conducted by Mr. Mills, but a wonderful revival is developing, and a vast harvest may be expected for the kingdom of the Lord.

At Wednesday's meeting in the First Baptist church there were no seats to spare. The building was filled with those eager to hear the gospel message from the lips of the famous preacher. And the truths which the reverend man expounded were so plain, so sweet, so soul-nourishing, that many troubled hearts were comforted.

The preacher attempted no lofty flight of eloquence. His words were the words of the Master, his teachings the simple doctrine that Christ died to save sinners. "And being in an agony, He prayed more earnestly"—Luke XXII: 44—was his text, and as he dwelt on the sentence there arose before the minds of his multitude of hearers that scene, so full of beauty and sadness and love, when Christ, the scoffed and forsaken of the world, the beloved of the Apostles, the Saviour of all mankind, knelt in anguish in the Garden at Gethsemane, and in a petition of agonized compassion for the world prepared for crucifixion. With many a simple little story, each fraught with the old, old lesson of surpassing love which would suffer death rather than see the soul of the loved one lost, and of love so great that death that brought salvation for others was joy indeed, Mr. Mills urged the people to the duty which lay before them. If they were already professing Christians they must arouse themselves out of the lethargy into which they had fallen, and press onward, and work and pray unceasingly, for the salvation of human souls. If they had wandered from the path marked by Christ's own bleeding footprints they had but to look to Him anew, and live again in His holy likeness. If they were sinners whose stubborn hearts had refused to admit Him they must bring themselves to a deep realization of how greatly their friends were concerned in their souls, and how He had been so much concerned that He had died to save them.

Besides the impressive language of the evangelist, there was music by a grand chorus of voices, whose gospel songs aroused many a latent glow and fire within the bosoms of the people. And there were prayers by the local clergymen, and hymns by Mr. Greenwood. As potent arguments as all these others, however, for arousing one's better feelings, and for increasing one's desire to lead a Christian life, were the tears, and the thoughts that followed their flowing, which fell when Mr. Greenwood sang "He died!—because He loved me so!" and when Mr. Mills unfolded the wondrous meaning which those words embody.

Many were strongly affected by this meeting, and it was consequently a large gathering which attended the after meeting in the basement parlors, where Mr Mills invited those who were concerned about the souls of others—and those concerned about their own. Here the true manifestations of a revival of divine love were apparent, and here a gracious outpouring of the Spirit was witnessed. A few touching words from the preacher, and from every quarter of the meeting-place arose men, women and children, old and young, with requests for prayer, and with prayers themselves. Men asked that their brothers might be saved; women, their voices trembling with the eagerness, the heartfelt earnestness, of their longing, besought mercy and pardon and peace, for their sons, their husbands, their sisters and other loved ones. One young man pleaded for his mother; another for a father; another, a young colored lad, for a companion with him, who was worldly wise, but who knew not the blessings of a Christian life; another, himself advanced in years, for an aged man who lay dying, without light, with*out hope, refusing to accept God's pardon* and grace. In all fully two hundred arose with their earnest appeals, and then a host who desired prayers for themselves. A spirit of infinite tenderness prevailed. At the close of the hour's communion with the Holy Spirit a number testified to the evangelist that they had found that peace which passeth all understanding, while others exclaimed in supreme happiness that they began to see the dawn of a Christian life breaking before them.

Meetings similar to these will be held in the First Baptist church every night this week. Next Sunday Mr. Mills will conduct a meeting for men, young men and boys, in the same church, at 10:30 A. M.; at 3:45 P. M. he will conduct a meeting for young people; at 7:30 P. M. a meeting for all classes. Sunday meetings for women will be held at the Crescent Avenue and Methodist churches at 10:30 A. M., to be conducted by local pastors. Monday evening, at 7:30, a Union meeting, addressed by Mr. Mills, will be held in the Crescent Avenue church. Mr. Greenwood and his large choir will sing.

A touching incident of last night's after-meeting was the conversion of a young woman who is a teacher in a local Sunday school. Early in the meeting her Superintendent arose and said, "Pray for two teachers in my school who are not Christians." Later this woman, one of the teachers referred to, arose herself and asked for prayers, and subsequently teacher and Superintendent, tears of joy on their faces, clasped hands and rejoiced that she was saved.

Plainfield's Pride.

Gazelle Engine and her fine company of men, was the feature of the firemen's parade at Westfield, on Thursday. About 50 members turned out in handsome uniform, headed by a hundred-dollar band and drum-major. The steamer shone like gold and silver. Among the guests with Gazelle's company were Councilmen Roberts, Hetfield and Gallup, Chief Doane and others.

Gave His Wife's Groceries to His Maudlin Love.

The spectacle of a woman and a man hugging and kissing on the public streets shocked the severe-minded people of the Fourth Ward Saturday noon. Both man and woman were intoxicated, and in the midst of their maudlin embraces they stopped to take frequent drinks, which added to their silliness. Finally reaching the corner of Front and Liberty streets, they parted with many fond expressions of regret at having to leave, and the woman appropriated to herself, while the man leered in loving approval, the heavily laden basket of groceries the man had been taking homeward to his family. When the woman was out of sight the man went, chuckling to himself, to report to his wife as best he could the absence of the Sunday dinner eatables. His boon companion in petticoats reached the neighborhood of Cotter's grocery store and spent the afternoon dozing on the pavement of the alley. She was finally picked up by the police, and after spending Sunday in jail, where she said she was Mrs Williams, an Indian woman, was released on promise of good behavior.

An Evening With Charming Entertainers.

Seminary Hall was packed to its doors, Friday night, with a most aristocratic gathering that included the best people of both the borough and city. The occasion was the entertainment arranged by the Guild of the Holy Cross church, and the programme was the varied and attractive one already announced in these columns.

William L. Saunders—to whose good taste and efforts more than those of any other one person is due the financial success of the affair—addressed the assemblage in a happy speech of introduction that captured all at the start and their interest and pleasure never lessened during the evening. Miss Jeanie May opened the programme with a Hungarian dance. It was a well-judged selection, but although a most accomplished player she lacks the strength to do thorough justice to compositions of its nature and requirements. The barcarole that she played at the close of the first part, was more within the grasp of her sex. It was rendered most creditably.

To those who, like the writer, had not had the pleasure and gratification of hearing Maude Agnes Bowers since her graduation from the Boston school of oratory, the talent and brilliancy she displayed was an unexpected and complete satisfaction. She is endowed with genius and personal magnetism, and has attained power and methods of fascination unequalled by all amateurs and unexcelled by most professionals. Her reading of the Chariot Race from "Ben Hur," was full of fire and effectiveness. There was not a fault of emphasis or gesture. Her picture of the "Bugglesses" was also perfect, and the two selections so totally different in every way, evidenced the marvellous versatility of the young reader. The audience's appreciation of her talents and loveliness, was unmistakable.

But Marshal Wilder, it is sad to note, is trimming his monologue with rushing. Now he only shows himself occasionally during the evening as the merry little companion with whom everybody has smiled. He talks with a piano accompaniment now, and when that accompaniment is not song and dance music, the people, as in the recitation of "What is a Kiss?" say one to another, "Wasn't that music lovely?" And it was—in fact it was so much better than the poem, and so much better than the reader, that no attention was accorded them. This was the case also with the rendition of VonBoyle's "Ever so Far Away." Miss Emily Thompson's singing of "Still as the Night" gained for her an encore. She was accompanied by Miss Alice Smith.

Part second of the programme was announced as a "farce," but William L Saunders' interpretation of the leading role was a reality. Those present who had never before met a man of bilious disposition, know now exactly what they must expect. The others, who had been there, recognized the too true illustration. Other parts by Plainfield amateurs in "A Bilious Attack," were filled with remarkable aptitude by Miss Annie Murphy, Mrs. George C. Evans and Walter McGee. Miss Murphy had need to be nothing but herself—a beautiful and graceful woman. Mrs. Evans was as pert a maid as ever seen, and Mr. McGee so disguised himself in character and make-up that some do not yet believe it was he.

DEALING WITH THE CRIMINAL CLASSES.

The Design of the Union County Branch of the State Charities Aid Association of New Jersey.

The regular meeting of the Union County Branch of the State Charities Aid Association will be held in the Young Men's Christian Association parlor on Monday, Nov. 10, at 8:15 P. M.

The design of this Association is to consider the great questions that relate to the dependent and criminal classes of society in this State and practically to put in execution the best methods for dealing with these classes and for diminishing their number. While the State is asked to be a contributor to a work which so greatly concerns it, experience has shown that there is more of purity and sincerity of effort and more of unselfish Christian devotion by the improvement of these unfortunate classes when chief reliance is placed on voluntary organization and co-operation. The method of the work is as follows: The State Charities Aid Association forms a Central Bureau to collect and impart information and to give general direction to the work. It is sought to form auxiliary branches in the counties to execute the home work needing to be done. Power is secured from the Legislature to have the Supreme Court appoint visitors, who shall inquire into the structural condition and modes of management of institutions, and into the needs of their inmates.

The regular meetings of the Union County Branch have heretofore been held at Elizabeth, but it has been thought desirable to hold a meeting in this place on the 10th inst., for the convenience of Plainfield members and to make the objects of the Society more generally known.

The officers of the Union County Branch are as follows:

President—The Rev Everard Kempshall, of Elizabeth.

Vice President—The Rev. F. Marion McAllister, of Elizabeth.

Secretary—Howard Richards, of Elizabeth.

Treasurer—Mrs. J. K. Myers, of Plainfield.

Game Protection.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of "The New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society" held in this city Wednesday, R. M. Stelle was made Treasurer to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Treasurer, Wm. E. Jones. Gen. Wm. H. Sterling and Wm. H. Egbert were also elected members of the Board to fill vacancies. President P. C. Ohl reported gratifying results from game protection throughout the State. The Board adjourned to meet again Nov. 14.

A Credit to the Committee in Charge.

Fred Emerson Brooks, who is to appear in Elizabeth in the Stanley course, has been secured by the Royal Arcanum Council of this city as part of their next Monday evening's entertainment. The San Francisco Call says of him: "Fred Emerson Brooks, the California Poet, rolled out the numbers of his poem with that matchless elocution peculiar to himself, receiving at its conclusion the unbounded applause of an enthusiastic and critical audience, demanding an encore as usual."

Also secured on the programme by W. J. Lyon, Jr., and others of the Committee on Good of the Order, are Brother D. W. Robertson, the tumbleronicon—of whom Dr. Talmage says: "Your music once heard is never forgotten"—and W. W. Isenbarth, the zither artist.

In Memory of Good Old Scotland Days.

Forty Plainfield residents hailing from Scotland had a social gathering at 17 Grant avenue, Friday night in celebration, in the old Scotch way, of All Hallow E'en. It was the largest gathering of the kind that has taken place in this city for many years. The programme was a long and varied one of forty-five items, and was carried out in a manner characteristic of the "Land o'Cakes." The dances were nearly all Scotch, and were executed as only the Scotch know how. The songs were of a high quality and were sung with a national feeling that only those who are far away from their native land can understand. The games also brought back many fond recollections of bygone days. The singing of "Auld Lang Syne" brought the event to a close at 5 o'clock in the morning.

THE GROWTH OF GRACE.

The Rev. Dr. Rodman's Review of the Twenty Years of His Rectorship.

Sunday morning last, before a large congregation in Grace Episcopal church, the rector, the Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, D. D., delivered a sermon from the text—"A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation. I, the Lord, will hasten it in His time."—Isaiah LX, 22. It was the twentieth anniversary of Mr. Rodman's rectorship. He closed his most eloquent sermon as follows:

"I am glad that we have a grand and inspiring object to look forward to, today, in the advance step which has been taken towards the erection of our new church. It is always somewhat depressing to take reviews of the past, for although we may find much to be thankful for we must take account also of many shortcomings and failures, of opportunities lost and mistakes made. Therefore let us keep these two things in mind—the retrospect and the prospect. I feel honored in having my 20th anniversary of rectorship thus associated with this forward movement.

"And it is our privilege, today, to take note of the growth of two decades, on this celebration of my vicennial anniversary. When I came here in 1870, I found 71 families and 136 communicants.

"I can count but 17 out of those 71 families who are with us today. There are now 191 families in the parish, and 350 communicants. Two hundred and twenty-one (221) persons have been confirmed; 115 have been received from other parishes; 398 have removed; and 68 have died. There have been 283 baptisms: infants, 254; adults, 29. There have been solemnized 106 marriages and 149 funerals. Divine service has been held 4,167 times. The Holy Communion has been celebrated on 701 days in the church, and on 172 occasions in private with the sick.

"The contributions of the congregation have amounted to $135,000 for all purposes, or an annual average of $6,750.

"And now let me ask you, for a few moments, to enlarge your view, and observe the growth of the church in the Diocese and in the State. The year 1870 was four years before the division of the Diocese was effected. There were then in the Diocese of New Jersey, which comprised the State, 122 clergymen. There are now in this Diocese 108, and in that of Newark 174. Twenty years ago there were 11,500 communicants in both; now in this there are 12,549, and in Newark 11,417.

"The contributions in both were in 1870 $432,000 in round numbers; the last journals give $228,000 as the amount contributed by this Diocese, and $362,000 as that of Newark. The number of parishes and missions in the undivided diocese were 118. Now in this there are 123, in that 80, or 203 in both. And if it is asked again, for the last time, why, amid all this growth and enlargement, has not this parish built a church, more in harmony with its numbers and means; why has it no Sunday school building, in which that most important part of the church's work can be thoroughly and efficiently conducted, and without which it cannot be done; why has it no rectory?—I believe the answer will be found in the figures which I have given you, in the column which indicates the removals of parishioners, and in that containing the contributions of the congregation. I find that we have given to the missionary work of the church, during the past twenty years, within a fraction of $10,000, or an annual average of $500, and while I would not begrudge one penny of the sum which has thus been sent to help the propagation of the Gospel and the church of our Lord Jesus Christ, and while we may justly be proud of a record that shows that we have been more mindful of the wants of others than of our own, a record that is, so far as I know, without a parallel, I cannot help thinking on the review that possibly the fact is more creditable to our hearts than to our heads. For it will not be denied that if we had had a larger and better equipped establishment we would become stronger and more able to give to all the branches of the church's missionary and benevolent work. And therefore I rejoice with exceeding great joy that today marks a great and grand onward step towards the attainment of that which has so long been in the minds and hearts of many of us, in the erection of a church to the honor and glory of God and for the benefit of our fellow men.

"And one great advantage that will result from the accomplishment of this holy purpose will be that then this house, which we all love so much, can be arranged for the purposes of the Sunday school, as no church building can be, or should be.

"When this end is reached I believe a mighty impulse will be given to all our work. I beg those who have so long and patiently, under many disadvantages, engaged in this work, to be patient a little longer, and to believe that, in God's own time, which is the best time, all this good work will be accomplished."

Who are Burnet and Leggett?

At a meeting of the Crescent League, Wednesday, Messrs Burnet and Leggett were cheered by the members for their successful management of last season's ball team, that won so many victories and gained such financial profit. To the question, "Who are Charley Burnet and Charley Leggett?" ev'ry fellow shouted—"First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of the Crescent League!"

The handsomest soda fountain in this city, and probably one of the largest in the State, has just been put in the Crescent pharmacy at Park avenue and Fourth street. It is built of Mexican onyx and imported marbles, and heavily trimmed with solid silver. A magnificent French plate mirror tops it. It was built to order for George Williams, the proprietor, at a cost of between one and two thousand dollars. But with all its elegance it is not a bit finer than the drinks that are drawn from it. Its orange phosphate is not excelled in the wide, wide world.

WHEREAS, George A. Phillips, late of the city of Plainfield, Union county, New Jersey, deceased, in his lifetime made a contract in writing, still unfulfilled, for the sale to me of all that lot, tract or parcel of land and premises hereinafter particularly described, situate, lying and being in the city of Plainfield, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey: Beginning at a point in the centre line of George street, in line of land of George M. Phillips; thence running in a northwesterly direction along the said line of land of said Phillips, and at right angles to the said street one hundred and fifty feet; thence in a southwesterly direction and parallel with the centre line of George street twenty-five feet; thence in a southeasterly direction parallel with the said line of said Phillips' land, and at right angles to George street one hundred and fifty feet to the centre line of George street; thence in a northeasterly direction along the centre line of George street twenty five feet to the place of beginning. Notice is hereby given that I will apply to the Orphan's Court of the county of Union, to be held at the Court House in the city of Elizabeth, on Wednesday the twenty-fourth day of December next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, for the fulfillment of said contract according to law.

Dated October 11th 1890.

STEADY CUSTOM

THAT'S WHAT WE ARE AFTER.

And when we start out to get anything we "get there" with both feet. We don't expect to obtain your custom by merely blowing, but by offering you values for your money that are not and cannot be approached elsewhere. Deeds, not words; performances, not promises, is what you want. Let us give you an example. One that you can understand and verify if you care to take the trouble. We are showing at the present time a line of

and the very identical goods are, or have until a recent period, been offered at other stores for $12.00 and $14.00.

We know this to be a fact or we would not state it. We would like you to look at our stock this season, and especially these suits. We have them in single and double-breasted Sacks, in gray, stripes and checks and fancy mixed do. They're not leaders, although they lead a great many people who look at them to buy them at sight. But what we mean is, they are not gotten up as a bait to convey a false or unfair impression of the prices of the rest of the stock, but fair samples of the values we are giving all along the line. For a business suit they cannot be excelled. See them.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the toiler, or the gold-seeker, the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. If you want a free farm in a lovely land, write for the "Great Reservation" read it and resolve to accept the golden HAND OF FORTUNE!

RESIGNATION.

Were there no wrongs in this troubled world,
There would no bliss of beauty ever rise.
Were there no Calv'ry in our Saviour's path,
How brightly would He [illegible] toward the sky?

Were there no pathways marked by bleeding feet,
There would not Heaven's [illegible] seem so fair.
Were there no bitter mingled with the sweet,

Were there no trials, no sorrows here below,
Who, then, would prize the joys that will abound?

WHAT OTHERS HAVE DONE.

A List of God's Great Commands That Have Been Carried Out.

The tendency with most Christians is to be satisfied with those duties which are simple and easy to perform. We read of great achievements by others, but it never enters our minds that our names may be written on the roll of the great kept in Heaven, and so we live on, with no ambition to do any thing grand and sublime, satisfied to live and enjoy, satisfied to go through each day with the little round of inconsequential duties, and satisfied if, at last, we occupy the lowest seats in the palace of the King. But as Jesus commanded Simon Peter to "launch out into the deep," He calls us to lift the anchor up out of the waters of religious self-interest, and to take broader views of the possibilities of these lives. To every disciple there are deep waters of usefulness, a shoreless swamp of noble service and of great results, if he will but attempt the seeming impossibilities, in His name, relying on the promises, instead of measuring God's commands with our little tape line of human judgment.

Look through the Bible history, and see how God was always commanding His children to do what appeared to be impossible of execution, but faith never failed in its accomplishment. He commanded Abraham to leave home and kindred, and go forth to possess a country of His own; an enterprise that the keenest human wisdom would have called chimerical. He called Moses to go down alone into Egypt and deliver His people from the grasp of the mightiest monarch on earth. Why, the mission was simply absurd in its wildness of purpose—one man to break the fetters that more than two hundred years had been riveting! But there was the Divine command: "Go down into Egypt." So, take the call to Israel to go forward, when the deep waters of the Red Sea rolled before them; to Joshua to overthrow Jericho's walls by marching around them and shouting; to Jonah, to bring a godless heathen city to repentance by preaching on its crowded streets; to David, to fight with Goliath, opposing only a boy's sling against an armor of steel; to one hundred and twenty men and women to go forth and with the despised Gospel conquer a world to the religion of the crucified Nazarene. Ah, God's commands are always in their Divine scope beyond the vision of our limitations, but with Him "all things are possible," as one writer has said: "It is difficulties that give birth to miracles."

What Christians need to-day is that absolute dependence upon the promises which Peter had when he answered to the Master's command to let down the net: "At Thy word I will." Caleb and Joshua were not afraid of walled cities or giants, because God had said: "I will be with thee." Nehemiah built the walls of Jerusalem amid the most bitter opposition, trusting only to the word of God. David says: "Remember Thy word unto Thy servant, upon which Thou hast caused me to hope." We are weak, for we are looking at ourselves; we are discouraged because our eyes are on the difficulties; our burdens are heavy because we are carrying them alone, instead of leaning on the Divine Burden-bearer.

Christian parents, Sunday-school teachers, fasten your eye on God's Word, your pilgrim staff, and walls will fall down, mountains will be leveled to a plain, rivers will be divided and you will be strong to conquer sin, strong to do well every duty, strong to impossibilities in His name and for His glory. [illegible] dreaming of a higher, grander life, and taking God at His word, [illegible]. This dying world needs your uplifting labors and prayers; a great flood of witnesses will watch your heroic service, and failure is impossible, so long as faith grasps the promises. Attempt great things for God.—Advance.

LEAVE ALL TO HIM.

The Lord Is Willing and Glad to Help Us Bear Our Cares, Little and Big.

Do not trouble yourself unduly; for if you do so you can not remove sickness thereby, but you may even increase it. If I could do any good by worrying, I would worry away to my heart's content, but as it is useless I find it best to let it alone. They tell me that if a man were to fall into the sea he would float if he would remain quiet, but because he struggles he sinks. I am sure it is so when we are afflicted. Fretfulness results in weakening us, in taking from us wise methods of relief, and, in general, in doubling our pains. It is folly to kick against the pricks; it is wisdom to kiss the rod. Trust more and fear less. If you have trusted your soul with Christ can you not trust Him with any thing else? Can you not trust Him with your sick child or your sick husband, with your wealth, with your business, with your life? "O," says one, "I hardly like to do that. It is almost presumption to take our minor cares to the great Lord." But in so doing you will prove the truthfulness of your faith. I heard of a man who was walking along the high road with a pack on his back; he was growing weary, and was therefore glad when a gentleman came along in a wagon and asked him to take a seat with him. The gentleman noticed that he kept his pack strapped to his shoulders, and so he said: "Why do you not put your pack down?" "Why, sir," said the traveler, "I did not venture to intrude. It was very kind of you to take me up, and I could not expect you to carry my pack as well." "Why," said the friend, "do you not see that whether your pack is on your back or off your back I have to carry it?" It is so with your troubles; whether you care or do not care, it is the Lord who must care for you. First trust your Lord with your soul, and then trust Him with every thing else. First surrender yourself to His love, to be saved by His infinite compassion, and then bring all your burdens and cares and troubles, and lay them down at His dear feet, and go and live a happy, joyful life, saying, as I will say, and close:

"All that remains for me
Is but to love and sing,
And wait until the angels come
To bear me to my King."

—C. H. Spurgeon.

THY WAY, NOT MINE.

A Trust-Feeling Heart to Guide Our Way Through Life.

"All things work together for good to them who love God," and again, "No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." This is God's promise to us, His children. What more can we ask? And what a blessed assurance of a Heavenly Father's watchful care and loving, watchful care over us all the days of our lives. Yes, in all things, every little, insignificant event of our lives has its own bearing on the [illegible] part, in His plan for us. [illegible] "Why, then, these trials and sorrows, these shattered hopes and broken plans?" How long do you think you could bear a continued strain of [illegible] of never meeting a [illegible] by temptation? How could you possibly know how true a helper you could make if never brought face to face with the enemy? Suppose we had been left to plan out our own life and wander through this world. What should we do? Which [illegible] way do we turn in our extremity lest we make a mistake? What a rest is the knowledge that a wise, loving God has saved us from this, and planned it all for us.

When we reach that point in our lives (and it comes to us all, sooner or later) when all human planning seems at a standstill and we are hedged in on every side, not knowing, in our weakness and distress, which way to turn, then we can look to our Father to "lift up" the light of His countenance upon our pathway, to lead us safely out, as did the pillar of fire and of cloud the children of Israel, never failing, if we but follow on.

Let us, then, trust His guiding hand, praying for strength, lest, in our blind-headed waywardness, we thwart His purpose.

Let us take Him at His Word and cast from us the feeling that perhaps some things may work for good, but live in the belief that every thing will work together for our good, because He has told us so.—Christian at Work.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

HOME-MADE HAT-RACK.

It Is Pretty and Serviceable and Also Inexpensive.

I have a long narrow hall, and how to make room for the belongings that are always a necessity in such a room was a problem to me. It was too narrow to permit me to use the hall-racks that are usually sold in shops. Finally I planned and made one that has been copied extensively. It may be as large, ornamental and expensive as fancy dictates or purse permits. Mine is thirty-four inches across the top. A gilt hook is screwed to each of the upper points and one in the center at the bottom. They are sold at ten cents per dozen at the stores. These are hung over similar ones, put in the studding at the proper height. Two or three boards must be glued together to shape the rack. Give plenty of time to dry and become perfectly hard. Have the surface dressed smoothly on each side. The illustration shows the form.

PRETTY HAT-RACK.

Wardrobe hooks are screwed in at the places indicated and a mirror twelve inches square is set in the center. The mirror edges are beveled one inch. The wood is sandpapered and filled on both sides with a preparation called "wood-filler" that makes a solid, smooth surface. When dry give a number of coats of common white house-paint, the more the better; but allow each to dry and dress with sandpaper between each coat. Then paint any decorative design, flowers, or a flight of birds against the blue sky; a river scene with sky and hills in the distance, with reeds, rocks and grasses and water-fowl in the foreground. Directly under the rack on the floor is an ordinary drain tile, the end placed in a tin pan a little larger than the tile. This I painted inside and out, and after it was dry gilded the outside of the rim and also the top edge of the tile and an inch band near the top. The body may be decorated in any desired style. When done I set the tile in the pan and placed a large sheep sponge in the bottom to absorb the drippings from wet umbrellas, etc. This may be set upon blocks of different sizes so arranged as to make terraces or steps, and painted to represent white marble or stone. The entire cost is not one-third the price of a hall-rack bought from the furniture store; besides, it is out of the way in sweeping and occupies no space. One can easily be designed to fill a certain space by the joining of the boards in the proper way.—American Agriculturist.

DRESSING THE CHILDREN.

It Is a Matter That Interests Every Young Mother.

The fall is the season of the year when the greatest care should be exercised in clothing our little ones.

These October days with their fickle sun and penetrating winds are well adapted to the generation of colds, sore throats and other ailments that, once contracted, may linger throughout the winter. The feet must be well protected. Paper-soled shoes are not best for girls or boys at any season of the year. Neither are the heavy double soles. The latter style tires the feet and does much toward giving the wearer a heavy, disagreeable step. But there is a compromise between these two extremes.

It is a shoe made of Dongola for the top and faced with straight goat. The sole is the thickness of the ladies' walking boot and it has a spring heel. The latter is something all mothers would do well to adopt. It prevents weak ankles and strengthens the muscles of the lower limbs. Children should be kept in these flat-soled boots up to the age of thirteen or fourteen.

The children's dresses this fall are unusually beautiful.

The prevailing fashion seems still to be full skirts plaited on short waists with full sleeves and sash belt.

Plaids are very popular and come in all colors and a variety of styles. Let us begin at the foundation of a child's wardrobe and consider what is the most sensible, yet inexpensive, apparel that a child can wear.

First of all comes the undervest. It is of ribbed stockinet, high about the neck, but sleeveless; for, until really cold weather is here, the long-sleeved vests are not a necessity. Nor should woolen drawers be put on till the winter weather. Select instead wool stockings with cotton feet. The all-wool stockings are often productive of chilblains, but this new kind of hose is a very good one.

There is one thing that one should be particular about, and that is the garter. Do not under any circumstances give a child the round garter. It not only spoils the shape of the leg, but often times is worn so tight as to impair the circulation of the blood, which in time will lead to serious difficulties. The stocking supporter is the safest and best method of holding the stocking in place. Almost every mother is familiar with it. It is a piece of elastic fastened at the side of the underwaist and catching with a buckle into the top of the stocking. It not only holds the stocking securely, but has a tendency to strengthen the back of the child, who at an early age inclines to stoop.

A corset waist is undeniably a good addition. It takes the place of the boned waist and can be laundered beautifully. The use of this waist, which is of linen, heavily corded, is to keep the weight of the child's clothes from the back and hips. There are buttons sewed with tape into the waist, so that to pull them off is almost an impossibility. These buttons are for fastening the skirts and petticoats on. Very pretty flannel skirts can be bought. They are of red and white worsted, hand-crocheted in the shell pattern. These take the place of the short flannel skirt and are warmer and wear better.

All wool is so soft and silky that a skirt of it is very pretty and will be most serviceable for fall wear.

A tasteful frock is a combination of blue velvet and red and blue plaid. It is [illegible] of an imported [illegible]. The skirt is full and of the plaid material, with a plaited front of the plain [illegible].

The waist is made of blue, with the [illegible] laid in little plaits to the shoulder and gathered into the band at the [illegible].

[illegible] the back and the front of the waist are finished in this way and the [illegible] is very pretty. The sleeves are [illegible] full from the shoulders into a [illegible] of plain blue at the wrists. Such a [illegible] very inexpensive, but quite as

[illegible]

Dressing children has really become an art.

The latest thing in cloaks for fall wear is a little reefing-jacket in dark blue. It is of the fleece-lined Bedford cloth, made double-breasted and edged with a silk cord of white and blue. The collar can be turned up about the ears, and is lined with white Astrakhan. The cuffs are also of that and the buttons, of white pearl, are sewed through and through. It is a very stunning little coat and just exactly what is needed for fall.

A simple blue sailor is prettier for a young girl than a plain round hat. The sailor hats, in felt and tarpaulins, are more popular for school girls than any other style.

A fascinating school-bag is made of strong burlaps with a colored border of red, blue and brown. This burlaps is about fifteen inches in length and nine inches in width, and forms the body of the bag. On one side is the monogram and on the other, worked in dark-red silk, is a conventional design. The bag is lined with dark-blue surah and the handles are of leather. There is a very convenient little pocket sewed to the lining, which may be used for car-fare and stamps.—N. Y. World.

TWO USEFUL ARTICLES.

An Umbrella Case and a Writing Board—Any One Can Make Them.

The cuts accompanying this article represent two very valuable conveniences that can easily be made at home. No. 1 is a hanging case for umbrellas, canes or parasols. Make it of an oblong square of duck, linen, canvas or cretonne. If the material is very stiff no lining will be necessary, but if not sufficiently heavy to hang smoothly and hold the strain, line it, after you have made the pockets with something stiff. Cut your three pockets long and large enough for the umbrellas you have, and bind them round with fancy colored braid, fastening them only except at the top where the braid should be machine-stitched on.

Baste the pockets to the foundation, slightly gathering them at the bottoms, and stitch them on by machine along the edge of the braid. Stitch the same style of braid all round for a border, sewing the lining to the foundation with it if there is one. Ornament with two handsome ribbon bows, and provide with two cord loops behind the bows, to hang up by.

Fig. 2 represents a neat little writing board which was invented by a young French lady, for an invalid's use. It consists of a plain, smooth board about thirteen by twenty-four inches. Cover it neatly with a piece of dark blue or green ladies' cloth, flannel or baize, on both sides, lapping the edges of both across the width of the board, and fastening them with small, brass-headed tacks. A blotting pad is kept in place by the four little corner pieces noticeable, which may be either of cloth or leather, tacked on by small brass-headed tacks. The other various pockets are also made either of leather or cloth, tacked on, and may be cut in size and shape according to the judgment of the maker for holding envelopes, note paper, stamps, etc. The small ink-bottle is secured by means of straps of cloth or leather, and the pen-wiper may also be made fast. A strip of leather is tacked down to hold the pen, pencil, knife, etc., and thus a pretty, convenient and inexpensive writing board is completed, which any invalid could use either if able to sit in a chair or compelled to lie on a couch.—Ohio Farmer.

CHOICE EXTRACTS.

—You can never regret saying a kind word or doing a loving act; you may bitterly regret having done neither.—Standard.

—If you can only convince people that you are alarmed about them, it won't be long before they will be concerned about themselves.—Ram's Horn.

—Deal reverently with God's word. It is wiser to confess our ignorance of the meaning of obscure passages of Scripture, than to show the greatest skill in making them support our cherished opinions.—United Presbyterian.

—Hours, once dead, can never be resuscitated. Among all the drops of dew that fall on the grave there will not be one tear of repentance. Slipping off the embankment of eternity we can never clamber back.—Talmage, in N. Y. Observer.

—We may defer an act, but we can not defer a duty. The grammar of duty has no future tense. Deferring is not always procrastinating. It may be one's duty to defer, but it is never one's duty to procrastinate. Deferring calls for wisdom. A fool can procrastinate. "Some day" may be the right time, and again it may be no time. The man who promises to do a present duty some day, is often told that "some day" may be too late. But some day always is too late for what duty demands now.—S. S. Times.

—In all your Christian thinking get at the heart of things and cultivate the most immediate relations with God's word and work. Get into close personal contact with reality. No "go-betweens," nothing between you and the Divine reality! Work on straight lines, not roundabout curves; straight to God, and straight to God's thought. Be satisfied with nothing less than this. Let your daily mental toil be simply this—thinking over God's thoughts. Away with human glosses as substitutes for the Divine verities. Let men help you as they may; let God teach you as He only can. And then thinking over God's thoughts speak them as His.—Christian Union.

ADS. QUEER AND QUAINT.

The following inscription appears on the board above the door of a New South Wales back-blocks bush inn: "Meal, two shillings; square meal, half-a-crown; perfect gorge, a bob."

The St. Joseph, Mo., Opera-House people are advertising for a young man to take a small part in a play who may be deficient in good looks and form, but must understand milking a cow.

Some of the advertisements in the elevated cars in New York are funnier than was intended. One reads, "Cockroaches Killed Emotionally" (this is intended to be facetious); then it gravely adds, "Water-bugs, rats and mice for sale everywhere."

A curious advertisement which appears in one of the English papers states: "Philanthropist—A lady would be pleased to hear from any benevolent person willing to assist her in procuring the necessary funds for the professional training of an intelligent young man who is compelled against his inclination to earn his living in trade. Please communicate," etc.

An enterprising book-seller in the West has adopted as his sign a huge book, with title, sign, and elaborate lettering in many colors. One side is inscribed thus:

ANY DETAILS BOOK, WHERE PRINTED, IN LANGUAGE, ON SUBJECT, BY BODY, AT TIME, FOR PRICE, SUPPLIED:

Here is the work of a man who evidently believes that nine-tenths of the science of advertising lies in the construction of a catchy headline:

"WHO'VE 'EM UP?"

"Accidents will occur. Send stamp for interesting particulars. Illustrated. Don't take any chances. EDWARD D'APOCHRAL."

So far as the information contained in the advertisement is concerned, the article advertised is quite as likely to turn out to be a cemetery as an insurance company.

Some time since a hansom cab was driven at a very rapid pace along the Strand, and passers-by observed, to their horror, there were two men inside engaged in an apparently deadly conflict. Fearing that murder was about to be committed, they raised an alarm and some bold individuals rushed to the horse, and brought the animal to a standstill. Thereupon the two persons who, a minute before, seemed to be engaged in a life and death struggle, quietly leaned forward and distributed among the crowd some hand-bills inviting them to go to such and such a theater to witness a certain performance.

The following advertisement appears in a San Francisco paper: "Any lady on sending her address and twenty-five cents inclosed will receive a letter, 'How to be happy!' Is the absolute truth and no imposition; it tells you how to retain your husband's love, keep your youth and beauty, make home pleasant, get rich, and it does not cost; a little thought and effort combined will do it, which the letter clearly explains. It is worth hundreds of dollars, but follow the rule. It is by an old lady, who has made a close study of mankind for the last half a century and wants to do some good."

HOW AND WHAT TO COOK.

Tenderloins broil better if brushed over with olive oil.

Warm dishes for the table by immersing them in hot water, not by standing them on a hot stove.

Carrot and celery cooked in cream make a nice dish. The carrots should be cut in thin slices and boiled in salt water, the celery in inch lengths and then scalded. Add the milk thickened with corn-starch while boiling.

Deep frying is loudly inveighed against by those who have not the inclination to discover that less fat is absorbed by pieces of fish plunged in deep fat than those which are turned from side to side in a limited quantity, and that the intense heat of the fat cooks it more thoroughly than is possible by any other method.

Lemon Pie—Two lemons, three eggs, one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls corn-starch, one teacupful of raisins seeded and chopped, one quart of sweet milk. Grate the skin of the lemons and press out the juice, beat the eggs light and mix with the corn-starch and sugar, then stir all the ingredients together and bake in rich crusts.

Turnips are generally considered a coarse vegetable, but they may be delicately prepared. Boil them in plain water, then mash them, run them through a colander, and season them with salt, butter and cream; or they may be cut into little blocks, boiled in water which is drained off when they are done, and served with a dressing of white sauce.

Stewed fruit is far nicer cooked slowly in cold water than when put on in boiling water and cooked rapidly. Wash the fruit through several waters, as each successive washing makes it of a lighter and prettier color. A stick of cinnamon boiled with dried prunes improves their flavor, but peaches need no addition. Only wash them carefully and repeatedly, cook them slowly, add a few spoons of white sugar, and they will be nearly as nice as peach preserves.

Here is a recipe for chicken in cream: Select a plump, young chicken; clean it nicely and divide into pieces. Roll or dredge in flour, and fry to a golden brown. Arrange neatly on a dish and pour over it a dressing made of a cup of cream, brought to the boiling point, into which are stirred the beaten yolks of two eggs, salt and pepper and a few drops of lemon, being careful that it does not curdle or get too thick. Garnish with parsley, if liked, and serve at once.

Chocolate Marble Cake—One heaping cup sugar, one-third cup butter, one egg, one small cup milk, two small cups flour, one and a half teaspoons yeast powder. Take one-half of the mixture out into another dish and mix one cake of melted chocolate with it; flavor the light with vanilla; put one spoonful of the light, then one of the dark, into the pan until used up. Frosting—One cup powdered sugar, one and a half tablespoons milk, half teaspoonful strawberry flavoring.

One of the latest appliances of electricity appears in the form of an electric soldering-iron. It is a hollow cone of copper containing a metallic plug, between which and the inner surface of the cone is a coil of fine wire separated from the plug and the face of the cone by means of layers of asbestos.

The improvements which have been made in flash signaling have been most effectively supplemented by the device of Commander Percy Scott, which enables signals to be sent on the Morse system with great rapidity, and from a point where the present mechanical arrangement of shutters could not conveniently be employed. A Morse instrument can be added, so that the signals may be automatically recorded as in telegraphy.

A pocket telephone has been introduced in Berlin. The idea upon which its use is based is that electric bells are found everywhere, and there is no reason why they should not be used for telephoning as well. The pocket telephone is to be connected to the bell wires of hotels and hospitals as well as private houses, and it is claimed that people will be able to speak to distant places by simply taking their telephone out of their pockets as they would their watch.

Perhaps in no branch of industry have the benefits of electric welding been realized to a greater extent than in the welding of pipes for artificial ice machines, sugar refineries and general refrigerating purposes. In the old system fifteen minutes were required for each weld, which entailed the work of two blacksmiths and a dozen helpers, and frequently a serious loss of ammonia from imperfect welding. Now the weld is made in two minutes by a man and a boy, and costs two cents, instead of fifteen, as formerly.

A new departure has been taken in gifts intended for the edification of the public in the electric fountain which has been presented to Lincoln Park, Chicago. The fountain has over two hundred large jets, which are artistically intermingled, the highest of which throws a stream of water to a height of seventy-five feet. The fountain, when illuminated, is a most beautiful sight. The spray separates into innumerable drops, each of which reflects a glitter of the electric light, giving the effect of a shower of diamonds.

Of the novel applications of electricity there is no end. Bakers are now using the electric motor as a bread-mixer, and are thus enabled to do in four or five minutes an amount of work that would otherwise require hours of hand labor. A writer in a medical paper says he has frequently obtained much relief from facial neuralgia by applying an incandescent light to the part affected. He suggests that the lamp could also be used in poulticing advantageously. It could be laid over a flaxseed or other form of poultice and constant heat could be thus secured.

An ingenious device, which has been successfully operated in Chicago, is a window cleaner operated by electricity. Storage batteries and an electric motor are placed in a cart specially constructed for the purpose. The motor drives a portable window and sign cleaner which consists of a buffer attached to a long flexible shaft. This enables a workman to clean a window or polish a sign very quickly, whereas the same work, if done by hand, would require considerable time. The inventor of the device is taking contracts for cleaning the windows and brass signs on buildings throughout the business district of Chicago.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

Elizabeth, N. J., Oct. 16, 1890.

Pursuant to adjournment the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county met on Tuesday, Oct. 16, 1890, at 2:30 o'clock.

Present—Freeholders Bender, Briant, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Thompson, Trahon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West, Sullivan.—14.

Absent—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Hall, Russell—3.

Clerk of the board Charles E. Reed called the board to order in absence of the director, and William T. West was elected director pro tem.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and on the motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County.

Gentlemen—As guardian of the estate of Edward Duffy, a lunatic now confined in the Morris Plains asylum, I beg leave to report to your honorable body that the balance in my hands will only pay for the present quarter and I would therefore request that I be relieved from my bond now filed with you.

Yours very truly,
T. M. Kelly,
Guardian, ect., of Edward Duffy.

On motion of Freeholder Doty received and referred to committee on lunacy and county attorney.

Elizabeth, N. J., October 16, 1890.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union:

Gentlemen—I hereby desire to notify you that I am of the opinion and I do hereby certify in writing (as I am called on to do by the terms of the contract and specifications) that the work on Springfield avenue, New Providence township, is unnecessarily delayed, and that the contractor is wilfully violating the conditions of the contract and executing the same in bad faith, and I would respectfully suggest that the board notify the contractor to discontinue all work on said contract at once.

Very respectfully,
F. A. Dunham,
County engineer.

On motion of Freeholder Jones received and placed on file.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county:

Gentlemen—Your committee on Rantbridge would respectfully report and recommend that the present superstructure be replaced by a new iron beam deck bridge not to cost over ten hundred and fifty dollars.

Wm. T. West,
William J. Thompson,
James T. Pierson,
John C. Bender,
William H. Briant,
Committee.

Freeholder Littell moved it be received and recommendation adopted.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Elizabeth, N. J., October 16, 1890.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county:

Gentlemen—The committee appointed to investigate certain charges affecting the integrity of the county engineer and reflecting upon the administration of his office would respectfully report that a careful examination into the details and management of the county engineer's office fails to confirm or substantiate in a single particular any of the charges made or published in the public press. That in some cases the engineer has paid less and in others more for the services of certain of his assistants than he has received from the county is not denied, but this is in strict conformity with the terms and conditions of his appointment, and any apparent advantage or profit to him from this source is more than offset by the very large expenses, such as railroad transportation, carriage hire, office rent, materials, stationery, etc., incurred and made necessary by the employment of twenty or more men in various capacities on roads remote from each other and from the railroad by several miles, and for which the county neither allows nor has ever paid a farthing.

A statement of his receipts and disbursements checked off by vouchers and receipts examined by your committee and herewith submitted and made a part of this report shows that his net income for services on account of county roads from May 1889 to September 1890, a period of sixteen months, amounts to $2,660.74 or about $5 per day for such time and overtime (night work in office) as he has actually been employed on the work. As ten dollars per day is the minimum compensation charged for similar services, it will readily appear that the county's interest has not suffered by reason of its contract with Mr. Dunham. While the danger of his appointing incompetent men or more than are necessary to the proper prosecution of the work, is carefully guarded against by the fact that his appointments are subject to the approval of the board and every inspector is under the direct and personal supervision of a non-partisan committee responsible for and in charge of each road under contract.

The charge that the engineer has been paid for bridge work while under pay for county roads is also false and needs no other refutation than the simple statement that he is not a salaried officer of the county, and is paid at the rate of $8 per day for such time only as he is actually employed on the county roads. This does not preclude his doing outside work for the county or any one else. The only difference to the county is that it now pays $8 per day for bridge engineering that hitherto has cost ten dollars.

Your committee in order to make the investigation complete and satisfactory both to the public and the accused have justified themselves in going outside the limit of their appointment and have enlarged the scope of their inquiry so as to include all charges made against the engineer or the County Board in connection with the prosecution of the county road improvements.

In accordance with this determination and to this end your committee sent notices to Mr. F. L. Pope and others that they would hold a special meeting in order to hear any charges they wished to prefer against the county engineer or the Board of Freeholders.

Mr. D. C. Crane appeared, but was unable or unwilling to make any definite charges, although given every opportunity so to do. Mr. Pope did not appear but sent a letter herewith submitted, reiterating, on belief or hearsay, certain charges heretofore published under his name in the Elizabeth Journal, but failed to produce any proof or evidence helpful to your committee.

All the charges had been previously investigated and are not sustained by the facts.

Your committee are fully satisfied that the charges under investigation are not only unjust and unfair, but false and unsubstantiated by the facts.

They believe the county engineer is a faithful, honest and efficient public officer, sincerely striving without fear or favor to prosecute a great public improvement solely in the interest of the county and to secure the practical and reasonable fulfillment of the county road specifications in all their parts.

They believe the roads are being substantially and economically built and will yet prove his full and complete vindication.

COMMUNICATION.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

The family of the late Wm. E. Jones, of Somerset county, and a member of the board of chosen freeholders of Somerset county, requested me to invite the members of the board of chosen freeholders of Union county to his funeral on Thursday, Oct. 16, inst., at 2 o'clock, at his late residence, and 2:30 o'clock at First Baptist church, Plainfield, N. J.

Yours respectfully,
Alex. Titsworth.

Dated Oct. 15, 1890.

On motion of Freeholder Howard received and ordered filed.

RESOLUTIONS.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Somerset:

Gentlemen—The board of chosen freeholders of Union county desire to thank you for your cordial invitation to attend the funeral of our highly respected friend, William E. Jones, late a member of your board, and we regret that in consequence of a special meeting of our board, held at the time set for the funeral services, we were unable to attend.

Resolved, That the board of chosen freeholders of Union county extend their sympathy to the family of the late William E. Jones, and to the board of chosen freeholders of Somerset county, in the great loss they have sustained in the death of one who was so highly respected and loved.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek the clerk was instructed to send a copy to Mr. Alex. Titsworth, for board of freeholders, and family, and ordered filed.

By Freeholder Jones:

Whereas, The county engineer having certified to this board that the work on the county road, extending through the township of New Providence has been unnecessarily delayed by Thomas A. Nevins, the contractor thereof, and is also willfully violating some of the conditions and terms of his contract; therefore be it

Resolved, That the county attorney is hereby directed in behalf of this board to have prepared and served on said Thos. A. Nevins a proper notice specifying and directing said Nevins to at once comply with the directions and instructions of said county engineer or his inspector to remove from said work or other county road work in his charge, one, Mr. Fagan, now employed on said road by said Nevins, and to put on such a force of men and provide such material as the specifications call for, for the finishing of said road and push the same to completion without further delay, and that unless this is complied with to the satisfaction of said engineer a resolution will be passed at the next meeting of the board ordering him to discontinue and stop all work thereon and other means provided for the completion of said road according to the terms of his contract.

Freeholder Vanderbeek moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

ENTERTAINING CLIPPINGS.

A large number of carriages in cities are now supplied with rubber tires to prevent violent jolting and deafening clatter.

The struggle upon the question of opening the car window or not is characterized as the annual contest between the aerophobians and the aeromaniacs.

Rutgers College sophomores issued an order that their boots must be blacked by the freshmen. The latter collected the footgear and smeared the leather generously with green paint.

They have queer oyster suppers in Georgia. A Georgia paper says that a gentleman made a purchase of one hundred pounds of candy and one hundred pounds of fish for an oyster supper.

A crook at the Kansas State fair picked a woman's pocket and found in her purse three samples of dress goods, a recipe for making angel food, a hair-pin, two bread tickets, a package of court plaster and a nickel with a hole in it.

A Maine girl, finding it inconvenient to carry chewing gum with her, established stations in various parts of the the town, where she sticks her quids. One is a dry-goods store, one in the church choir, one in her own dining-room, one at a school and so on.

Fox-terriers are the latest fashionable craze for young ladies' pets, and dealers are scarcely able to supply the demand. A famous New York belle has one which is snow white, and wears neck ribbons which are daily changed to harmonize with the costumes of his mistress.

In an Episcopal church near Boston the other Sunday a lady in passing up the aisle caught her dress on the corner of a pew and tore it. As the process of tearing was very audible to the congregation, the feelings of the lady may be imagined when at that moment the clergyman began the service by reading the sentence: "Rend your heart and not your garments."

No objection was made to the marriage of a young Louisville couple; yet, for the sake of romance, they executed a sensational elopement. They met by appointment at three o'clock in the morning and boarded a locomotive for a country town. There they routed a justice out of bed in the small hours and were quickly made one. They then returned to the city, where the bride roused her parents and introduced her new husband.

A young married couple who moved out of a flat in Chicago the other day left behind them the following laundry list: Baby's clothes—Five white dresses, 2 collared dresses, 3 white skurts, 3 flannel skurts, 3 skurts, 2 bibs, 1 shoulder cape, 11 didies, 1 bonnet and cloak, 1 blow apron. Lena's clothes—One white skurt, 2 white shurts, 2 night gowns, 1 apron, 2 white dollars, 2 handkerchiefs, 2 napkins, 1 colored apron, 1 goss skurt, 1 suit underclothes, 3 wipe towels. Joe—One pair socks, 1 undershirt. The laundry bill tells its own story. Joe was the husband.

—An Omelette for Two: Beat two eggs, yolk and white, together in a bowl until very light. In a cup put one teaspoonful of corn starch and a scant half-teaspoonful of new milk, adding the milk very slowly, beating as you drop the mixture into the eggs also. A little chopped parsley and onion juice to flavor it; a scrape of butter in the frying-pan, and, when it "sizzles," pour in the mixture and shake until it forms. Turn the frothing sides of the omelette with a spoon, continually, into the center of the pan. In two minutes it should be done. Fold it over and dish, by covering the pan with a plate, and then turning the pan upside down.

WRITER AND PAINTER.

Prof. Charles F. Holder has written a life of Charles Darwin as a first volume in a series devoted to leaders of science.

An "Ecce Homo" in oil, now on exhibition in Stuttgart, is believed by some critics to be the one painted by Albert Durer in 1513.

Although Rosa Bonheur is in her sixty-eighth year, she is constantly occupied, and says she has enough work in her mind to fill two life-times. Her last picture sold for over $10,000.

A melancholy author went to Dumas and moaned that if he did not raise 300 francs he was afraid he would have to charcoal-smoke himself and his two children. Dumas rummaged his coffers at once, but could find only 200 francs. "But I must have three, or I and the little loves are lost," said the author. "Suppose you only suffocate yourself and one of them, then," said Dumas.

Canon Liddon left unfinished a biography of his friend and master, Dr. Pusey, on which he was engaged for several years. It is not known in what state the work has been left, but it may be assumed that Dr. Liddon, a most methodical worker, and one endowed with the valuable gift of a good handwriting, has left his papers in order, ready to be taken up by some faithful successor.

Mr. Henry Tate has offered to present to the English Nation fifty of the best paintings produced by National art during the last twenty years. Two other generous patrons of art guarantee $150,000 if the Government will furnish $125,000 more to purchase for the National Gallery three famous pictures: Holbein's "Ambassador," the largest of his works now in existence; the protrait of Admiral Pareja, by Velasquez; and a portrait by Moroni.

The National Gallery of England has bought three pictures from the collection shown by the Earl of Darnley in Manchester in 1857. One is a large painting by Tintoretto called "The Nursing of Hercules; or, The Origin of the Milky Way." Hermes, the messenger of the gods, brings the infant Hercules to Juno while she sleeps, hoping that the goddess will nurse him. But the jealous goddess wakes and repulses the baby, the milk falling from her breast and turns into stars. Two are by Paola Veronese and belonged to Queen Christina before entering the Orleans collection.

Peoples using four different languages are reading "Ben Hur," by reason of which General Lew Wallace is receiving between $4,000 and $5,000 a year royalty on his remarkable work. He is, of course, engaged on the book he began when Minister to Turkey, where the scene is laid. The theme is a contrast of the civilization of the occident and orient, or the influences of the different religions upon the growth of civilization. He has not christened it yet, and prefers not to do so till it is completed. The General is a slow worker, and works only when the inspiration seizes him. If it be midnight he will leave his bed and write till tired, then lay aside the manuscript till the spirit again moves.

NEXT THE HEAD.

Such a dear, but such a dunce,
Was the rosy little lass,
Perfectly content to be
At the foot of her small class.

Once we promised she should have Almost any thing she would
On the day when she could say
She above the others stood.

Naught she seemed to heed the wish,
Loitering on the schoolward way,
Never looking in her book,
All absorbed in endless play.

Judge then, our surprise, at last,
Each day slipping like a bead,
When she exultantly announced
Next the head she stood, indeed.

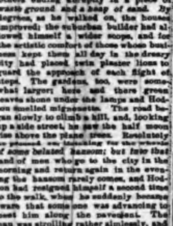
Next the head! Enough! Enough!
She should choose that afternoon
From the dolls that moved their eyes,
Said mamma, and sang a tune.

Who, it happened then, we asked
In our scholar's class might be—
O, the innocent blue eyes!
"Rosy Gray," she said, "and me."
—Harriet Prescott Spofford, in Boston Globe.

THE IRON MAID.

How Its Arms Closed About the Neck of the Collector.

FRANK HODSON swore. Before him stretched the long suburban street, its dreary distance marked by rows of gas lamps; behind him a waste land—once a garden, now a vast rubbish-heap—and from the brick-fields beyond came a faint, sickly smell of burning bricks; and on the railway embankment, built up above squalid gardens and dismal yards, he could see a red star gliding swiftly away from him. His last train had gone, and the dull beat of the policeman's feet echoed in the silence. Nine miles from London, and not a chance of a hansom! The recording angel doubtless took in the situation at a glance and erased the execration in the approved manner. Hodson had spent the evening with a friend, and, aided by tobacco and whisky and soda, the hours had fled so quickly that Frank, looking suddenly at the clock, found that he had but four brief minutes in which to reach the station, half a mile away. He did his best, but by a fatality the train was punctual, and the unfortunate man was left stranded, with no alternative but a nine-mile walk through streets deserted as those of Pompeii. As he mused dolefully over the prospect a porter came out and locked the station door, and from him Hodson obtained a brief direction as to the shortest way to town. He set out, wearily, looking at the stretch of lamps vanishing in perspective; and as he walked street after street branched off to right or left, some far-reaching and others ending abruptly in a piece of waste ground and a heap of sand. By degrees, as he walked on, the houses improved; the suburban builder had allowed himself a wider scope, and for the artistic comfort of those whose business keeps them all day in the dreary city had placed twin plaster lions to guard the approach of each flight of steps. The gardens, too, were somewhat larger; here and there green leaves shone under the lamps and Hodson smelled mignonette. The road began slowly to climb a hill, and, looking up a side street, he saw the half moon rise above the plane trees. Resolutely he pressed on, looking for the wheels of some belated hansom; but into that land of men who go to the city in the morning and return again in the evening the hansom rarely comes, and Hodson had resigned himself a second time to the walk, when he suddenly became aware that some one was advancing to meet him along the pavement. The man was strolling rather aimlessly, and looking about him; he was, therefore, no policeman; he wore a silk hat; he was, therefore, respectable. The two men met each other under a lamp, and, strangely enough, found each an acquaintance.



"THEY ARE INSTRUMENTS OF TORTURE."

"Mr. Mathias, I think?" said Hodson.

"Quite so. And you are Frank Hodson. You know, you are a man with a Christian name, so I won't apologise for my familiarity. But may I ask where you are going?"

Hodson explained the situation. "I think I have only about five miles further," he concluded.

"Nonsense; you must come home with me. My house is close by. In fact, I was just taking my evening walk when we met. Come along; I dare say you will find a make-shift bed easier than a five-mile walk."

Frank suffered himself to be led along, feeling a little surprised at so much geniality from a casual acquaintance at the club. Mr. Mathias took him up a side-street, and stopped at a door in a high wall. They passed through the still, moon-lighted garden, and into an old red-brick house with many gables, and Hodson sighed with relief as he fell back into an easy chair. There was a shaded lamp which threw a bright, white light upon the table where it stood, but left the room in shadow, and Hodson could only see that it was long and low and seemed filled with objects which might be furniture. Mr. Mathias sat down in a second arm-chair and looked about him with a curious smile. He was an odd-looking man, clean-shaven, and white to the lips, apparently between fifty and sixty.

"Now I have got you here," he began, "I must inflict my hobby upon you. You knew I was a collector? Yes, I have devoted myself for years to collecting curiosities, which I think are really curious. But we must have a better light."

He advanced to the middle of the room and lighted a lamp which hung from the ceiling, and as the bright light flashed round the wick from every corner and space there seemed to start a horror. Great wooden frames connected with ropes and pulleys stood against the wall; little tables glittered with bright steel instruments, carelessly put down as if ready for use; a screw and vise loomed from one corner, and in another was a saw with cruel jagged teeth.

"Yes," said Mr. Mathias, "they are, as you suggest, instruments of torture. Some—many, I may say—have actually been used for that purpose; a few are reproductions after ancient examples. Those knives were used for flaying; that frame is a rack, and a fine specimen. But these are all European; the Orientals, of course, are much more ingenious. There are the Chinese contrivances; you have heard of the 'heavy death?' It is my hobby, this sort of thing. It gives me the greatest of luxuries—the luxury of horror. But I must show you my latest acquisition. Come into the next room."

Frank Hodson followed Mr. Mathias. The weariness of the walk, the late hour and the strangeness of the surroundings made him feel like a man in a dream—nothing would surprise him. The second room was like the first, full of strange, ghastly instruments; but beneath the lamp was a platform, and on it a figure. It was a large figure of a woman cast in some dark metal, her arms stretched forth and a smile upon her lips; it might have well been intended for a Venus, and yet about it there was a deadly look.

Mr. Mathias looked at the thing complacently. "Quite a work of art, isn't it?" he said. "It's the Iron Maid. I got it from Germany; it was only unpacked this afternoon; indeed, I have not yet opened the letter of advice. You see that very small knob above the breast? Well, the patient was bound to the maid, that knob was pressed, and the arms slowly tightened round his neck. You can imagine the result."

As Mr. Mathias talked he stood on the platform and patted the figure affectionately. Hodson had turned away, and was gazing abstractedly about him. He did not hear a slight click; it was not much louder than the tick of a clock; but he heard a sudden whir—the noise of machinery in motion. He turned around. And never has he forgotten the anguish and the terror on Mr. Mathias' face as those relentless arms tightened about his neck, or the shriek that ended suddenly in a choking groan. The whirring noise had suddenly changed to a heavy droning sound. Frank tore with all his might at the iron arms, and strove to wrench them apart, but utterly in vain. The head had bent down a little, and the iron lips were upon the lips of Mathias. It was five minutes before the Iron Maid unclosed her arms.

The letter which accompanied the figure was found unopened upon the table. It was read at the inquest. The German firm especially warned Mr. Mathias to be extremely careful in touching the Iron Maid, as the machinery had been oiled and put in thorough working order.—St. James' Gazette.

COLONEL GASCOM.

His First Essay at Humor and How It Ended.

[Written for This Paper.]

OFTEN, while attending church fairs Colonel Gascom, editor of the Sarton Herald, was called upon to make a speech. The Colonel always responded in his happiest vein, and as the ladies connected with the fairs were all anxious to see their names in print, his effort was loudly applauded, and he was complimented so highly (by the aforesaid ladies) that it began to dawn on him that he was throwing time away writing dull editorials when his real talent demanded he should be a humorist. And a humorist he would be! One day he spent many hours preparing a humorous article, which he was sure would stagger his readers. At the same time he thought it best to try it on the foreman, who seemed to be a very intelligent man.

Colonel (to foreman, who has just entered for copy)—John, I have here an article entitled "Autumnal Reveries." It is humorous.

Foreman (who, by-the-by, is looking for an increase in his salary)—I always did say you ought to write humorous articles. You are so witty in conversation.

Colonel—Thank you, John. I would like very much to read my article to some one before venturing to publish it.

Foreman (smelling a rat, but still bearing in mind the raise)—I would be most pleased to hear it.

The Colonel reads the article. When the editor is not looking at him his foreman's face is as joyless as a closed summer resort; but should the editor look up from his copy he would find his face wreathed in sunny smiles. There are only a few things short of crime a man won't do when he wants his salary raised.

Colonel (after reading the article)—Now, John, I want your candid opinion. What do you think of it?

Foreman (the wicked man)—That, sir, is one of the wittiest productions of the age. (Laughs long and loud.) Why, sir, that lays over any thing Mark Twain ever wrote. Very funny—very!

Colonel (handing him the copy)—Put it on the first page. And—John!

Foreman (an unaccountable thrill of anticipation coming over him)—Yes, Colonel.

Colonel—I have been thinking, John, that you are worth more than twelve dollars a week to me. Hereafter I will make it fifteen.

Foreman—O, thank you! thank you! (To himself as he goes out)—Taffy beats strikes every time!

At twelve o'clock Colonel Gascom went out for his midday lunch, but when he got as far as the door, he observed dark clouds gathering, and, fearing rain, he went back to his office for his umbrella. The Colonel's office is separated from the composing-room by a thin partition which does not reach to the ceiling, and as he heard his name mentioned in conversation in the composing-room, and feeling pretty sure the foreman was regaling the compositor with the many good points with which his "Autumnal Reveries" abounded, he resolved to play eavesdropper. The following is what he heard:

"HOLD ON! THAT'S A DEAD STEAL."

Foreman (in a disgusted tone)—I ain't a bit hungry.

Compositor—What's the matter—stomach out of order?

Foreman—The old man read a sketch of his to me which he claimed was humorous.

Compositor—What! That old codger trying to be funny!

Colonel (behind the partition, much surprised)—What's this! What's this!

Foreman—The old duffer has gone out to lunch, so I'll give you a sample of it. (Reaches up and lifts a wad of MSS. from the imposing stone).

Compositor (burying his face in a pail of beer to brace up for the ordeal)—Does the old fool say any thing about the sere and yellow leaf or the melancholy days?

Foreman—That's just what he does say. Listen. (Reads)—"Autumnal Reveries. Although I have not been requested to do so by the surviving relatives, yet I think I autumn make (groans from the comp., who seeks relief in the beer pail) a few remarks at the grave, as it were, of the departed season. As an inducement to the reader to read on, I promise in this sketch to snub the sere and jaundiced leaf and not to throw the reader into a melancholy daze by referring to them at all, except to mention that the melancholy days have actually arrived in our city, and that they claim to be the saddest." Can any thing be sadder than these tough puns? Did you ever hear any thing quite as bad as those puns?

Compositor—Never in all my life, and I've read London Punch frequently.

Foreman—And just to think I had to laugh at that stuff!

Colonel (to himself)—And that's the man whose salary I raised three dollars!

Compositor—I guess the poor devil is losing his mind.

Foreman—Brace yourself for another dose. (Reads)—"This is the season when the considerate road agent warms the shivering passengers on the Western train by covering them with a revolver and—"

Compositor—Hold on! That's a dead steal. I read that somewhere.

Foreman—I would say the whole thing was stolen if it wasn't so poor.

Compositor—I hope he hasn't got off any old coal-dealer jokes or stove up chestnuts about fixing up the stove-pipe.

Foreman—He hasn't, eh? Pass that beer. Just listen to this: "These are to the man who has to put up a stove not so much the piping days of peace as the piecing days of pipe, which reminds me that the coal question is up for discussion. The price of coal will go up, but the weight will remain stationary at seventeen hundred pounds to the ton. Very fuel weigh over seventeen hundred and fifty pounds and the man who expects more must be something of a fuel himself. Now is the time to get coaled before the weather does."

Compositor—Hold on! Break away! Turn over a few leaves and see if you can't strike something fresh.

Colonel Gascom (grimly)—Oh, I'll strike something fresh in a few minutes.

Foreman (turns over three pages and reads)—The Johnnie who has been at the seaside for the past three months studying, with a powerful glass, the passing ships that happen to be in a line with the shapely female bather with short skirts, has now deserted the seaside, having purchased a bald-headed ticket—presumably from a scalper—can now be found with a double-barreled opera-glass focusing the ballet-dancer, whose costume is not unlike that of the Cheyenne bride, consisting principally of a six-inch grin and three streaks of paint, and an occasional paste diamond."

Compositor (shouting)—Shut down the brakes. Pull up where you are! I'm only human, and I can't stand any more of that stuff.

Colonel Gascom (entering suddenly with a bound and yell of rage)—Come on, both of you ungrateful whelps! Take that! (smites the foreman with an old electrotype, nearly scalping him, and almost simultaneously kicking the compositor into one corner, upsetting a galley rack with ten or twelve columns of live type. The foreman and the compositor rally, and a general closing up ensues, when a policeman rushes in and arrests the trio).

Next day, the judge, having heard the story, honorably discharged the foreman and the compositor, and fined Colonel Gascom twenty-five dollars. It is useless to say that a close observation of the Herald would fail to reveal a humorous article by Colonel Gascom, entitled "Autumnal Reveries."

A True Tale of a Strictly Fashionable Summer Resort.

Pauline—a maiden.
Fitzwilliam—a man (that is what is called a man at college, i. e., an eighteen-year-old boy.)

She—Fitzwilliam, it is now a month since first we met, and during that time we have been much together.

He (languidly)—Even so; a month. By Jove! it seems like a year, doesn't it?

She—During that time we have been on the most familiar terms. I have done every thing I could to amuse you, and make your stay here agreeable. I have mended your tennis blazer; I have sung to you in the pale moonlight. I have taken you out numberless times in my naphtha launch, and likewise in my village cart. I have had papa send you wines and cigars from the city, and I have spent my entire personal allowance in presents for you. I have permitted you to kiss me at reasonable intervals, and have not insisted on your telling me a dozen times a day that you loved but me alone.

He (drowsily)—I guess you're right, Pauline.

She—Now, don't you think that it would be just and fair for you to make some sacrifice for my sake? Not such a great sacrifice; just something to prove that you really have an affection for me.

He (royally)—Pauline, I will be more than just and fair. I will be generous. I will give you—ah—permission to tell the other girls at the hotel that I have kissed you.—Tom Hall, in Life.

Mrs. Tangle—The cook is so independent that it's often hard to say whether she is boss or I. Indeed, it's only once a month that I feel sure about it.

Mr. Tangle—And when is that?

Mrs. Tangle—Oh, when I pay her her wages.—Light.

HOUSEWIVES' DUTIES.

Good housewives all who daily war
Against King Dirt and General Muss,
Should always be in dust—in dust—
Should always be indust-rious.

And we, though toiling busily
Through sunlit or through gloomy hours,
Should not neglect our men—our men—
Should not neglect our men-tal powers.

We should not use the goods of earth
As mere utilitarians do;
But we should con—should con—should con—
Should con-template earth's beauties, too.

If we have toiled beyond our strength,
And stolen hours from sleep away,
We should make rest—make rest—make rest—
Make rest-itution while we may.

Now housewife, pray take this advice,
Its wisdom you'll perceive at length,
Don't be a fool—a fool—a fool—
A fool-ish-waster of your strength.

'Tis hard to live without the pale
Of true success, and toil alway;
You should get in—get in—get in—
Get in-terest on what you pay.

Now, blessings be on housewives all
Whose steps in duty's path are bent,
And may they march beneath the ban—
The ban—the ban-ner of content.

ON A FAST FREIGHT.

The Wild Trip of a Heavy Train Down a Grade.

EACH man settled back into his seat, and the boys began their yarn-spinning. Railroading was the subject, and each had something to say of terrible wrecks or hair-breadth escapes.

"I railroaded some myself," said a stranger sitting over by the door, and who so far had taken no apparent interest in the stories told by the boys. "I quit several years ago, after some years of hard work, for I was firing, and you all know that's no child's play. I ain't ashamed to say that our trip took all the ambition out of me. I was on the Santa Fe road, running between Las Vegas and Wallace, and part of our run was over the Glorietta mountain, the pass by which the road crosses the Rocky mountains. From the top of the pass to Lamy junction was forty-five miles, and the grade 185 feet to the mile. The road is carried through canyons and along the mountain side, and in no place is there a quarter of a mile of straight track until you get down to Canyon siding. From there to the junction is six miles of pretty straight track, but the same heavy grade. There was no air-brake on freight cars in them days, and the boys used to have to set 'em pretty tight to keep from going down too fast. Any of you been over that part of the road?" and the speaker looked inquiringly at his audience.

"I have," said a tall, powerful-looking brakeman, "and I would not care to twist on that mountain. It beats any thing I ever worked on, and I've been on some tough mountain roads."

"It was in the winter," said the stranger, resuming his story. "I was firing for George Young. Our engine was a heavy twelve-wheeler, and to her great weight alone I attribute our escape. Freight traffic was very heavy on the road at this time and nearly every train was in two sections. We would run two sections to the top of the hill and then one engine would take both sections down the mountain. On the day of which I speak we left Las Vegas before daylight, pulling the first section of a heavy train, and made it all right to the head of the pass. We were the first train over the road that day and about two inches of snow had fallen, so the track was pretty slippery. When the other train had arrived we made the two sections in one and were ready for our trip down the mountain. The other engine helped us over the pitch of the hill and then ran back to Los Vegas. We had hardly got over the hill when the train began running pretty fast and George whistled for brakes while I set the tank brake as hard as I could. We could see the three brakemen doing their best to check the train, but their efforts were of no avail, for when three miles from the top of the hill we were running forty miles an hour and could do nothing to check our headlong speed. Just below the Wylie bridge is a curve and then we saw that the caboose was gone. Seeing they could not check the train, the brakemen had crawled back to the caboose and pulled the pin, thus severing their connection with the train, knowing that they could soon stop the caboose with the powerful brake with which it was supplied. They had left us to our fate, expecting to find us somewhere at the bottom of the canyon, as it did not seem possible that we could keep the track at the high speed we had now attained. Relieved of the caboose the speed of the train increased and the swing of the engine made it hard for us to keep from being thrown out of the cab. Our only chance lay in staying with the engine, as jumping was out of the question. On the one hand was the canyon, five hundred feet deep, and on the other the mountain rose like the wall of a house, and we would roll under the train and be cut to pieces. All this time George had kept the whistle going and this, together with the roar of the train, could be heard fifty miles off. It was a cold morning but neither of us needed an overcoat for the perspiration stood on our faces in large drops. 'We may pull through yet,' I shouted to George. He made no reply but the look of despair on his face showed me he did not believe it.

"We were now running at the rate of sixty miles an hour and it seemed to me that the engine would leave the track every moment. At Canyon siding was a gravel bank where the gravel train used to load up between trains, and in loading, the flat cars stood on the main track just below the switch. What my feelings were as we neared the end of the canyon and shot around the last curve into the straight track I can not describe, for there on the main line stood the gravel train of seven cars and the engine nowhere in sight. We afterwards learned she had gone back to the junction for water while the cars were being loaded. This they had plenty of time to do, according to the time-card, but we were nearly an hour ahead of time. The flats were left in charge of a young man named Webber, a new arrival from the East. As soon as he saw us coming he jumped on the cars and let off the brakes, and the cars began to move at a rate that soon unloaded what gravel they had on board. On dashed the flying freight train, past the gravel bank and the group of frightened laborers, while half a mile ahead the flats were skipping along with the speed of an express train. Webber was holding on to a brake wheel, once in awhile looking back at the train that seemed to pursue him like fate.

"The six miles to Lamy junction were covered in less than as many minutes, and we rushed like a cyclone through the yard and past the side track where the work train engine had sought safety not five seconds too soon. The flats were now about one hundred yards ahead. About two miles below the junction was a rise in the grade of about eighty feet to the mile. The length of the grade was about three miles, and we had strong hopes, if nothing happened, of stopping her by the time we got to the top. It was evident the flats could not go much further at the terrific speed they had attained, for they were jumping three feet clear of the track, and the only wonder was that the couplings held. Suddenly like a flash the head car jumped the track and the rest followed like a flock of sheep, and with an awful crash piled up into kindling, burying poor Webber under the pile. It came so suddenly that before I could realize what had happened the wreck was left behind and we were dashing up the other grade. For the first mile I could see no difference in our speed, and then the grade began to tell. Slower and slower moved the train, and half a mile from the end of the up grade we regained control of it and had to steam to the top of the hill. As we came to a stop I looked at the clock in the cab. It indicated 7:45. We had left the head of the pass at 7:05 and had run forty-nine miles in forty minutes. George now gave his engine an examination, but with the exception of the right wrist-pin she was as cool as could be expected. Soon afterward the yard engine came out and helped us back into the yard, where the train was overhauled and the cause of the runaway found. There were only six good brakes in the entire train of fifty-two cars.

"As soon as we got into the yard a party was made up to look for poor Webber. We were soon at the scene of the wreck, where half a dozen men were already at work. It was the worst wreck I ever saw; nothing but a pile of kindling and the brave fellow was almost at the bottom. Every one worked with a will, but it was only after two hours' hard work that the broken and crushed form of poor Webber was laid on a mattress in the little tent at the side of the road. He was still alive, but died in a very short time. Every bone in his body was broken. His mother had arrived in Las Vegas only a special train brought her down in care of the superintendent, and there were few dry eyes in that crowd as kind hands assisted the broken-hearted mother from the coach and over to the little tent where lay her only boy. Mrs. Webber was cared for by the company, who gave her a life annuity. The boys took up a subscription and placed a handsome granite shaft over poor Webber, who was buried close to the wreck. After the inquest and funeral we went back to Las Vegas and I took my time. A few mornings after, this is what I saw in the looking-glass."

The stranger lifted his hat. The hair on the front of his head was white as snow, while the rest was jet black.

"What became of the caboose? They slacked it down to Canyon siding and left it there and then skipped. They were never seen in that part of the country again."—Detroit Free Press.

ROUSING THE LION.

Why Mr. Terry Will Paint the Streets of Detroit Red with Blood.

"I was a-going along," he said within hearing of a Detroit Free Press man as he stood at the sergeant's desk in the Woodbridge street station—"I was a-going along, saying nothing to nobody, when a feller as was a-standing in a doorway calls out to me:

"'Hello! Pumpkins, how's your ma?'

"My name is not Pumpkins; my name is Terry."

"'I see,'" said the sergeant.

"And my ma has been dead for twenty-three years."

"Yes."

"And in a very genteel way I explained to the stranger that he had made a mistake."

"Yes."

"But what does he do but beg my pardon and call me Mr. Hayseed. That is not my name; my name is Terry. He calls me Hayseed, and wants to know how the squash crop is coming on."

"I see."

"I saw that he was mistaken, and I tells him so, but what does he do but begs my pardon again and call me Mr. Turniptop, and ask the price of cabbages."

"I see. You hit him?"

"No. I comes down here for advice."

"Advice about what?"

"As to whether he was making fun of me and I should give him the all-firedest licking a feller ever got."

"Why, certainly."

"Very well. I will return. I will smash him. I will knock his head off. I will render him a wreck."

He started out and was gone ten minutes. Then he returned and said:

"Couldn't find him, but I'll leave my coat, vest, collar and tie here and go out and walk up and down and let some other feller tackle me. I think there's a feller on the corner now who'll call me Mr. Cornstalk and want to know if the price of tater-bugs has riz, and you telephone for a doctor and watch my smoke."

Invention of Steel Pens.

Mr. Joseph Gillott was a Birmingham working jeweler in 1830. One day he accidentally split one of his fine steel tools, and being suddenly required to sign a receipt, not finding his quill pen at hand, he used the split tool as a ready substitute. This happy accident led to the idea of making pens of metal. It was carried out with secrecy and promptitude, and the pens of Gillott became famous. The manufacture of metal pens has been as important as any invention connected with business and education since that of printing. There are now numerous firms which produce as many pens every day as all the geese in England could have supplied in a year. There is still, however, a large demand for quills and quill pens; but for common use, in these days of universal education, the importance of Gillott's first invention is incalculable.—Leisure Hour.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

The [illegible] overwhelming Democratic victories, not in any particular section, but [illegible] out the entire country, proclaim in thunder tones popular condemnation of the course pursued by the Republican party at the National Capitol, both in the Executive and legislative departments of government.

Never before was the indignation of the American people against political misdoings more emphatically or justly expressed.

From the manufacturing districts of New England and New Jersey to the agricultural prairies of the mighty West, the little cloud of discontent rapidly grew and finally developed into a terrible popular blizzard, sweeping everything before it, and leaving defeat and [illegible] political [illegible] beneath an avalanche of hostile ballots.

The indictment against the Republican party upon which the voters of the United States have rendered such pronounced judgment, contains several specific counts, but chief among them was the enactment of a vicious tariff measure bearing the title of McKinley.

That was a direct question involved in the election, and against such unwarranted and odious legislation the Democratic party presented a united front. To that single issue more than to any other may be truthfully attributed the great and influential political revolution of November 4.

The McKinley tariff was the main cause of the Waterloo defeat of partisan Republicanism championed by Reed, McKinley, Lodge, Quay and Company.

It [illegible] the Sedan of popular fury.

And rightly so, because a more wanton design to obstruct the natural channels of trade and industry, and to levy oppressive taxation upon the honest working people for the special benefit of monopoly classes who had contributed money to corruptly influence elections, was never known in the history of this country.

The people have asserted their inherent sovereignty, and given [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] and profligate politicians stunning blows.

All patriotic citizens may well rejoice.

Mugwumps still live and vote.

The Farmers out West [illegible] red hot [illegible] the ranks of McKinleyism.

Over two-thirds Democratic majority in the next House of Congress. Let the band play!

Over hill and dale, from New Hampshire to Kansas, the shrill Vox Populi still echoes.

Assemblyman Kyte [illegible] over high, as he is the only Republican elected in Union County.

Senator Quay has gone a fishing in Floridian waters. His Pennsylvania [illegible] political [illegible].

The [illegible] of "What [illegible] Billy Patterson?" now reads—"Who threw stones at Tariff McKinley?"

This is a bad year for political [illegible], the people having wisely assumed the management of their own affairs.

Ex-Speaker [illegible] committed a serious blunder when he went over to Pennsylvania to apologize for Quay's [illegible].

When the American people become fully aroused in defense of their [illegible] rights and liberties, the hordes of greedy monopolists and corrupt politicians [illegible] of small account.

The whereabouts of Speaker Reed is an unsettled question. In every section of New York and Ohio where he made speeches Democratic Congressmen were elected. Count the quorum!

The Republicans have had much to say about the solid political South. Now they are panic stricken at the rapid strides the North is making towards a solid Democratic basis.

The [illegible] Republican Congressman who [illegible] Quay in the State Convention, has received permission to stay at home after the Fourth of March. Justice though tardy is [illegible] to overtake the [illegible].

The Democrats in the next Congress will [illegible] in voting for real and equitable protection to American labor, industry and business enterprise, but not a dollar of tribute to pilfering combines of any [illegible] kind. Not a [illegible].

The [illegible] Republican candidate for Congress in this District made a sorry run in his own County of Union, Mr. Geissenhainer, the worthy Democrat, carrying it by the splendid majority of 1,557. We had supposed that "free trade" was [illegible] popular.

Over [illegible] of the States composing the American Union now have or very soon will have Democratic Governors [illegible]. Other parties flutter [illegible], but the Democratic party never [illegible]. For [illegible] hundred years it has [illegible] political storms, and its glorious banner still waves high aloft, a conquering [illegible].

Senator-elect Marsh of Union County scores 1,500 majority. [illegible] We presume his self-confident opponent has by this time been convinced that even a [illegible] can be defeated. The open and straightforward course pursued by Frederick C. Marsh, coupled with his proven legislative ability, pleased the people and [illegible] secured their suffrages.

[illegible] after Senator Quay, as Chairman of the Republican National Committee, had [illegible] the election of President Harrison, a prominent Republican editor [illegible]—"Hail Quay! hero of a hard-fought, brilliantly won field; the right man in the right place; a practical politician and statesman; a revelation to his own party; the admiration of the country." Now, many Republican editors are denouncing Quay and demanding his retirement to the rear. [illegible] with such hypocritical cant! Quay is [illegible] no worse than he was two years ago, and the party leaders knew it.

The [illegible] election of Governor Pattison in Pennsylvania was a grand and encouraging moral victory, and it shows what a powerful factor the independent vote is. The respectable and decent [illegible] Republicans, [illegible] by Quay-ism, [illegible] party ties, spurned the [illegible] of a [illegible] bad faction, and placed the [illegible] upon the brow of an unsullied Democrat. To these honor attaches.

RELICS OF WAR-TIME.

[illegible]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Saturday morning fourteen-year-old Martin Galbraith was assaulted by a thirteen-year-old colored lad, Henry Bundy, who inquired if he were a Democrat. Being answered in the affirmative the negro took a pistol from a companion and fired at young Galbraith, and a timely movement of the latter was all that prevented a fatality. As it was, he received a bullet in the hand, and his assailant went his way. Bundy is reported to have declared his intention of murdering all the Democrats he could find, and it is needless to say that he is a Republican and is probably in his right mind.

I remember overhearing a conversation between two boys, one white and the other a negro, during the last Presidential campaign. The colored lad asserted his fealty to Harrison, and his companion inquiring the reason for such exalted principles, said: "Why am I a Republican? 'Cause if Cleveland is elected all us colored folks will be sent back to slavery. That's why I'm a Republican!" And Mr. Cleveland had already served nearly all of the most able administration since the days of Lincoln. This only goes to show to what low and false methods the Republican spellbinders will stoop in their desperations. They have worked the same bogie story on the freed men ever since the war, and the old and utterly unreasonable fairy tale is only now beginning to lose its potency. But there are now many progressive negroes who are in Democracy and progress the [illegible] of slavery and oppression, and the case of Saturday ought to bring the truth home to the more reputable Republicans and show them the harm that is being wrought by the willful misrepresentation of the campaign leaders of their back-number party.

If young Galbraith's would-be murderer had seen fit to proclaim his crime no one can say to what it might not have extended, or what enormities it might not have brought about. The negro vote is a large one, and the Republicans intend to keep it by whatever means seem necessary, and the negro voters appear to enjoy being hoodwinked and cajoled. Perhaps, however, when they have to pay ten or twenty or even fifty per cent., more than now, for the necessities of life, and when their wages come down at the same time to meet the demands of the glorious tariff their ballots have helped to bring upon us, they will realize that the war was fought and finished twenty-five years ago, that the slavery of the present impoverishes the purse and not the body, and then they may learn to cast their ballots with a conviction of right and not a feeling of terror.

BILLS FOR THE STATE TO PAY.

Union County Freeholders Refuse to Settle with Election Officers.

The Union County Board of Freeholders met Friday afternoon and declined to pay the bills presented by several of the election boards for stationery, the return of ballot-boxes and the conveying of the returns of the Constitutional Amendment election to the Secretary of State at Trenton. This action of the Board of Freeholders was based on the opinion of the County Attorney, who declared the new election law to be defective, as it made no provision for the payment of these disputed items. Attorney Ward said the Constitutional election was a State matter and did not concern the county. The messengers who took the returns to Trenton should, therefore, get their pay from the State authorities, and unless the Freeholders had legislative authority they had no right to pay the bills.

After some discussion the bills were ordered to be returned to the election officers for correction with the instruction that they must look to the State authorities for compensation for the items in [illegible].

The members of the election boards are indignant over the matter, particularly those who took the election returns to Trenton, as they have given their time for nothing and have paid out of their own pockets their car fare to Trenton. A meeting will be held by them to take some steps towards securing their rightful compensation.

The Freeholders will meet Thursday, Nov. 20, for the purpose of acting on the election bills for the recent election.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:

As a Republican (with a big "R") I rejoice at the downfall of Sewell-ism in New Jersey, and more especially its discomfiture in Union county; and still more in the practical rout in the city of Plainfield. Oh! what a spectacle! From what seemed to be an insurmountable majority in our city, Sewell-ism has brought us Republicans down to a meagre majority, that is only [illegible]. How long? Oh, how long! will the Republicans of our fair town continue even to recognize the Satellites of the ex-Senator, who assume to control the Republicans of Plainfield, but who are unable to "deliver the goods"?

REPUBLICAN.

They Find [illegible] in Bergen.

Bergen county Republicans were thunderstruck Tuesday night to hear that Englewood township, the home of William Walter Phelps, had given Cadmus (Dem.) for Congress a majority of 252. It gave Phelps 134 in 1888, and was counted on as a sturdy Republican. The [illegible] of the party in the county, the Hackensack Republican, pays its respects to the township in this wise: "Englewood is the home of bankers, importers, and commercial lawyers, whose business is in New York, and who are thoroughly imbued with the free-trade heresies of that importing city. They are opposed to the McKinley Bill, favor a low tariff, and consequently they voted the Democratic ticket, and carried everybody they could with them. Englewood village is politically a [illegible] rather than a [illegible] of Mugwumpery. It is a natural breeding place for the Mugwump [illegible]. They are as [illegible] there as [illegible] on a sandy day in August, and they are of course opposed to the Republican party and its policy."

John have you seen that woman lately? John is [illegible]? What woman? That woman [illegible] grapes for Speer's Wine. [illegible] her in another column, and read [illegible]; the wines are [illegible] by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

FROM PRESS TO PULPIT.

Two New York Newspaper Men Who Are Now Bishops.

A New York man-about-town says that Bishop Vincent, formerly of this city, and Bishop Fowler, are two of the best known men in that metropolis, where both have been familiar figures for many years. Their lively and practical interest in educational matters is well known. Bishop Fowler made New York his home, and was for eight years editor of the New York Christian Advocate. To his great religious journal he gave a circulation and influence which it had never before enjoyed. During the greater part of his life Bishop John H. Vincent was a resident of Plainfield. At his home here and in New York he did the brain and pen work which built up the great Summer school at Chautauqua, and established far and wide the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle. Since his elevation to the highest office in his church, he has removed to Buffalo. While discharging all his duties as a Bishop he devotes his time, in large degree, to the educational work of the church.

There are many points of similarity between Bishops Fowler and Vincent. They are about of a size and do not look unlike. Both are handsome men, with large, expressive eyes and big heads, on which the hair is thin. One is fair, the other dark. Both are wonderfully gifted with fluency of speech. Bishop Fowler was, in his youth, a newspaper reporter in the West. It is said he was a rather wild young man. One day he came to the conclusion, as he himself has said, that he must either preach the gospel or be eternally lost.

Bishop Vincent visits New York whenever he has an opportunity. He is thoroughly in love with the metropolis, and believes there are many good people there. About two weeks ago, while spending a day at St. Denis Hotel, he took great pleasure in speaking of the education of the people in connection with church work. He believes that true education and Christianity go together. He talked with pride of the work of the Chautauqua Circle, which has enrolled 150,000 persons in the United States.

COUNSELOR MARSH RIGHT AGAIN.

The Supreme Court of the Same Opinion as He Regarding the Sale of Liquor in Clubs.

The most important decision rendered by the Supreme Court on opinion day was in the case of the Essex Club. The organization is a social club composed of wealthy and fashionable people of Newark and vicinity, and in connection with the club's restaurant, wines and liquors were served only to be furnished to members, who were required to pay for what they ate and drank, but the club reaped no profit from the business. The club was prosecuted for selling liquor without a license. The Common Pleas Court of Newark, Judge Lippincott presiding, held that the club was not guilty, for the law was not intended to cover a case of that kind. Judge Lippincott held that the distribution of liquor among the members of the club, in the manner described, was not a sale, nor was it the business of selling as a retail liquor dealer, or otherwise contrary to law.

An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, and that Court in an opinion by Judge Van Syckel reverses the court below and declared that the club violated the law and was amenable to the penalty.

The case has excited considerable interest in this community because of a written opinion obtained by the Plainfield Gesang- and Turn Verein from Corporation Counsel Marsh. That organization, as is well known, is made up of the best element of the German citizens, and they were determined to strictly obey the law of their adopted country. The opinion of Mr. Marsh was directly the opposite of that of the Common Pleas Court of Newark, but the Turn Verein having asked for the opinion, accepted it and acted accordingly.

Some few individuals were disposed to prefer the opinion of the Common Pleas Court, but they were overruled, and the Turn Verein wisely concluded to wait until the Supreme Court should settle the question. In the light of the result, the Turn Verein may well congratulate itself.

It Was Indeed a "Leader."

For days before election the Republican hand organs were publishing columns of twisted figures to prove the McKinley bill a blessing. The heading day after day was:

THE McKINLEY BILL

"TO SCATTER PLENTY O'ER A SMILING LAND."

And so it did. It scattered the plenty of Republican votes, and made this indeed a smiling land.

Fanwood's Water-Works a Success.

Fanwood has now a fire department unequalled by any place of its size in the State. The water system which was established through the efforts of Assemblyman-elect George Kyte has now been supplemented by several thousand feet of hose which can be attached to the hydrants on short notice. No steamers are necessary, as the storage pressure is sufficient to throw a stream over the highest residence. A new hook and ladder truck has just been received by the department.

Union County's Official Figures.

The official canvass of the votes cast in Union county at Tuesday's election was finished yesterday by the Board of Canvassers at Elizabeth.

For Congress, Jacob A. Geissenhainer (Dem.) received 7,193 votes, Amos Clark, Jr., (Rep.) 5,636; Geissenhainer's majority, 1,557.

For Senator, Frederick C. Marsh (Dem.) received 7,300, John C. Rankin (Rep.) 5,601; Marsh's majority, 1,699.

For Sheriff, Wm. H Hicks (Dem.) had 7,162 votes, James H. Clark (Rep.) 5,753; Hicks's majority, 1,409.

General Madison Drake Must Suffer the Consequences of Libel.

The certiorari of the case of James Madison Drake vs. The State, which was brought up from the Union County Court, was decided in the Supreme Court at Trenton yesterday by an opinion filed by Justice Dixon. General Drake, who is editor of the Evening Leader, in Elizabeth, published an article about the horsewhipping of Henry Cook, editor of the Herald, of the same city, and was indicted and convicted of libel. The record of the court was taken up on a writ of error asking for a reversal of judgment. The Court affirms the judgment below.

Quality Hill No Longer in Darkness.

The Land Improvement Company have established a system of lighting the avenues of Fanwood by the erection of 22 Dietz lamps on cedar posts. The residents pay for their maintenance at the monthly rate of 50 cents each. Quality Hill, the most aristocratic portion of Fanwood, has five lamps, which burn all night. The largest is placed directly opposite the home of Abner F. Downer. At a meeting of the residents recently held, a unanimous vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Wm. E Gibbs for her exertions and success in having the lighting system established.

Accidents will happen, so that all will catch cold sometimes. You want to find relief by the easiest and best methods. The most effectual way is to take Kemp's Cough Cure. In whooping cough and croup a [illegible] thing [illegible]. Every family should keep this remedy in the house handy in case of emergency.

MULTITUDES OF CONVERTS.

MORE THAN A THOUSAND PEOPLE PUBLICLY GIVE THEMSELVES TO CHRIST.

The Most Remarkable Sabbath Plainfield Has Ever Known—Marvelous Results of the Mills Revival—Wondrous Work of the Great Evangelist—The Hearts of Three Great Congregations Melted to Tears of Repentance and Joy.

[From the Daily Press of November 10.]

The magnificent spectacle of a vast multitude giving their hearts to God, acknowledging before the world that they accepted Christ as their Saviour, and publicly consecrating their lives to the service of the Master, gladdened the eyes of the Christian people of Plainfield yesterday.

During the week Evangelist Mills won many souls to Christ, but the many scores of conversions during the week were but a handful compared to the hundreds who professed penitence at those Sunday services.

At the Sunday morning meeting in the First Baptist church none of the gentler sex was admitted. Union services for women were held in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, where the Rev. Dr. Yerkes preached, and in the Methodist Episcopal church, where a sermon was delivered by the Rev. W. E. Richards. Both of these services were well attended, and the meetings were full of the deepest interest.

The service for the masculine portion of the people, however, was where the godly man whose especial divine gifts have wrought such marvelous results, both in our own midst and elsewhere, continued his labors. The house was filled with men. The sight was a most impressive one—all those sturdy, broad shouldered people, some heads of families, some rich in the promise of youth, some nearing the end of earthly existence, and all eager to hear the message from the zealous preacher who had already brought some member of their household, some friend, or other loved one, to a full knowledge of the beauties, joys and glories of the Christian life.

The music that welled from those hundreds of throats was full of power and beauty, as the singing of a great gathering of men always is, and richly attuned the heart-strings of the people to respond in glorious unison to the touch of the Musician whose holy presence could be felt by all who listened to the teachings of the inspired evangelist.

The text for the occasion was the opening sentence of the sixth chapter of Amos: "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion!"

Much of the sermon was a sharp admonition to professing Christians to be faithful to their profession, and to work unceasingly for the Master's cause. To profess Christianity and then to lie at ease and be careless and slothful, and do nothing for the Lord but flatter one's self on one's goodness, was to give cause for great displeasure and wrath from on High.

The preacher urged delinquent church members to rouse up from their lethargy and set about their Father's business. They must not be like the steamboat whose whistle was so big, and whose boiler so small, that every time the engineer blew the whistle the steam all went out of the boiler and the boat had to stop till steam could be made again. They must be rather like the palm tree, that was good for three hundred and sixty-five good things, that spread itself from a tiny seed to a sequestered grove and brought forth an oasis, a fertile, life-saving spot, amid the arid wastes of Afric's desert sands.

There were too many who kept their religion for Sunday, who engaged in questionable practices throughout the week, and then arose to a late breakfast the morning of the Sabbath and let the foul sewer of the Sunday newspaper run through one's mind, and went to church and tried to have the filth washed away by the preacher's words, and listened to music in an unknown tongue by a heathen choir, and heard a sermon on metaphysics and mythology and numerous other ologies, with a spice of Mohammedan religion thrown in. There were too many who said "Oh, bother religion! I want none of it during the week. Business is business, and religion is religion. Religion, you stay here. Business, you stay there. Don't you dare to mix or mingle! We work during the week and let religion alone. Sunday we are tired, but we pay the minister to be good for us, and we get our soothing balm from him once a week in the pulpit, and that's enough."

There were too many who when religion entered their manufactory, ground it to death among the wheels of their machinery, or strangled it when it appeared at their desk, or deliberately kicked it down stairs when it came into their office.

No man was so happy and prosperous as he who mingled business and religion. When Mr. Mills was about to begin revival services in another town he sought out a shoe manufacturer who was to assist him, as a member of the evangelistic committee, in arranging the details of the programme. When he called at the man's office he found him in the midst of a great press of business, but a cordial greeting was given, and the manufacturer said, "I'll go out with you now." Mr. Mills said "No: you have your business to attend to now. When you are at leisure call at my hotel." "Why, sir,"—the manufacturer replied—"making shoes isn't my business. My business is to do the will of my Father." And he straightway gave up two hours of the busiest part of the day to assisting to prepare for the coming of Mr. Mills. Later on, the same manufacturer said to Mr. Mills, "I want you to come to my factory today and speak to my working people about religion." In consequence of this expressed desire a meeting of the employes was held in the large packing room. The men and women, some with gibes and profanity on their lips, assembled in the room and seated themselves about on the stacks of boxes, and filled the room from wall to wall and from floor to ceiling. Their employer addressed them in a few simple words, saying, "Men and women, I'm anxious about your souls. I'd rather have you good men and good women than to make money out of you. I've called you all in here together to get you interested in your own salvation. I'd rather pay you your wages today for learning to love Christ than for making shoes for me to sell." A glorious time resulted. Mr. Mills and his teachings were eagerly received, and a great many gave themselves to God. A year or two later Mr. Mills again met the manufacturer, and in response to the question "How is the shoe business?" learned that the utmost prosperity had followed him. "At the time of that meeting"—said the man—"the trade was in a bad state. A great strike was imminent, and had it reached our factory, as was threatened, we should have been swept away before it and lost everything. The religion that our men and women got that day was lasting. They are good Christians. They are prospering, and so am I. I made so much money last year that I have bought out my partner's interest and own the whole concern, and we are all, employing and employed, happy and contented together, like one great family. I tell you, it's a paying as well as a sublime thing to have religion and business hand in hand."

The religion of Christ's Sermon on the Mount, that was the religion to be practised. It was as suited to the nineteenth century as it was to the days when Jesus was upon the earth. Let one practise it, and he would experience transcendent bliss; let all practise it, and earth would become a heaven indeed, a paradise of God.

Concluding his morning sermon, Mr. Mills pleaded with the men to re-consecrate themselves and all their possessions to God, to practice Christianity every day in the week, to let their good works abound, to infuse their religious fervor into everything, and life-long happiness and plenitude, as well as eternal joy, would follow.

Sunday afternoon, in accordance with the instructions given by Mr. Mills at Saturday evening's conference, the superintendents and teachers of the Sunday-schools gave up the lesson of the day and devoted themselves to talking to their classes as though they were talking to the children of their own family at home, concerning the salvation of their souls. Many expressed a desire to begin the Christian life, and all were in a receptive mood for what Mr. Mills had to say at his Sunday afternoon meeting for young people.

Sixteen hundred souls, or more, were present in that great gathering. The First Baptist church was crowded to its utmost capacity. Every nook was filled. Crowds were obliged to stand, in the aisles and along the walls. It was one of the grandest sights Plainfield has ever witnessed.

When Mr. Mills began to preach his eyes filled with tears of gladness at sight of the sea of eager faces. The opening of the twelfth chapter of Ecclesiastes—"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth"—was his theme, and he preached a beautiful sermon. Urging the people to give their hearts to God while they were still young, he related pathetic incidents of people who had neglected God in their youth and whose closing days were blighted by the sad realization that all their years had been wasted. Every year was wasted that was not devoted to Christian service. The way to have a good time was to be a Christian; the way to be supremely useful in the world was to be a Christian. And the time was now. It was not right, it was not safe, to delay. A young girl had been deeply affected by a meeting very similar to this. She was almost persuaded to be a Christian. But she did not heed the pleading of the Spirit, and went to her home without acknowledging Christ as her Saviour. Some months later she lay on her dying bed. Her old pastor called to see her. "Don't ask me to be a Christian"—she said.—"I can't be; I don't want to be. Whatever desire I may have had has vanished, and it will never come back." The pastor pleaded, but all in vain. She referred to the meeting of months ago and said: "At that time I was almost persuaded to be a Christian, but I steeled my heart against the urging that it might be my last chance of entering the Kingdom of the Lord, and I wrote something in my hymn-book, and since I wrote that I have had no longing, nothing but darkness." The minister pleaded with her to ask to be forgiven what she had written, but she was not to be moved, and after she had forced him to promise not to open her hymn-book to see what she had written, till after she were dead, he was obliged to leave her. She died. The pastor picked up her hymn-book, and in great fear and trembling opened its pages. The writing that met his gaze was this grim sentence: "I'll run the risk!" She had run the risk. She had refused God when God was pleading with her. She had run the risk, and had died without God and without hope.

The happiness and beauty and usefulness of the life of a young Christian was aptly illustrated in the evangelist's story of a boys' band in a church where he had been pastor.

One evening at the close of a meeting he had urged those who desired to lead a Christian life to remain a moment with him, but everybody went out and left him alone, heavy hearted. Presently a boy's head appeared at the door, and then a boy's body, and head and body together came up the aisle, and then another boy's head and body appeared, and then another, till five boys had returned. They were all eager to be Christians. "Well, boys,"—asked Mr. Mills—"what is it to be a Christian?" "You tell us"—they said. But the child knows as well as the grown man what being a Christian means, and so he made the boys tell him. "Well, boys,"—he continued—"now that you have given your hearts to God, what will you do for the cause of Christ?" "We'll go to church,"—they answered—"and to Sunday school." "That's good,"—he replied—"but what else?" "You tell us"—they said. "No, you tell me,"—he answered, and so they promised to do something the next day for God, and to report to him next evening. In the afternoon they appeared. "We had a prayer meeting"—they said. "That's good"—he replied.—"Who was there?" "Oh, just us five"—was the answer. "Don't bring me any more such reports as that"—he charged them. Next day they came again. "We had another prayer meeting,"—they said—"and two other boys were there." "Now you're on the right track"—was his comment—"Keep it up." And so those boys continued to work till they had a noble little band of twenty-five. Mr. Mills used to peep in, sometimes, at their meetings, to see what he could learn of their methods of work. This is how they used to conduct their meetings. The leader would say, "Billy, you pray," and Billy would pray; then, "Sammy, you pray," and Sammy would pray; then, "Jimmy, you pray," and Jimmy would pray; then, "Johnny, you pray"; and if Johnny wouldn't pray they'd get up and put Johnny out. The boys worked zealously, and did much good; their leader brought his father, an infidel, his mother, not a Christian, and his two sisters, all to God, and made good Christians of them, besides a large number of companions.

'T were a long, though a pleasant task, to recount all the reasons why the evangelist urged the young people to give their hearts to Christ. His pleadings were divinely eloquent, and touched the hearts of all. One could almost feel the presence of the Holy Spirit. The most stony heart was melted; all eyes were moist; every soul was prayerful.

When, at the conclusion of his sermon, and after songs of infinitely tender invitation, Mr. Mills asked those who desired to follow the Master to arise, hundreds sprang to their feet, and raised their hands in an attitude of supplication and consecration. It was a subject for a master artist—that vast expression of mute soul-stirring eloquence in the faces of that throng of penitents. Scarcely a Sunday school class but was represented in that multitude of converts, and in many cases whole classes rose in a body. Anthems of hallelujah arose from the throats of the choir and people, and enraptured souls pictured to themselves the celestial joy in Heaven over repentant sinners.

At the after-meeting in the basement of the church fully eight hundred were present, and the entire throng arose in one body and openly confessed Christ. It was a moment of supremest happiness. Those who thus publicly acknowledged their desire henceforth to lead a Christian life were the best material for Christian soldiers the Master could desire—bright-faced boys all earnestness and full of youthful determination, and womanly young girls all tenderness and loveliness. On the faces of all shone a radiance never surpassed.

Again was the church filled to overflowing, at the evening meeting for all classes, despite the fact that the Rev. C. B. Mitchell preached to one large congregation at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, and the Rev. C. L. Goodrich to another at the Methodist Episcopal church.

The text of Mr. Mills was from the third verse of the twentieth chapter of Revelations—"Behold, I stand at the door and knock!"—and the picture he presented of Christ imploring the sinner to open unto him the door of his heart was full of the sublimest pathos. The door of the heart could be opened only from the inside. The hand of no one but the sinner himself could pull back the bolt. Christ was waiting to become a guest in every bosom. Would the sinner receive or reject him? Christ would not always plead. Yet a little while, and the time for all pleading would be past. The awful consequences of delay in accepting Christ were vividly pictured in the heart rending fate of one of his own dear friends—a physician in Colorado. This man had been greatly touched by the Spirit of God, but instead of surrendering to the implorings of Jesus he fought desperately against Him. He would not surrender himself to Christ. To witness that struggle between God and man was terrible. The physician seemed like a madman. Mr. Mills besought him to give himself to the Lord at once. He promised to do so at the meeting that night, and then grew calmer. At the meeting he did not appear; he had been called away by a patient. He grew indifferent in the matter, and then put off the matter by saying, "I'll become a Christian some time this Winter." The Winter passed, and he was not only still unconverted but had begun to sustain his physical strength, which had been greatly strained by overwork, by the use of alcoholic stimulants. Other months passed. He became a confirmed tippler, then a drunkard; his former worldly prosperity vanished; he was a disgrace to manhood. Finally, in the extremity of his shame, he took poison, and was buried in a drunkard's and a suicide's grave.

"That man's prospects"—said Mr. Mills—"were as hopeful as the prospects of anyone here to-night. The Spirit pleaded with him; the Master knocked; but he would not listen, he would not let Him in.

"I do not tell you this story because the telling is easy. The very recollection of it wrings my heart in poignant anguish. But I want you to realize what I told him—what I besought him, in the utmost earnestness, to realize—that God would receive the sinner to His bosom now, but that I had no authority to say that He would receive him in the future. The Spirit is pleading with you. Give yourself to God to-night."

A great many stood up, at the close of the sermon, and acknowledged thus publicly their desire and intention of becoming Christians. An after-meeting followed, and the body of the church was filled. Hundreds arose and said "I am determined to lead a Christian life," and hymns and prayers that made every heart almost too full of emotion for utterance followed.

A "Quaker benediction," in which everybody shook hands with one another in token of the penitents' welcome to the fold of Christ, brought to a close one of the most memorable days Plainfield has ever known.

New Officers of the Public Library.

Among other matters of local interest crowded out of Thursday's issue, was the following account of the regular meeting of the directors of the Public Library. There were present Messrs Maile, Baldwin, Babcock, Tracy, Tyler, Yates, Dumont and Stillman.

On motion the following communication, received from the mayor of the city, was ordered engrossed on the minutes, there having been no meeting since July, and hence this communication could not be received and engrossed before.

I, Job Male, mayor of the city of Plainfield, do hereby, pursuant to the provisions of law in that behalf, appoint Job Male, John B. Dumont and George H. Babcock to be Directors of the Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room, on the term of three years from the first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety. Dated, Plainfield, New Jersey, June 30, 1890.

JOB MALE, Mayor.

Mr. Babcock as a committee on nomination of new officers, presented the following:

President—Job Male.
Vice President—M. W. Tyler.
Treasurer—John B. Dumont.
Secretary—Wm. M. Stillman.
Art Committee—George H. Babcock, A. O. Baldwin, Jos. W. Yates.
Executive Committee—The President, Secretary and Chairman of the Art and Library Committees.
Library Committee—J. Evarts Tracy, Mason W. Tyler, H. P. Talmadge.

On motion the secretary then cast the ballot in their favor, and the nominees were declared duly elected.

A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. Tracy for his valuable work for the library in obtaining a large number of government books.

The following monthly report of Librarian Adams, for October, was received:

Another New Road to Skirt Plainfield.

The Reading Railroad Company has filed articles of incorporation at Trenton for a new road to be built from a point on the Bound Brook Railroad 1,000 feet west of the centre of the crossing on the Easton and Amboy division of the Lehigh Valley road in Somerset county, and to terminate at a point on Arthur Kill, on Staten Island Sound, twenty-six feet south of Tuft Point, in Middlesex county. The length of the road will be twenty miles. The capital is $2,000,000.

Fooled by the Man Who Robbed Them.

There is locked in jail at Easton, a thief confessedly guilty of robbing the house in Bethlehem of two women who came to this city, Saturday, in search of some of their missing property. They showed Capt. Grant a letter from the detective who had made the arrest, in which he stated that his prisoner said the stolen goods were pawned in Plainfield. The Captain and the two women made a careful search through pawnbroker Dreier's books, but found nothing they were in search of. The disappointed women left for home satisfied the thief had misled them.

Edison Comes to Plainfield for a New Factory.

John Vetterlein is to begin next week the erection of a three-story brick building, 50x60 feet, on Exchange alley, in the rear of the Trinity Reformed church. The building will be used for manufacturing purposes, Mr. Vetterlein having signed Thursday a contract to produce 5,000 chamfer planes, after a new patent, each year, for three years. These planes are for cutting chamfers, or grooves, in wood, and as Thomas Edison, the inventor, is interested in the concern, it is supposed that the planes which Mr. Vetterlein's workmen are to manufacture will be used in preparing grooved strips of wood to encase electric light wires in buildings. Mr. Vetterlein will give employment to quite a number of people, besides erecting a good building that may be counted a substantial improvement to the property of the neighborhood.

The New Tariff Burden Doubles the Cost of Picture Paper.

The Plainfield Camera Club, and such Plainfield people as have thought old photographic prices high enough, may well be concerned in knowing that the McKinley Tariff bill increases the duty on photographic albumen paper from 15 to 35 per cent. The consequence of this rise is to increase the price of albumen paper very largely, and to an extent that will take fully $100,000 annually from the pockets of photographers throughout the country.

When it was proposed by the framers of the McKinley Tariff bill to increase the duty to 35 per cent., thousands of petitions were sent by photographers from all parts of the country to their representatives in Congress, and as a result the duty was fixed in the bill and passed by the House at 25 per cent. It also passed the Senate at the same rate. The conference committee, however, which is generally supposed merely to adjust the differences between the bills as passed by the two houses, quietly increased the rate of duty to 35 per cent. in the conference report, and it was rushed through without being noticed at the last moment at this rate, and the bill was signed by the President with the rate advanced to 35 per cent.; and now the consumers must, as quietly as they can, bear the burden imposed by those who are supposed to represent their best interests in Congress.

Under the former tariff bill albumen paper was originally assessed at 25 per cent. as "paper not otherwise specified," but the E. & H. T. Anthony Company promptly brought suit against the Government to have the duty reduced to 15 per cent. on the ground that photographic albumen paper was a manufacture of paper, and entitled to entry at that rate accordingly. The case was tried in the United States Courts and decided in the company's and the people's favor, and only 15 per cent. duty has been paid up to the enforcement of the McKinley bill. The appraisers have frequently stated that the duty should be 25 per cent., notwithstanding the decision of the United States Court on the subject, and it has been threatened to appeal the case to the United States Supreme Court, but this has never been done. It is presumed that it is on this account that the statement appeared in a comparative report to Congress showing the difference between the rates of duty under the act of 1883 and the proposed rates under the McKinley act, in which report albumen paper was stated to be subject to a duty of 25 per cent., whereas, as a matter of fact, only 15 per cent. had been collected since the decision of the courts above referred to.

The increase of 20 per cent. in duty, is, in the view of Plainfield's professional and amateur photographers, and in the view of photographers and their patrons all over the country, an absolutely unnecessary burden to photographers. While, however, the tariff has been increased 20 per cent., the price of albumen paper has been increased in less proportion, as the importers have preferred to share the burden with the consumers in the hope that a new Tariff bill would eventually be enacted which would remove this unnecessary burden.

The Coming Comet.

It is fancied by a grateful patron that the next comet will appear in the form of a huge bottle, having "Golden Medical Discovery" inscribed upon it in bold characters. Whether this conceit and high compliment will be verified, remains to be seen but Dr. Pierce will continue to send forth that wonderful vegetable compound, and potent eradicator of disease. It has no equal in medicinal and health-giving properties, for imparting vigor and tone to the liver and kidneys, in purifying the blood, and through it cleansing and renewing the whole system. For scrofulous humors, and consumption, or lung scrofula, in its early stages, it is a positive specific. Druggists.

Since Watson & Co. Extended Their Broad Street Store Through to Market Street and Put in Their

Handsome beveled plate brass trimmed show windows for the express purpose of displaying their new styles of hand-cut garments, very few young men who want the latest cuts and patterns, will venture to buy a single garment until they first see what new styles Watson & Co. are showing.

Just now those windows are very attractive as the Fall styles are out and some very stylish black and dark blue dress cutaways are shown there at $7, behind the long line of $4 royal satin striped pentaloons, and almost every hour handsome new patterns are added, as Watson & Co. like to please young men who want new things, and the correct fashion plate cut. Tell your friends that they can buy Watson's hand-cut perfect fitting garments for less than the usual run of machine-cut work is selling for, and it makes a great difference in your dress appearance which you wear.—Newark Press.

CHILDREN'S LITERATURE.

What "St. Nicholas" Has Done For Boys and Girls.

Victor Hugo calls this "the woman's century," and he might have added that it is the children's century as well, for never before in the world's history has so much thought been paid to children—their schools, their books, their pictures, and their toys. Childhood, as we understand it, is a recent discovery.

Up to the time of the issue of the St. Nicholas Magazine seventeen years ago literature and children's magazines were almost contradictory terms, but the new periodical started out with the idea that nothing was too good for children; the result has been a juvenile magazine genuine with conscientious purpose—the greatest writers contributing to it, with the best artists and engravers helping to beautify it—and everything turned to the key-note of youth.

It has been the special aim of St. Nicholas to supplant unhealthy literature with stories of a living and healthful interest. It will not do to take fascinating bad literature out of boys' hands, and give them in its place Mrs. Barbauld and Peter Parley, or the work of writers who think that any "good-y" talk will do for children, but they must have strong, interesting reading, with the blood and sinew of real life in it—reading that will waken them to a closer observation of the best things about them.

In the seventeen years of its life St. Nicholas has not only elevated the children, but it has also elevated the tone of contemporary children's literature as well. Many of the stories, like Mrs. Burnett's "Little Lord Fauntleroy," have become classic. It is not too much to say that almost every notable young people's story now produced in America first seeks the light in the pages of that magazine.

The year 1891 will prove once more that "no household where there are children is complete without St. Nicholas." J. T. Trowbridge, Noah Brooks, Charles Dudley Warner, and many well-known writers are to contribute during the coming year. One cannot put the spirit of St. Nicholas into a prospectus, but the publishers are glad to send a full announcement of the features for 1891 and a single sample copy to the address of any mentioning this notice. The magazine costs $3.00 a year. Address The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York.

Don't give up, there is a cure for catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them. It is a safe and pleasant remedy. It is applied into the nostrils. It is not a liquid or snuff. It cures by cleansing and healing. Price 50c.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became a Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Sought for the last hundred years; a remedy for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head, found at last in Ely's Cream Balm. Safe and pleasant to use and easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once and a thorough treatment positively cures. Price 50 cents.

"THE DRESS IS FINISHED, SO AM I."

A gorgeous costume flashed beneath the brilliant lights of a ball-room; "a queen of society is radiant to-night."

The nervous hands of a weak woman have toiled day and night, the weary frame and aching head have known no rest—for "the dress must be finished in time."

To that queen of society and her dressmaker we would say a word. One, through hot-house culture, luxury, and excitement, and the other, through the toil of necessity, may some day find their ailments a common cause. The Vegetable Compound will enable both to meet the demands of society. Send stamp for "Guide to Health," a beautiful illustrated book.

Democratic Primaries.

The Democratic voters of the City of Plainfield are requested to meet at the Democratic Headquarters on Front street on Thursday evening, November 13, at 7.30 o'clock, to place in nomination ward candidates for Common Council, and also to elect delegates to the City Convention, to be held at the same place on Friday evening, Nov. 14, at 8 o'clock, to nominate a Mayor, Assessor, Collector, Treasurer, Member of Board of Education, and three Commissioners of Appeal. The number of delegates to the City Convention will be based upon the Democratic vote cast at the last election.

J. E. MARTINE, President.
C. F. WADSWORTH, Secretary.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—The Crescent will be opened for skating during the afternoon and evening of Thanksgiving Day.

—The brutal whipping of a horse at Westfield has caused the State Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to appoint a Westfield special agent, and the new agent is a woman. Good work may be expected.

—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the New Market Baptist church will hold a sociable at the residence of Miss Jennie Blackford, Nov. 20. The committee in charge announce that it will be a "cobweb" party.

—Frank E. Housh & Co., of Brattleboro, Vt., put 200,000 "Health Calendars" on the market for 1890. This edition required 40 tons of paper, and was one of the largest of the kind ever published. A revised edition is in press for 1891. See "ad" in another column.

—Captain Grant and Sergeant Lynch made a tour of the outlying portions of the city Sunday, and discovered a number of tramps camped on North avenue near the water-works station. The tramps were ordered to move on, which they promptly did, after carefully surveying the avoirdupois of Officer Lynch.

—Westfield could not do enough Thursday for Genesee Engine Co., No. 1, of Plainfield; for it was remembered concerning that awful fire of 1874, how nobly they responded to the call for help to battle against the fire that threatened to wipe the fair town of Westfield off the face of the earth.—Westfield Standard.

—Attention is called to the special inducements offered by C. B. Ripley in the advertising columns, of desirable building sites in Westfield. The building on his property, Boulevard, Summit avenue, Park street, Ross place and Central avenue, surpasses any activity in real estate heretofore known in the county.

—F. M. Bacon, of the Real Estate Trust, left town Monday for the South, in the interest of real estate operations. The Trust has recently sold to New York and Philadelphia capitalists, within the past ten days, four large tracts of land in the vicinity of Plainfield. Wallace Vail is attending to matters at this end of the line, at 8 North avenue.

—A little Plainfield negro Republican last week shot a fourteen-year-old white Democrat for purely political reasons. There is the making of a high-class politician in that young negro, but his ideas are a little previous as applied to this section, and he does not have a proper conception of the color line.—New Brunswick Home News.

—We will know, this coming Winter, something of the blessings of Telford roads. Just think of riding, at all seasons and in all weather, over smooth roads, where once there were quagmires, sloughs and swale of mud hub deep. And think of the hard, frozen, lumpy, almost impassable roads we used to have, and the smooth surfaces we have now. The county roads will undoubtedly pay; they are paying already.—Elizabeth Journal.

—The New York Sporting Times, after Nov. 22, will, no doubt, be the leading sporting journal of America. The publishers have decided to enlarge it to a sixteen page paper, the size of Harper's or Frank Leslie's, thus making it the largest, best sporting journal published in America. It is the intention of the publishers to make it the most valuable sporting paper issued, and the following departments will be edited by the most experienced writers: Baseball, Athletics, Football, Boxing, Bicycling; in fact, the paper will cover all out-and indoor sports. The subscription price is only $2 a year, and valuable premiums are given away free with each subscription.

What the People Think of Him.

The Hon. Jacob Geissenhainer, who was told by the Central Times that the people would show what they thought of him by their votes, is re-elected to Congress by a majority of 3,725. This is 1,832 more majority than the people gave him last time.

The Car Stove Doomed.

The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company are just finishing at their shops in Reading the fitting-up of nine of their Baird locomotives with apparatus for heating passenger cars by steam. The engines are to be used on the Bound Brook division of the road. The passenger coaches of the line are being fitted with the pipes requisite for this system of heating, it being the desire and intention of the Company to comply with the popular demand to abolish the car stove.

The Camera Club to Exhibit.

The Camera Club intend to give another of their interesting exhibitions during Thanksgiving week, from Nov. 22 to 27; and as their new club rooms in the post-office building have been fitted up with every facility for picture making, it is expected that this exhibit will surpass in every respect all that have heretofore been held in this city. Citizens of Plainfield should appreciate the endeavor on the part of this club to educate and foster a love for the beautiful in art; and it is hoped that they will show their endorsement, and encourage the club, by visiting in large numbers this exhibition.

Their Grand Warden from Plainfield.

The annual convention of the American Legion of Honor of the State of New Jersey was held at Elizabeth Tuesday. Forty out of fifty-one councils were represented. The membership of the order in the State was reported to be 4,200. The following officers were elected: Grand Commander—R. S. Tilden, Jersey City; Grand Vice Commander—Dr. C. A. Church, Passaic; Grand Orator—[illegible] Long, East Orange; Grand Secretary—J. B. Clinton, Passaic; Treasurer, C. H. [illegible], Jersey City; Grand Chaplain—Joseph F. Villaly, Newark; Grand Guide—Frank L. Shipman, Newark; Grand Warden—H. G. Runyon, Plainfield; Grand Sentry—William L. Pierson, Newark. A banquet was given the delegates last night, covers being laid for 150. It was presided over by ex-Alderman A. B. Knapp, and speeches were delivered by Judge Hart of Newark, Grand Commander Tilden, Supreme Representative Miller of New York, and others.

The dietary of an invalid differs materially from that of a person in robust health. He needs light, nutritious food, and it is essential that besides being nutritious it shall be easy of digestion. Mellin's Food is very nourishing, and is assimilated as soon as taken into the stomach.

PERSONALS.

Henry P. Robinson has returned to his Fanwood villa after a brief sojourn at old Scotch Plains.

Hugo Weigmann, and his daughters, Lillie and Ida, are in Boston, the guests of A. Kortman, a former citizen of Plainfield.

The address of the Rev. B. Fay Mills, during the remainder of his stay in Plainfield, will be in care of F. H. Andrews, 109 Broadway.

M. Melvin Dunham was re-elected President of the Union County Sunday School Association at the eleventh annual Convention held Tuesday at Roselle.

Henry Blumer, a former City Treasurer of New Brunswick, died at the home of his son-in-law, J. V. F. Ryerson, Somerset street, Thursday, at the age of 77.

Head Usher George Cornwall, and his efficient corps, deserve great credit for the executive ability shown in disposing comfortably of the crowds at the Mills meetings.

Mrs. Anna B. Buchanan, mother of Mrs. T. J. Gillies of Madison avenue, died Friday from a stroke of paralysis, at the home of her son, Edward Buchanan, Montague, Mich.

Miss Eleanor T. Morrison, of Plainfield, assistant teacher in Mme. Alberti's Delsarte school, New York, is visiting at the residence of the editor of this paper.—New Brunswick Home News.

John F. Evans, the Republican nominee for Councilman from the Fourth Ward, is one of the many foremen of the departments at the Potter Press Works, and is known as a "gang boss."

The wedding of Miss Nettie Lee French, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore French, to Edward Howell, is announced to take place at the First Baptist church, Tuesday, Nov. 25, at twelve o'clock noon.

The marriage is announced of Christopher Angermann, of this city, and Miss May McKay, of Toronto, Canada. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Parker, of Scotch Plains, on Thursday, Oct. 9.

On Wednesday evening at the home of the bride, 14 North avenue, took place the wedding of Miss Flora May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Garretson, to H. Ellsworth Gayle. The Rev. Mr. Schenck officiated.

Miss Alice Holmes and Mr. Vonbe played Mozart's Sonata in D, Tuesday night, at Melopoia rehearsal, which was held in the music room of Lawrence Myers's house on East Front street. Mrs. J. K. Myers was the hostess.

The prettiest decoration of the whole parade at Westfield, Thursday, was Master Russell Marsh perched on top of the chemical engine with his golden hair shining even brighter in the sunlight than the copper and silver [illegible] him.

We said nothing—remarks the Somerville Democrat—against the Republican nominee during the campaign. We will not now. Charley Reed is a good fellow, but he is young enough yet. Defeat won't hurt him. He can stand it.

Edgar R. Hoadley, with whose stories many of Plainfield's young people are familiar, is a resident of Westfield. His pen is very busy with his writings, but he also finds time to attend to his other duties as Secretary of the Southern Railroad Company.

Aaron F. Carpenter, who has been visiting his family in this city, has gone South again, where he is the owner of a phosphate deposit on the Rappahannock river, Virginia, that is practically inexhaustible, although large quantities, for which there is an unlimited demand, are daily shipped to market.

The fiftieth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Albro Lyons, whose home for so many years was on Central avenue, this city, took place at their present residence, St. Felix street, Brooklyn, one evening last week. A large number of guests were present, including some Plainfield friends. Among the gifts were one hundred dollars in gold.

Gen. Henry Kyte and Col. C. K. Moore left Fanwood Monday for Saints Retreat, on the north shore of Oneida Lake, where the General has a shooting-box. The Hon. George W. Myer, who owns a ranch immediately adjoining, is expected to meet them on their arrival. These gentlemen have placed the Retreat in charge of the noted caterer, Thos. Osborn of Oneida. Some of the most prominent residents of Fanwood expect to visit the Saints, leaving the latter part of the week. The latest advices are that ducks are plentiful and flying low.

HYMENEAL.

Reed—Compton.

The wedding of Miss Sophia Dall Compton and Dr. J. Howard Reed took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Halstead Compton, on Thursday, the Rev. Dr. Gallaudet of St. Ann's Episcopal church, New York, officiating.

The wedding was a very charming one. The bridesmaids were Miss Josephine Compton, sister of the bride, and Miss Hattie Middleton, cousin of the groom.

The bride wore a handsome costume of white [illegible] silk, trimmed with brocade, and a veil. She carried a bouquet of white bride's roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Her ornaments were diamonds, including a magnificent crescent of the groom. The maids wore pink surah, and carried pink roses. The ushers' badge was a spray of lilies-of-the-valley. The bride's gift to each of her maids was a dainty Cupid's arrow of gold, set with diamonds and pearls.

The marriage ceremony was performed amid a bower of potted plants and chrysanthemums. The bridal couple entered the parlors while the sweet strains of the wedding march sounded from the distance.

The floral decorations at the wedding banquet were very elaborate and beautiful, and the supper itself was a grand affair. The number of guests was very large, and the display of gifts unusually handsome.

The happy couple have gone South on a wedding trip. They will be "at home" Thursdays, after December 1, at their new home, St. Nicholas avenue and One hundred and twenty-fifth street, New York city.

A Stray Speckled Beauty.

John Linkmeyer, of this city, while fishing below the dam at Bound Brook, Monday, caught a salmon trout weighing 1½ pounds. Where the fish came from no one knows. He was a stranger, and John took him in. There is no record of such a fish every being caught in the Raritan before.

To Speculate in Real Estate.

The Land's End Company filed articles of incorporation with the Clerk of Union county, at Elizabeth Friday. The company is organized for the purpose of speculating in real estate in Union county, and the capital is placed at $500,000. The incorporators are Dr. James S. Green, Howard H. Paul and Edward W. Ward.

A Satisfactory Explanation.

To the Editor of The Press:

In order that our residents may fully understand why the Bazar of the G. A. R. occurs during the meetings of the Rev. Mr. Mills, we desire to state that when we engaged the Hall we were under the impression that the meetings were to continue only one week, and we are now unable to get other favorable dates.

Respectfully,
W. C. Smith,
Wm. Hand,
W. R. Brokaw,

PLAINFIELD'S POOR EXPRESS SERVICE.

More Work for the United States Company Than the Employes Can Attend to.

The following dispatch of interest to Plainfielders appeared in the New York Times this morning, dated from this city:

"Ever since the Adams Express Company and Tom Platt's United States Express Company began the conflict of extermination last Spring, residents along the line of the New Jersey Central Railway have been anxiously awaiting the result. Up to the time Austin Corbin obtained control of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway the Adams Express Company controlled the business in this part of New Jersey, and the service was prompt, cheap, and excellent. But Austin Corbin froze out the Adams Company. In consequence, the Adams Express Company was forced to close its Plainfield office. The people here heard the decision with sincere regret. It was all the more surprising because business had never been better and the line had never been more popular.

"With the field left exclusively to itself, the United States Company began to illustrate how wretched a service could be made. Orders were persistently disregarded, overcharges and extortionate charges became of daily, of hourly, occurrence, goods were not delivered for several days after their arrival here, and it was not uncommon to have parcels that were once left at residences conveyed back to the office because the manifests failed to accompany them, efficient clerks were dismissed and incompetent persons took their places, and the service became so execrable that many persons concluded to have their goods shipped as freight rather than risk them by Platt's express.

"In the meantime, it is the common remark that if Platt would bestow some time upon remedying the imperfections of the system of his express company in this part of New Jersey and less upon New York State politics his company would be put in a position where it would pay better dividends and its employes more satisfactory wages."

BEWILDERED THE TICKET MAN.

A Commuter Enjoys Revenge at the Ferry Gate by Making Himself Amazingly Numerous.

Plainfield commuters and others who travel daily over the Central Railroad of New Jersey are considerably amused at the story of an incident which recently occurred in the ferry house at New York.

Men in a hurry to catch the boat are often annoyed by the failure of the ticket examiner to remember their faces, no matter how constantly they have traveled over the road, and by his insisting that they produce their bits of pasteboard. One of these was making his way, with a friend, toward the ferry waiting room, when he commented on the fact.

"It is a singular thing"—he remarked—"how long it takes the average man to get accustomed to faces that he is seeing constantly. That fellow at the gate makes me show my commutation ticket every time I come through, though he sees me every day. I never have any trouble with the train conductor, but that's because he is a man of unusual intelligence. I have met many conductors who would make you show your ticket at every station, and would never get to know you, even if you rode with them twice a day. That's the kind of a man that fellow at the gate is. It's awfully provoking, when you're running for a boat, to have to stop, unbutton your overcoat, and get your ticket out of your inside coat pocket."

As the two walked about, waiting for the boat, an idea struck the man who had been talking.

"It would be interesting"—said he—"to see how many times a fellow could walk through that gate without being recognized. Suppose we try it?"

"All right"—said his friend—"You go along, and I'll stand here and watch."

The commuter went out through the wagon gateway into the street. He returned through the passenger gate, and had to show his ticket. He tried again, with the same result. He tried several times more, and still the obdurate gateman failed to recognize him. There were few people going through at that time, and it was singular that his continued reappearance was not noticed. Persistence did, however, have an effect at last. On the sixth trip through the gateway the gatekeeper stared at him in a rather bewildered manner. On the seventh trip the gatekeeper swore gently to himself, and demanded to see the name on the commuter's ticket. The commuter permitted him to see it, and on reaching the waiting room said to his friend, "He has found out my name. Lend me your ticket."

On the eighth trip through the gateway he showed his friend's ticket. The gatekeeper swore loudly as he approached.

"I've got you"—said he.—"You can't make game of me. Let me see the name on that ticket."

The commuter assumed an air of indignation, but complied.

"Well, I'm beat"—exclaimed the gateman, as he read the ticket. And he scratched his head in perplexity.

"What do you mean by addressing such harsh remarks to me?"—asked the commuter.

"Well, I'll tell you, stranger;"—said the gateman in an apologetic tone—"you're the most numerous man I ever ran across. Chaps looking just like you have been passing through this gateway in a regular stream for the last fifteen minutes, an' I began to think it was some fellow making game of me. But I guess it must be something the matter with my eyes, for I see by your ticket that you're not the fellow I was layin' for."

The Revival in Mr. Cleaver's Church.

In the "First Church of Christ," last Sunday, twenty of the scholars arose and confessed to Superintendent Langer their conversion. In the evening five persons went forward and gave Mr. Cleaver their hands and Christ their hearts. The meetings of this church, in Vanderbeek's Hall, are held every evening.

Sleepy Somerville Justice.

Less than four weeks ago an Italian known to have $120 in his pockets was murdered in the township of Bedminster, about nine miles north of Somerville. A Coroner's jury went through the motions customary upon such occasions, and two men were arrested for the crime. They were taken to the county seat, Somerville, promptly discharged, and there the matter ended.

Last Wednesday the remains of a murdered man were found in a barn at Raritan, about two miles from the county seat. In this case no arrests have been made, and it doesn't look as if any would be made. It was a common tramp in this instance who was killed, and nobody has turned up who cares anything about his fate.

Patrick McCue was his name, but he was better known as "Paddy the Bum." He was buried without an effort on the part of the Somerville authorities to learn whether he had any relatives or to find out if common stories about his having a rich sister in Chicago were true. Chief Crowe says he has hunted the best he knew how for evidence, and he thinks the affair will have to go down among the mysteries of crime like the murder of the Italian in Bedminster.

No one seems to care if "Paddy the Bum" did get his skull fractured. There is no doubt that he was murdered, but that fact doesn't appear to stimulate detective work.

KILLED THEIR FELLOW-WORKMAN.

Two of the Suspected Murderers Caught, but the Third still Missing with the Dead Man's Money.

Two men suspected of murder aroused a great deal of morbid curiosity at the North avenue railroad station on Friday. Their names are Vicenzo Goffagboine and Francisco Camerato. They and Andrea Moriale were the last persons seen with Salvadore Figarotto before that fellow-Italian was found, three days ago, in a ditch at Somerville, with his throat cut, and with his corpse otherwise mutilated. The motive of the murder seems to have been to secure the possession of $120 which the dead man was known to possess. When the murder was discovered these three men, who had worked with Figarotto on the new Peapack railroad, were missing. Goffacboine and Camerato were found this morning among the Italians on the Lehigh Valley road at South Plainfield, and were brought to this city by Constable Austin Moore and interpreter Joseph Marino, their captors. After a vain search here for Prosecutor Steele of Somerset County the two prisoners were taken to Somerville and lodged in jail. They were not at all ferocious in appearance. One had a face that favorably impressed one as indicative of frank honesty. The other had a cruel mouth, and cold eyes. Both were clad in corduroy, and their boots were weighted with heavy clods of clay from the bank in which they had been working. They were handcuffed together. Their companion under suspicion, Moriale, is still missing, and is said to have gone to Florida. It is supposed that Moriale has the dead man's money.

OBITUARY.

Harvey Fisk.

Harvey Fisk, father of Messrs. Charles and Pliny Fisk of West Seventh street, composing the firm of Harvey Fisk & Sons, bankers and dealers in United States bonds at No. 28 Nassau street, New York, died Saturday at his country home, Wilburtha, N. J., after a protracted illness, in the sixtieth year of his age. Mr. Fisk was born April 26, 1831, in Vermont, and was the son of the Rev. Joel Fisk, a Presbyterian minister, who at one time occupied a pulpit and held a pastorate in Montreal, Canada. While in Montreal, Harvey acquired such a knowledge of French that he secured a place as a teacher, giving lessons in French in payment for instruction in other branches of learning. In this way he acquired a good grammar school education, and was placed in a drygoods store when he was seventeen years old, in Trenton, N. J. After serving his apprenticeship there as a clerk, he went to New York and secured a place in the American National Bank. He soon became thoroughly conversant with the banking business and was afterward for some time with the Bank of the Commonwealth, and in March, 1862, started business for himself.

He had been suffering with Bright's disease for many years, and during the last year had been unable to attend to his business, spending most of his time in travel or at his country home. He was a man of modest nature, and, though on terms of intimacy with many great political leaders, had no political aspirations of his own. His life was devoted to his business and his family, while his mind followed with pleasure the success of the Nation of which he ever felt proud. He was for many years identified with the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, and was a member of the building committee at the time of its erection. Mr. Fisk leaves a wife and family, consisting of five sons and three daughters, all of mature age.

The funeral will take place Wednesday at the country home in Wilburtha, and the burial will be at Ewing churchyard, near by.

Since Mr. Fisk's illness, the business has been conducted by his sons, Harvey C., Charles J., Pliny and Edward. Alexander, the youngest son, has been taking care of his father during his illness, and, having but lately left college, has not yet identified himself with the banking house. The three daughters are Miss Bertha, Miss May and Miss Eva. Their father leaves a large estate.

Samuel H. Jacobus.

Samuel H. Jacobus, of this city, died at Colorado Springs, Col., Saturday afternoon. On Tuesday, October 28, Mr. Jacobus, accompanied by his wife, started for the West in search of relief from consumption. The sudden change to a higher altitude was not beneficial, and his death occurred just one week from the day he arrived in Colorado Springs. A wife and four children survive him, one of whom is now in Europe on a pleasure tour. Mr. Jacobus was a son of the Rev. Melancthon Jacobus, who was pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of Brooklyn, and afterward senior professor in the Allegheny Seminary at Allegheny, Penn. After leaving Princeton College S. H. Jacobus went into business with the Jones Lock Company, at Pittsburg, of which concern he subsequently became a partner. His wife was Miss Elizabeth Patterson, one of an old and representative Pennsylvania family. Six years ago ill health induced Mr. Jacobus to retire from business and move to Plainfield, where his health became improved. The burial will be at Pittsburgh.

MISSIONARY FATHERS AT ST. MARY'S.

A Class of Fifty Converts Preparing for Communion, and Others Professing Penitence.

A successful mission work is being done among the Roman Catholics of Plainfield by a band of Missionary Fathers who came to this city two weeks ago. These Fathers are members of a church fraternity whose duties take them to all parts of the country. All last week they held services for women in St. Mary's church, and their labors brought many gratifying results. This week services are being held for men. At the first men's meeting Sunday night fully 500 were present. The number at each preceding and subsequent meeting has also been large, and a great many have been deeply moved and have expressed conversion. Tuesday besides the devotional exercises a confessional was held, and services to prepare penitents for communion were begun. A class of fifty people are preparing for their first communion and confirmation, and others are taking a course of instruction to become members of the Catholic church. At night Father McDonald, one of the Missionaries, preached an eloquent sermon. Services for men will continue all this week.

Will the Republican Factions Compromise on Ex-Mayor Rockfellow?

A few weeks ago, Alexander Gilbert was the only candidate of any weight in the race for the nomination as Mayor by the Republican party of this city. Since then Councilman Roberts has been entered in the contest by his friends, and has developed such a pull that the Gilbert faction have lost all assurance of a walk over for their choice in the convention.

In fact, so equally divided is the contest between the two, and so improbable is the surrender of either, that there is talk in the inner circles of the Republican party of compromising on ex-Mayor Rockfellow as the candidate.

—Governor Abbett Tuesday appointed as members of the State Board to canvass Congressional election returns on Nov. 24, Senators Wyckoff of Warren, Newell of Salem, Smith of Sussex, Leaming of Cape May, Martin of Essex, and Ross of Monmouth.

A MIDWEEK SABBATH IN PLAINFIELD.

Men and Women Give the Day to God.—Services at Private Homes and in the Churches.—Stores Closed, and Quiet Reigns on the Streets.—Continuation of the Great Revival.—Wondrous Tidings from a Gifted Preacher.—Words of Eternal Life for Repentant Sinners.

The observance of Tuesday as a second Sabbath was fully as general as one could expect in a busy city like Plainfield. A large number of store keepers closed their places of business during the hours of church service, morning and afternoon, even at considerable personal sacrifice; and a proper appreciation of the marvelous manifestations which God has given, of His holy presence among the people of Plainfield, was shown by all. Not a few, commuters and others, in heart felt sincerity gave the day entirely up to God. A true spirit of devotion occupied the people. In early morning in many a household were gathered together the men and women, the old and young, of the neighborhood, and a delightful hour of prayer resulted. At nine o'clock special prayer meetings, at which a divine spirit of supplication prevailed, were held in all the churches. At ten o'clock Mr. Mills, the evangelist whose coming has wrought so great a blessing, preached to a throng of hearers in the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church. At a quarter before 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon another prayer service was held, this a union of all the churches. At half-past three Mr. Mills again preached to a great congregation. All of these services were productive of much good, and the preaching of Mr. Mills fully convinced many hesitating hearts and brought them into the Christian fold.

Monday night's meeting was the first in Crescent avenue church. The number attending was probably 1,100, of whom about 100 were obliged to stand. Mr. Mills estimated—using his wonderful faculty for reading faces and judging the professing Christians from those still unconverted—that nearly nine-tenths of his hearers were not acknowledged followers of Christ, and his sermon was therefore more of an instructive talk to church members on their religious duties and their debt to their fellow men than it was an evangelistic appeal. Every soul was deeply aroused by his doctrine, and at the close of the sermon many assembled in the chapel to be taught by him what work they might readily do for Christ.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the reading, by the local clergymen, of one-minute reports from their Sabbath schools. All the pastors united in the sentiment that extraordinary showers of grace had been bestowed on the Plainfield people, and thought it a time when God was very near to us, and when we ought to walk very softly and humbly and prayerfully in His holy presence.

According to the report presented by the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, there were 219 members at the Methodist Episcopal Sunday school last Sabbath. Of these only 98 were not professing Christian, and during the afternoon 93 of the 98 gave their hearts to God. The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes said that nearly all of the members of the First Baptist Sunday school had now professed Christ. More than one hundred cards signed by those who desire henceforth to lead a Christian life had been handed to him, as the pastor of their preference, and a large number of these were from Sunday school members. The Rev. W. C. Schenck, pastor of the Dunellen Presbyterian church, said that out of a membership of 180 in his Sunday school, many of them already Christians, 60 had publicly confessed Christ last Sunday. The Rev. A. R. Pitts for the Park Avenue Baptist Sunday school said that 25 of the 27 non-professors of religion had just come out on the Lord's side. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck reported 56 new converts from the Trinity Reformed Sunday school. The Rev. C. L. Goodrich said that 30 or 40 of the Congregational Sunday school had just decided for Christ, making nearly all the members followers of Jesus. The Rev. A. H. Lewis said that very few members of the Seventh-Day Sabbath school above 12 years of age were still outside the Christian fold. E. C. Pease, Superintendent of the Warren Mission Chapel, said that 62 last Sunday came out for Christ, and that 25 women, all over 50 years of age, constituting the "mothers' class," had consecrated themselves to the Lord. The Rev. E. P. Ketcham of the First Presbyterian church, the Rev. W. R. Richards of the Crescent Avenue, and the Rev. Mr. Newell of Hope Chapel, bore similar strong testimony to the wonderful work in the midst of their people. Mr. Richards spoke in glowing terms of the eloquent sight presented by the Sabbath school teachers at their prayer and consecration meetings before the assembling of their classes, when, in tears, they besought the Master to help them to bring their pupils to Christ.

Altogether, at Sunday's services, 454 signed cards indicating their desire to lead henceforth a Christian life, and signifying a preference for church or pastor. Including these, fully 1,600 people arose in response to the appeals of Mr. Mills to decide for themselves the question, "Will I give myself to the Lord now?"

The 10 o'clock service Tuesday morning was one of the most beautiful ever witnessed in a Plainfield church. Mr. Mills gave a divine exposition of the eleventh chapter of St. John, and in his interpretation of the story of the resurrection of Lazarus gave impassioned utterance to richest truths and promises. When Martha came unto Jesus and said, "Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died; but I know that even now whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee," Mary sat still in the house, cherishing bitterness because Jesus had not responded to the sisters' request to visit Lazarus, their brother, before the death. There were many Marys in actual life—Marys to be pitied, not scolded. And every one of those Marys of to-day must be brought to a full realization that "the Master is come, and calleth for thee," so that they too might arise quickly and go to their Father, and trust themselves to Him, even as did Mary of old.

A great stone—the preacher said—lay in the way of Jesus to-day, in his effort to reach the sinner's heart—just such a stone as had closed the mouth of the cave where the body of Lazarus lay when Christ, weeping and groaning at Mary's anguish, approached the place. Jesus would not himself remove that stone. The sinner must roll it away. To roll away the stone was to signify one's trust in God, and such faith would be rewarded just as Christ rewarded the faith of Mary and Martha when they rolled the stone away from before their brother's grave. And with the stone taken from the human heart God would work the wondrous miracle of resurrecting the soul that was dead in sin, just as Christ raised Lazarus from the dead. Every incident of that beautiful story of Lazarus was thus given a personal and practical application, and the throng that arose, during the conclusion of the service, and signified their willingness to give themselves to Christ and His service, came to an exquisite realization of the passage from the chapter:

"I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:

"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

JACOB LONG SUCCEEDS WILLIAM JONES.

The Borough Council Elects a Freeholder to fill a Vacancy, and Transacts Other Business.

Mayor Place and Councilmen Emmons, Hegeman, Needham, Sebring and Smalley, were present at the regular meeting of North Plainfield Council, Friday evening. Petitions were received and referred, for the construction of ditches along Summit avenue; a crosswalk over Somerset street at Regent street; and permission to remove R. Elliott's building at 60 Somerset street.

David Bodine's election as a member of Warren Engine company was referred and subsequently approved. The bond of the Electric Light company, in the sum of $10,000, was presented by Mr. Sebring, referred for examination, and later accepted. W. R. Codington, City Judge of Plainfield, is one of the sureties.

Chairman Hegeman presented the Street Committee's report. 676 feet of macadam has been laid on Craig place from Grove to Somerset street, costing $428.62 of which the property owners have paid $200. Washington avenue has been fixed; Vine street, re-graded; the upper part of Race street, turnpiked, and some work done on Somerset street, North side of Mountain avenue. The Committee has spent $3,967.66 and have on hand a balance of $291.54. There is $1,165.64 due the city from property owners for street work, against which certain bills are chargeable. The total assets of the Committee, all told, are $796.64.

The following resolutions were adopted; by Mr. Smalley, that the Borough magistrate be requested to collect all fines and make a monthly report; by Mr. Emmons, that Fire, Water and Lamps Committee be empowered to remove stalls into the fire department building, and to purchase a set of double harness; by Mr. Sebring, that Jacob Long be chosen freeholder to fill the unexpired term of Wm E Jones, deceased; by Mr. Sebring, that the Lamps Committee be authorized to negotiate a loan of $800 for street lighting purposes; by Mr. Hegeman, that the Streets committee be given power to purchase 300 tons of crushed stone for the repair of Somerset street.

J. W. VanHorn was appointed a Special Marshal. Mr. Hegeman reported, as already stated in THE PRESS, that the Council had no authority to act in the project of opening Peace street. The matter was referred to the Corporation Counsel. The executed contract for electric lighting, was received and filed.

Henry Haurand the Champion Record Breaker.

About one year ago Mr. Wunderlich, at bowling, scored 116 points out of a possible 120. Ever since that time several members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein famous for big scores have tried hard to beat the record. Last Saturday Charles Meyer got very near the record by making 110 points, and Monday night Henry Haurand made 117 points out of a possible 120 and is now the champion of the society.

Ex-Councilman Carey Will Have to Pay One Debt He Owes Those Who Made Him.

Some time ago the Miller Bros. sued Tunis J. Carey for a balance of borrowed money he owed them, and obtained a judgment against him. On Tuesday, when the case came up, the appeal was set aside, and Mr. Carey will have to pay the amount at once to those he swore in court he did not owe a cent to. The Millers picked Carey up and made him a Councilman.

Ernest R. Ackerman to Succeed Councilman Dunham.

The Republicans of the Third Ward met on short notice, Monday night, to nominate delegates to the city convention, and a councilman to succeed M. M. Dunham. John W. Murray called the primary to order, and John M. Whiton was chosen Chairman, and O. B. Leonard, Secretary. There were about seventy present. John M. Crane nominated Ernest R. Ackerman as the Republican candidate for council. He received the unanimous vote of the primary. J. Oakley Nodyne was nominated for Justice of the Peace, and Amos Moffet for Constable. The members of the City Executive Committee chosen were Ex-councilmen E. N. Erickson, I. W. Rushmore and E. L. Finch.

The delegates chosen to represent the ward at the city convention, Thursday evening, were; O. T. Waring, John W. Murray, E. N. Erickson, E. R. Ackerman, E. L. Finch, D. E. Titsworth, Alex Gilbert, F. A. Dunham and J. F. Hubbard.

A Republican Reflects on the Vicissitudes of Politics.

[Editor Mann in the Bound Brook Chronicle.

We have met the enemy and there is nothing left of us.

After the Republicans "view with alarm" Mr. Reed's defeat in North Plainfield, they can "hail with delight" the threshing Mr. Keyes received in his home township of Hillsborough. Neither candidate ran well at home.

The New York World is inviting correspondence from residents of this State as to New Jersey's greatest need. If our metropolitan contemporary is in a position to supply "long felt wants" it will please give us a few more Republicans.

There is a small crumb of comfort in the fact that up in Hunterdon county the Republicans elected a member of the Assembly for the first time since 1873. The Democratic nominee was a Pidcock man who was distasteful to the better element of the Democratic party.

Royal Arcanum Entertainment.

Through the enterprise of the Committee on Good of the Order, the friends of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, were afforded an opportunity Monday night of hearing Fred. Emerson Brooks, the California poet, recite some selections of his choicest compositions. D. W. Robertson, the tambleronicon soloist, and F. W. Isenbarth, the zither player, were included in the programme.

The spacious lodge room of the Council was crowded. Regent E. W. Conklin preceded the entertainment with a brief explanation of the purpose and the success of the order. The playing of Messrs. Robertson and Isenbarth was much enjoyed, and they each received repeated recalls. Mr. Robertson is an artist, and so is Mr. Isenbarth, but the latter's selections were not the most attractive for a zither; nothing but pathetic ballad music should be played on that instrument—dance music, particularly, being lacking in all pleasing qualities.

Mr. Brooks is a master of expression, in which he is helped by the reading of his own verses. The humors of his own mind, and the sentiments of his own heart, come from his own lips filled with power and effect. After the entertainment, the Council and its guests enjoyed a supper together.

A General Tie-up.

Of all the means of public conveyance in a large city, even for a few hours, during a strike of the employes, means a general paralyzing of trade and industry for the time being, and is attended with an enormous aggregate loss to the community. How much more serious to the individual is the general tie-up of his system, due to the strike of the most important organs for more prudent treatment and better care. If too long neglected, a torpid or sluggish liver will produce serious forms of kidney and liver diseases, malarial trouble and chronic dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are a preventive and cure of these disorders. They are prompt, sure and effective, pleasant to take, and positively harmless.

A Tip for Us, Too.

A Trenton paper says: "Members of the Common Council ought to be advising themselves at the present time as to the practicability and advantages of the storage battery system for electrical motors, so that when the proposition is again made to authorize the unsightly and dangerous overhead system, they will the better be able."

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirits; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. A DISTRESSED DAMSEL

My Startling Adventure in the City of Paris.

I WAS a medical student in Paris when a strange and startling adventure happened which I am about to relate. Tired with hard study, I was out one evening for a walk in the fresh air. It was a pleasant night in mid-winter, and the cold, bracing air, as it touched my fevered brow, caused a grateful sensation. Passing through a lonely street near the river I was surprised at meeting a young and pretty girl—at least she appeared so in the dim light of a distant street lamp—who carried in her hand some three or four bouquets which she offered for sale.

"Will monsieur have a bouquet?" she asked in a sweet, musical tone, holding out to me a well-arranged collection of beautiful flowers.

"They are very pretty," said I, taking them in my hand; and then, somehow, I could not help adding: "and so is their fair owner."

"Monsieur will purchase and assist me," she said.

"Do you, then, really need assistance, mademoiselle?"

"Why else should I be here at this hour of the night, monsieur?"

"And why here at all? This is an unfrequented street—about the last in the world I should have selected for disposing of a luxury only suited to wealth and fashion."

She sighed and reached out her hand for the bouquet I held.

"What is your price?"

"Five francs."

"A large sum."

"Monsieur will remember it is winter and flowers are scarce."

I handed her the requisite silver coin, saying:

"To aid you I will purchase; for though I love flowers, I would not otherwise indulge in the luxury at such an expense."

She thanked me, and seemed about to pass on, but hesitated and said:

"Could monsieur direct me to the house of a good physician who would turn out to-night to see a patient for a small sum?"

"Any friend of yours ill?"

"My mother," with a deep sigh and downcast look.

"I am a medical student, with some experience among the sick of the hospitals. If you care to trust the case to me, I am at your service without charge," I said, feeling already a deep interest in the fair girl.

"Oh, how shall I thank monsieur?" she cried, with clasped hands and an upward, grateful look. "Pray follow me, doctor."

She turned and moved at a rapid pace down the street toward the Seine,

"DO YOU REALLY NEED ASSISTANCE?"

in the direction I was taking when we met.

In less than five minutes we had [illegible] as we passed.

We had now reached the foot of the stairs, and my guide pushed open a door into a small, dimly lighted room, and I followed with some misgivings. There was a bed in one corner, and on it appeared to be a human form lying very still.

"I have brought a doctor, mother," said the girl, closing the door.

There was no reply, and she turned to me saying:

"Will you be seated, doctor? I think mother is asleep."

"I have had a few minutes to spare, mademoiselle," said I, [illegible].

"Monsieur shall not be detained long by me," rejoined the girl, passing out of the room by another door.

I did not sit down, but walked over to the bed, where the patient was lying very still—so still, indeed, that I could not detect any breathing. A woman's cap was on the head, and the end of a sheet concealed the face. I ventured to draw this down carefully, and beheld the ghastly outlines and grinning teeth of a human skull.

I started back in horror, and at the same moment the door by which the girl had left was thrown open, and in rushed, one after the other, four tall figures in black gowns and masks. I knew at once, then, that I was to be robbed, and probably murdered. I wore a heavy diamond pin and ring, carried a valuable gold watch, and had in money about my person some five hundred francs, but not a single weapon of any kind. Resistance being [illegible], I felt that my only chance [illegible] the ruffians and buy myself off. [illegible]

"I understand it all, gentlemen, and you will find me a very liberal person to deal with. There is one thing I value highly, because it is the only one I have, and I am not willing to lose it—that is my life. Every thing else of mine is at your service, even beyond what I have with me."

"Let us first handle what you have here," said the first speaker.

I immediately took out my pin, took off my ring, drew out my watch, pocketbook and purse and placed them all in the extended hand.

"You make me a present of all these now?" he asked.

"Yes, on condition that one of you will bear me company to the streets," I replied.

At length the principal spokesman turned to me and said, in a very [illegible] tone:

"Monsieur has [illegible] like a gentleman, more than any other person we ever had dealings with, and if we could, consistent with our business, oblige him, we would be happy to do so, but, unfortunately we are governed by a rule, which is a law with us, that dead men tell no tales, and we think it will not do to make an exception in this case. We will, however, in consideration of monsieur's gentlemanly behavior, be as brief and lenient as possible in doing our duty, and grant monsieur five minutes for saying his prayers."

"You have then, resolved to murder me?" I asked.

"Monsieur uses a very harsh term, but we will let that pass. You will have five minutes yet to live by that watch."

The villain then held my watch to the light, and I felt indeed that the precious minutes of my life were numbered.

A death-like silence then reigned in that gloomy apartment for some time, and then one of the ruffians bent downward and lifted a trap-door and from the dark pit below issued a noisome smell. I beheld my intended grave, and shuddered and shook like an aspen.

SAVED BY THE GENDARMES.

But why stand there and die like a dog, without a single attempt at escape? At the worst it could be but death, and there was a bare possibility that I might get away. I fixed my eyes on the door which opened upon the stairway, and with a single sudden bound reached it, but found it fast locked. Then as the hands of the ruffians seized me, with murderous intent, I uttered a wild shriek; the door was burst in with a loud crash, and in a moment the room was filled with gendarmes. I saw that I was saved, and fainted and fell.

The four masks, the fair decoy, and some two or three others, connected in that murderous den were all secured that night, and I subsequently had the pleasure of giving my evidence against them and seeing them all condemned to the galleys for life.

The place had been for some time suspected, and the decoy marked. On that night a detective had secretly followed the girl and myself, and, after ascertaining whither she had conducted me, had hastened to bring a body of gendarmes to the place. The delay of the villains in their murderous design had been just sufficient to save me. I scarcely need add that I never again volunteered to accompany a distressed damsel on a secret adventure while I remained in Paris.—Chicago News.

TREATED FOR BUGS.

How Sid Moore Kept Two Niggers from Voting.

A LANK fellow, charged with having kept two negroes from voting at a Congressional election, was brought down from the mountains of East Tennessee and arraigned before the United States Court at Nashville. The only witness was one of the judges of election who swore as follows: "Them here two negroes were brothers, and their names was Lige an' Tom. The day befo' the election me an' the niggers was a-settin' on a log at the cross roads when Sid Moore, the prisoner, he come along. The niggers was a-talkin' about votin' at the time, an' Sid he jest stopped long enough to 'low he would fix 'em [illegible] that they didn't vote. They swore they would, an' I thought they would, for thar wa'n't smarter niggers in the whole community. Wall, the day come, an' ever' minit I was expectin' the niggers to come up an' vote, but they didn't, an', somehow, that, we hain't seen of them since."

"What have you to say to this?" the prosecuting attorney asked, addressing the prisoner.

"Ain't got much to say. Never was much of a talker."

"But did you keep the men from voting?"

"I never said a word to 'em after I seed 'em at the cross-roads."

"But they have not been seen since that time. What became of them?"

"Wall, sah, I wa'n't 'p'inted to look after them, I don't reckon."

"It has been hinted that you made way with them?"

"I hain't hep' what's been hinted. It's about as much as we kin do to pay

[illegible] WOULD SAY 'EM MONEY.

[illegible] to what's done in this here world, let alone what's been hinted."

[illegible]

what an' eat so much they wouldn't feel like votin'. Man's got a right to put stuff in his 'millions to keep the bugs from eatin' 'em. Hain't he, judge?"

"I don't see how we can hold him," said the judge. "The charge is for interfering with an election and not for doctoring a melon."

"Much obleeged to you, judge, powerful obleeged to you; an' of you ever come out my way in the season, I'll give you a 'millon that hain't been treated for bugs."—Opie P. Read in Arkansaw Traveler.

TROUBLE IN CAMP.

A German Satire on the "British Mutineers."

[Translated from the German for this paper.]

UNDER the circumstances it is not at all strange that the German comic papers are having a great deal of fun over the recent mutinies of the crack regiments of the British army. Accustomed as the Germans are to the iron discipline of Moltke the conduct of the English military authorities seems incomprehensible. The following telling satire is from a leading German journal: The scene is at Wellington Barracks. The Colonel of the Royal Grenadiers appears smoking a cigar, and accompanied by his adjutant. The bugler blows the assembly, but the soldiers fail to appear on parade.

Colonel—Adjutant, have you any idea where the men are? They usually fall in when the assembly is blown; that is, if they are in the neighborhood.

Adjutant—I can't imagine why they do not fall in, unless they have forgotten that you were to hold inspection this morning.

Colonel—These oversights are very annoying. Bugler, blow the assembly once more.

The bugler blows the assembly; several officers appear in undress uniform.

Colonel—Good morning, gentlemen, I hope you are all in good health. By the way, have any of you seen any of the rank and file this morning?

"I WONDER WHERE THE MEN ARE?"

Major—Colonel, I regret to inform you that the grenadiers have held a mass-meeting, at which it was unanimously resolved not to parade to-day.

Colonel—I regret very much that I was not consulted.

Captain—I don't think I ever saw them in such a bad humor.

Colonel—And yet usually they are so polite.

Lieutenant—They are a lot of vagabonds; that's what they are.

Colonel—Young man, don't make the situation any worse than it is by such improper remarks. Such remarks regarding her Majesty's grenadiers are altogether out of place. Instead of exasperating the men beyond endurance, let us try and find out what is the real cause of their complaint. I wonder why they did not come to me about it.

Captain—Private Tommy Atkins, who is on guard at St. James' palace, complains that his wife is dissatisfied because he is not able to spend more time in her society.

Colonel—That is a sentiment that does him credit. The English army owes its strength principally to the family instinct of her soldiers.

Captain—Grenadier Jones complains that he can not find time to take his little daughter to school, and Grenadier Robinson had an appointment to meet a lady, and owing to roll-call he was too late. Of course, he is in a towering rage.

Colonel—I don't blame him. That's the way I would feel about it myself. (Taking the Captain aside the Colonel inquires in a whisper if the lady is of very high rank, to which the Captain nods his head, winks, and says: "Jack Robinson is an awful lady killer. He is the pride of the regiment. By the way, bugler, would you be so kind as to blow the assembly once more."

Bugler—I would like to accommodate you, Colonel, but as all the other soldiers have refused to obey your orders I can't bugle unless I have their permission. Personally I am your friend, but I can not violate the traditions of the army.

Colonel—Bravo! You have got the stuff in you out of which heroes are made. Go to your comrades and tell them that I am anxious to have a conference with them. I expect they object to having to drill. I don't blame them, for that's the way I feel about it myself.

Bugler (who has returned)—Colonel, the men positively refuse to come; but they say that if you have any proposition to make to them, and will come to their mess-room, they will listen to you.

Colonel (to officers)—That's just what I expected. I know that this little spell of bad humor would not last if I remained firm. Gentlemen, let us meet this encouraging proposition in the same spirit in which it is tendered. Little differences like this occur in the best disciplined regiments in the world. Let us go to the mess-room. Forward—march!

They enter the mess-room, whereupon the grenadiers sing in chorus—

For he is a jolly good fellow,
For he is a jolly good fellow,
Which nobody can deny.

ALEX. E. SWEET.

NOBLE MISS GARY.

The Daughter of a Chicago Judge Becomes a [illegible].

Miss Fannie Gary, a young and wealthy lady of Chicago, worked two weeks recently in a common tailor shop of that city. The story is a pretty one, with an heroic vein running through it. Mary Anderson worked in the shop referred to, and three weeks ago Miss Gary noticed that Miss Anderson was going rapidly into a decline by reason of the hard work and long hours of the shop, so she proposed sending her to a pleasant summer resort to recuperate.

"I can't go," said the girl. "The boss tailor will not let me leave unless I find some one to take my place, and I can't find anybody."

Miss Gary promptly met the case.

"You go," she replied, "and I will take your place."

Miss Anderson went to the country and Miss Gary went to the tailor shop. For two weeks she left her pleasant home every morning at six o'clock, clad in a neat, plain black dress, and found her way to the shop. She stitched all day long at the coarse cloth, reaching her home again at seven o'clock in the evening. It was not until Miss Anderson returned from her summer vacation that it was whispered about that the daughter of Judge Gary had been working for two weeks in a Division street tailor's shop.

Such a noble act of self-sacrifice will not, perhaps, rank in the estimation of many with the daring acts of a Grace Darling or an Ida Lewis, but for all that it supplies much food for very pleasant reflection.

A Compliment or Otherwise.

Editor—What do you suppose keeps the world from being blown off into space?

Friend—I don't know unless it's the weight of your editorials.—Munsey's Weekly.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

I think a disposition that is happy and resigned
Adds greatly to the comfort and the health of human kind.
I think a sour temper or a bosom filled with spite
Brings trouble, and puts every sign of happiness to flight.
I think no individual, however high his station,
E'er gained the praise of worthy men by vice and dissipation.
I think no dainty dandy, ladies' favors suing,
E'er added perfume to his breath by smoking or by chewing.
I think that wicked cunning never met with much success.
I think if swindlers suffered more their number would be less.
I think if meddling gossips would cease to spy and talk,
That lawyers would be fewer and courts would have less work.
I think that many doctors would better blacksmiths make.
I think that clerks who gamble have more than grief at stake.
I think a man who marries, if he gets a proper mate,
Secures a fortune, though the bride may own no real estate.
I think if certain folks would let some other folks alone,
They'd find more leisure to attend to business of their own.
I think when stingy rich men [illegible] from fortune's height to tumble,
And meet with little sympathy, they have no right to grumble.
I think that many ministers, renowned for fluent speech,
Would more convincing be if they would practice what they preach.
I think that true religion, when the tempter tries his art,
Throws a shield of triple power around the wavering heart.
I think that every soul that [illegible] will meet with suffering,
Whether that soul belongeth to a peasant or a king.
I think all grades of people, from the monarch to the slave,
Are fashioned from one common clay, and equal in the grave.
—Francis S. Smith, in N. Y. Weekly.

A HARD FIGHT.

The Way a Plucky Girl Saved Her Brother's Life.

THE country around Limona, South Florida, is the hunter's paradise, says a correspondent in the Globe Democrat. Besides bear, panther, wild-cats, deer, etc., there are 'gators by the million, plumage birds, etc., in quantity so that the most insatiable nimrod can be almost surfeited by sport in a month's stay here. Many times, though, the hunted turn hunters, and then the fun isn't quite so enjoyable—at least on the part of the "game." Then, too, in these wilds there is a species of wild hog that at times makes the hunter's life a misery, as they are savage and know no fear. These are the remains of droves of domestic hogs that used to be turned into these high hummocks to fatten. Many times scores would not be found at the branding time, and, from their long stay in these woods, large droves finally became wild and savage. Many narrow escapes have been reported from time to time, and many of the old settlers who were hunters have scars to show of the ferocity of these savage boars. The most exciting adventure of late years is one that happened some months ago, and it was related to the writer a few days after.

Down by Snake Bayou, some eight miles below here, lived a family named Herrickson, consisting of a father, mother, son, aged ten, and two daughters, aged twelve and sixteen. When in want of supplies the father and mother generally came up here in a team, leaving the younger ones to watch things at home. At this time the old folks started as usual, leaving the girls and boy at home. The latter in the middle of the forenoon took his gun, and, with his dog, went out hunting. An hour later the girls were startled by hearing the dog barking furiously and the loud shouts of their brother for help. Taking down a light shotgun, the eldest girl ran out at once, while the other, seizing a small hatchet, followed. Soon they approached the dense woods where they heard their brother's voice. He heard them coming and shouted out for them to be careful, as there was a drove of wild hogs after him. The dog heard them, too, and ran out to meet them, which brought out a half-dozen wild and savage boars in swift pursuit. These no sooner saw the girls approaching than they ran at them, grunting horribly and rasping their fierce jaws till the froth fell to the ground in great clots.

Mattie fired her shotgun at the leader, then turned and ran for the house.

SHE PUSHED THE GUN INTO ITS MOUTH.

The younger sister turned, too, and ran after her. As they approached the house the young girl slipped and fell right in the path of the pursuing beasts. She screamed frantically as she fell, and Mattie half turned to see what the trouble was. The sight froze her blood, and, as she said afterwards, she didn't know what to do, and felt as if turned into stone. The girl in falling fell over a sharp pine root, which penetrated her dress and pinned her to the ground. Close beside her was a big boar, its narrow eyes gleaming with rage and anger, its open mouth, with its hideous tusks, champing and raging. Close behind was another, also fierce in its aspect, but smaller in size. Mattie moved not until another scream for help from her poor sister roused her sinking energies. Then with a rush and a jump she placed herself in front of the savage animal. The dog, too, sprang at the boar and buried its teeth in its thick neck. The boar, though surprised for a moment, turned savagely, and with a thrust laid open the poor dog's side with a terrible gash from its tusks. With an angry shake of the head the beast then turned on its victim. As it approached Mattie bravely met it, and as its horrible jaws opened to grasp her dress, pushed the barrel of her gun into its open mouth and fired, sending the remaining charge into the boar's inside. He fell at once with a squeal of pain and ferocity that made the brave girl's flesh creep.

The other one, seeing the fall of its leader, hesitated a moment and then sprang forward. Mattie seized the hatchet that her sister had had, and aimed a blow at the beast. The latter dodged and the hatchet fell from her hand, falling far out of her reach, while the violence of the blow caused her to fall over in front of the hog. The latter champing its jaws till the froth stood all over its head, presenting a horrible picture to the poor girls, lowered its head and charged on them. It came up and seized her dress savagely, and tried to catch her leg in its mouth. Mattie, nerved to desperation, gave it a kick with all her power, hitting it in the tender portion of the throat. The boar drew back a second and this proved her salvation. As she lay on the ground her hands encountered a pine knot (dead wood), hard and sharp as iron. With every nerve exerted she sprang up and flung it straight to the boar's face. Happily it struck him across the eyes, blinding both temporarily, and he stood and changed for a second or two turning in a circle and raising a big dust.

Mattie turned, and, catching up her sister, ran for the house. The boar, hearing her run off, started in pursuit, grunting and rasping its tusks in a manner to make the girl's heart turn cold. It was a race for life, and the girl's pluck won. Entering the house in advance of her foe, she shut the door and fastened it as the boar came rushing up against it. The girls fell to the floor and for several minutes could not raise themselves. But frontier life had made them brave and self-possessed in time of danger, and the recollection of the peril that their brother was in soon roused them. Glancing around for a weapon the sight of a kettle full of hot water caught Mattie's eye. Procuring a good supply she mounted the window-sill in the loft, right over the still raging boar on the outside, and as he looked up, being attracted by the noise she made, the nervy girl gave him a big dose of water in the eyes and face. All the ferocity was knocked out of the beast by this attack, and, with a loud squeal, it turned tail and fled.

MATTIE OPENED FIRE.

Two others now came up, attracted by their companion's cries, and they, too, received a dose. This put them to flight.

After waiting some time and not hearing from any more of them, Mattie ventured forth. Proceeding cautiously to the spot where she lost her shotgun, she found it and loaded both barrels. Then, cautiously approaching the spot where her brother's voice had been heard, she soon found him. He was on a stump about ten feet high, and around him were half a score of savage grunters, their fierce eyes fixed on him, at times charging up savagely to the foot of the stump in impotent rage. The boy looked as if he rather had as much of it as he wanted, and Mattie, first securing her own safety by getting up on another stump, opened fire on the hogs. The first shot startled them, and as the second came, laying low another of their party, the others became panic-stricken and fled at once. Mattie and the boy then returned to the cabin at once, and took good care not to venture out again until their parents had returned. The boy said that as he was going along he saw this drove ahead of him, and, without thinking, shot at and wounded one of them. The others turned on him, and he had only time to get on the stump before they had surrounded him.

When the old folks returned their amazement was great to hear of their daughter's bravery. The neighbors made a heroine of her at once. A hunting party started out the following day to rid the neighborhood of such dangerous "critters," and they bagged some eighteen.

COURTSHIP IN HOLLAND.

Tobacco Plays an Important Part in Forming Engagements.

Thackeray explained the prejudice of ladies against tobacco as being due to the superior claims of the latter on the affections of young men. Yet the great novelist could not but have known that in many countries tobacco plays a very important part as a preliminary to courtship and the closer union of the sexes.

In certain parts of Holland when a young man thinks he has found his affinity it is customary for him to call for a match to light his cigar at the door of his loved one's house. This little subterfuge is intended to arouse the parents of the girl to the fact that something is in the wind. If a second call with a similar object is made soon after, no doubt is left of the young man's intentions, and the parents proceed to investigate the young man's character and antecedents, with a view of ascertaining his eligibility as a member of the family.

When he calls the third time, always for a match to light his cigar, they are prepared to give him an answer. If his suit is regarded with favor he is politely requested to step inside for the first time, and is served with a light. If he is not accepted he is refused a light, and the door is shut in his face without further ceremony. But, having prepared for this contingency, the downcast suitor will in all probability light his weed with a match from his own box and walk away musing on the transitory nature of all earthly things.

When the accepted suitor is invited to enter the house, he, as a matter of course, informs the parents which of their daughters has captivated his fancy. When this is settled the young woman steps forward and they join hands. While the engagement is by no means considered a settled fact even at this important stage, yet it is stated as a truth that when, on the occasion of the young man's third visit, his inamorata has offered him a second cigar, which he has smoked in the house, the engagement has never been canceled.

RULES FOR RENOVATION.

It is said that ripe tomatoes will remove ink stains from white clothes, as well as from the hands.

Soft soap, two quarts to the tub, makes good lather for the first rubbing of all white cottons and linens.

All who are possessed of fine tortoise-shell ornaments or combs will be glad to know that they can be easily cleaned and polished by dipping them first in spirits of wine and rubbing them thoroughly, polishing them afterward with a little bismuth applied with a chamois skin.

To renew velvet hold it over boiling water, with the wrong side next the water, and that will raise the pile. If very badly crushed, wet it on the wrong side, and let some one hold a hot iron upside down; pass the velvet slowly over this, and the pile will rise; then dry it without any handling.

When a grease spot has dried into silk or woolen goods, the application of French chalk needs to be assisted somewhat. Sift the chalk over the spot and lay a bit of blotting-paper over, then apply a warm iron to the blotting-paper. Sometimes the blotting-paper alone will be sufficient to absorb the grease, under heat, without the chalk. Do not have the iron hot enough to scorch the material.

This is the way furs are cleaned in that land of furs, Russia: Rye flour is placed in a pot and heated upon a stove, with constant stirring as long as the hand can bear the heat. The flour is then spread over the fur and rubbed into it. After this the fur is brushed with a very clean brush, or, better, is gently beaten until all the flour is removed. The fur thus treated resumes its natural luster and appears as if absolutely new.

Wine stains on linen should be washed out in cold water mixed with a few drops of ammonia and spirits of wine. If, unfortunately, the cloth has been wetted before the stains are discovered, wet the stain on each side with yellow soap and lay on it some thickly-made starch. Rub well and expose to the sun until the stain vanishes. Sometimes, when space is available, the linen is laid on the grass and salt is substituted for the starch, when the stain disappear in two or three hours.

Painful Accident.

"M-M-M-Mrs. J-J-Jones," began young Hooker, who stammers when embarrassed, "have y-y-y-you ever b-b-b-been in S-S-S-ain—"

"Sir!" exclaimed the indignant Mrs. Jones.

"H-h-h-have you ever b-b-b-been in-in-in S-S-Sain—in S-S-Sain—have y-y-y-you ever b-b-b-been in Sain—i-i-in Sain—"

"How dare you, sir?" almost screamed the offended woman, as she got up and went to the other side of the room.

"Mr. Hooker," said the hostess, shortly afterward, "Mrs. Jones complains that you have been exceedingly rude and impolite."

"I was only trying to ask her, Mrs. Billus," explained the unhappy young man, "if sh-sh-sh-she had ever been in S-S-S-Saint Louis."—Chicago Tribune.

SECOND STREET, 2 doors above Peace street.

MR. JOHN H. STEVENS, Horse-shoer, gives particular attention to Shoeing, Forging, Stumbling and Interfering Horses. Speedy Cutters stopped in an incredibly short space of time. Horses with diseased feet treated in a particular manner by experienced workmen.

WONDERS IN PLANT LIFE.

A SIX-POUND bunch of grapes was picked from a vine at Stockton, Cal., recently.

A MISSOURI peach has been found that measured eleven and one-half inches and weighed thirteen and one-quarter ounces.

A PINE tree was cut in Washington State that scaled twenty thousand five hundred feet. The top log was not counted.

THE old leaves on a horse chestnut tree at Harrisburg have disappeared and new blossoms have appeared.

A SNAKE cucumber seven feet long and resembling a hideous green snake coiled, is one of the curiosities of Los Angeles, Cal.

H. R. GREGORY, of Independence, Mo., has a flower stalk fifteen feet nine inches in height and has two hundred and sixty-six blossoms. This is supposed to be a world-beater.

THERE is in the yard of Samuel Owens at Whittier, Cal., an acacia tree that visitors are never tired of admiring. It has grown from a seed planted two years ago last April, and is thirty-two feet high. Its trunk, a foot above the ground, is twelve inches in diameter, while the branches are sixteen feet in diameter.

A LOS ANGELES paper describes a tomato tree growing in that city. It is a native of Guatemala, and the fruit grows in clusters, the tomatoes being smooth and perfectly oval in shape. They are first green, and then they turn yellow and are a glowing red when ripe. They taste very much like the ordinary tomato.

THE largest apple tree in New England stands before the door of Mr. Delos Hotchkiss' residence, in Cheshire, Conn. It has eight large branches, three of which usually bear one year, and five the next. The average yield is eighty-five bushels, although it has been as high as one hundred and ten bushels. The tree is one hundred and forty years old. The circumference of the trunk, one foot above the ground, is thirteen feet eight inches, and the height is sixty feet.

OF the many curious trees in different parts of the world, the bottle of Australia is especially interesting. It has a singularly enlarged trunk. Where the ground is sterile and rocky the enlargement is directly under the division of the branches; but in rich soil the development is symmetrical and of great size. With the limbs removed the trunk serves as an admirable cask. At a short distance the branches have the appearance of issuing from a mammoth vase or bottle. The leaves are narrow and digitate, and grow in profusion.

Curious Bird's Nests.

At a recent meeting of the Zoological Society, says Chambers' Journal, the photograph of a curious form of bird's nests was exhibited by Prof. Flower. The nest was that of a horn-bill from South Africa, which bird lays its eggs in a hole in a tree trunk. After the female bird has begun to sit her companion walls her in by filling up the aperture in the tree with clay, leaving a small opening, through which he passes to her a daily supply of food.

"AS I SHELLED THE PEASE."

Over and over, a little song
Sung in my heart the whole day long;
No matter what task to my lot did fall,
The song made music, gild it all;
I washed the tea-cups, I kneaded the bread—
"My love loves me!" in my ear was said;
"True love is better than wealth or ease!"
Was whispered to me, as I shelled the pease.

And as I made custard or baked the cake,
A voice kept saying: "For love's sweet sake!"
And, when the table I set for four,
Again I heard it, o'er and o'er:
"True love is better than wealth or ease,
True love rejoices in tasks like these!"

The clock on the wall, with its pleasant song,
Ticked away, though the hours were long;
At last it was time for my loved ones three,
To gather around the board with me.
In came two, with a merry shout—
The children are in, but the father is out—
I wondered if my True Love 'twould please
To know my thoughts, as I shelled the pease!

A hand is heard on the outer door,
A well-known step comes over the floor,
And my Darling is here, though no longer young.
I wondered not that the tune was sung,
For love in the loved one true beauty sees,
When a stranger eye might see naught to please.

The merry children make mirth for all
While the mother smiles and the father tall
Bends low to whisper a loving word,
That by no ear but her own is heard:
"Sweetheart, what viands could taste like these!
With love, I'm sure, you have flavored the pease!"

So, ever and over, the whole day long,
Sung, in my heart, the little song:
"What matters it if the house be small,
If Love finds shelter within its wall?
Naught else I crave but my Love to please,
Though humble my task, as I shell the pease!"

NEWT BLEDSOE'S WIFE.

How She Got the Drop on a United States Marshal.

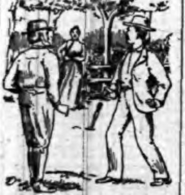
SOME days ago an old deputy United States marshal sat in a hotel corridor at Birmingham, Ala., and talked about hunting moonshiners, says a Chicago Times correspondent.

"Some of these moonshiners," said he, "are as treacherous as Indians, and will shoot at an officer from ambush, but they are poor marksmen and seldom hit a man. I have been shot at a dozen times without receiving a scratch. It is this shooting from ambush and the pranks the moonshiners play on a revenue officer when they catch one alone in the mountains that makes hunting them exciting sport.

"I have often spent a night at the home of an innocent-looking mountaineer and next morning found my saddle and bridle cut to pieces or my horse turned out of the stable and driven away. Up in De Kalb County once I spent the night at the house of a man who was supposed to be a good citizen and not in sympathy with moonshiners. I slept in a shed-room, and there was no lock on the door. The next morning my pants were gone. Every thing had been taken out of the pockets and left in the room, but the pants had been spirited away. My landlord expressed much sympathy for my loss, but charged me five dollars for a second-hand pair of his jeans trousers that were probably worth one dollar when new, and I had to pay him the money before I could get out of bed.

"The wives and daughters of moonshiners, as a rule, are smarter than the men and much more suspicious of a stranger. I was over in Clay County on a raid once and was in a locality where almost every man owned a still. In such a place it is hard to locate a still and almost impossible to obtain evidence against the owners unless they are caught in the act of making the 'mountain dew.' I introduced myself as a land agent prospecting for mineral lands, but the natives did not all believe my story and I was regarded with more or less suspicion. I was after a noted moonshiner named Newt Bledsoe, who was known to have been operating a still in that locality for two years. I had trouble in finding a place where they would let me stay all night, but finally a native suggested that I try Deacon Bledsoe.

"'Thar deakin's sot on 'ligion, the Bible, and sich, an' 'e allus takes in strangers,' said the native. I was directed to the deacon's house, two miles down the valley, and arrived there an hour after dark. I did not once associate



"DRAP THAT THAR WEEPIN."

Deacon Bledsoe, who was 'sot on the Bible,' with Moonshiner Newt Bledsoe.

"In response to my hellos a tall, innocent-looking old countryman came out to the gate, and by the light of a pine torch which he carried in his hand he looked me over. 'Be you uns the new Methodist circuit-rider?' he asked. I decided to play preacher for once and answered in the affirmative.

"'Light, parson. I'm a hard-shell, but you're welcome. I never lays it up agin a man 'cause he don't belong to my church,' and the deacon received me with true mountain hospitality.

"At bedtime Bledsoe brought out a well-worn family Bible and invited me to lead in prayer. I had not prayed since I was a boy at Sunday-school, but was in for it, and reading a chapter in the Bible we all knelt down, and I delivered some sort of a prayer. In my petition I referred to those sinners who defied the laws of God and man by making spirits, and prayed the Lord to turn them from their wicked ways. To this Bledsoe responded with a loud amen!

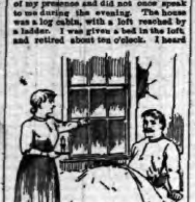
"I rose early the next morning, and, finding that breakfast was not ready, I started for a short stroll in the woods back of the house. As I left the yard I noticed Bledsoe's wife watching me with evident suspicion. I walked on down to a small branch, which ran through the woods three hundred yards back of the house. I saw smoke rising among the trees a little ways down the branch, and walking down that way I found my host, Deacon Bledsoe, building a fire under one of the largest moonshine stills I ever saw. He seemed as much surprised as I was, and in an instant it dawned on me that Deacon Bledsoe and Moonshiner Newt Bledsoe were one and the same person. Before he recovered from his surprise I had him covered with my revolver, and telling him who I was, ordered him to surrender.

"'Drap that thar weepin'. I knowed you warn't no parson,' said a female voice behind me at that moment, and turning I saw Bledsoe's wife. She had the drop on me with a long rifle, and I dropped my pistol. Bledsoe picked up my revolver, and I was marched back to the house a prisoner.

"'That's your critter ready saddled an' here's a bite to eat; now git,' said Mrs. Bledsoe, and she kept me covered with the rifle, while her husband handed me back my pistol when I mounted my horse.

"'Won't you pray for us agin, parson, fore you go?' said Bledsoe, with a grin, as I rode away. A week later I returned with a strong posse, captured Bledsoe, and destroyed his still. I could have made a case against his wife, but I wouldn't do it.

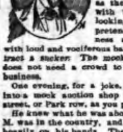
"The only romantic adventure I ever met with hunting moonshiners occurred in Marion County five years ago. I was over there hunting some witnesses and incidentally looking out for stills. I was spending the night at the house of a man I had reason to believe was a moonshiner, and a dangerous one. I saw he regarded me with suspicion, but he asked no questions and I felt safe. The man had a daughter about eighteen years old, a very pretty country girl, who seemed to take no notice of my presence and did not once speak to me during the evening. The house was a log cabin, with a loft reached by a ladder. I was given a bed in the loft, and retired about ten o'clock. I heard my host talking in a low tone for some time after I lay down, then I heard him take his rifle from the rack and leave the house. I had been asleep probably two hours when the touch of a hand on my face awoke me. The girl was standing by my bed with a lighted candle in her hand. She motioned me to be silent, and in a whisper she said: 'Stranger, you'll have ter git. Your critter's at the gate. Take ther right-han' road at the forks, cross the creek, and don't stop this side of Lige Marsom's—that's 'bout four miles down ther road. Git out thar!' and she pointed to a small window in one end of the loft. Then she blew out the candle and disappeared as silently as a shadow. I put on my clothes, went to the window and found a ladder on the outside. At the gate I found my horse ready saddled, and, mounting, I rode rapidly away. I have never seen that girl since, but I am satisfied that she had learned of a plot to murder me, and saved my life."



"GIT OUT THAR!"

MAC'S INVESTMENT.

Why a Smart Brooklyn Man Has Sworn Off on Jokes.



McINTYRE thought he knew all about mock auctions. There was nothing green in his eye. He had never been in one, but he often peeped in and listened with a grin as the auctioneer, with two cappers looking on, made a pretence of business and sought with loud and vociferous bawling to attract a sucker. The mock auctioneer does not need a crowd to conduct his business.

One evening, for a joke, Mac drifted into a mock auction shop on Chatham street, or Park row, as you please.

He knew what he was about, but Mrs. M. was in the country, and time hung heavily on his hands. There were five men in the place. How many were cappers and how many Macs it would be hard to say.

The auctioneer brightened up when he saw Mac, and sizing him up for a family man (Mac boards in Brooklyn) he held up to view a handsome ivory-handled carving set, worth fifteen dollars if it was worth a cent.

"How much am I offered?" said the auctioneer, after dilating on the merits of the set.

"Half a dollar," said Mac, thinking he would start the bidding by way of a joke.

"Sold," said the auctioneer, not even asking for another bid. "Wrap up the set, Jerry, and take the gentleman's change. And a rare old bargain he has got. Now, then, gentlemen, we have an elegant lady's gold watch."

Mac looked sadly around the room. The five men, cappers or customers, looked severely at him. He did not want the carving set for fifty cents, or for any price. But he had made a bid and his offer had been accepted. He could not gracefully back down. The eyes of the five cappers or customers, to say nothing of Jerry and the auctioneer, were upon him. A backdown on his part meant a rough-and-tumble fight, with the honors against him.

He gave Jerry $1. Jerry handed him the package and a lead half dollar by way of change. Mac knew it was counterfeit, but he put it in his pocket and walked out, glad to escape with a whole skin.

On the way to the office Mac dropped the package. The knife-blade was bent into the shape of the letter L. It was made of lead. The steel was shivered into a dozen pieces. It was made of the most brittle kind of cast iron. The ivory handles were cheap celluloid. Mac threw the package into a garbage barrel.

He has sworn off on jokes.—N. Y. Herald.

"Maria," inquired Mr. Billus, "what kind of a girl is this second cousin of yours that's coming to visit us?"

"I don't know much about her," answered Mrs. Billus, "except that she is said to be quite pretty, and—where are you going, John?"

MY BIG BROTHER JIM.

I am called "the Little Brother,"
For there's two boys, and the other,
He was christened "Jim."
Jim is more than six years older,
And my head don't reach his shoulder
When I stand beside him.

Our Jim is nearly seventeen,
And no such style was ever seen
As he's acquired.
He's quite a dude, and puts on airs,
And strokes his seven mustache hairs,
Till he makes me tired!

Oh, yes, of course the whole town knows
That I'm wearing Jim's old clothes—
Altered, so they'll fit!
He don't wear them long before they're short;
Then our folks rip them all apart,
And I the clothes inherit.

To some purpose, it is stated,
Every thing has been created;
And I believe it's true.
For, though we growl at one another,
I find that even my big brother
Was made for something, too.

When my chums begin to bully,
And I recognize most fully,
It's a serious matter,
Then I just glare, with visage grim,
And yell for "My Big Brother Jim"—
May be they don't scatter!

So, while I, with great good humor,
Pose as Jim's old clothes consumer,
He always fights for me.
Thus you'll see, on contemplation,
Nature's law of compensation,
As plain as plain can be.

STAMPEDED AT NIGHT.

Wild Race in the Darkness with a Herd of Cattle.

AFTER weeks of "rounding up," "cutting up," branding and marking, we had gotten together seventeen hundred head of the finest steers to be found on the banks of the muddy Pecos in New Mexico, says a writer in the Galveston (Tex.) News. Two days later the "boss" rode into camp, consulted with his foreman, and eight men, including the writer, were chosen to drive the snorting, bellowing herd to Springer, N. M., a distance of two hundred and fifty miles.

The evening of the sixth day was cloudy and cool, and indications of an approaching storm were visible.

"Have ter watch 'em putty close to-night, boys," said our foreman. "Looks like we're goin' ter have some rain."

The writer was on first guard. The cattle were restless, showing a decided disposition to run, and instead of walking our horses around the herd we were compelled to travel at a sharp trot. Daylight faded out and pitchy darkness succeeded. The cattle were indistinguishable at a dozen paces, and frequently we were compelled to pull up short to avoid colliding with a steer or with each other. This continued until the arrival of the second guard, when the increased forces succeeded in quieting them somewhat, and the writer and his mate started for camp, guided by the light of the camp-fire, which shone like a star on a little elevation about a half-mile away.

We had scarcely turned into our blankets, fully dressed as usual, with the exception of our boots, when the rain commenced to fall, in drops at first, but steadily increasing to a downpour. Blankets were drawn over heads and grunts of displeasure were heard on every side, when a rumble and shaking of the ground was heard, mingled with hoarse shouts.

"They're running!" yelled the foreman, jumping from his blankets. "Mount! mount! every one of you," running to his horse as he spoke, which was picketed a short distance away.

Not waiting to don boots, the writer sprang to his horse, vaulted into the saddle, and tore off after the foreman, the flickering light of the camp-fire, fast being extinguished by the rain, revealing the remaining men hurriedly preparing to follow.

Guided by the thunder of hoofs the herd was soon overtaken, and, in obedience to the foreman's yells, I strove to "get in front of 'em." I could faintly discern in the darkness a line of bellowing, snorting beasts, and urging "Nigger Baby" to his utmost reached the end of the line and there found two of the boys galloping in the lead, shouting and waving their oil-coats or "slickers" and trying to stop the headlong flight.

The confusion of the scene was indescribable. The terrified snorts of the cattle were almost drowned by the clashing of horns, thunder of the hoofs, and shouts of the men. My oil-coat was strapped to my saddle, not having had time to unfasten it. I tore at the leather straps, succeeded in loosening them, and turning in my saddle shook it before the leaders, adding my shouts to the din around me.

As well try to stop the torrent of Niagara. The wild race was unslackened, and, from traditions, I knew that a misstep of my horse sufficient to throw me, or his fall, meant that I would be cut to pieces by the sharp hoofs of the cattle.

Then an unexpected event occurred. The herd divided in two sections, one of which I was the sole leader of, while the other portion galloped off at right angles, led by my two companions. For a few minutes I could hear their shouts, then they grew fainter and fainter, and were finally lost in the gallop of hoofs around me.

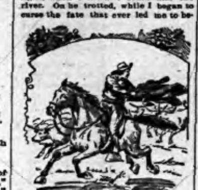
On we thundered. My throat was raw and swollen from shouting and my "slicker" had fallen from my hand. The rain had ceased, but I was wet to the skin and numbed by the cool air. I thought the sound of hoofs was not so deafening, and as the clouds blew away so that I could see a few yards in front of me I found that I was leading about a dozen steers that had become separated from the herd. I had just made this discovery when they slackened speed and finally stopped, panting and quivering, all the run knocked out of them. Of what use was a handful of steers out of one thousand and seven hundred? Riding off a few yards I listened, but could hear no sound of my companions. Becoming conscious of a severe pain in my left foot, I reached down and found that I was literally pincushioned with the sharp needles of a cactus, having ridden through a bed of the prickly stuff, my foot unprotected by boots.

In the excitement of the run I had not felt it, but now the pain was intense. I plucked such as I could and then deliberated what was best to do. My lone dozen steers had wandered away and I made no effort to overtake them, knowing the uselessness of the undertaking.

Here was a predicament. In the middle of the prairie, shoeless, and shivering with cold, not knowing in what direction to go to reach camp and my horse blown with his fearful run. Knowing the instinct of horses I dropped the bridle-reins and suffered him to go where he would.

He promptly wheeled around and started off on a slow trot, which he kept up for about fifteen minutes. I knew we were camped on the bank of the river, and supposed that he would go in that direction, but wishing to test his instinct I turned him from his chosen course and to my dismay he complied and started off in the new direction just as willingly. I tested him from every point of the compass, and he seemed to go in any direction just as willingly.

I gave up in despair then, and concluded to keep him moving until daylight, when I knew I could find the river. On he trotted, while I began to curse the fate that ever led me to become a cow-puncher. After riding I should judge an hour I was delighted to find myself on the river bank; but then a new question arose: Was the camp be*fore me or behind me?* Again I tested the horse. He would go up or down, just as I pleased. I peered through the darkness, trying to look for any thing that might serve as a guide, when afar off in the distance I saw a faint light which grew to a tiny blaze and then died out. Where there was a light there must be life, and with renewed hope I galloped off in that direction, and about ten minutes later had the satisfaction of seeing the canvas top of the mess wagon looming up before me.



HE SHOOK HIS OIL-COAT BEFORE THE LEADERS.

The light I had seen was a match in the hands of one of the boys, who had struck it to light the lantern, which had burned out. Its last flickering gleam had been seen by me quite accidentally, and his providential lighting of a match had guided me aright.

We were the only two of the outfit who reached camp that night. The others, like myself, had chased the cattle until they scattered, and had spent the night in a vain search for camp. Daylight found many of them traveling in an entirely opposite direction, and one nearly ten miles from his destination.

Messengers were dispatched to a ranch across the river and to another twenty miles away. Men were sent to our assistance, and with a force of twenty cowboys the scattered cattle were rounded up in two days and we continued our journey, having lost but six head in the wild stampede.

Evidences of the wild rush of the cattle were plentiful in the broken horns, and two carcasses were found almost trampled to a jelly. The poor brutes, exhausted, had fallen to the ground only to be cut to pieces by the sharp hoofs of their companions. Four times they stampeded before Springer was reached, but the stampedes fortunately occurred on clear nights, and were stopped with little difficulty.

AT the National Library of Paris a MS. of the Bible has been discovered. It was written in 1259 in a suburb of Perpignan, and is richly illuminated.

MR. GOTTSCHALK, of New York, owns the only genuine and perfect holy shekel in the world. The interesting relic is about 3,400 years old and was used in King Solomon's Temple.

SOME very old relics were sold at the sale of the personal effects of the late Frederick Fox, of Reading, Pa. A waf*fle iron with long handle and tripod was* supposed to be 150 years old. There was also a steelyard with weights, 120 years old; a handsomely ornamented waiter of unusually large size, over 100 years old, and many smaller articles. A "grandfather's clock" over 130 years old was kept in the family.

THE hat worn by Napoleon at Eylau was sold in Paris in 1835 for $400. The coat worn by Charles XII. at the battle of Pultowa brought over $100,000. A wig that once belonged to Sterne, the great English writer, was sold at public auction at London a few years ago for $1,050. In 1816 a tooth of Sir Isaac Newton was purchased by a nobleman for $3,650. The buyer had a costly diamond removed from his favorite ring and the tooth set in its place.

THE house of Deacon Bourne, of Cohasset, is now being taken down, and its site will be occupied by the new Osgood school-house. There is on the premises an old-fashioned horse block, about the last relic of this kind in the immediate vicinity, which ought to be preserved. In olden times, when traveling on horseback was more common than it is to-day, the horse block was one of the appointments of many estates, and was used by both ladies and gentlemen. By all means save this reminder of ye ancient days.

MRS. WARREN HILL, of Machias, Me., has in her possession an ancient chair once the property of her great-grandfather, Major-General David Cobb, of the revolutionary army. While this chair was recently being upholstered there was found on removing the leather covering of the cushion an inner covering, an original patch-work of silk and velvet, containing about twelve hundred pieces, in the center of which where the figures 1751. This covering was fastened to the chair board with hand-made copper tacks.

A LEWISTON (Me.) gentleman is anxiously looking up an heirloom in the shape of an old Bible, printed with the German text and brought over by his Dutch ancestors. It was in the possession of an uncle who has lately died. Among the gentleman's earliest remembrances is that of a curiosity-seeker who once tried to buy the much prized Bible from his mother. She refused to part with it at any price. Thereupon the stranger had the audacity coolly to cut off a fragment of the leather cover as a relic. Hastily snatching it from him she exclaimed, haughtily: "I am able to keep it, sir!"

IN the window of a little old-fashioned clock store on Third avenue, New York, stand the solid brass works of a clock that was made by E. Luke in London, Eng., repaired by F. C. H. in the year 1797, and repaired the second time in New York in 1830. No other name or date appears on the movements, and while the time of its original construction is unknown, the clock has been ticking for more than a century. The original case and dial plate have disappeared, but the works are contained between two plates of brass, and the one at the back is quaintly graved with the figure of a funeral urn and a large number of flourishes.

THE SUN, MOON AND STARS.

A NEW illustration of the distances of the stars is that it would take all the Lancashire cotton factories 400 years to spin a thread long enough to reach the nearest star at the present rate of production of about 155,000,000 miles per day.

ALVAN CLARK is now constructing a telescope for a Los Angeles observatory that will bring the moon within an apparent distance of one hundred miles from the observer. It is expected that when this telescope is finished the question whether there are any inhabitants on the moon will be definitely settled, and also whether the supposed inhabitants of the planet Mars are signaling to us by means of certain lights which astronomers have noticed on that planet.

"AS THE sun's spots remain for two or three months on the average before disappearance, we have been able," says H. Clements, "to determine the time that the sun takes to revolve on its axis. These spots travel from the eastern to the western edge of the sun, in such a way as to show that they form part of and are really attached to the sun's disc. The average time taken by a great many has been found, giving about twenty-five days as the period taken by the sun in making one revolution on its axis."

PROF. ASAPH HALL, who has used the big telescope at the United States Observatory in Washington for measurements of Saturn during the last fourteen years, finds the time of rotation of the planet to be about 10 hours, 14 minutes, 24 seconds. This is nearly fifteen minutes less than the period stated in most of the astronomical text books published in the latter half of the present century, but is remarkable as being only 100 seconds less than the period assigned to it by Sir William Herschel. That astronomer of a century ago obtained his results in this particular by the aid of an instrument far inferior to many of the so-called smaller telescopes of to-day, and the fact is testimony to the wonderful ability of the man whose name was for years given to the planet he discovered, now generally called Uranus.

PRINCIPLES vs FACTIONS.

James Russell Lowell, a distinguished literary Massachusetts man, and ex-American Minister to England, says—"When parties become factions it is time for all good men to leave them. I make a distinction—parties [illegible] factions are the destruction of [illegible]. At present the Republican party is a faction."

That was well said by Mr. Lowell. Webster defines "Faction to be—a party acting from selfish motives against government or established order of things."

How accurately that portrays partisan Republicanism of the present time, which, under the leadership of such men as Reed, McKinley, Lodge and Quay, [illegible] to the party of Lincoln, Chase and Sumner, [illegible].

The Republican party has degenerated into a faction. The people now read the character aright, and losing all confidence in its professions and disgusted with its [illegible], and, by the many thousands, following the example of Mr. Lowell and leaving it.

Directly opposite stands the record of the party of Democracy. From the days of Jefferson to the present hour, in power and out of power, [illegible] the Democratic party never was found in advocacy of [illegible] clearly defined principles of free representative government and the equality of popular rights.

Principles have kept the century-built ship of Democracy afloat and made her the peoples' safe refuge.

When popular sovereignty attempts to [illegible] political issues [illegible] ground.

The prairie farmers let a wide and dismal wail through the [illegible] of McKinley.

High protection [illegible] a mighty heap of Western Republican party [illegible].

[illegible] The tariff is a tax.

Congressman Gekenheimer's [illegible] majority was a just reward for faithful public service rendered the people.

A Baptist clergyman of Boston, in a sermon delivered since the election, [illegible] November 4.

But John Wanamaker [illegible] the tariff when he advertised in a Philadelphia paper—"Buy your [illegible] before the McKinley bill [illegible]."

Whether [illegible] the tariff is a tax on consumers has been decided beyond controversy by popular suffrage.

The five Republican Representatives in Congress from Minnesota who voted for McKinley's tariff bill, were at the last election all consigned to the [illegible] walks of private life.

The Democratic Governor-elect of Massachusetts, Russell, is quite a young man, but has already proven himself to be a trustworthy and efficient executive officer by [illegible] as Mayor of Cambridge.

An old [illegible] a partisan Republican, [illegible] for a Democratic Congressman, [illegible]—"The tariff is a tax, and I don't propose to be taxed for the benefit of tariff robbers if I can help it any longer."

A marked [illegible] of the American Revolution was the protest of the people of Massachusetts against unjust taxation, culminating in the throwing of British tea overboard into the harbor of Boston. The descendants of those early patriots have just recorded a like vigorous protest, through the ballot box, against a wider [illegible] of oppressive taxation, the [illegible] McKinley tariff. The popular majority in Massachusetts foots up 30,000 Democratic. Hail Columbia!

The importer of a well-known brand of champagne makes this advertising announcement in the New York papers: "This wine has been advanced one dollar per case, which is the exact increase of duty imposed by the McKinley tariff bill." This plainly shows who pays tariff taxation. It is the consumer every time and every thing affected. What is true of wine is true of the [illegible] living. The rich can afford to pay [illegible] at higher prices, but poor men [illegible] increased burdens of life [illegible] by a Republican Congress.

The principal members of Speaker Reed's partisan Election Committee who were active in seating a number of Republicans [illegible] in Congress, in order to strengthen the Republican majority there, [illegible] House of Representatives, [illegible] Reed will certainly be defeated. [illegible]

Speaker Reed has been heard from. [illegible] to Maine, [illegible] the McKinley bill would surely raise prices, and when the women went shopping they found the protection had become a stubborn fact. Hence the hundred and fifty majority in the next House of Congress and Mr Reed's occupation in opposition under that refined. A hundred cheers for the drummers and women!

DECLINATIONS AND ACCEPTANCES.

John B. Brown Willing but [illegible]—[illegible] Joseph S. Cutter who [illegible]

The following letters speak for themselves:

To J. E. Martine, President of the Democratic Association:

DEAR SIR:—While deeply grateful for the honor conferred in tendering me the Democratic nomination for Mayor of this city, in deference to the wishes of my family and advice of my physician, I am reluctantly compelled to decline the proffered honor. I am warmly in sympathy with the views of your convention in choosing as a candidate a citizen whose business and interests make it possible to be in the city during the day, in order that he may be readily reached by our citizens.

Assuring you of my heartfelt gratitude and interest in your efforts for a prudent government. I am respectfully yours,

JOHN B. BROWN.

Plainfield, Nov. 17, 1890.

To J. E. Martine, Jas. Clark, L. F. Wadsworth, etc., Committee:

GENTLEMEN:—In response to the tendered honor, making me a candidate for the office of Mayor of this city, I am prepared to accept the distinguished compliment, fully realizing the responsibilities attached to that important office; believing with Jefferson that "public office should not be too eagerly sought nor lightly declined." The needs of our city demand such a prudent, conservative and economical administration as is consistent with reasonable progress; and all efforts that tend to encourage a large indebtedness, should be sternly opposed. Should I be called by the voice of my fellow citizens to the office of Mayor, I pledge myself to administer the duties of that office impartially with an eye single to the best interests of the people even the humblest of my fellow citizens.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH S. CUTTER.

Nov. 17, 1890.

To James E. Martine, Esq., President of the Democratic Association:

DEAR SIR:—It is with regret that I am compelled to decline the honor conferred upon me in your convention of the 13th inst., nominating me as your standard bearer of the Democracy of the Third Ward of this city as councilman.

Business matters compel me much to my regret to decline the honor desired to be conferred. Trusting that the Democracy of Plainfield will succeed in their efforts.

I remain yours truly,

JUSTUS H. [illegible]

Plainfield, Nov. 15, 1890.

[illegible] Cannot be Run Against Mr. [illegible]

To James Clark, Esq., Plainfield, N. J.:

MY DEAR SIR:—Much to my surprise I learn that I have been nominated for Councilman from the Third Ward.

While I thank you for the courtesy shown me, which I greatly appreciate, yet I cannot well accept the nomination, as I expect to be absent from Plainfield a great deal during the coming year. My business necessitates my presence in different parts of the country on very short notice, and under these circumstances I could not undertake to perform official duties with which my business would interfere very seriously.

Believe me, very sincerely yours,

E. WOLTMANN.

Plainfield, N. J., Nov. 15, 1890.

[illegible]

[illegible] North Plainfield, [illegible] Keyes [illegible] own town, [illegible]—Central Times.

There goes the mocking bird, again. If the Times would compare the returns of Mr. Keyes's "own town" in past elections, it would learn that he ran ahead of his party's vote.

Jersey Central Fluctuates.

The most important decline at the New York Stock Exchange Tuesday was in Jersey Central, a stock which held up above 120, and often went as high as 125 in the Summer months, when all other values were growing less, and which maintained its price steadily until well in October. This stock opened this day at 99¾, and advanced in early dealings to 100¼. Then the bears began their work, and before they were through with it it touched 92¾, recovering at the close to 94.

Jersey Central today opened at 96, and was the weakest on the list, but recovered in a short time and advanced to 98.

Democratic Pluralities in the State.

The official returns from the various counties in New Jersey, as filed with the Secretary of State, shows a Democratic plurality of 12,105, against 14,253 in 1889, and 7,149 in 1888. The total vote compared with the preceding years is as follows:

	Rep.	Dem.	Pro.
President, 1888	144,344	151,493	7,904
Governor, 1889	123,992	138,245	6,853
Congress, 1890	114,900	126,683	7,987

The Congressional pluralities were as follows: First district, 2,769, Rep.; Second, 1,171, Rep.; Third, 4,856, Dem.; Fourth, 4,071; Fifth, 1,361; Sixth, 1,743; Seventh, 5,114. The Democratic candidates carried but one county in each of the First and Second districts, and those by only small pluralities. On the other hand, the Republicans carried but one county in the other five districts, and that by a still smaller plurality.

Mr. Reed and Wolverton, a Party.

(From the [illegible].)

Mr. Reed, the Republican candidate for Senator in Somerset county, has given notice of a contest against his successful opponent, and with it has coupled some very flowery protestations that he does so, not from any desire for the seat, but to test the question of whether or not Mr. Keyes is a citizen of New Jersey of proper residence.

It is to be said for Mr. Reed that he was not willingly a party to the disgraceful political trick by which it was sought to defeat Mr. Keyes just before the election. The trick was manufactured and kept in motion by other Republican politicians in Somerset, [illegible] thought to be too late to meet the lie, and [illegible] Mr. Reed protested against it [illegible].

His later [illegible] may therefore be taken to explain his silence during the canvass by the claim that he thought the story was true.

Mr Keyes' statement and evidence of his residence in New Jersey are so plain and straightforward that there is no room [illegible] holding down his opponent's pretensions.

THE EVANGELIST'S FAREWELL

PLAINFIELD REGRETFULLY SAYS GOOD-BYE TO A GIFTED PREACHER.

End of the Mills Revival Meetings—Touching Scenes at Church and Railway Station—Throngs of People Eager for the Final Hand-shake—Great Chorus of Gospel Songs While Waiting for the Train—Delegated Escorts and Churches, and Hope of a Great Re-union.

(From The Daily Press of Tuesday.)

The revival meetings of Evangelist B. Fay Mills are at an end. For two weeks the people of Plainfield have been greatly aroused, through have daily neglected personal pursuits to an ample in the churches and to listen to the preaching of the Gospel, and many hundreds of men, women and children have professed conversion and have announced before the world that henceforth they are determined to lead earnest Christian lives.

The man who under the grace of God has thus led the people to a public consecration of themselves to Christ is no more among us. He has labored hard, has reaped a bountiful harvest, and has gone away to enter on new fields. Prayers and blessings from thousands of Plainfield hearts follow him. Benedictions and words of comfort, peace and joy, linger behind.

∴

The godsend given Evangelist Mills and Sweet Singer Greenwood last night will long be remembered. The services of the evening had been attended by a great number of men, despite the storm, and after an affecting farewell scene on the platform of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church the entire congregation poured through the church doors and down the street to the North avenue railway station, where the two men were to board a train for their departure. When Mr. Mills and Mr. Greenwood, with the local pastors, descended from the stage coach at the front of the station, they found a great crowd gathering. For the next half-hour they were kept busy shaking hands with the many who pressed about them, inside the station. A continuous stream of humanity swept through the entrance for a momentary pause with the evangelist and the singer, and out again. The interior of the building was constantly filled, and such a multitude assembled outside that the railway platform and tracks were blockaded with a dense jam of men and women.

So bubbling over with song were the people that when some one started a hymn every body joined in the singing, and a magnificent praise service by a great chorus of voices resulted. A pause in the singing, and Mr. Mills suggested that the pastors had been bottled up so long that they must be running over with something to say, and asked who the people would like to hear. Then arose a great cry of "Mills! Mills!" and the evangelist was borne upward above the heads of the crowd and placed on his feet on the drinking fountain. Up too went the singer, and then amid much merriment bits of pleasantry flashed back and forth, until Mr. Greenwood began a speech of more sober thought, and solemnly impressed on the people the necessity and value of clinging to Jesus Christ as the rock of their salvation.

Mr. Mills also made an evangelistic speech, and was in the midst of an interesting bit of a sermon when a noisy freight train silenced him, and song broke forth again.

The train which the two were to take was bulletined as being fifty minutes late, so it was decided to take the first train that should come along, as connections in New York had to be made, to prevent the departing friends from being disappointed in making their flying trip home before going to their new field of labor in Syracuse.

Some minutes after ten o'clock the vestibuled Washington express, due here at 9:45 whizzed past the station. The train never stops at this city except to let off passengers from Trenton, Philadelphia and the South, and, fortunately for Mr. Mills and Mr. Greenwood, there were two people aboard whose destination was Plainfield. The engineer applied the brakes to bring the train to a stop, but the grip was not sufficient to halt the swiftly moving mass till some distance beyond the station, and the locomotive and cars went flying past to the imminent danger of the people crowding back from the tracks. Presently the train came slowly back, and the evangelistic twain took advantage of the opportunity to get a parlor car seat and swung themselves aboard from the arms of their friends. A large number pressed around to get the last hand shake, but soon the car wheels began to revolve, and the train to glide away. Standing on the vestibuled platform, Mr. Mills and Mr. Greenwood waved their handkerchiefs and smiled on the sea of faces now fading away from their view. A tremendous chorus of good-byes arose from those hundreds of throats. Hats and handkerchiefs were swung in the air. Passengers in the train could be seen flocking towards the platform and craning their necks to see what great magnate of earth was being thus honored. The train went faster and faster; the ovation was at an end: the evangelist and his helper were gone.

Standing there and watching the train vanish in the darkness, the clergymen and other Christian workers came to a sudden full realization of the fact that now, their divinely gifted brother gone, a vast deal of work remained for them to do, that those who had been awakened and re-awakened by the spirit of the revival must be helped and sustained in the Christian faith, that they themselves must continue the zealous, glorious work of the departed evangelist, and bring increased results. And so with a feeling of great responsibility as to their own duties, as well as with a feeling of sadness over the parting which might to a great many be forever, the throng of people departed for their homes.

The farewell meeting for women held in the Crescent Avenue church in the afternoon and the farewell meeting for men in the evening were both deeply interesting. The attendance at each was very large, despite the disagreeable weather. The evangelist preached two good-bye sermons, counseling the people to be steadfast in their faith, and urging the widespread extension of personal effort for bringing the hearts of sinners to a full realization of the gospel of Jesus.

For the last time Mr. Mills gave the people an opportunity to signify before the world that they accepted Jesus as their Saviour, and to sign the cards recording their desire to lead Christian lives and to connect themselves with church membership. A large number availed themselves of the opportunity.

All hearts were indelibly impressed with the beauty of the scene, as the entire throng at each service arose in a body and through the prayer of Mr. Mills dedicated themselves wholly to God's service. Each countenance was resplendent with the glory that shone upon the people at those parting hours.

The farewell of the women to the evangelist and singer was spoken by the Rev. Dr. Robinson, and that of the men by the Rev. Dr. Yerkes. The words of both came deep from the heart, and were full of most impressive meaning. An intense feeling of personal affection was visibly manifested when Dr. Yerkes, bidding the preacher and his co-worker godspeed, grasped their hands before that great body of men and spoke of the glories of immortality in heaven; and when Mr. Mills, responding, poured out his soul in an eloquent charge to the people so to live that they all should meet together on the right hand of God the Father before the great white throne in the Day of Judgment, a look of ineffable peace rested on the faces of those whose hearts leaped forward in joyous hope at thought of that great re-union.

In naming over some of the things he would like to stay to preach about—such as the unity of the church, a perfect representation of which had been given in the union evangelistic meetings of the past two weeks—Mr. Mills touched on the temperance question, and in ringing notes denounced the licensing of the liquor traffic as a compromise which God would not tolerate. He considered the open saloons in Plainfield awful blots on the fair face and fame of a most beautiful city, and he urged that the Christian men of the community recognize the sin and shame of being responsible, by their votes and licenses, for such disgraceful, soul-ruinous places of iniquity, and that they in future cease to be slaves to p[illegible] ties and party and cast their ballots for and place in office only men pledged for right. The license system ought to be abolished; until it was abolished the people themselves must be responsible for the curse of the saloon. It was an awful disgrace, a fearful shame, upon the Christian men of the city, that they had not had backbone enough to enforce the prohibition laws that had been enacted locally in the past.

Referring to the wondrous power of the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ, Mr. Mills held up as a glowing example the very meetings of this revival series. What other topic—though never so dear to a man's heart—except the matter of personal salvation, the concern of the human soul, would have drawn forth such multitudes of people, would have aroused such great interest, as had been witnessed during the past two weeks? Col. Ingersoll, that brilliant blasphemer, with all his eloquence could never draw such crowds for fifteen consecutive days, in all sorts of weather, to the neglect of worldly business and pleasure, as had been done here by the power of the Gospel. The great unbeliever had tried to give a series of lectures in a big western city. The first night he had a full house; the next night not so many; the third night only thirty-seven hearers. The one, beautiful story of the Saviour's love, however, would continue to attract vast throngs, and arouse and awaken and refresh weary human hearts by the hundreds and thousands, so long as there were preachers to expound it.

There were many—the preacher said, concluding his final sermon—who had come very near to the kingdom and who if they deliberated, hesitated, questioned God's mercy and power would be lost. These had need to take a lesson from the story underlying the text, "We came to Kadesh-barnea." Kadesh-barnea was very near to the Promised Land; it was as far as the children of Israel ever got. But another brief journey, and they would have come into the land of plenty, the land flowing with milk and honey, yet they sent spies to search the country, and became disheartened, and were incredulous of God's power to keep His promise to deliver the giants and walled cities of the land into their hands, and, still doubting and disobeying, retraced their steps and perished in the great and terrible wilderness through which God had brought them.

Many souls in this city had come to Kadesh-barnea in their search for salvation. Let all these, trusting wholly in God, take at once the final step which would bring them safe into the Promised Land.

The preacher urged all the people to work unceasingly for the Master, to grow and grow and grow in grace, to develop their faith, to bring others into the kingdom, to become spiritual giants and conquer the evil hosts of the enemy round about them. He urged re-consecration, the utter giving up of themselves to God and His holy purposes; and prayed, as the throng bowed their heads before him, "The Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord cause His face to shine upon thee, and place his arms about thee; the Lord be gracious unto thee, and give thee peace!" And a vast sigh arose from those hundreds of souls in a softly breathed "Amen!"

∴

The evangelist and the sweet singer are gone, but the spirit of revival still lives. If earnest, unceasing work by consecrated pastors and laymen has half the power which the faithful Christians of the city believe it has, the labors of the coming weeks and months and years will be fraught with great results, blessings manifold, and the evangelistic growth will continue until the entire city is Christianized, and all the people have become apostles of the Lord.

∴

And whatever of greatness and goodness the future may contain for the people of this community, and whatever splendid growth the city's churches may acquire, the marvelous visitation of the Spirit of God which has been so abundantly manifest during these days devoted to His worship and work will ever be cherished as a most hallowed memory by the thousands whose privilege it has been to partake of the blessings of full surrender and consecration to Jesus Christ, whose ambassadors have labored so devotedly in our midst.

The Reward.

One of our city merchants closed his store last Tuesday in deference to the revival meetings while they were in progress, at what he supposed would be a loss in his business; but he was willing to make the sacrifice in order to give his clerks an opportunity to attend the meetings. When the sales of the week were footed up he found he had done the largest week's business of the season.

Mr. Knowland of Plainfield, is in It.

The Lehigh and Pittsburg Construction Company filed articles of incorporation Saturday with the clerk of Union county. Its business is the work of constructing railroads, and it purposes to carry on operations in the United States, Mexico and Canada. The company's capital is $100,000. The incorporators are Frederick Knowland of Plainfield; Cecil Campbell Higgins of Bartow, N. Y., and John H. Bissell, Jr., of Elizabeth.

Senator McPherson's Brother Killed.

A. D. McPherson, a brother of United States Senator McPherson, of this State, and one of the best known men in Ohio, was run down by an engine and killed Monday morning at the Covington (Ky.) stock yards.

Mr. McPherson was the live-stock agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. He had just left the office and was crossing from one track to another when a yard engine struck him. He fell backwards between the rails and the wheels cut off both legs below the knee. He was also injured internally, besides receiving severe cuts about the head. He was removed to a hospital, where he died.

THE SAME OLD STORY.

Gas Company and Electric Light Company Combine, and Monopoly is Established.

One of the members of the Council said to a PRESS reporter, on Monday, that if he had known that the Electric Light Co. had been purchased by the Gas Light Co., he would not have voted to pass the ordinance giving the former the right for ten years to string wires through all the streets, alleys and lanes of the city, until he was assured by the new owners of the Electric Light Co., that there would be no increase in the rates to private consumers.

"I have a good notion," he continued, "to present another ordinance at the next meeting, repealing the privilege. Manager Moore of the Electric Light company, is certainly guilty of deceit, if not outright dishonesty, in his dealings with the Council. Now that all competition in street and domestic lighting is wiped out, the people can be charged outrageous rates with no redress."

But the story of the sale is not yet true. As one of the principal stockholders and directors of the Gas Light company said next afternoon: "If you don't see it in THE PRESS, it isn't so. If any documents of sale and transfer had been consummated, I would know it, and I assure you nothing of the kind has taken place. However, I do not deny nor affirm that it might happen. The Plainfield Electric Light Co's plant has been in the market for two or three years. Should the Gas Light company buy it, it will not be their policy to raise the rates." The same reporter was told by Manager Moore, "I have just returned from Boston and have no knowledge of any sale occurring in my absence."

HELPING A PRODIGAL HOME.

Hearts that Long Have Mourned Will Praise a Plainfield Woman's Charity.

A young wayfarer reached this city Friday night after a journey on foot from Philadelphia. He was weary, hungry and penniless, and had been so often refused help before he reached Plainfield that he had scarcely the courage to ask longer for assistance. He told his story, however, to a good woman on East Fifth street, and seemed so straightforward and honest that he was generously aided. He had run away from a happy home in Connecticut six months ago, and after drifting around from place to place finally found work in Philadelphia. Misfortune followed him, however, and presently he found himself out of work and out of money. His heart had been longing for home, and now it was hungrier than ever, so he had set out to return to his father and mother, who had been all this time mourning for him without having an idea where he was. All he asked of his listener was money enough to reach Newark, where he had relatives who would send him home. The woman gave him a big dinner and paid the car fare asked, and the young man, profuse in his expressions of gratitude, left on the seven o'clock train.

CONCERNING THE SCHOOLS.

Teachers Will Have Their Salaries to Spend, Thanksgiving.

At the request of Miss Julia Bulkley, the members of the Board of Education—Messrs Murray and Probasco—present at a meeting on Monday, voted to pay the teachers their November salaries in full on the day before Thanksgiving.

A communication was read from Trustee Babcock to the effect that he recommended the lighting of Irving school from the Electric Light company's plant rather than from that of the Pond Tool company. The former had said that it would run a wire to the school for $115.82, but Mr. Babcock thought it was not fair to charge the Board the entire cost. The communication was received, and Mr. Probasco was given power to make a contract with the Electric Light company if he could do so by agreeing to pay half the cost mentioned above and having a public wire run to the Irving school.

The building committee, Messrs Murray and Probasco, were instructed to meet Architect Oscar Teal and make a detailed statement to him of all complaints in relation to the construction of Irving school.

Beautiful Gifts from Plainfield's Abundance.

The subscriptions made in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian and the First Baptist churches, Sunday morning, for the benefit of the Florence Mission for rescuing people from the lowest degradation of life in the slums of New York, amounted to nearly $250 at each, and the collection at Warren Mission chapel Sunday evening netted $25, so that a total of more than $500 was raised for this worthy object. Besides that, Plainfield to-day sent to the metropolis a big truck load of good clothing to be used in making new men and women of the rescued ones.

The Ladies Say It's Different, but It Isn't.

There are certain announcements of a regular and persistent character that are periodically blazoned forth in the newspapers, and which the general public is not expected to take too seriously. "Positively last appearance;" "good for thirty days only;" "there is a plenty of them scattered here and there." Just now preparations are being made for a cake sale, or something of that character, that is to take place at Scotch Plains, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of All Saints church.

It will be held at Excelsior Hall this week Thursday, from three to half-past ten. It will not be like other church fairs, THE PRESS is told—for, strangely enough, there is an impression on the part of some that there is an element in church fairs which is not just as it should be. There is a cruel proverb, one knows, to the effect that it costs twenty-five cents to get in, and twenty-five dollars to get out. Now this is wrong—undoubtedly wrong—but there are people who believe it, and that is why the Ladies' Aid Society has spread the rumor that this fair will not be like other fairs.

But it isn't so! There are reasons for being convinced that this fair is of the very order, class, genus and species of the fairs of the Ladies' Aid Society in bygone days. And if the ladies' modesty would only permit them to recognize the fact, that is the very thing that of all others will induce people to flock thither as they have heretofore been accustomed to flock. Go, with as many of your friends as you can get together, you will have a jolly good time, and needn't buy a thing if the fancy doesn't strike you. But if you do feel like buying, you will find an abundance of things in the way of Christmas gifts, and for other purposes, and they won't charge McKinley prices, either. The proceeds will go towards the payment of the bonded debt of the church.

Seriously, they want you all to come if you do nothing more, and your welcome will be large and enthusiastic.

HOW SWEET TO BE A DUNELLEN BRIDE!

No Rest for the Weary Till the Groom Feeds His Serenaders.

The hamlet of Dunellen has had nothing but sleepless nights since Mr. and Mrs. William J. Hamilton returned from their wedding trip. It's not the fault of the bride and groom, nor the desire of the quiet-loving old people of the borough, but the young blood of the village is so fond of excitement that when it once gets aroused there's no knowing how long it will be before it quiets down again to its normal condition.

Mr. Hamilton is one of the most popular men in Dunellen, and his wife is a general favorite, and as soon as it was known that they were home from their bridal journey all the young men and boys in the place were so tickled to death that they decided on a serenade. The form of serenade they chose was not exactly suited to the tastes of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton. There was more noise than melody in their music. Old tin kettles and wash boilers thumped vigorously with stove lifters and hickory clubs yielded but a harsh sort of harmony, and no one but the serenaders themselves seemed to find any pleasure in such discordant notes.

Much to the surprise of the crowd, Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton didn't appear on the balcony before which they were assembled to thank them for their courteous and generous greeting. Had they been permitted to glance inside the Hamilton home they might have seen frowns instead of smiles on the face of the groom, and lines of vexation on the countenance of the bride. The hour grew very late, but the serenaders persisted perseveringly, and did not disperse till some time after midnight.

Though nonplused at Mr. Hamilton's rigidity, they decided to try again the next night to bring him forth and tell them how glad he was to see them and to be accorded such a profusion of salutes. So they thumped away in increased numbers, and added to the variety of sounds by introducing such popular instruments as tin horns and cow bells. Still Mr. Hamilton did not respond to their nice neighborly testimonial of popularity, and again they went home puzzled. Next night they enlarged their list of attractions by pressing an old accordion into service, and were gratified at the appearance of a face in an upper window. The face was only that of the boarding mistress of the house, and they couldn't hear, for the noise, just what she said, but the fact that they had begun to attract attention was a source of much gratification, and, satisfied for one night, they went away.

Every night since then they have continued their concerts, and have built big bonfires in front of the house in the hope that Mr. Hamilton would come forth and thank them. Of late they have grown angry at his repeatedly ignoring them, and so have begun to make the midnight hideous with shrieks and cat calls and hootings. In consequence a feeling of considerable strife is being manifested, and it is not possible to predict just now just what outbreak may not result. William Bodine and other church trustees and good people have been greatly scandalized to have such goings on. Mr Bodine tried to get the serenaders arrested for burning up a big box a piano for his church came in, but the borough constable laughed him to scorn. Mr. Hamilton has been given to understand that if he would only say one kind word to the people at the next concert they would let him off mildly and not demand an elaborate banquet at all in return for their kindness. All they want is a few tarts and some cider and some strawberry pie. Mr Hamilton says they must not expect any preserved peaches from him. They have gone too far, and have trodden too heavily on his love of rest, to get any fodder there. So the people not in the serenaders' band are anxiously waiting, and dreading what will happen next, and the serenaders wear looks of grim determination and mutter incoherently beneath their breath. They are said to be gathering cabbage stalks to throw at Mr. Hamilton's front door, and the pickets of the village fences are mysteriously disappearing.

The serenade has already lasted two weeks.

HONORED, BUT DECLINES.

John B. Brown Receives the Unanimous Nomination for Mayor by the Democratic City Convention—Joseph S. Cutter Will Probably be the Candidate.

The city delegates gathered in convention at the Democratic headquarters, Friday night were the most harmonious political assemblage ever seen. There was not a contest for any office. V. L. Frazee was chairman, and John Mortimer, secretary. The nominations were as follows:

Mayor—John B. Brown.
Collector—Aaron W. Rand.
Assessor—John J. Kenney.
Treasurer—Sidney E. Flower.
School Trustee—The Rev. Joseph Pemberton Taylor.
Commissioners of Appeal—Jeremiah Manning, Jasper G. Cadmus.

A committee consisting of Councilman W. L. Hetfield, J. F. Loewer, A. P. Hetfield and E. C. Searing, subsequently called upon Mr Brown at his home but could not persuade him to accept. His physicians were strongly opposed to his assumption of any continuous labors or exciting duties. However, he consented to leave the matter to his son, but that gentleman's answer to the Committee was a decided "no."

The choice of the party now for Mayor is ex-Fire Commissioner, Jos. S. Cutter. He ran against Mayor Male two years ago and was only defeated by a majority of 235. He was ahead of his ticket in every ward, and if the people had not been told that if they elected Mr. Male he would "give them a City Hall," Mr. Cutter might have won.

YOUNG FIRE-BUGS.

J. M. C. Marsh Saves Westfield from Destruction.

(From the Westfield Standard.)

A thin flame of fire wavering about near the foundation of Darsh's barn last Saturday night about six o'clock, attracted the attention of Mrs. John Schmitt, who was looking out of a rear window overlooking the barn. She could dimly make out two forms moving about, and suspecting something wrong, called to her husband. Mr. Schmitt investigated, and upon nearing the barn saw two small boys run off. Mr. Darsh at this point came out with a light, and burnt paper was found under the barn, where some straw had been placed.

J. M. C. Marsh was summoned, and soon afterwards caught little Willie Keaton and Geo. LaMatty as they were running across Broad street. Keaton confessed that they had intended to burn the barn, "just to see the boys come around with the engines and truck." The boys were allowed to go after sundry threats of dire punishment should they ever attempt such a thing again. A strong northwest wind was blowing at the time, and should a fire have been started it might have burned the entire block.

When the Teachers Meet Over the Break.

A meeting of the Somerset County Teachers' Association will be held in the Public School Building at North Plainfield, N. J., on Saturday, Nov. 22, 1890, at 10 o'clock a. m.

The programme will be as follows:

Summer Schools..........Mr. Hoffman
[illegible]..........Miss Beavers
[illegible]..........Mr. Haynes
[illegible]..........Miss Malloy
The Thought Side and the Language Side of Arithmetic..........Mr. A. B. Guilford

HE WILL CONTEST KEYS' SEAT.

What a Reporter Learned in an Interview With Charles A. Reed.

Charles A. Reed, Esq., who ran on the Republican ticket in Somerset county for Senator against Mr Keys, was interviewed a few days ago by a representative of the Somerville Unionist-Gazette, and what he said concerning the "Address to Voters" issued by the Republican Executive Committee's Chairman, was so terse and emphatic, that it is given in his exact language:

Reporter: Mr. Reed, there is considerable discussion as to the purpose with which the "Address to Voters" sent out in the recent campaign was issued. Many persons claim that it was intended solely to injure Mr. Keys, and it is also questioned whether any attempt will now be made to put you in his seat. What do you say?

Mr. Reed: The address was issued by Mr. Cook with one special purpose, viz: to prevent, in case of my election, any demand for a new election to be afterward made upon the ground that the voters did not know that Mr. Keys was ineligible. There was a legal point at stake and we thought that a new election would be applied for if I secured the majority, and under the new law might be granted. It was believed that Mr. Keys would not deny that he voted in New York in November, 1887. However, he did deny it, and the Chairman of the Democratic County Executive Committee denounced the "Address" as a campaign lie. Therefore, to come now to your second point, our people are put in this position: either they must produce their evidence and satisfy the public that they acted honestly, or they must drop the matter and thus tacitly admit the charge was untrue.

Reporter: What then will be done to prove the Republican case?

Mr. Reed: In order to obtain a legal investigation by which the truth of the charge can be arrived at, the law requires that I shall serve a notice upon Mr. Keys that I intend to contest his seat. This I will do. But I do it with the distinct understanding that with the result of such an investigation I have nothing to do, i. e., I do not expect to profit by it.

Reporter: Would you not take his seat if the law would give it to you?

Mr. Reed: I would not. If I had been elected I should have considered the office an honor to be defended to the last, but this election was a fair one and I was fairly beaten. There is no office within the gift of the people which would tempt me to accept upon a technicality a seat to which I was not elected.

A correspondent from Franklin Park, Somerset county, writes: "Mr. Reed, the Republican candidate for Senator had only four majority at this poll, which is generally Republican by about 50 votes. To my knowledge three men voted for Keys who would have voted for Reed had not the Republicans issued their disgraceful circular against Senator-elect Keys. Mr Keys gained votes at Millstone the same way. Better fight square, G. O. P."

FREE LIGHT FOR THE COUNCIL.

Manager Moore Offers to Furnish the Electricity for Nothing, if Landlord Clark will put in the Fixtures.

Council met in special meeting, Friday evening, and adopted the ordinance giving the Plainfield Electric Light company the right to place and maintain as many poles, and string as much wire, throughout the streets, lanes and alleys, as it pleases for ten years to come.

Councilmen Smith and Roberts wanted the time made one year, and they voted against the ordinance at every reading and on its final passage. Councilmen Dunham, Gilliup, Hetfield, Johnson, Moffett, Newhall, Rushmore and Spangenberg, voted for it. Councilman Jenkins was absent.

At the request of Councilman Spangenberg, Manager Moore was given the privilege of the floor. He thanked the council for calling a special meeting to adopt the ordinance, and also for all other many courtesies. The Plainfield Electric Light company, he continued, would hereafter light the council chamber free if the owner would put in the fixtures.

Time Table Changes.

The Winter schedule that goes into effect on the Central Railroad, on Sunday, will have but few changes between Plainfield and New York. They are these:

The 5:08 and 5:31 P. M. trains for New York daily, will hereafter leave at 5:11 and 5:36; and on Sundays, the 1:33 P. M. will leave at 1:42. The 5:45 A. M. from New York daily is changed to leave at 6:00; and the 1:15 P. M., Sundays, is changed to 2:15.

Carey Involved in Another Rumpus.

Robert Spooner, Joseph B. Miller and George Miller have each furnished bonds to answer to the Grand Jury, if ever wanted, on charges made under the new Ballot Reform Law. Spooner is accused of voting illegally at a Plainfield Republican primary when he was a resident of North Plainfield, and he in turn accuses the Miller brothers of inducing him to participate in the ward nomination to help them satisfy an old grudge against Tunis J. Carey, ex-Captain of Police.

Healthy Plainfield.

(From the Central Times.)

The total number of deaths in Plainfield the past year from all causes, has been 203. The principal causes were cholera infantum, paralysis, consumption, pneumonia, and heart disease. Besides these five diseases, which carried away 99 persons, there were several other causes of death which removed 104 more. This gives an average death rate of 17.5 to every 1000 population. There has not occurred any epidemic and but few of the 203 deaths reported have resulted from contagious disease. The mortality was unusually large among those less than one year old and those over sixty years of age there being 119 deaths in these two classes. Of the remaining eighty-four deaths, seven were caused by railroad accidents and only fourteen persons died from diseases classed as preventable.

A Feast of Reason.

A series of afternoon and evening lectures has been arranged to be given at the Seminary, during the coming season, as follows:

Monday, April 13—3:30 P. M.—Bach and Beethoven, Analytical Recital, by Miss May.

Great Little Men.

Some of the greatest men that ever lived were of small stature and insignificant appearance. The reader will readily recall many instances. Very small are Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, but they are more effective than the huge, old-fashioned pills which are so difficult to swallow and so harsh in their action. The "Pellets" are gentle. For liver, stomach and bowel derangements they have no equal.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

"WHY, ARE YOU SICK?"

"I know precisely how you feel; it is that nervous, irritable feeling, your back troubles you, and when you try to read a little, your head aches. Isn't that so? I knew it. Oh, bother the doctor! Get a bottle of Vegetable Compound, and take it faithfully, as I have done. I've been through this thing myself, but am never troubled now. Do as I tell you, dear."

Prudent women who best understand their ailments, find in the Compound a remedy for all those distressing ills that require prompt and effective treatment as a guaranty to good health.

THE GRAND ENCAMPMENT.

Odd Fellows of New Jersey in Session at Trenton.

The Grand Encampment of New Jersey, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, assembled at Masonic Hall, Trenton, Tuesday, in their forty-eighth annual session. The Patriarchs were well represented from Plainfield and all other cantons of the State. There was a large amount of routine business before the session, but the most interesting were the reports of the grand officers.

The statistical record on January 1, 1890, was as follows: Number of persons per last report, 2,942; initiated, 309; admitted by card, 38; reinstated, 11; total, 3,300. From which deduct: error in last report, 7; withdrawn by card, 39; suspended for cause, 3; dropped for non-payment of dues, 190; expelled, 1; deceased, 34; members December 31, 1889, 3,036; increase, 94.

In speaking of the expenditures during the year for relief, benefits and burial, the Grand Scribe reported as follows:

Number of Patriarchs relieved, 281; number of weeks for which benefits were paid, 2,668; amount paid for the relief of Patriarchs, $7,296.90; amount paid for the burial of the dead, $1,203; amount paid for special relief, $844.30. Total, $9,344.20. The annual receipts of subordinate encampments is $18,249.02.

JEALOUS OF PLAINFIELD'S CONTRACT

The Pond Company's Rivals Demand a Rigid Investigation.

There is trouble at the United States Watervliet arsenal. William Sellers & Co., machine toolmakers of Philadelphia, declare that the new gun lathes being furnished to the War Department are not only defective but wholly unsuited for heavy ordnance work. The makers of the lathes are The Pond Machine Tool Company, of Plainfield. During the past session of Congress an appropriation of $400,000 was authorized for the construction of heavy cannon for seacoast defence purposes. Nearly all the guns for the Atlantic seaboard are to be built at Watervliet. In order to render the arsenal capable of undertaking the work the War Department found it necessary to have constructed seven gun lathes. Bids were accordingly invited, and many of the prominent machine makers of the country entered into the competition. Among the number were The Pond Machine Tool Company and William Sellers & Company. The latter firm bid $60,000 for each lathe, or $350,000 for the whole contract. The Pond Tool Works bid $30,000 on each lathe, and being the lowest bidder received the contract. The bids in each instance, save one, were on plans drawn by the War Department.

The single exception was the bid of Wm Sellers & Co. This firm bid on plans of its own. The War Department plans are said to be primarily the plans of Lieut. Gordon of the Ordnance Corps. They were adopted by the Secretary of War. Three heavy guns have already been turned on one of Gordon's Plainfield lathes. None have ever been turned on one of William Sellers & Co.'s lathes, yet the Philadelphia firm has protested in a written communication to Secretary Proctor against the adoption of the lathes being built in Plainfield. In order to satisfy himself more thoroughly that Lieut. Gordon's Plainfield lathe warrants adoption by the War Department, Secretary Proctor has secured the services of Horace See, the naval architect and marine engine builder, and John Fritz, manager of the Bethlehem Steel works, as experts. These two gentlemen understand perhaps better than any other two men in the United States, the strength of metals and the efficiency of different types of machine tools. They will personally inspect, during the present week, the lathe now in operation at Watervliet and report their opinion of its efficiency.

An Infant Industry for Plainfield.

The Ketchell Embossing Company, of Plainfield, has filed articles of incorporation. The company begins business with $12,000 capital, and the incorporators are Hudson M. Ketchell, Orlando B. Hastings and William M. Burr, Jr. The plant will be situated in this city, with a branch in New York.

The business will be that of pasting and embossing cardboard, paper and like materials.

More Bookmakers Arrested.

Bookmakers John Hill, George Johnson, Solomon Lichtenstein and Eugene Brehn were arrested Monday by constables, at the Linden track, and brought before Judge VanSyckel, in a special session of the Union County Court, to answer to two indictments found against each by the last grand jury for illegal pool-selling. They pleaded not guilty, and the Judge peremptorily set down their trials for December 7, and remarked that no postponement would be granted. They were released on $3,000 bail.

Whatever It Was, It Wasn't a Cent Too Much.

No one except Mr. Mills himself will ever know how much the people of Plainfield have contributed to him for his labors in their city. Those curious to find out might as well set their minds at rest immediately. As THE PRESS has already stated, Mr. Mills entered into no financial bargain with the pastors who brought him here, and if he had not received one cent for his services no promises would have been broken. It is creditable to the city that its inhabitants appreciated the inestimable worth of the evangelist's work, and that sealed envelopes containing subscriptions were showered on the preacher. Knowledge of what was in each envelope is limited strictly to donor and recipient.

—The Pingry foot-ball team beat the Leal team at Plainfield Saturday by the score of 11 to 0.

John have you seen that woman lately? John is astonished! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column, and read about it; the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Boards of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

MORTGAGES IN NEW JERSEY.

Interesting Facts Presented in the Report of the State Labor Bureau.

The mortgage indebtedness of New Jersey farmers, as given in the report of the Bureau of Labor and Statistics, is interesting. There has been a constant increase in the total number of recorded mortgages since the business revival at the close of the last decade. Of the eleven years which the Bureau enumeration covers, 1870 shows the largest number, although but little more than that recorded in 1888.

The tendency in periods of business activity has been toward an increase in mortgages and decrease in foreclosures, and the reverse when the industrial conditions have changed; and generally an increase in foreclosures has been accompanied by a falling of in mortgages. This tendency has been marked in those counties which are largely urban, namely, Camden, Essex, Hudson, Passaic and Union, as well as in those which have considerable urban population, or Bergen, Cumberland, Mercer, Middlesex and Morris, but not so much in the seven rural counties, and still less in Atlantic, Cape May, Monmouth and Ocean, which may be classed as the seaside counties.

The New Jersey building and loan associations had in 1888, 5,304 borrowing members, with $14,000,000 invested on bond and mortgage, but the official record does not show plainly which mortgages have been given to secure purchase money, and which for money borrowed.

Hunterdon county farming property has declined largely in value since 1880. In Somerset county it is said farming lands have depreciated nearly one-half since 1880, while high taxes, large interest accounts, and the low price of products threaten to swamp many of the tillers of the soil. A similar and perhaps a gloomier story comes from Sussex county. The depreciation in the value of farm land about Belvidere since 1880 is about twenty-five per cent. William H. Morrow says:

"Holders of mortgages delay as long as possible to foreclose from disinclination to add costs, and thus swell the amount due. Mortgage debtors are not now making money beyond paying their interest. I think interest is paid more promptly, on urban than on rural properties. Farm mortgages are paid only when there is a transfer of the premises and the purchaser has the money to pay, or on the settlement of estates when it is necessary for money to pass. I do not think that twenty per cent. of farmers, who have their farms mortgaged to the amount of forty per cent. of their value, are making a living now."

The farmers of Warren county are said to be thoroughly depressed and disheartened owing to the low price of grain.

Installment mortgages have become very common. The building and loan associations hold them almost entirely. During the past three or four years there has been much pressure by mortgagors to induce mortgagees to accept the principal before it is due, indicating prosperity on the part of the former.

THE UNITED WORKMEN.

A Case in Which the Order is Sued By a Beneficiary.

A case of interest to the secret orders of the State was decided by Chief Justice Beasley yesterday. The suit is brought by George K. McVey against the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

James L. McVey became a member of this order and was given a certificate which entitled him to all its privileges and to participate in the beneficiary fund to the amount of $2,000, which sum was to be payable at his death to George K. McVey, the plaintiff. The beneficiary brought suit for this money, but the Order claimed that McVey made false representations as to his habits, etc., when he was given the certificate. The Chief Justice says: "When untrue answers to interrogatives propounded in writing to the the applicant at the time of his procuring a written contract from a society certifying for the payment of a certain sum, are given, and there is no allusion in such contract to such answers, the answers are not warranted to be true, but are mere representations. If representations of this sort are willfully false, and constituted in part the basis of the contract, the contract will be void, on the ground of fraud. The rule for a new trial in this case is discharged."

A Local Sportsman Honored at a Game Supper.

Laing's Hotel, of this city, has always been famous for its cuisine, and under the present management of J. B. Miller & Bro. its reputation is well sustained. The present chef of the Hotel, Al Griffen, has become very popular with the guests of the house and its patrons, in his endeavors to cater to the wants and wishes of the public who visit Miller's Hotel. Henry VanLiew, the head waiter, is another popular employe of the house; he always strives to administer faithfully to the wants of guests. Mr. Griffen has the distinguished honor of having been the chef for ex-President Cleveland and other dignitaries. His efforts Tuesday, when a coterie of friends met to honor another, who furnished a game supper, was a guarantee that Griffen knows how to cater to the wants of those at his tables.

When the 'Possum Bites He'll Wonder Why.

The man who carried a very-much-alive twenty-five-pound opossum around by the tail Tuesday and gleefully exhibited it to his friends with a humorous description of how he had whacked its eye out with a club, when it showed its head out of a hole behind his barn, declined the offer of a humane store-keeper who said "Let me treat you likewise." The suffering 'possum hasn't yet been put out of its misery, and its funny captor still carries it about and tells his laughable story and pokes witticisms and his finger at the blood-clot remnant of an eye. Kind-hearted people hope that before the Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals interferes the patient 'possum will have secured an ample and painful mouthful from some fleshy portion of its keeper's anatomy.

A Kick from the Park.

To the Editor of The Press:—Would it not be well for the Music Hall management to alter their advertisements in the papers so that unsuspecting people might not be deceived by the statement that "North Plainfield stages will run for the performance?" The Somerset street stage did not Saturday night, I believe, but the Washington Park [illegible] appeared until [illegible]. If Mr. Higgins has no idea of running regularly on theatre nights the Music Hall advertisement should be changed so that residents of the Park may not be led to wait a half-hour on the corner for the stage that never comes.

WASHINGTON PARK.

OBITUARY.

Daniel Runkle.

The death of Daniel Runkle occurred at 4 o'clock Monday morning, at the residence of his son, Harry G. Runkle, 41 West Eighth street.

Mr. Runkle had been ill at his son's house two weeks, but his death Monday was very sudden and unexpected.

Reynolds, joined in giving him a complete happy surprise Thursday afternoon, when they assembled at his home in joyous celebration of Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong's tenth wedding anniversary. Among the guests were Mr. Reynolds, wife and sister, Mr. Armstrong's sister, and his brother, the Hon. E. Ambler Armstrong, of Camden. The bride and groom of a decade received many gifts.

Clarence Titsworth, of East Fifth street, is home from Alfred University, Alfred Centre, N. Y., for the Thanksgiving holidays.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Ben[illegible], of [illegible] street, is happier than ever since the arrival of a little daughter Sunday morning.

Congressman-elect Sanford, of New York, in his statement of expenses includes $1,000 paid to F. X. Schoonmaker, of Plainfield, for speeches.

George Wells, formerly of this city, who has charge of a mission in Troy, N. Y., has closed his work there for two weeks, and is with D. L. Moody in the cities of Albany and Troy. The evangelists are having a great harvest.

The widow of the late Daniel Runkle, father of Henry G. Runkle of West Eighth street, is a sister of A. G. Richey of Trenton, who is attorney of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The Warren Foundry and Machine Company, of which Daniel Runkle was President, was started by Mr. Runkle in 1856, and was made into a stock company in 1860. The firm of Runkle, Smith & Co., at 15 Wall street, New York, of which Daniel Runkle was President, and of which Henry G. Runkle is Treasurer, was chartered nine months ago to put in water-works in Havana, Cuba. Among the offices which Mr. Runkle held, and which The Press has not already mentioned, was the Directorship of the National Bank at Easton, Penn. Mr. Runkle was also the former owner of the Keystone Smelting Company in Pennsylvania. His second son, William Runkle, is Vice President of the Warren Foundry and Machine Company at 160 Broadway, New York.

TRIED TO KILL HIS WIFE.

A Chapter of Miseries from Real Life Among the Neighboring Mountain Villagers.

[Special to THE PRESS.]

STERLING, Nov. 18.—Carl Lubkerman, a German, with his wife and son, came to this country some time ago. After drifting around for a while in search of work, they finally settled in the Passaic Valley, where they found ready demand for their services among the families of Millington. They occupied a house on the Frank Carle estate, where they were employed most of the time.

When the hunting season opened, Lubkerman was among those who went gunning. He noticed some wild ducks alight on the river, and he and his son, a boy of about thirteen years of age, went down to the river, where they found a boat moored. While arranging the craft for service, Lubkerman left his gun on the bank. When he got the boat afloat, he returned for his gun. Just as he stepped into the boat one of the hammers of the gun struck the side of the boat, and the weapon was discharged. The contents of one of the barrels—a tremendous charge of duck shot—tore the flesh almost completely from Lubkerman's arm, in some places leaving the bone entirely bare. Assistance was procured, and the sufferer was taken to his home. The shock was so great as partially to paralyze him. Medical aid was summoned, and all that could be done was done to alleviate the injured man's sufferings, but the pain continued so great at times as to make it necessary for strong men to hold him in bed. His wife was constantly in attendance with him, not once for days leaving his side to get a much needed rest. Kind neighbors also sat up with the wounded and suffering man until he began to get strong again.

One morning Lubkerman told his wife that he was very hungry and would like a piece of toast. While she prepared it for him he seemed more bright, telling her to hurry. While he sat up in bed she fed him the toast she had prepared. He suddenly grabbed her thumb between his teeth, cutting it to the bone. The poor woman, alarmed at this, tried to get away, while he suddenly drew a dagger from under the bed clothes. He struck at her throat twice with the gleaming weapon, cutting her garments both times, but failing to draw blood. In her frenzy of fear she tore away from this fiend, but not until he left her a marked thumb which she will carry for life.

Fortunately, the dagger blade did not reach her, or he would have added murder to the crime of mayhem and ingratitude. The poor woman went to a neighbor's and had her thumb dressed. She was then advised to have her brutal husband arrested, which she reluctantly did. She made her complaint to Squire Williams, who straightway issued a warrant for his arrest. The warrant was placed in the hands of Constable Harvey, who arrested his prisoner in his home, and conveyed him to Morristown Jail, where he now lies in a precarious condition. The jail physician holds out no hope of his ever serving any time for his crime, if he should ever reach trial, as he is slowly sinking.

He gives no explanation of the assault on his wife, and is doggedly silent when it is mentioned. Mrs. Lubkerman says she will go back to Germany, where she has her parents. She says she will never have anything more to do with her husband again. The neighbors speak very highly of her, although she came a stranger among them so short a time ago. The dagger with which Lubkerman made the assault is one he brought from Germany.

Easy to Forgive: Another Pays the Freight.

A few days ago an intoxicated individual deliberately smashed two large and costly plate glass windows on West Front street near Somerset. The store keepers whose glass was broken were told who did it, but said "We'll forgive him this time—the glass was insured against breakage, anyhow, so it's nothing out of our pockets!"

A Thanksgiving Appeal.

It is the desire of the Relief Association this year, as heretofore, to distribute among its beneficiaries and others of the worthy poor the customary Thanksgiving dinners. All who are interested in this work are requested to send donations of turkeys, chickens, vegetables, fruit, and the like, to the rooms, 45 West Second street, on Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning of next week.

E. R. LEONARD, Secretary.

They are Mr. and Mrs. Gayle, Now.

About forty of the immediate relatives and particular friends of the bride and groom, gathered at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Garretson, 14 North avenue, Wednesday, upon the occasion of the marriage of their eldest daughter, Miss Flora May Garretson, to H. Ellsworth Gayle the prosperous young builder of this city.

Rev. Mr. Schenck performed the ceremony at seven o'clock. The bride was most becomingly attired in a rich traveling costume of brown silk Henrietta cloth. She had a bouquet of Marechal Niel roses "as sweet and pretty as herself," everybody said. The bridesmaids were her sister, Miss Lillie Garretson, dressed in garnet Henrietta cloth, and Miss Maggie Vermeule in garnet silk. They wore white chrysanthemums. The groomsmen were Wilbur Gayle and Elmer Garretson, brothers of the happy couple.

The presents were very pretty and many, and the supper was bountiful. Mr. and Mrs. Gayle left on the midnight train for Washington. The rice that was showered upon them covered the sidewalk for a long ways, and next morning pedestrians to the station ground it into flour that covered the flags like snow. Upon their return they will begin housekeeping in the pretty home the groom has built and furnished for his bride, on Vine street.

—Elizabeth's common council was to vote last evening on the adoption of an ordinance fixing each councilman's salary at one dollar a year.

OPPOSING LAWYERS AND CLIENTS AGREE.

The Burlingham Will Contest Settled. Muhlenberg Hospital to Receive Its Legacy in Full.

The Burlingham will contest had dragged its slow length along until Thursday, when some dozen or more of the litigants and their [illegible], with their four lawyers, the surrogate and stenographer assembled in the court room at Elizabeth, prepared for the fray.

The executors were represented by Wm. M. Stillman and Craig A. Marsh; the contestants by J. B. Coward and Judge Joseph Cross, and the Muhlenberg Hospital by Craig A. Marsh. As the first witness was about to be sworn, one of the parties wanted to know whether the matter could not be settled. The lawyers put their heads together and then conferred with their clients. Then followed alternate conferences of lawyers and clients until the day was consumed. The final result was that the contestants and the executors made mutual concessions and it was agreed that the will should be admitted to probate and Elias R. Pope be appointed administrator with the will annexed. The Muhlenberg Hospital made no concession whatever, but will receive its legacy of three thousand dollars in full.

The people of Plainfield were chiefly interested in this bequest to its hospital and will rejoice with the board of governors of that institution in learning that technicalities were not permitted to stand in the way of the fulfillment of the long cherished desire of both Dr. Burlingham and his wife.

ALEXANDER GILBERT THE CHOICE.

He is Nominated for Mayor by the Republicans, After a Close Contest Against Councilman Roberts.

After much wire pulling and the taking of five ballots in the Republican city convention, Thursday night, Alexander Gilbert got just enough votes and was declared the party's nominee for the mayoralty. He was closely pressed for the nomination by Councilman Daniel S. Roberts who started well, gained a vote on every ballot and was only three short of a nomination when enough of the five remaining Rockfellow delegates went to Gilbert. The ballots were as follows:

Gilbert	18	19	19	20	21
Roberts	14	15	16	17	19
Rockfellow	8	6	5	3	1

J. B. Coward was chairman of the convention, and C. A. Baynon, secretary. The election officers were E. R. Bird, W. B. Wadsworth and C. A. Baynon. Ernest R. Ackerman nominated Mr. Gilbert; S. P. T. Wilbur nominated Mr. Roberts, and O. L. Jenkins nominated Mr. Rockfellow. The other offices on the ticket were filled by acclamation as follows:

Assessor—Joseph A. Hubbard.
Collector—John Johnson.
Treasurer—Alexander Titsworth.
School Trustee—Edward L. Finch.
Commissioners of Appeal—J. Fred MacDonald, Manning Vermeule.

In peremptorily declining a re-nomination as school trustee, Mr. Murray said that he had served as such for fifteen years, and felt he had done his duty in that respect, at least. He considered the office more honorable than any other, and would rather be elected a school trustee than Mayor. He thanked the people for returning him so many times (once unanimously) but his duties had grown so many, that he was forced to throw off some of them. "The schools of Plainfield," he continued, "are second to none in the State, which is owing to the election of such trustees as have served in the past, both Republicans and Democrats, and are serving now in the persons of my colleagues, Dr. Hurlbut, Mr. Kirkner, Mr. Babcock and Dr Probasco."

Mr. Newhall was nominated by I. C. Pierson, but he, eventually, also declined. The expressions of regret among the delegates were audible when he announced such decision. Mr. Finch was then chosen without a contest.

Another Artistic Treat.

Those who have seen some of the exhibitions already given by the Plainfield Camera Club will need no urging to repeat their visit next week, for they know what excellent and artistic work the Club is doing. And those who have never seen pictures made by the Plainfield amateurs have a great treat in store. This exhibition will certainly exceed in excellence of work, as well as in numbers, any heretofore held.

Struck by the Train He was Waiting for.

A. D. Phillips, an electrician well-known in Plainfield, was injured by the cars at the North avenue station of the Central Railroad in this city at six o'clock Thursday. He was crossing the tracks in front of the station when his attention was attracted in the direction of Netherwood by the shrieking of the whistle of the locomotive attached to a coal train which had halted near the Peace street bridge. He therefore failed to notice the headlight of the Scranton express due at 5:31 and then approaching from the West, and was struck by the front of the engine and thrown a short distance to the freight house side of the track. The train was coming to a stop, and the fact of the speed being greatly reduced prevented a fatality. Mr. Phillips was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital, where it was found that beyond some ugly cuts on the face his only serious injury was the fracture of the collar-bone. Matron Walrod reports that is he resting easily and is doing nicely.

A singular incident of the mishap is that the train which struck Mr. Phillips is the same one he came to Plainfield on in the morning, and the one he was to return by to his home in Jersey City. Mr. Phillips has a great many contracts for electric lighting in Plainfield, including the wiring of the Union County Club House, and was to remove next week with his family, to a house on Fourth street rented from Dr. Endicott.

The Boys' Club Military Company.

TO THE PEOPLE OF PLAINFIELD AND VICINITY:—Our club, which you all have heard of in one way or another, has now been opened one month and the results gained have been very gratifying both to the Superintendent and local committee. The membership to date is two hundred and thirty-five with an average attendance for the month of fifty-six. The games and books used are of the very best kind and are, I know, fully appreciated by the class of boys that we hope to reach. Everything that could be done to make the rooms attractive has been done by the committee in charge, and I cordially invite you all to come and visit us and see the good work we are trying to do. The rooms are open every evening except Sundays and holidays from seven to nine.

The boys have formed a military company and meet every Thursday afternoon to drill. They are also forming a drum corps to use when on parades. Last evening a few met and selected the following officers who were considered the best fitted for the positions: Captain, M. C. Sutphen; 1st Lieut., Edw. Flock; 2d Lieut., Gillard Apgar; 1st Sergt., John Moran; 2d Sergt., Erwin Neighbor; 3d Sergt., John Taylor; Color Bearer, William Marsh.

I hope to be able to let our friends see the boys on parade about the first of December, if possible. We would gladly receive as a gift or loan, an American flag and three or four army swords for the use of the boys.

All those who have so kindly contributed to the club, are more than repaid for the good they have done I am most certain. Hoping to see you at our rooms when you find it convenient, where you will receive a hearty welcome.

W. H. MINER,
Superintendent.

MORE HANDSOME HOMES HERE.

Oakwood to be Turned Into a Private Park, and a Number of Elegant Residences Erected Thereon.

Plainfield's boom as a place of elegant homes not only still continues, but grows greater. The recent sale of 21 acres on Charlotte Road, Netherwood Heights, by the Real Estate Trust, through the influence of Councilman Spangenberg, has just been succeeded by a transfer of property that means much to the city.

"Oakwood," the former home of the family of the late ex-Mayor Evans, has been sold by the administrators of his estate to a Brooklyn capitalist for $65,000. It is the intention of this purchaser—who has both the means and experience—to build on his property, consisting of ten acres on Plainfield and Sherman avenues, eight or ten residences of the most modern style at a cost of not less than $10,000 each.

It is probable that the property which is now laid out in beautiful drives and landscape gardening, will be left as it is and made a private park with the intended houses scattered through it. This would make it so especially attractive that residence therein would be eagerly sought for, while if the houses were built along the public thoroughfares, they would not be occupied until a like supply nearer the centre of the city was exhausted.

THEY'RE ALL RIGHT.

Nothing the Matter with Haynes, Ivins, Hesse and Gallup for Councilmen.

The Democrats of the several wards of the city, met Thursday, and nominated for election to the council a quartette of men in every way well fitted and worthy the support of all citizens irrespective of party.

The nominee of the first ward is Joseph A. Haynes, the popular station agent of this city for many years. Under his direction the traveling public and the merchants who ship and receive freight, have been provided with every comfort and facility in their patronage of the Central railroad. Not a want about the station is unsatisfied, and in every department is evidenced the thoroughness and carefulness of the man who has been nominated for Councilman from the first ward. He is strongly in favor of the removal of the freight house, and his influence with the railroad company is such that should he be elected the people may feel assured that the unsightly freight yard will in a few months be turned into a beautiful park.

The nominee of the second ward is DeWitte Clinton Ivins, a man who has occupied the highest positions of trust in New York city. In intelligence, breeding and education he is unsurpassed, while as a business man he is shrewd and far-sighted but at the same time thoroughly conscientious and the soul of honor. He will be found, if elected, hand in hand with his colleague, Councilman Spangenberg, at work for the undivided interests of the whole people without regard to politics. Represented by two such men, no ward will be more justly envied than the second.

Councilman Gallup, who was unanimously and enthusiastically renominated, needs no introduction to the people. Ask any honest and unbiased man in the fourth ward, and he'll tell you there was never in the Council a member who better served his constituents; and they will prove how his services are appreciated, and teach the two blackguards who have defamed him a lesson, by triumphantly returning him to the Council.

In that Republican pocket borough, the third ward, Justus H. Hesse, a neighbor of Col. Tyler's, was nominated by the Democrats to run against Ernest R. Ackerman. Mr. Hesse is a New York importer. He is a bright business man and very popular socially. But a majority of 150 can't be overcome in a total vote of only twice that number, when the candidate on the majority's side is just as bright and just as popular. Mr. Hesse's candidacy, however, will bring out the vote of every member of his party and help to accomplish the success of the head of the ticket.

Ward Nominations for the Minor Offices.

At their respective primaries, Thursday night, the Democrats made the following nominations:

First Ward—Justice of the Peace—Louis F. Wadsworth. Constable—Thomas Callahan.

Second Ward—Justice of the Peace—Charles S. A. Davis. Constable—William Callahan.

Third Ward—Justice of the Peace—Charles Gisentaner. Constable—Edward Birmingham.

Fourth Ward—Justice of the Peace—Levi Hetfield. Constable—Richard Mattis.

Plainfielders Make Bargains in Horse Flesh.

M. Quinn, F. Fosher, A. Lutkins, and Newton Smalley, all made good investments in horse flesh at the sale at the American Horse Exchange Thursday.

The only daughter Flora Temple, 2.19¼, ever had was offered by Samuel B. Dur*yea, of Midwout Farm, Brooklyn, and was* sold to M. Quinn. This was the nineteen-year-old bay mare The Queen's Daughter, by imported Leamington, thoroughbred, from Flora Temple. Her daughter, Flora Leamington, sired by Alderman, was also sold to Mr. Quinn, as were Dandy Wilkes, a fine black stallion sired by Sherman's Wilkes, dam Beauty, and a black colt by Wonderful 9060, son of Duroc Volunteer 3132, out of Misfortune.

What a Republican Says.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It is fortunate for the people and taxpayers of Plainfield that Joseph S. Cutter has consented to be a candidate for Mayor, and that means that he is not only nominally the Democratic candidate but is the candidate for the whole people. There could not have been named a better man for the taxpayers to vote for than Mr. Cutter. He is especially qualified for the office—being familiar with the affairs of Plain*field from its township government up to* its present standing as a city. He would be faithful and true to the people at large, and his administration would be fearless in the interests of taxpayers, and every individual however humble, would receive from his hands the consideration due to every inhabitant of our city. He would advocate economy and frugality in our city government, and would be a blessing to the community over which he would preside. He is a man of unsullied reputation, and his public record is beyond censure. He would furthermore be at his post of duty every day, and every hour, would always be accessible and ready to attend to the business of the public, and his aptitude to direct our public affairs is admitted by everybody. Politics should not enter into this contest but the best man available for the position of Mayor should be triumphantly elected, and that man is Joseph S. Cutter.

REPUBLICAN.

—The public meeting of the McAll Mission will be postponed from November 26 until January, when the Rev. S. S. Chamberlain, of Brooklyn will deliver an address.

Famous Women.

It is a significant fact that most of the women who have achieved fame in art, literature, or "affairs," have enjoyed vigorous health. This shows that the mind is never capable of the severe and continued application necessary to creative work, unless the body is at its best. The woman who aspires to fill an exalted place among her associates, must be free from nervous debility, etc. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will banish these, and it is warranted to restore those functional harmonies which are indispensable to health. As a specific for all those chronic ailments peculiar to women, it is unequaled.

COSTLY FIRE ON ROCKVIEW TERRACE.

The Handsome Home of Martin I. Cooley a Ruin, Despite Good Work by Firemen.

The handsome residence of Martin I. Cooley on Rockview Terrace, North Plainfield, was ruined by fire this morning. The fire originated from a defective flue under the flooring of the second story, and when discovered had eaten its way between partition walls and floorings throughout almost the entire house, so that the building was threatened with being enveloped in flames at any moment. The firemen of Warren Engine Company, however, under the command of Chief George Fairchild, got promptly to work, and to such good effect that by the time that Plainfield Engine Company, No. 2, who were summoned later for fear their services would be needed, reached the scene, the fire was under excellent control.

Much of the furniture in the house was saved and piled in heaps on the lawns till it could be stored at the neighbors' houses, but some valuable things things were considerably damaged. As for the house itself, what fire did not touch water flooded, and the costly dwelling of the New York merchant is a wreck. The total loss will, it is estimated, reach fully $15,000, which will fall entirely on the insurance companies.

The only persons in the house at the outbreak of the fire were two servant girls. The coachman and the painters who were just finishing painting Mr. Cooley's buildings were at the barn. Mr. Cooley and family were all in New York City for the day, but were wired to come home.

Mr. Cooley's extensive lawns were ruined by the hundreds of feet which ran excitedly about the place. The firemen had a tough time in cooling, in saturated garments, with the fierce and biting Northwest wind that blew.

BROTHERS OF THE CAMERA.

Plainfield's Amateur Photographers Ready to Join a League for Duplicating a National Collection of Views in Every Club Room in the Country.

The idea suggested at a recent meeting of amateur photographers of this section, that a collection of pictures be taken of all objects of interest in the various large cities, as well as of such artistic scenes as can be obtained of street life, has taken hold of the amateurs, and in a short time fine collections will decorate the rooms of the amateur societies.

It is said by young photographers that the poorest pictures of a city, or of a section remarkable for its artistic scenery, are those taken by the local photographer. Among objects familiar to the city professional he somehow fails to notice the curious, or such little bits of the picturesque, that would attract the camera man from out of town almost the first thing. It is believed that a valuable collection can be obtained, and one that will be most interesting to look over even by those living in the different cities. Some of the work has been already begun in New York, Philadelphia, and other places, and a survey of photographic subjects has been entered upon with encouraging results.

But this new plan will not be confined to the cities alone. A desire is now being expressed among the photographers that the entire United States be searched over for photographic gems, and that a general collection be procured for the various societies in the country which have the study of photography for their object. This idea is feasible, and will commend itself to all amateurs. To gather together the pictures is a comparatively easy matter. Already there are thousands of views to be carefully examined and the choice bits culled. The societies are now so numerous that every section of the country could be covered in a short space of time. For example, the Pacific Slope Camera Club could be depended upon to furnish the beautiful views of California and Oregon. That they would do it well goes without saying, for some of their work, already seen and admired *by mem*bers of the Plainfield Camera Club, has been of unusual merit, and reflected much credit on the San Francisco amateurs.

Members of the Plainfield Camera Club who have journeyed about to any great extent and who have visited their brothers of the camera in different places, testify to the photographic skill met among the various clubs, as well as to the courteous and kindly feeling shown to strangers who with the camera as a pass word venture among other amateurs. In the South the New Orleans Society has a number of earnest members who would be delighted to furnish the objects of interest in their section either upon the photographic print or upon the lantern-slide screen. And so all through the country. There is a plenty to do the work. It needs only a moving spirit to start the systematic photographing. Foreign societies would take up a similar method, and in a short time the visitor to the rooms of the various societies would have the principal objects of the world before him.

Another advantage of such a collection would be its guide-book phase. Often on starting out on their trips the amateurs, Plainfielders and others alike, are bothered to know just where to go in certain localities to get their pictures, and sometimes much precious time is wasted in looking for the best photographic scenery or some one view that the amateur has heard of and wishes to procure. With a complete collection at his society rooms, he can readily study out ahead just what places he cares to visit and what views he may wish to gain. At the coming conference of amateurs in New York city, which Plainfield amateurs will attend, and at which an amateur league will probably be organized, the question of allied work in gathering the views of interest of the country will come up and a good start will be made.

NEW JERSEY CITIES THAT HAVE GROWN.

An Official List of Populations under the New Federal Census.

It is expected at the Census Office that before the end of the week the final population figures can be made public for all the towns and cities in the United States having 8,000 or more inhabitants. In some cases the count is already so nearly completed that figures can be given for all of the larger towns.

This is the case with the enumeration schedule of New Jersey, and the records show that in this State the following cities and towns have 4,000 population or over:

STEADY CUSTOM
THAT'S WHAT WE ARE AFTER.

And when we start out to get anything we "get there" with both feet. We don't expect to obtain your custom by merely blowing, but by offering you values for your money that are not and cannot be approached elsewhere. Deeds, not words; performances, not promises, is what you want. Let us give you an example. One that you can understand and verify if you care to take the trouble. We are showing at the present time a line of

ALL WOOL CHEVIOT SUITS AT

and the very identical goods are, or have until a recent period, been offered at other stores for $12.00 and $14.00.

We know this to be a fact or we would not state it. We would like you to look at our stock this season, and especially these suits. We have them in single and double-breasted Sacks, in gray, stripes and checks and fancy mixed do. They're not leaders, although they lead a great many people who look at them to buy them at sight. But what we mean, is, they are not gotten up as a bait to convey a false or unfair impression of the prices of the rest of the stock, but fair samples of the values we are giving all along the line. For a business suit they cannot be excelled. See them.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A. St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. AT THE TURN OF THE ROAD.

[illegible]

A QUEER DUEL.

A Black and Brown Spider Fight to the Death.

[illegible] window in the [illegible] corner of the old warehouse at the head of [illegible], in Hammondsport, is covered as with a curtain by spider webs. The warehouse was built sixty years ago, when Hammondsport was the great grain shipping point for Western New York, says a correspondent in the N. Y. Sun. The grain business ceased to be the mainstay of this region long ago, and this old building was put to other use. [illegible]

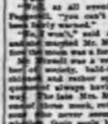
[illegible] field to take a hand in the fight. Before he reached the contestants, however, he was enfolded by both the hairy spider and the big-headed spider, and hurled back into the crypt so quickly that he [illegible] dazed, and remained [illegible] the edge of the web until the fight was over without as much as moving a leg.

While this exciting side incident was [illegible] the attention of the [illegible], the principals separated, each retreating [illegible]. Things remained quiet. Then the pugnacious little black spider moved slowly forward, and the big spider advanced to meet him. When they were nearly together the little spider shot forward like a flash, pounced upon the big one, and almost as quickly darted back again. That was a fatal blow to the big spider. In that sudden dash the little spider had [illegible] off one of the big one's long legs close to his body as [illegible] cut the cables of his foe's [illegible] web. The loss of his leg greatly disabled the big spider, and the little fellow was able to fight all around him, to the visible disgust of the brown spider's hairy second. The black spider darted at his big antagonist with the rapidity of lightning, and it was not long before he had severed the other [illegible] of the big spider as completely as he had the first one. The brown [illegible] was now almost totally helpless. By a quick flank movement the little [illegible] mounted the other's huge body, and fixed his jaws firmly in the back of his neck. The big spider floundered and struggled, but all to no purpose. His life blood was fast being drained by his little foe, and in a minute after the black spider had got his clutch on the brown one's neck the big fellow hung shrivelled and lifeless in the [illegible] of the web he had tried to enlarge at the expense of his bold and [illegible] little neighbor.

But the little black spider was not satisfied with the death of the encroaching spider and the ruin to his web. When he found his foe was dead he made a circuit of the outer edge of the web, cutting every stay cable and [illegible] from its fastenings, until the [illegible] of its late occupant and the [illegible] web fell together on the window ledge, among a mass of dead and shrivelled flies and [illegible] wings and [illegible] of dusty cast-off webs. Then the victorious little black, escorted by both the big-headed and the hairy spiders, returned to his nest in the corner. The spider spectators scampered back to their respective homes, and in a few seconds the great spider colony had resumed all its wonted quiet.

HIS SECOND WIFE.

How She Completely Conquered Her Husband.



"WELL, I never!" said Miss Peggrell. "What is this world coming to?"

"Much the same as it always was, I suppose," retorted Agatha Simplex.

She was the village tailoress; a resolute, [illegible] woman of seven or eight and twenty.

"I wouldn't have believed it, unless you had told me with your own lips," said Miss Peggrell, dolefully.

"[illegible] not?" said Agatha.

"[illegible] telling yourself—that's all," [illegible] Miss Peggrell.

"[illegible] not," said Agatha Simplex, [illegible]. "He's a very nice man."

"He's twenty years older than you are."

"Well," said Miss Simplex, "and what difference does that make? I'm [illegible] and alone in the world—and Mr. Mixsell is willing to give me a home, and I respect him very highly—and I've no doubt we shall be very happy together."

"Humph!" commented Miss Peggrell.

Agatha turned sharply around.

"What does that mean?" said she.

"Nothing," said Miss Peggrell. "[illegible] he bullied his first wife into her grave."

"He'll [illegible] bully me into mine," [illegible] remarked Miss Simplex.

"[illegible] not so sure of that."

[illegible]

"Well, at all events," added Miss Peggrell, "you can't say you've not been fairly warned."

"[illegible] I won't," said Agatha Simplex, and she married Mr. Moses Mixsell before the month was a fortnight older.

Mr. Mixsell was a very worthy member of society, bald-headed, double-chinned and rather spoiled, in consequence of always having had his own way. The late Mrs. Mixsell had been one of those meek, retiring little persons who never seem quite certain whether their souls belong to themselves or to somebody else, and there were those who, like Miss Peggrell, did not hesitate boldly to assert that her brief span of life had been shortened by the domineering will and stern discipline of Moses, her lord and master.

But all these reports Mrs. Mixsell [illegible] neither heeded nor believed.

"My dear," said she to her husband, after they had been married about three weeks, "the Hutchinson family is going to give a concert here, on Wednesday evening."

"Are they?" said Moses, "well, what of that?"

"I should like to go," said Mrs. Mixsell.

"I shouldn't," said Mr. Mixsell.

"I mean to go," said Mrs. Mixsell.

"And I mean you shan't," said Mr. Mixsell.

Agatha's cheeks crimsoned; her eyes sparkled with [illegible].

"Why not, Moses?" said she.

"I don't approve of concerts," said Mr. Mixsell. "It's my opinion that a married woman is better off at home darning her husband's stockings, than gadding off to public places."

"[illegible] I keep your stockings well darned."

"I don't say but that you do," admitted the bridegroom. "But I don't mean to encourage this fancy of yours for running to every wild-beast show and public exhibition in town! And, not to mince matters, I intend to put it down," with great emphasis on the last three words.

"I shall go!" said Agatha.

"You shall not!" said Moses.

"How will you prevent it?" said Mrs. Mixsell. "Unless, indeed, you lock me into my room!" with a little laugh.

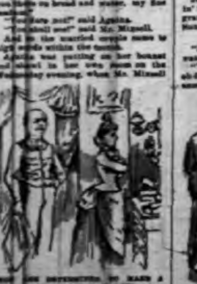
"I shall do that, if it proves necessary," said Mr. Mixsell. "And keep you there on bread and water, my fine [illegible]."

"You dare not!" said Agatha.

"I shall see!" said Mr. Mixsell.

And so the married couple came to high words within the [illegible].

Agatha was putting on her bonnet and shawl in her own room on the Wednesday evening, when Mr. Mixsell [illegible]



"[illegible] DETERMINED TO HAVE A [illegible]"

[illegible] turned the key in the door, and [illegible]

"[illegible] make a fool of yourself, eh?" said he. [illegible] that was Agatha.

"[illegible] my duty to [illegible]," said Mr. Mixsell [illegible] locked the door and put the key in his pocket.

"[illegible] shall [illegible] madam," said he, "until you break that stubborn will of yours. At six o'clock to-morrow morning I shall put in a loaf of bread and a pitcher of water."

Mrs. Mixsell made no reply, and her husband began to fear that the task of reducing her to subjection was not going to be as easy as he had anticipated.

He stalked off, and spent the evening comfortably by the fire.

The next morning, Ebenezer Hillgrove, who was going to lay half a dozen yards or so of stone wall for the Mixsells, came, bright and early, to breakfast. Mr. Mixsell himself was frying ham and eggs over the kitchen fire.

"Where's your wife?" demanded Ebenezer.

"She hasn't left her room yet," said Mr. Mixsell, adhering to the letter of the truth, if not to its spirit.

"She was up pretty late at the concert last night, eh?" said Ebenezer.

"At the—concert!" said Mr. Mixsell, forgetting in his surprise to turn the last slice of ham which lay frizzling in the pan.

"I saw her there," said Ebenezer, "in a black silk gownd and a hat with blue feathers onto it! Laughed awful at the comic parts, and cried at the 'Farewell Hymn.'"

Mr. Mixsell, with a last gleam of presence of mind, rescued the ham from its fiery ordeal, and put it on the plate.

"Sit down and eat, Ebenezer," said he, "while I go and see after Mrs. Mixsell."

And off he trudged, with his square loaf of bread and pitcher of water.

Arriving at the door, he unlocked it and peered in.

There, leaning against the window-sill, with its back to him, was the well-known figure in the black dress and scarlet shawl, with a white worsted scarf half concealing its face.

"Mrs. Mixsell," said he.

No answer was returned.

"Sulking, eh?" said Mr. Mixsell.

Still no reply was vouchsafed.

"Well, you can have it out at your leisure," grimly commented her lord and master. "Here's your breakfast."

And he went his way, firmly convinced that Ebenezer Hillgrove had been mistaken in the fact of Mrs. Mixsell's presence at the concert.

But no sooner was the morning meal concluded than in walked Miss Peggrell.

"Mornin', Mr. Mixsell. How did Agatha enjoy the concert last night?"

"She didn't enjoy it at all," said Mr. Mixsell. "She wasn't there."

"Not there!" echoed Miss Peggrell. "But she was, and she sat next to me, and I walked home as far as Chicken Lane under her umbrella. You'll tell me next I wasn't there myself!"

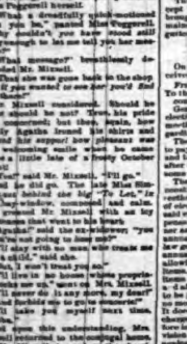
Mr. Mixsell excused himself and went hurriedly upstairs.

"I'll be at the bottom of this mystery," said he, "or I'll know the reason why!"

He unlocked the bedroom door and flung it open.

"Agatha!" said he, sternly; "Agatha!"

And then he saw that the figure by the window with its immovable white face and unalterable smirk was only that of the dummy which had decorated Miss Agatha Simplex's windows when she took in tailoring, dress-making and the general millinery business. And the window was wide open, and the bed had not been slept in.



"SHE HAS—LEFT ME!"

"Goodness me!" tragically cried out Mr. Mixsell. "She has—left me!"

Just then he heard the sound of puffing and loud breathing behind him, and, turning, beheld the portly form of Miss Peggrell herself.

"What a dreadfully quick-motioned man you be," panted Miss Peggrell. "Why couldn't you have stood still long enough to let me tell you her message?"

"What message?" breathlessly demanded Mr. Mixsell.

"That she was gone back to the shop and if you wanted to see her you'd find her there."

Mr. Mixsell considered. Should he go or should he not? True, his pride was concerned; but then, again, how nicely Agatha ironed his shirts and cooked his supper! how pleasant was her welcoming smile when he came home a little late of a frosty October night!

"Yes!" said Mr. Mixsell. "I'll go."

And he did go. The late Miss Simplex sat behind the big "To Let," in the bay-window, composed and calm. She greeted Mr. Mixsell with an icy politeness that went to his heart.

"Agatha!" said the ex-widower; "you—you're not going to leave me?"

"I'll stay with no man who treats me like a child," said she.

"But, I won't treat you so."

"I'll live in no house whose proprietor locks me up," went on Mrs. Mixsell.

"I'll never do it any more, my dear!"

"And forbids me to go to concerts!"

"I'll take you myself next time, Agatha."

And upon this understanding, Mrs. Mixsell returned to the conjugal home, and Mr. Mixsell chopped up the abominable dummy for firewood.

Agatha Simplex had conquered, and Mr. Mixsell never was the same man again.—Amy Bell, in N. Y. Ledger.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Nov. 6, 1890.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county, held on Thursday, Nov. 6, 1890, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, Freeholders Bender, Briant, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Russell, Sullivan, Thompson, Trahon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From County Engineer.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county:

Gentlemen:—I submit herewith the following report showing the progress made in the work on the county roads to this date:

Morris avenue, New Providence township.

On this avenue the telford and first course of macadam are now complete. The grading is about one-half completed. Since the last report the contractor has taken hold of the work in earnest, and is now carrying it forward in a satisfactory manner.

Morris avenue, Summit township.

From the New Providence line to the intersection of Morris and Springfield avenues (a distance of 6,700 feet) two courses of macadam are on, but all the work has not yet been brought to the required grade.

There has also been laid a length of one-quarter mile of the bottom course, east of Springfield avenue.

The grading has been about three-fourths done.

Morris avenue, Springfield township.

The pavement in this township is now completed with the exception of watering and rolling; if the latter work is attended to, the entire avenue, including the grading, will be in good shape for acceptance within a week or ten days.

Mountain avenue, Springfield township.

The telford has all been laid on this avenue, and the first course of macadam is on for a distance of over a mile. The grading is about one-half done.

With favorable weather this road should be completed within thirty days.

Mountain avenue, Westfield township.

About two miles of telford foundation has been put in and one half of this has received the first course of macadam. The grading and laying of the telford is being pushed at present in order that it may be completed before Frost. Weather permitting, the laying of the telford will probably be finished in fifteen days.

Mountain avenue, Fanwood township.

This avenue should have been completed before this, but for various causes it has been delayed; all that is needed at present is watering and rolling, with a few loads of screenings put on.

Westfield avenue, city of Elizabeth.

The telford is now on from North Broad street to Clinton street, about one half of the whole length of the avenue, while 1,700 feet of first course of macadam and seven hundred feet of second course have been put on. Between Cherry and Clinton streets the avenue has been paved to the full width of the carriage way, the property owners along that block having the extra work done at their own expense. The contractor will now begin the paving at Bayway, and work towards Clinton street.

Bayway and West Jersey street.

This road is practically completed for 900 feet, as far as it is advisable to carry the work until the sewer in Bayway, (now in process of construction), is finished.

North avenue, Union township.

Two-thirds of the telford foundation has been laid, and more than one-fourth of the first course of macadam spread. Since the last report the work has been more vigorously prosecuted, and is now progressing in a satisfactory manner.

North avenue, Cranford township.

All the telford and first course of macadam is laid, and the second course is on from Eastman street to the Westfield line, but not finished in a satisfactory manner.

This avenue has been delayed for several reasons, one of which has been the difficulty of procuring the stone in sufficient quantity.

Central avenue, Westfield township.

The telford and first course of macadam are on the entire length of the road, and the second course is all spread except for about one-half mile at the Westfield end.

The grading is three-fourths finished and all the work is being well done.

Central avenue, Clark township.

The pavement on this road is now completed except the final watering and rolling, which is now in progress. All is being done in a satisfactory manner and it will make an excellent road.

About one-half of the work of trimming up the gutters remains to be done.

Central avenue, Rahway.

This road is practically completed, except that a few places require to be brought up to grade, and some work remains to be done in trimming up the gutters.

Respectfully submitted,
F. A. DUNHAM,
County Engineer.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson received and placed on file.

From county attorney:

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

Gentlemen:—There were several election bills referred to me at the last meeting of the board for my opinion regarding several items therein.

The board have no authority whatever to pay the items charged for stationery and taking ballot boxes back to city clerk after the election as has been charged in some of them:

The act providing for election on the constitutional amendments, by the 10th section thereof, provided that all officers of election who shall assist in conducting said election shall receive the same compensation and be paid in the same manner as is now provided by law in case of annual election. On examination of the law governing what officers are paid on annual elections there is no provision allowing the payment of the aforesaid items. The act expressly states what items are to be paid to election officers, and after naming the various items over to be paid therein states that those and no more are to be paid for their services. It does not include the aforesaid items charged for as above, and I shall therefore in the absence of any statutory provision allowing it, be compelled to advise against the payment of those items.

In regard to the charges made for sending messengers to Trenton with a statement of the result of each election district, I find that the act requiring the submission of the constitutional amendment to the vote of the people provides in the sixth section thereof that a messenger shall be sent with a certified copy of the result of each election district to the secretary of the state, but it does not go any further and provide for who shall pay the expense. The election, strictly speaking, was a state election. It did not affect any particular county or city, and in the absence of statutory authority the expense rests primarily on the state. No county or other municipality is obliged or authorized to pay money out of their treasury unless they have legislative authority so to do. In my opinion it should not be presumed from a law that it was the intent of the legislature that a county should pay for certain acts required to be done by a law, but there should be express words to that effect in the law.

Under the above circumstances and as the law now stands I am unable to advise the payment of above items for charges or expenses in sending messengers to Trenton. The state is the party who it seems to me is responsible for these items.

Yours respectfully,
C. D. WARD,
County Attorney.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek, received and ordered filed.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Pierson:

Resolved, That the bill of A. M. Clark, for material and labor as per contract on North avenue bridge, Westfield, be paid when sworn to and audited by the committee.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the auditing committee and county attorney be and are hereby directed to examine into the new election law in order to ascertain and determine the amount of compensation and expenses properly chargeable to the county in carrying on the [illegible] election under the ballot reform law, and to report the result of their investigation to the clerk of the board who is hereby directed to send notices to the city and township clerks, giving in detail the amounts the county will pay for each and every service called for by the law.

Freeholder Kyte moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Briant:

Resolved, That the bill of $22.20 of Edward B. Kelly be paid when properly approved by the presiding judge of the court of oyer and terminer.

Freeholder Doty moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder West moved that clerk of the board return to election officers, bills for services for constitutional election, giving opinion of county attorney as to amounts that will be allowed by this board.

Carried.

Freeholder West moved that when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet on Thursday, November 20, 1890, at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

Carried.

DISCOVERY OF COAL.

Who Was the First to Dig Up Pennsylvania's Black Diamonds.

The proposition to erect a monument to Philip Ginder, who discovered anthracite coal on Summit Hill, Carbon County, in 1791, has given rise to a number of claims for the honor of discovering coal in Pennsylvania. The Wyoming valley people claim that anthracite was known in that section of the State as early as 1756. There is a tradition that hard coal was burned in the Valley Forge about the time of the French and Indian war. Nevertheless the Mauch Chunk promoters of the Ginder celebration refuse to be turned aside from their plans. They point with pride to the fact that the Lehigh Valley Coal-Mining Company began practicing mining in Carbon County in 1792, in immediate consequence of Ginder's discovery, and it was only then that the possible importance of coal as a fuel began to be appreciated. They claim, therefore, that Ginder is entitled to a monument, and they propose that he shall have one, on the just grounds that the discoverer of anthracite is not the individual who knew that the ground contained black stones without knowing their use, but he whose discovery led to the use of coal as a fuel.

Ginder seems to be as much deserving of the honor of being called the discoverer of anthracite coal in Pennsylvania as Fulton is of being called the inventor of a steamboat, or Isaac Newton the discoverer of differential calculus, or Robert Raikes the founder of Sunday-schools.—Philadelphia Press.

Same Cause.

Little Roger—What makes you walk lame, Uncle John?

Uncle John—There was an accident on the bridge to-day and I got caught in the jam.

Little Roger—I got caught in the jam once and walked lame for a week.—Puck.

Bricks Were Scarce.

"Jimmy," said a visitor at the Jaysmiths', "how is your papa going to build his house? There are no bricks coming to the city now."

"Oh," replied Jimmy, "mamma says papa brings home a brick in his hat every night."—Munsey's Weekly.

TRY to keep your farm productions above the average in quality. There is money in it.

ENGLISH shepherds find cut cabbage preferable to beets or turnips for sheep. Lambs in early winter are especially fond of it.

THE money value of a draught horse that has been trained to walk four miles an hour is full one-half more than one that will not go more than two and a half or three.

A NOTED Western cattle breeder says that "breeders have passed the time when they aim to grow steers first and then fatten them." They feed to grow and fatten all along the line.

UNRULY cattle on a farm are very troublesome, but the cause is not hard to find. It is, almost invariably, poor pasture and semi-starvation. Why shouldn't a hungry animal jump fences or push them down?

IN building a wire fence set your posts and turn a furrow against them on each side. This lessens the space between the bottom wire and the ground and indicates to animals the presence of an obstruction.

A MULCH in dry weather prevents the sun from extracting the moisture the plants need. To keep an inch of the surface stirred is the same as to haul on leaves, straw or other mulch. The loose soil is a mulch to that below it.

GOOD ventilation at all times—by night and by day—is highly essential to the health of our poultry stock. Much of the disease which the birds are afflicted with from time to time may be traced for its origin directly to a neglect to ventilate the fowl-houses.

TALK over the farm management with the boys, and get their opinions. As a rule, parents do a great deal of thinking and planning for the boys that it would be much better to let them do themselves. Responsibility should be placed upon them, just in proportion as they are able to bear it.

IT is the most natural way to manure melons in the hill. The general idea is that the melon gets nourishment only from its original roots. But during the season secondary roots are formed on the branches, and these contribute largely to the growth of the fruit. The whole ground should therefore be made rich, and if possible the year before being planted with melons or other vines.

In a water telephone recently patented in England the apparatus employed for the collection of sound transmitted through water between ships has been improved by constructing the apparatus so that any pressure caused by the increased density of the water has no effect upon it.

AN instrument has recently been exhibited in London by which a photograph can be taken of drops of water in the course of their formation. It consists of a lantern and lenses, by which a water-trough, the source of the drops, can be strongly illuminated, together with a lightning camera having a revolving disk with one perforation.

EXPERIMENTS made in Sweden by M. Sandberg on the strength of iron rails during winter have shown that steel rails containing over four per cent. of carbon are apt to break in cold weather. In fact, the result of his investigation points to the use of rails having less carbon than this—say, three per cent.—in countries as cold in winter as Norway and Sweden.

THE annual catch of fish on the European and North American coasts is computed by a German statistician to amount to 130,000 tons. A ton of fish corresponds with twenty-five sheep in weight, and with twenty sheep in nourishing power. Therefore, the total European and North American catch equals in number 42,000,000 sheep and in nourishing power 80,000,000.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES, ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

ADOPTED IN HOSPITALS AS THE BEST FOR INVALIDS.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the dead ripe Oporto Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties
are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that affect the weaker sex.
It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
Is the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the exciter of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret
Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, specially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry
Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medicinal purposes.
It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.

POETICAL EFFUSIONS.

"My Ruthers."

I tell you what I'd rather do—
Ef I only had my ruthers—
I'd ruther work when I wanted to
Than be bossed round by others—
I'd want to kind o' git the swing
O' what was needed first, I jing!
Afore I sweat at any thing!
Ef I only had my ruthers—
In fact, I'd aim to be the same
With all men as my brothers;
And they'd all be the same with me,
Ef I only had my ruthers.

I wouldn't likely know it all—
Ef I only had my ruthers;
I'd know some things, and some base-ball—
Some old jokes, and some others;
I'd know some politics, and 'low
Some tariff speeches same as now,
Then go and hear Nye on "Brains and Hogs
To Detect Their Presence."—T' others
'At stayed away, I'd let 'em stay—
All my disbelievin' brothers
Could choose to [illegible]
Ef I only had my ruthers.

The pore 'ud git their dues sometimes—
Ef I only had my ruthers—
And be paid dollars 'stid o' dimes,
For children, wives and mothers;
Their boy 'at slaves; their girl 'at sews—
For others—not herself, God knows!—
The grave's her only change of clothes!
Ef I only had my ruthers—
They'd all have "stuff" and time enough
To answer one-another's
Appealin' prayer for "loving care"—
Ef I only had my ruthers.

They'd be few folks 'ud not be trust
Ef I only had my ruthers,
And blasted few business men to be'st
Theirselves, or hearts of others;
Big guns 'at come here durin' fair
Week could put up jest anywhere
And find a full-and-plenty there,
Ef I only had my ruthers:
The rich and great 'ud 'sociate
With all their lowly brothers,
Feelin' we done the honorin'—
Ef I only had my ruthers.
—James Whitcomb Riley.

A Backward Glance.

Were all the ways wherein you went,
In plenitude of calm content,
Of old,
Without my presence, lone or cold?

Were all the flowers that, year by year,
You watched, and kissed, and held so dear,
Less sweet,
Before God willed we two should meet?

Was every song and sweet refrain,
Whereof your lips are now so fain,
Unsung,
Or meaningless, without love's tongue?

For now, in looking backward, I
Discern no light nor melody,
Nor find
Any dear memory soul-enshrined;

Nor can I see aught blest or bright,
Aught of loveworthy, aught of right
Or true,
Until the day that brought me you.
—M. G. Gillington, in Chamber's Journal.

In Slumberland.

The lights burn dimly where we sit,
The dancing shadows round us flit;
The stars that wink with sleepy eyes,
The winds that breathe but drowsy sighs,
The frog-songs hoarse and hollow—
They call to Slumber's Island bright,
And you must go alone to-night.
I may not follow.

What will you find in Slumberland?
Fair sights, if I can understand
The smile that curls your lip sometimes,
When I have lulled you with my rhymes,
And you are softly sleeping.
But what those happy sights may be
My waking eyes can never see,
Their vigil keeping.

I only know that something sweet
Awaits the coming of your feet;
That somewhere in the warm moonbeams
A flock of little fairy Dreams
Reach joyous hands of greeting;
And somewhere, somewhere, far away,
You with the little Dreams shall play,
Till night is fleeting.

Your head grows heavy on my breast.
Go, then, and find out all the rest!
Soft from my clasp I let you slip,
That dawning smile upon your lip,
And, patient, wait your waking;
All night through Slumber's Island roam,
And to my happy arms come home,
When day is breaking!

LOVE AND MARRIAGE.

A Farce Tragedy in Two Short Acts.

[Written for this Paper.]

ACT I. BEFORE MARRIAGE.

Scene I—Morning. Parlor in the Bane mansion. Enter Mortimer Jones; embraces Clara, who is "discovered" seated on the sofa.

Mortimer—Ah, Clara, how glad I am to see you once again. It seems an age since I saw you yesterday.

Clara (tightening her arms around his neck)—It was just the same with me, dear Mortie, although I dreamt of you all night long.

Mortimer (with sparkling eyes)—And did you dream of me? Oh you darling! you pet! you angel! [Excessive osculation.]

Clara (arranging her disordered bangs)—Yes, I dreamt we were in a millinery store, and I selected a fall hat.

Mortimer (removing a long, light-colored hair from his mouth)—I hope you picked out the most expensive one in the store.

Clara—I hesitated, but you, like the noble man that you are, insisted.

Mortimer (holding up his head proudly)—Of course I did. Is there any thing in the world too costly for you? I would be worse than a brute to deny you any thing—from the priceless gems of the Orient down to a chunk of chewing gum.

Clara (hysterically)—My own darling true love!

Mortimer (with equal emotion)—I am! I am!

* * * * * * *

Scene II. Noon. Dining-room of the Bane mansion. Clara and Mortimer seated at the table.

Mortimer—Where are your folks, Clara, dear?

Clara—Oh! they won't be home to-day. [Mortimer has an uncontrollable desire to annihilate himself for not asking that question before. However, moves his chair up, and starts in on the dinner. Takes a spoonful of soup and makes a wry face.]

Clara—You seem disturbed, darling. [Anxiously.] Don't you like the food?

Mortimer (gets the raptures once more)—Ah, Clara, dear, when you are near every thing tastes good. But (tasting soup once more) I think your cook must be in love, for she has forgotten to put salt in the soup.

Clara (coyly)—Of course she is in love, and with you; for, knowing that you were coming to dinner I attended to the cooking myself.

Mortimer (tasting soup again)—Why, there's plenty of salt in this soup. Too much if any thing! [Gulps it down.]

Clara (suddenly dropping a chop and gazing at him with soulful eyes)—Oh! you dear, dear old boy!

Mortimer (getting them very bad again)—Sweetest of sweet! come to my arms! [Earnestly.] You are quite sure none of the folks are at home?

Clara—Quite sure. [Buries her face in his newly laundried shirt bosom.] Whose angel is 'oo?

Mortimer (ecstatically) — I'se 'oos! 'oos! Whose angel is 'oo?

Note. Orchestra to play soft music, with twittering bird accompaniment.

ACT II. ONE YEAR AFTER MARRIAGE.

Scene I. Morning. Sitting-room. Mortimer, with a scowl on his face, reading morning paper. Clara, darning socks, in another part of the room. The door-bell rings.

Mortimer (looking up from his paper)—There goes that bell again. I'm scarcely out of bed before the bill collectors are around. It's enough to drive a man crazy!

Clara (sarcastically)—Well, you can hardly expect to be furnished with whisky and cigars for nothing.

Mortimer—More likely it is for face powder, some new bangs, or some of the other flummery that you hang on yourself every time you go out.

Clara (fiercely)—If you can't afford to pay for such trifles, why did you ever marry me? That's what I would like to know!

Mortimer (in slow and measured tones)—Now you have got me! I ask myself that question forty times a day. It's a conundrum which I have to give up.

Clara (coming up close and shaking her head savagely in his face)—Ugh! you contemptible monster! How I hate you!

* * * * * * *

Scene II. Noon. Dining-room. Mortimer and Clara at dinner.

Mortimer (with a sneer)—I suppose I might be able to worry down a little of this alleged soup—it is soup, is it not?—if you would only manage to keep your hair out of it. [Extracts a hair.]

Clara—As you have so little hair left on your head, perhaps it would be well for you to attend to the meals. Or you could find some restaurant where you could probably be suited.

Mortimer—I couldn't find them any worse than this. Why, this isn't fit for a dog to eat.

Clara (with the air of a woman scoring a point)—Then it's no wonder you don't like it.

Mortimer (through his teeth) — Oh, that is so like you, you little pink and white angel.

Clara—Just a little more of that kind of talk and I'll leave the house and go back to mother.

Mortimer (eagerly) — You will, eh? For Heaven's sake don't make my mouth water with anticipation. If you will go, I'll get the finest turnout in town to take you there. Go get your hat and I'll go for the carriage!

Clara—I always did despise you from the first moment I laid my eyes on you!

* * * * * * *

Scene II—Night.

Clara (lighting light at bedside)—So you really decided to come home, did you? Oh, I suppose this is a good-enough place to get your meals and sleep in! What do you mean by making so much noise?

Mortimer—Who made any noise?

Clara—You did.

Mortimer—You're an infernal liar. Woman!—I mean she-dragon!—don't go too far! You'll make a lunatic out of me!

Clara—That would be impossible. You always were one.

Mortimer—There is no denying I was one when I married you.

(Prolonged silence.)

Clara (breaking the silence)—What do you mean by calling me a she-dragon? Now, that settles it. To-morrow I will see my lawyer about obtaining a divorce. That is my firm resolution.

Mortimer—Oh, yes, I know a place that is paved with good resolutions.

Clara—Well, you will see.

[Another silence.]

Mortimer (mumbling to himself as he falls off to sleep)—Divorce? * * * eh? * * good * * very good * * good * *

* * * * * * *

Curtain, with very bright red lights. Music should be something suitable, such as "Home, Sweet Home," or "If He Only Had Known It Before."

ALEX. E. SWEET.

The Last of Earth.

"I see dem little pearly gates," said the dying colored man.

"What am beyond, fadder?" anxiously asked his son.

"Bress my soul, chile! ef dar ain't a angel cake-walk fur a melon 's big 's a elephant."—Judge.

On Dangerous Ground.

Mr. Com Placent (visiting newspaper office. To editor)—What do you do to get rid of the beastly bores who stay all day and don't know how to take a hint?

Editor (without looking up)—Stay five minutes longer and I'll show you.—West Shore.

Appropriate Enough.

Mrs. Larkins—I see that at a wedding in England the bride was accompanied by four little boys dressed in sailor suits.

Larkins—That's all right. It was a marry time affair, you know.—Judge.

His Platform.

"Do you favor free whisky?"

"I'm in favor of any kind, sir."—Judge.

AUTUMN.

Brown and bare are the autumn fields;
Heaped and stacked is the yellow grain;
Hardly a partridge the stubble yields,
So closely shorn is the bristly plain.
Summer is dying 'mid shower and cloud,
Crimson and gold is her royal shroud.

Winter is coming: the leafy woods
Are withering fast in their golden pride;
For the wind is fierce, and the rain in floods
Is sweeping o'er valley and mountain-side.
Dead leaves are flying through sun and shade
A crimson carpet all down the glade.

Mute are the finches, the lark, and the linnet;
Only the robin sings loud and clear,
A song for the beauty and joy of summer,
A sweet good-bye to the waning year.
Mead and valley and mountain steep
In the misty silence are falling asleep.

But out of their sleep shall they one day waken,
And sparkle anew with pearl and gold,
When the rosy gates of morn reopen,
And crown with splendor the dusky wold.
Though the year die out amid cloud and rain,
Yet golden summer shall come again.
—H. G. Johns, in Democrat.

MOONSHINER'S REVERIE.

It Was a Free Country But Sebe Gober Was a Prisoner.

"MINE them thar shotes don't gin you away, Sebe."

The man glanced up from the gun he was loading, and looked first at his mother, then at the shotes.

"'Taint likely," said he, shortly, with the cartridge between his teeth.

He was tall and slab-sided, and the shotes were tall and slab-sided. He had a long, solemn face, half sleepy half dreamy, and the shotes had long, solemn faces, half stupid, half—if not dreamy, as if they were scouting around for corn.

"Hogs air powerful cunnin' creturs," Mrs. Gober continued, "en I do b'leve thet thar hog thar, old Marthy Ann," pointing to the tallest, most slab-sided of the swine, and the mother of the others, "knows jest ez well when you sot out fur thet thar still, ez I do. She's the peartest critter I knows."

"Not peart nuff fur thet," said Sebe, briefly.

"Well I heard tell ez how thet thar revenue chap, Bill Jones, followed Suge Mullins clar over the mountains to his still, jes by the pig' tracks, whar they tracked arter him fur the corn. Hogs is powerful peart critters, en so is that thar revenue chap, Bill Jones."

"I haint afeard o' him," said Sebe, as he finished loading his gun; "I'll settle his bacon with ole Mary Jane har," holding up his weapon, "ef he fools with me. This is a free kaintry, en I'll still if I choose ter."

After making this declaration of independence he shambled off with Mary Jane; and the hogs, headed by Marthy Ann, followed him.

Mrs. Gober also believed it to be a free "kintry," but she shook her head as she watched the shambling party go down the path which led toward the mountain still.

"'Tis powerful hard," she muttered, "that the revenue men will meddle with honest folks that mines their own bees-ness."

As Sebe went down the rocky path he picked up stones from time to time and pelted Marthy Ann and her family with them.

"Git from har!" cried he, and shambled on secure in the company of Mary Jane.

He continued the pelting process at stated intervals, till, as he was about to climb the mountain, the shower became so fierce that Marthy Ann and her children took refuge behind a great bowlder, from whence they watched Sebe out of their slanting eyes till he disappeared; then they struck upon his track and cautiously followed like so many dogs.

Soon a man rose up from behind a large rock and followed them.

Sebe shambled up the mountain path at great speed; it was invisible to all but mountaineers; in and out it wound, now

"GIT FROM HAR!" HE CRIED.

along a precipitous ledge, now across a mountain stream, now around a great shelving cliff. Behind this Sebe dived and went on some distance, till he reached a secluded spot, a sort of hollow hedged in on all sides by dense forest growth and girdled with masses of rock. At the bottom of the hollow was a small stream. The place was a paradise for moonshiners, and Sebe had taken possession and set up his rude still.

He now glanced around with a pleased smile.

"Hit'll take a powerful peart chap ter fine me har," he thought, as he rested Mary Jane against the white trunk of a beech tree and started to work.

Soon the still was bubbling and boiling and, leaning himself against a tall poplar as though he meant to brace it up, Sebe looked around—at the deep dell; at the white smoke as it went up and was lost to sight in the treetops, like an estray cloud going back home.

The sunlight shone on the grass all spangled with dew; it threw a golden tint on the tender green of the poplar, and lit up the deeper verdure of a hickory.

All was still, till a squirrel ran up an oak tree to sample the acorns for his winter store. Then a red bird flamed into the poplar, and, sitting there like a gorgeous flower, sang over and over his short, sweet song, his wild-wood matin, while a band of rowdy, chattering jay birds fought from limb to limb of the hickory.

Sebe saw them as if he saw them not, as his dreamy eyes followed the runaway smoke.

"Where's the harm o' stillin' whisky?" he mused. "Looker yander's smoke thet's gone skyward, haint thet whisky turned ter smoke en gone ter jine the clouds? The very rain gits his dram! Corn is turned into whisky, so the whisky must be in the corn. En the ro'sen ears thet we eat, what's they but whisky in the mash, so ter say, afore the sun hes hed er chance fer ter ripen hit fer mountain dew? Same way, what's er corn patch but er chunk o' whisky.

"The very shotes thet eat the mash takes liquor in their blood, en in our bread en meat we eat whisky. Now ef taint no harm ter eat hit, what's the harm ter drink hit? En ef taint no harm ter drink hit, what's the harm ter make hit? 'Pears like hit's all in a muddle."

He roused himself from his reverie, and from a barrel under a rude sort of shed he drew a drink, in a small gourd, and sipped it.

"Hit's good," said the moonshiner, "hit is. Hit's the reverend mountain dew—doubled at thet! Hit's hard ter beat!"

He glanced down at the wet grass.

"All natur takes hit's drink er dew, en so must we critters too."

He took a sip.

"'Tain't no use er talkin', hit's good, hit is!"

He stood there ruminating with the gourd in his hand, gazing at the still, and as he gazed the liquor went to his head.

"What's the harm er makin' hit? All creation loves hit. See thet thar red bird er singin' ter his mate; he's parched whar the smoke er the still goes right over him, en he drinks hit in. How loud he sings! His heart is plum full ter bustin' uv his love!"

THE GOURD FELL FROM HIS HAND.

He took a sip.

"See them thar jays; they've hed a whiff; how they skip en all but laugh. All creation loves whisky—all creation's full uv hit!

"What's corn but whisky—bottled up. We plent corn, en we plent whisky—hit sprouts up, en hit's whisky bustin' from the yearth. When hit grows, hit's whisky—whisky in the blades, green en wavin', whisky in the yaller tassel, toppin' in the wind, for the wind ter drink hit; whisky in the silk, now yaller, now brown, a-ripenin' in the sun—turned brown when he's sucked all the whisky out."

He took a sip.

"Whisky in the heaps all piled up in the cornerib, after the corn shuckin's over, en the supper eat, en the dancin' done; en the gals all gone home; after the game is played, en the kissin's over—kissin' almost ez sweet ez whisky."

He took another sip; the sun shone brighter; the birds sang louder, and the still boiled faster.

"Ef hit's quiled up in the corn, what's the harm er gittin' hit out?"

Marthy Ann and her shambling family came running down the hollow. The moonshiner sipped his gourd and went on with his reverie.

"This is a free kaintry, fur which my father fit en bled, en I's a free man ter do ez I please. En thet ole rev'nue feller better be lookin' out, er I'll give him er taste er Mary Jane; the ole gal ain't ter be fooled with, ner me neither. No, I haint—"

"I arrest you for illicit distilling," said a voice.

The gourd fell from his hand; the mountain dew fed the grass and wild flowers. Sebe turned to face a pistol muzzle, and back of it Bill Jones.

He started back, but Mary Jane was out of his reach.

"None of that," said his captor. "Hold up your hands or I'll shoot."

Before Sebe knew he was handcuffed. Like in a hideous dream he saw the still smashed, the mash overturned, then the precious double distilled came gurgling out of the barrel to wet the grass.

Still as in a dream, he was spirited across the mountain to catch the train for Atlanta.

"Hit mout be a free kaintry," he mused in a dazed fashion, as the train sped along; "hit mout be a free kaintry—but 'pears like I'm a prisoner."—Paul Grant, in Atlanta Constitution.

SLIMSEY'S LUCK.

He Wasted His Money and Got Licked Besides.

[Written for This Paper].

OCCASIONALLY misfortune tries to find out how many disasters of assorted sizes she can unload on a single individual in a single day. She tried an experiment of this kind not long since on a young man who went to Coney with ten dollars and his best Peri.

Although the season was drawing to a close when the gate on the pier was opened, quite an avalanche of typical Coney Island resorters poured over the gangway into the steamboat. There were Harlemites, East siders and people of both sexes, and dwellers on Cherry Hill, and swells from Pat Divver's ward and the region round about city hall. Italians from Mulberry street, Ethiops from Boulevard de Thompson, Jews from Chatham Square, girls from Macy's and other big female shopping rinks, a sprinkling of wilted dudes, proselytes, strangers in New York from the South and the hill country round about New Jersey.

Several brigandish-looking Italians were soon sawing away at their fiddles with as much earnestness as if the fiddles were the necks of belated travelers in the Apennines, the object of the serenade being to afford the passengers an opportunity to subsequently stab an upturned hat with a reluctant penny. They were, however, only executing Little Annie Rooney, but mixed up with the agonized squeaks of the tortured fiddles were crescendo gasps and B-flat gurgles of a human voice. It was not, however, the voice of Miss A. Rooney, but the wails proceeded from a gawky youth who was leaning far over the rail, and talking earnestly to the Atlantic ocean.

As the sea was very smooth the theory of seasickness as the cause of the young man's gastric disturbances was not seriously entertained by the other passengers, who made the sufferer the subject of their gibes, one young man going so far as to say that he was reminded of the title of a book he had read, entitled "Lifted Out of Himself."

There was, however, a good Samaritan on board, a clerical-looking gentleman, who, feeling for the young man, went over to him and held his head until he got through saying what he had to say.

"Not been drinking, I hope?"

"Not touched a drop," responded the youth, whose features had somewhat re-adjusted themselves, wiping his eyes.

The young man was touched by the kindness of the stranger, and they became quite confidential as the boat sped on toward New York. The name of the young man was James Slimsey, and he lived on a farm in New Jersey. Near by lived a beauteous maid whom he loved. He said he was bound to have her.

"KICK HIM AGIN, BILL."

"Bound to Havre? You mean you were bound to Coney Island," interrupted the stranger, who was evidently of a humorous disposition.

"Same thing," replied Slimsey, who went on to say that he found it much easier to love the girl than to make the girl love him. Moreover, he had a rival, a fellow named Bill Pike. Slimsey had watched for an opportunity to steal a march on Bill Pike, but lacked capital. Fortunately he had found a purse containing ten dollars in the road, so he grasped the golden opportunity before it had time to turn the corner. He saw Katie at once and arranged for a trip among the chowder jungles of Coney Island.

"Could you not find the real owner of the money?" asked the clerical-looking gentleman.

"I think it belonged to dad," replied James.

"You should never take even a pin that does not belong to you."

"I had to. Bill Pike is a perfect spell-binder among the female sex."

Young Mr. Slimsey went on to tell about the progress of his courtship. "After she had wrapped herself around fifty cents' worth of doughnuts, hot sausages and other tropical fruits," to use the homely expression of the New Jersey swain, he could feel her grip tighten on his arm. "O! Jim, don't you smell that clam chowder," she said, with a beaming glance. "How about Bill Pike?" asked Jim, cautiously, before he made any more permanent investments. "You know I despise him," she replied, tossing her head scornfully. They immediately visited a clam-chowder laboratory, and there were several encores to the first plate. Subsequently there were ice-cream duets, in which the accomplished Miss Kate Shuckers—for that was her name—played the big spoon. The young man felt pretty sure that he was solid with Katie, and he came very near popping the question at the pop-corn stand, but to make certain, remembering the unreliability of the sex, he invested more of his capital in candy, hobby horses, lemonade, peanuts, two trips on the roller coaster, a tin type of them both in a group, and finally to clinch matters he took her to the large, stationary, artificial cow, into which the milk is let down through a trap door on her deck just west of the spinal column, the milk being kept on tap in a queer-looking reservoir studded with large protuberances like young rolling pins. They quaffed numerous glasses of the delicious beverage, followed by some more lemonade and a round of boiled green corn, after which they had some cakes and had also to run the length of the pier to catch the boat. Owing to the motion of the boat both of them became ill, the young lady having sought the seclusion of the ladies' cabin.

As soon as the boat bumped against the New York landing the good Samaritan jumped ashore, and Jim undertook to conduct his dulcina to the Jersey City ferry. He noticed that Katie had not been as frisky as she had been during the day. In fact it was a "don't come near me" air about her that filled him with apprehensions. When they were seated in the cars on their way home, Jim—to use his own words—"got his dandruff up," and demanded:

"What's the matter? Haven't you had enough ter eat?"

"Nothing's the matter, Mr. Slimsey," was the short reply of that lady, as she peered out of the car window into the gloom. The fact was, that Katie (womanlike) blamed Jim for the motion of the boat, etc. "If he hadn't badgered me into it I never would have ate so much," she argued with herself. She was, moreover, angry because Jim had talked to the good Samaritan on the boat instead of consoling her.

"Got no use for me now that you are not hungry," said Jim bitterly. "Why didenter yer look at me thater way before I busted that ten dollar bill. Now you've got enough vittles at my expense to last you for a week, you don't keer whether school keeps or not."

"It's no sech thing," she replied with a scornful glance. "Mr. Slimsey, you forget yourself."

"Oh, yes. I was 'dear Jim' this morning when bang! went a nickel every few minutes at every pop corn and sassidge stand on the island, but now I'm 'Mr. Slimsey.' Mebbe you are mad because I don't give you what you haven't gobbled up," said Jim producing the debris of the ten dollar bill.

"O, don't you worry. Bill Pike will pay you back," retorted Katie scornfully.

As the train approached the station the young man indulged in sad reveries. Among other things which he liked and had hoped to retain, but which he had lost that day, was the warm, parboiled affection of the only girl he loved. To him the future would be dull and monotonous. He would take no interest in any thing that happened.

In this, however he was mistaken, for a reception committee, composed of Bill Pike and a club was patiently waiting for him at the depot.

The ceremonies at the depot were very impressive, and consisted principally of exclamations of anger and pain, and the silvery laughter of Katie who incited Bill Pike to "give it to him good," and clapped her hands with joy.

Whack!! Whack! Go to Coney Island with my girl, will you!? Whack!! Take that!! Kick him again, Bill, that was a good one!? Whack-whack-whack!!!!

As Bill Pike was disappearing down the road with the young lady on his arm, Jim, who looked as if he had been trying to ride a bicycle, was cheered up by his younger brother who also got him at the depot, who told him to get home as soon as possible, as his father had been waiting fully two hours with a cart rung to ask him where he got that ten-dollar bill.

There was, however, a gleam of hope. He might appease the old man by giving him his gold watch. He felt for it, but it was gone. When the good Samaritan on the boat felt for James he also felt for his watch.

Doubtless other complications overtook the victim of circumstances before the day was entirely over, but enough has been written to demonstrate that not only the man who begins to descend the pole of success finds it easy work, but he who strives to climb also discovers that it is greased with the oleomargarine of adverse circumstances.

Verily, as the man said, when a bitter aloes pill rolled into a hollow tooth where he had no facilities for dislodging it: "There is no telling how bad things may go when they once get the hang of it."

North Plainfield Was Included. This City [illegible] be a Class Higher.

An important bearing of the late census will be [illegible] effect on the cities of this State, in regard to the class in which they belong. By the act of 1882, the Legislature provided that for the purpose of municipal legislation, the cities of the State should be divided into three classes: cities of 100,000 population and over, to be of the first-class; between 12,000 and 100,000, of the second-class; and under 12,000, except seaside cities, to be of the third-class. The report of the population of the cities of this State, by the census of 1880 and 1890, shows Atlantic City, Bayonne and Passaic have been promoted from the third-class to the second.

According to the report, the cities of the State, are thus classified:

First Class—Jersey City and Newark.

Second Class—Atlantic City, Bayonne, Camden, Elizabeth, Hoboken, New Brunswick, Orange, Passaic, Paterson and Trenton.

Third Class—Plainfield, Bordentown, Bridgeton, Burlington, Gloucester, [illegible], Lambertville, Millville, Perth Amboy, Phillipsburg, Rahway, Salem, Vineland and Woodbury. Plainfield is [illegible] short of being a second-class city. Her population in 1880 was [illegible]; in 1890, [illegible].

THE VOTE OF THE PEOPLE.

Democratic [illegible] of Over Half a Million.

ANOTHER BANK FOR MR. HYDE.

A Plainfielder at the Head of the Project to Give Westfielders a Place to Discount Their Notes.

The Westfield Standard is able to give the following particulars and correspondence, by authority:

"Charles L. Hyde, of Plainfield, and his associates, have taken the preliminary steps to form a bank of discount in Westfield, to be known as 'The County Bank.' The Hyde family are well known in our town as [illegible] of large means and of great experience and success. They are supposed to be connected with Warren Ackerman in the Netherwood Hotel and other enterprises. One of the family is the president of a bank in Plainfield, where some of our citizens have long kept their deposits; another is president of a bank in Titusville, in Pennsylvania; and all of them have had considerable experience as bankers. If the bank should be a State bank it is understood it will be under the supervision [illegible] under the State law, of the Bank Commissioners of the State of New Jersey; if it should be a National bank it will have the well-known safeguards of such institutions. In either case the stockholders should see to it that the Board of Directors are men of both integrity and capacity in banking matters."

"—Mr. Hyde has written the following letter:

Nov. 19, '90.

Messrs. E. A. [illegible] and W. G. Peckham.

[illegible]

Very truly yours,
CHAS. L. HYDE.

"—The gentleman who furnishes us with this statement says that Westfield people can have all the stock they want to take; but they must take all of it if they desire to take the control in their own hands, and not to share it with Mr. Hyde. The Westfield parties interested in this enterprise undertake it largely as 'a public duty' and are willing to yield to any other parties who will undertake the matter on this basis, or will get up another bank. Mr. Hyde says that he can make this a dividend paying investment, and he says further that he or his plan parties in Westfield will have to take stock at once, as they can get it, or else all but the $10,000 will be taken up by outside parties. It is considered necessary to get at least $[illegible] subscribed in Westfield in order to get local connections. Among the [illegible] subscribers are Messrs. C. L. Hyde and partner ($20,000 first subscription), J. M. Vail, R. H. Fairbairn, A. D. Shepard and W. G. Peckham."

[illegible] Things the Editor Doesn't Know.

To the Editor of The Press:—Do you know the name of the book that tells you how to [illegible]? If you [illegible] me through your paper the [illegible] it can be bought and the price of it.

LUCY.

The Press must acknowledge that the question is one that it cannot answer. It can, however, give Lucy the names of some books that will do her more good; and would recommend, among others, a spelling book and a grammar.

Official [illegible] Privileges for Prohibitionists.

The official returns of the late election show that the Prohibitionists, whose total vote in the State was increased about 2,000, will be entitled to official ballots in [illegible] counties, and in the following [illegible] Assembly districts, by virtue of percentage: Both districts of Hunterdon, Gloucester, Cape May, both districts of Cumberland, First district of Warren, Third district of Morris, First district of Middlesex, and Third district of Monmouth. At the late election only seven districts and four counties had an official vote by virtue of percentage. Gloucester and Morris are the county exceptions.

The first contest will be at Fanwood, Wednesday evening of next week. The Crescent League will send a strong team, and it is hoped that a crowd of their [illegible] will go along to cheer for them. Those who bowl for Plainfield will be [illegible], Van Winkle, [illegible] and [illegible], with Thorn and Tracy as substitutes.

A PREACHER OF WONDERFUL POWER.

[illegible] Facts Concerning the Life and Labors of Evangelist B. Fay Mills.

Readers of this journal are already familiar with the wonderful success of blessing which have resulted from the labors of the Rev. B. Fay Mills, evangelist. In nearly every section of the country, in cities and country villages, in churches of no less than twenty-one different denominations, Mr. Mills has preached, and wherever he has gone the results have been the same. God has blessed the word preached, and souls have been converted. It will be of peculiar gratification to Plainfield people, among whom Mr. Mills has just accomplished such wondrous results, to learn some details of the life of one whose labors God has so signally honored.

B. Fay Mills was born in 1857 in New Jersey, where his father, the Rev. Thornton A. Mills, D. D., was well-known and loved, not less for his philanthropic than for his ministerial labors. After a boyhood spent among the hills of Hunterdon, the embryo evangelist began his college career at Andover at the early age of sixteen, and then proceeded to Hamilton College, N. Y. Subsequently he studied at Lake Forest University, Ill., and was graduated from that institution with high honors. After pursuing a course of special theological study under some of the ablest theologians in the Presbyterian church, Mr. Mills was ordained at Cannon Falls, Minn., in 1878. While there he added to his pastoral labors some very arduous work in connection with the American Home Missionary Society.

During an extended evangelistic tour in the Black Hills, Dakota, Mr. Mills broke down under the strain, and came East to recuperate. He did not, however, discontinue labor, but preached at Greenwich and Champlain, N. Y. To the surprise of all, a revival of religion ensued, and there was a time of great blessing. No thought of evangelistic work was induced in the mind of Mr. Mills by this movement. He accepted an invitation to the West Parish of Rutland, Vt., and settled there in 1882. He found there a deplorable state of dissension, and much that made the prospects of success very dark, but he labored on in love and faith, and had the joy of seeing harmony and brotherly love take the place of unchristian feeling. Three years of happy successful labor followed before there was an unmistakable call to evangelistic service.

In January, 1886, the pastors of Middlebury had been praying for a deeper spiritual work in their churches, and were led, by the reports they had heard of the happy results which had followed the work of Mr. Mills in Rutland, to invite him to hold special services in Middlebury. He accepted, and held meetings for two weeks, in which all the churches united. Over three hundred persons, including nearly all the students in the college, were led to Christ at those meetings. It was a blessed time for Middlebury, and the service of thanksgiving was a time of great enthusiasm. A call to North Adams shortly afterward had a similar result, and then Mr. Mills recognized that God had appointed him to this field of service. He accordingly resigned his pastorate in May, 1886, and from that time to this he has continued his labors in this deeply interesting, but arduous work.

The scenes of his labors have been many and varied. They began in Vermont, at Burlington, Brandon, and Vergennes. In New Jersey he has held services in Washington, Morristown, Montclair, Jersey City, New Brunswick and Plainfield. In March, 1888, he was invited by Dr. Theodore Cuyler to hold services in his church in Brooklyn; and though Dr. Cuyler had never before asked the help of any evangelist, he thanked God that he had been led to invite Mr. Mills, when he saw fully six hundred persons stand up and pledge themselves, in Christ's strength, henceforth to live for Him who had died for them. Dr. S. M. Hamilton, of the Scotch Presbyterian church in West Fourteenth street, New York, also has given manly testimony of a similar experience, owning that he had been prejudiced against special effort of this kind, but that he was sincerely thankful for the results of the meeting Mr. Mills had conducted. Only recently Dr. Hamilton again spoke with enthusiasm of the permanence of the good achieved by Mr. Mills's visit.

At Charlestown, Lowell, and Fall River, Mass., the results of Mr. Mills's services were still more remarkable. Among the converts were some whose conversion seemed the most improbable of all events. They came from infidel clubs, from saloons and gaming tables, and from the haunts of vice. Cold, worldly Christians, the hardest of all men to move, became zealous, and a deep, earnest movement went through society. At Fall River four hundred new converts met at the closing service to join in the way appointed of celebrating the Lord's death "till He come." Still more remarkable was the harvest at Jersey City Heights, where no [illegible] 1,200 persons made a profession of faith in Christ at his two weeks' meetings.

One important feature of Mr. Mills's work is the spirit of brotherly love between churches of various denominations which seems to spring up under his labors. Minor differences are forgotten; and pastors and people are surprised to find how much they have in common, and how readily they can work together in Mr. Mills's meetings. In Worcester, Mass., thirty churches joined in the work; in Providence, R. I., fifty churches; in Indianapolis, Ind., twenty-three churches; in Springfield, Mass., (to which city Mr. Mills has paid four visits), thirty-four churches; and in Philadelphia (where he has been five times) fifty-four churches.

Remarkable incidents are related in connection with Mr. Mills's work. The Rev. William H. Belden, of Bridgeton, N. J., writing to a contemporary of the work in his city, mentions among others the case of "a young man who went in an unbelieving, scoffing spirit, but was broken down right in the prayer, and then and there gave his heart to the Lord; he became, and is now, a consistent member of one of the churches. A very wild young fellow, who was thoroughly linked in with vile companions, was won by the judicious personal approaches of the evangelist himself—certain other providential causes co-operating—and broke the circle of his set by an out-and-out surrender. A gay, giddy girl, who had resisted the most zealous efforts of pastor and friends, came to the Lord through Mr. Mills's preaching, and she and her mother and four sisters renounced the world together. A man who confessed he had not looked into a bible for five years yielded himself; his sincerity has been demonstrated by the thoroughgoing way in which he has mastered and cast behind him his love for tobacco. A good man's bad sons—two such—are reclaimed, gladdening their fathers' hearts and filling the streets with delightful testimony to the Lord's work. It is all the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes; we rejoice that He sent us His servant, whom He so greatly owns and blesses for His appointed work."

The domestic life of Mr. Mills is one of great happiness. He is a devoted husband and father, and his wife often feels it a great personal sacrifice to have him so frequently absent from home. His evangelistic meetings are as a rule held only in the late Fall, during the Winter, and in early Spring. The Summer he takes for rest; and then his four children, the youngest four years of age, are beside themselves with joy, because "papa is home again."

NO PEACE IN UPSON'S HOME.

Brother-in-Law, Father-in-Law, and Wife, Turn Against Him.

The various domestic skeletons in the house of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Upson and Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Huxley were freely exhibited in the City Court on Thursday before Judge Codington. The evidence submitted revealed the fact that Upson, who was the man on trial, has a bad temper which his wife "enumerates"—"because he inherited it from a terrible-tempered father, who has had to be separated from his wife." Upson's temper is worse when he is intoxicated, and that he has in times past been in a most violent state of mind was quite evident from the story of his wife, his father-in-law, Mr. Huxley, and his mother-in-law. The Upsons and Huxleys have all lived together on West Sixth street, and the home has been made so unhappy because of Upson's "carryings-on" that when his last offense was committed the father-in-law went for and had him arrested. Besides smashing things up in general, Upson was arrested of brutal treatment of his wife, her father and mother, and of driving them and the neighbors out of the house with threats to kill, and with exhibitions of violence. Mrs. Upson said her husband was the most barbarous man in the world, and led her a wretched life. While she toiled night and day at dressmaking and canvassing he went off and squandered her earnings in drink and then came home and drove her away from the house.

Upson admitted some of the charges, but said that bad cooking started most of the trouble. When his food was chronically placed before him ruined by careless preparation and served in a slovenly manner, and when no effort was made by his wife or mother-in-law to please him, he couldn't help getting mad and taking to drink and tearing things to pieces.

The opinion of all parties seemed to be that a separation would be the best thing, and one will be arranged for. Upson was fined $20 for the specific offense of which he was charged, and said he would pawn something to raise the money. He promised to give back to his wife the Winter wrap and other garments he had carried away. Mrs. Upson had him also bound over to keep the peace.

Will Warm Their House With a Fair.

The entertainment committee of the Crescent League, at a meeting held last week, decided that instead of another minstrel show they would arrange for a big fair to be given in the new club house as soon as the building is completed but before the alleys are put in.

Thanks from North Plainfield's Fire Laddies.

Chief Fairchild desires in the name of himself and his firemen to thank the residents in the neighborhood of last Thursday's fire, for refreshments so bountifully furnished. He also wants to thus publicly express his appreciation of Chief Doane's quick response to his request for assistance when it was supposed it would be required.

One Way to Ruin Shade Trees.

Property-owners who have given telegraph linemen permission to climb their trees to fasten supporting wires from telegraph poles to the sturdy monarchs of the streets, now mournfully survey the wounded bark of the trees, punctured by sharp steel spurs, and wonder if the resultant sap-bleeding will never stop, and how many such assaults a tree could stand before dying.

Not a Comet, Only a Brilliant Glow of Copper.

The new copper wires that have been stretched along the tallest telegraph poles in town, along East Fourth street and Broadway, are so highly burnished that in the sunlight they give a brilliant lustre, and the moonlight of these beautiful clear nights falls on them in such a manner, and produces such a glow overhead, that at a distance of a block or two one thinks he has discovered either a comet without a nucleus, or some other heavenly wonder, in the sky above the roof of The Crescent.

The March of Methodism.

A summary of the reports of the Secretaries of the Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal church shows that of the $1,020,309 received for missions during the year, $400,170 was expended in the United States. There is a membership of 16,000 and $1,000,000 in property in the missions of Germany, 7,000 members in Switzerland, 15,000 in Sweden, 8,000 and a property of $500,000 in Norway, and a membership of 56,000 in the great Indian missions. The reports further state that there is to be a great Chinese Methodism, rivalling that in the English-speaking world.

The Marshal Goes to the Clerk's Assistance, and Gets Run Over.

As the North Plainfield hose carriage, tied behind a wagon, was being rushed along at a rapid rate last Thursday, Marshal Rutledge noticed that with only Borough Clerk Brokaw on the tiller it was being swished from side to side to the great danger of the man who was clinging to it.

The Marshal thereupon sprang upon the carriage behind and crawled over the reel, but in getting down in front he lost his balance and fell headlong. Two wheels of the heavy carriage passed over his right leg and broke it. The accident occurred near the corner of Grove street and Linden avenue.

The Rumored Suicide of a Ghastly Joker.

One of Plainfield's funny men some time ago played a practical joke on a local tradesman by having a bogus message sent to the merchant, telling him of the death of his brother in another city, and by this fictitious news succeeded in closing up the store of the tradesman for the day, and in causing much anxiety and trouble and wasted grief. The merchant bided his time, and Saturday night, after months of patient waiting, started a story in circulation that the practical joker had committed suicide. So successfully did he engineer the rumor that Sunday morning all his horrified friends were discussing the shocking details of one of the biggest sensations they had ever known. The funny man is still actively engaged in angrily denying that he is n't a victim of unrequited love and has n't taken laudanum, and is n't dead.

Free Amateur Theatricals in the Gallery.

Two gentlemen of color, anxious to divert the attention of a distracted audience during the playing of the Music Hall orchestra between the acts of "Hands Across the Sea," Monday, gave a realistic performance of their own, to the howling delight of the people around them, in the gallery. Their gestures and vociferations, as they stood up and enacted their little part, showed a thorough acquaintance of the dramatic art, and developed an intensely interesting plot hinging on the possession of an unreserved seat. So [illegible] were the actors that when the exciting dialogue was reaching a climax and the populace were shouting "Put up dat razor!" "Drop dat gun!" a groan of disappointment ran through the house as blue-coated Stevenson E. Hope appeared with a club and escorted the heavy villain of the cast to a remote and quiet spot. The theatre-goers said "they was satisfied that the evenings in Music Hall would never be dull and uninteresting so long as the local amateur genius and [illegible] of the gallery could help it," and everybody, speaking of "the pleasant time had by all," said "they did hope that at an early date they would have another enjoyable affair like that." And the band played.

DISCUSSING A CITY ALMSHOUSE.

Members of the State Charities Aid Association Meet in Plainfield and Commend Warden Budd's Management of the Elizabeth Jail.

A meeting of the Union County Branch of the State Charities Aid Association was held Nov 10, in the Y. M. C. A. parlor. The Rev. F. Marion McAllister occupied the chair in the absence of Dr. Edward Kempshall, the President. The good attendance and interest were very satisfactory, especially since it was the first meeting of the society held in Plainfield.

As has been before stated, the design of this society is to consider the great problems that relate to the criminal and dependent classes of society, and to put in practical execution the best methods for dealing with these classes and diminishing their number. When it is remembered that on an average every thirtieth family of this State has a member either in the asylum, the almshouse, or the cell, it is time to give heed to so pressing a problem. Mrs. Benj. Williamson, Secretary of the State Association, urged the importance of the adoption of the cumulative system, by which a person committed several times to jail for intemperance and other offences for short terms, shall receive a sentence for a term of years. Mrs. Williamson strongly urged employment for the inmates of our jails and prisons, as that was a most important factor in the reformation of criminals. Mrs. Bonsall referred to the detention of children in the alms-house as a sore evil, the difficulty in the way of removal being that there is no place provided by the State where they may be cared for.

There seems to be a great necessity for industrial schools in the State to meet this need. Major Pangborn, of Jersey City, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the State Association, presented the financial needs and urged a more generous support. An earnest appeal was made by the Rev. Mr. McAllister, chaplain of the Elizabeth jail, for books and magazines for distribution in that institution. Good reading matter for this purpose may be sent to Mrs. A. N. Kimble, corner of Rahway avenue and Union street, Elizabeth; she will attend to its proper distribution.

It is a pleasure to be able to record the excellent condition and management of the Elizabeth jail, employment for the inmates being the one thing needed to make it a model institution of its kind. A subject which should be very near the hearts of residents of Plainfield is the erection of an almshouse with a small farm attached. This matter was discussed, some favoring a county and others a city almshouse. The question may sometimes be asked, by persons who have not given the matter careful thought, why our present system of caring for the poor is not satisfactory. This is best answered by quoting the words of Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell, a deep student of philanthropic work, from an address delivered recently in Baltimore before the National Conference of Charities and Correction. "Public relief"—she says—"should be in door relief, inside the doors of an institution, where cure and education should be the primary objects aimed at: cure of disease, moral, mental and physical, and education in self-control and self-dependence." The next meeting of this Society will be held in Elizabeth in January.

RENOUNCEMENT AND DENOUNCEMENT.

Plainfield Prohibitionists Charge the Republicans With Everything Bad in the City.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Will you allow a Prohibitionist to reply to an imposition sent to the Prohibitionists of this city by the Republican Executive Committee? Here it is:

DEAR SIR:—You are hereby earnestly requested to interview your personal friends whose names [illegible] the Democratic ticket, and do your utmost to influence them to cast their ballots for the Republican candidates in the coming City election.

By request of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

What in the name of common sense has the Republican party of this city ever done for Prohibition or Prohibitionists, that they should ask such a favor? They have ever treated us with contempt; not an article could be allowed in one of their papers to advocate our cause. They have been the supporters of every rum shop in our city since its organization as a city. The Republican party has been the author of high license, that tempts the taxpayer to vote for it for the sake of the revenue to pay their taxes; the more licenses granted the more money put in their pockets, which necessarily comes from the drinker and robs his family of the comforts of life. What could a Prohibitionist say to a Democrat to induce him to vote the Republican ticket? Do they ask it for sympathy for getting so completely wiped out in the past election? Why such a tremendous cyclone this Fall? There must be something rotten in Denmark. In Pennsylvania something near 50,000 Republicans left and voted the Democratic ticket, and this State and Union county went Democratic as never before, and nearly all over the country the same. Is not this evidence that the country has become disgusted with hypocrisy, bossism and plunder; tyranny in Congress and the draining of the treasury; the McKinley bill, etc., etc.?

Do they think we are in favor of the old ring power in this town, and the support of the class that have robbed this town of thousands of dollars, and the party that has increased the salaries of nearly every officer in town, and turned every job of city and county to good account to their own pockets? No, friend, we cannot work for a party that has outlived its usefulness. We must be excused.

PROHIBITIONISTS.

Won't Kill His Relatives This Month.

Charles Manning, a colored man, raised such a row at the home of his sister-in-law on East Third street, Monday, that the people in the house had to send for the police. Manning had threatened to annihilate all his relatives, and seemed ready to carry his threat into execution when two blue-coats appeared and placed him under arrest. Next morning City Judge Codington sent him to the county jail for thirty days.

To Benefit the Public, Dr. Taylor's Aim.

To James K. Martine, Esq.:

DEAR SIR:—In accepting a nomination to membership of the Board of Education I do it, I trust, with a proper appreciation of the honor conferred, for which accept my thanks, but also with a conviction that the duties involve are solely in the interest of the schools and its obligations to the public; and to these, if elected, I pledge a faithful service.

Respectfully yours,
J. P. TAYLOR.

Plainfield, Nov. 26, 1890.

—The recent election cost the people of this county alone, $10,000.

Leave hope behind,
All ye who enter here!

So read the dire warning which Dante read on the portals of the Inferno. So runs the cruel verdict of your friends if you are overtaken by the first symptoms of that terrible disease, consumption. "Leave hope behind! Your days are numbered!" And the struggle against death is given up in despair. But while there is life there is hope! Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has cured hundreds of cases worse than yours; and it will cure you, if taken in time. But delay is dangerous. No power can restore a wasted lung; the "Golden Medical Discovery," however, can and will arrest the disease.

KOSSUTH AND HIS SISTER.

Hungary's Royal Greeting to a Famous Plainfield Woman.

The following are extracts from a letter received by a lady of this city, from her friend, Mme. Louise Kossuth Ruttkay, Kossuth's sister, whose old home still stands on East Front street.

"I will commence with the causes involving my long silence. I told you in my last about my intended voyage to Hungary, the motives of which were serious enough to take the risk of such a long voyage in the unsettled state of health in which I was, and also to undergo its necessary expenses. One of my friends came to accompany me home. I stood the voyage remarkably well. I really think that from the moment I entered my native land my heart throbbed differently.

"A new era opened in my life on my arrival. Though I have enjoyed, in all the different circumstances of my life, the good-will of my fellow-men, to the sympathy for myself was added the love and veneration for my brother. These two influences manifested themselves by ovations of an astonishing grandeur. I will try to give you a true picture of them, though it would be easier to describe them in a pamphlet than in the narrow bounds of a letter.

"My first visit was to my father's grave, which is cared for by a friend of ours. As the train stopped, I found hundreds of people waiting for me; young ladies dressed in white handed me beautiful flowers; the people pressed around me bidding me welcome; the 'Squire of the village made a speech, asserting the allegiance of the people of Hungary to our family; I was escorted in triumph to the mansion of a friend, where a banquet was given next day. The house was thronged with visitors during the few days I staid there.

"My second visit was at a considerable distance from Buda-Pesth, and there the inhabitants of three villages were assembled to meet me. At the station they came with banners and a load of flowers, and two of the 'Squires made speeches. Fifty young peasants in their national dress, with the national colors flying in one hand, accompanied me from the station, at two kilometers' distance, under triumphal arches, on swift Hungarian horses, to the mansion of my friend, where another crowd was awaiting me, and a Catholic priest, standing in a tribune, addressed to me a patriotic speech. Young children presented me with flowers, reciting touching words of joy and affection with which their little hearts welcomed me. I have a large photograph of this reception, and I would gladly send it to you, my friend, but it is so large, and cannot be folded; perhaps some occasion will offer when it can go to you in some traveler's trunk. Fifteen such receptions was I honored with by my countrymen.

"What a curious history our life was! If there were not so much of the dramatic in it I should call it a farce de la premier ordre. To have lived three months among ovations befitting the most illustrious person and then to return to see my poor brother, who is eighty-eight years old, bending over his writing seven or eight hours a day to earn his daily bread! My heart aches for him when I hear him sigh and wish for rest.

"I think I must have mentioned to you in some of my letters of the failure of some bank that involved my brother in pecuniary difficulty. He had put his hard-earned modest capital in some shares that have fallen to a nominal value, though not entirely lost, they may not for many years bring a dividend, and it was with the consciousness that want was staring in our faces that I went to Hungary. Since then my brother by writing very hard, has finished the fourth volume of his memoirs, and it is now in the hands of the publisher. Subscriptions have commenced, and it is to be hoped the result will keep want from our door."

How They Swim in Somerville.

The W[illegible] Athletic Association of Somerville is to have a ball with patronesses and other frills just like city folks. Invitations have been sent to some of the members of the Plainfield Crescent League. In the envelope, however, is a card to the effect that each gentleman who attends will be assessed $2.50.

Elizabeth Behind on the Seasons, Too.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

Snow is reported in several different sections of the United States, and the Plainfield paper chronicle the intensely interesting fact that a horse fell down on one of the icy streets of that growing "Colorado of the East"; but as yet Winter has not sent any of his discomfort to Elizabeth. It has been a little cold, but not more so than is seasonable, and as a whole the weather has been as fine as has ever been known in November.

The Lawyers Congregating on Ripley Hill.

E. J. Whitehead, Manager of the North American Commercial Agency, has purchased several acres on Ripley Hill, Westfield, near the new Academy, which he has already mapped out for immediate improvement. Several friends and business acquaintances are interested with Mr. Whitehead, and will build residences adjoining his own which he already has under way.

Judge John Ulrich of this city has located on the Boulevard, Westfield, and his lot is staked out. He will build at once. The Judge has a gilt-edged lot with double rows of sugar maples on Park street and the Boulevard—his being a corner lot.

Charles N. Codding, a New York lawyer, is building on the opposite corner. The lawyers seem to be getting corners in Boulevard lots on Ripley Hill, Westfield, for Counsellor Green, of the New York bar, is located at the corner of Boulevard and Ross place, only one block away.

Plainfield Helps to Shirk the Tax.

The City Assessors of Newark have been making a careful examination into the assessment of bank stock, and find that a considerable quantity pays nothing. At least $300,000, it is estimated, is not submitted to taxation. Nearly eleven thousand shares are held by non-residents, and it is believed that not more than half of this pays any taxation whatever. The Tax Commissioners have been trying to find out just how many of the shareholders pay taxes outside the city. One prominent resident of Morristown, owning sixty-three shares, made no return there, and pays nothing, and, several others are in the same position. Another pays there on $10,000 valuation on stock valued at par at $14,550, and assessed in Newark at $18,750. In Madison several parties made no returns and similar reports are received of parties living in Plainfield and elsewhere. The only two Plainfield persons who do pay are assessed at Plainfield at par, while Newark values the stock at thirty per cent higher. The Tax Commissioners think that the evasion of taxation can only be stopped by taxing the banks and letting them collect from the holders. The banks are now assessed on all stock held by persons living outside the State, and none of that can escape.

According to the commissioners' valuation the Newark bank stock should be assessed at $4,040,000, but all that can be found amounts to $3,003,000. Seventy-five per cent. of the remainder escapes taxation. It is said that similar trouble exists concerning Plainfield banks.

—The Union County Board of Freeholders are going to exact a penalty of $50 for every day's delay of such road contractors as have not finished their work when their time-limit has expired.

LAYING THE CORNER-STONE.

Plainfield's Seventh-Day Baptists Proceeding to the Erection of a Handsome New Church Edifice.

The corner-stone of the new Seventh-Day Baptist church, at Central avenue and Fifth street, was laid with impressive ceremonies, Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The ceremonies were not as extensive as it was at first intended they should be. The rapid approach of cold weather induced the officers of the church to curtail the out-of-door exercises. In-door services pertinent to the occasion will be held next Sabbath morning.

An announcement by Rev. J. D. Spicer, of the articles contained in the copper box inclosed by the corner-stone, opened this afternoon's exercises.

The following were included in the enumeration: A parchment paper containing the names of the church officers and members; a platinum paper bearing portraits of the pastors who at different times have had charge of the church, including the Rev. J. H. Cochran, the Rev. Jas Bailey, the Rev. Dr. T. R. Williams, the Rev. A. R. Cornwall, the Rev. Dr. D. E. Maxson, the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis; also portraits of R. Dunham, A. D. Titsworth, I. D. Titsworth, Randolph Dunn, Isaac S. Dunn, D. B. Rogers, Clark Rogers, B. D. Randolph, T. H. Tomlinson, J. D. Spicer, Thos. F. Randolph, N. H. Randolph, F. S. Wells; also portraits of Building Committee; copies of Seventh-Day Baptist publications, the Plainfield newspapers, the New York Tribune; the earliest copies of minutes of the Seventh-Day Baptist church; and a picture of a group attending the golden wedding of the Rev. James Baily, at Milton, Wisconsin October 14, 1890.

Remarks by the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis followed, after which Dr. Lewis, as pastor of the church, placed the stone in its place. The consecrating prayer closed the ceremonies.

HYMENEAL.

Schlief—Johnson.

Jacob Schlief, of Plainfield, and Miss Kate Johnson, of Westfield, were married last Saturday evening by the Rev. J. K. Folwell, of the Westfield Baptist church. John Johnson, brother of the bride, was "best" man, and Miss Ellen Johnson, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid.

Among the friends and relatives present were: Mr. Schlief and Miss Schlief, father and sister of the groom; the bride's family; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hyslip, Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, Mr. Swanford and nephew, of Westfield; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Field, of New York City; and a great many friends from Elizabeth and Plainfield.

The ceremony was a very pretty affair. The young couple received many valuable gifts. After the wedding supper the bride and groom started on their wedding tour amid showers of rice and with a host of good wishes.

Howell—French.

The wedding of Miss Nettie Lee French, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore French, to Edward Howell, took place at the First Baptist church in this city at 12 o'clock noon, Tuesday. Admission to the church was by card only, but the invited guests entirely filled the floor of the edifice. The organ front was almost wholly concealed by the graceful floral decorations. The pulpit was a mass of beautiful chrysanthemums, white and gold, and palms, begonias, and other growths of green. The bride wore a traveling costume of brown, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the church. The ushers were Elston French, Charles French, and friends of the groom from out of town. The bride is a former school-mate of Frances Folsom Cleveland, wife of the ex-President. The groom is favorably known in financial circles, and at present has charge of an important civil engineering contract at Little Falls, on the Passaic. The present home of the happy couple will be at Morristown.

Bennett—Wadams.

One of the prettiest weddings of the season occurred at St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church, corner of High and Market street, Newark, Thursday evening, November 6, when the Rev. Hannibal Goodwin, assisted by the Rev. Milledge Walker, united in marriage Miss Sarah Jane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Wadams, of Newark, to Eden Brice Bennett, of Plainfield. The bride wore a costume of heavy white silk handsomely trimmed with duchesse lace, made en train, and carried a large bouquet of roses. The bridesmaid was Miss Bessie Davies, of New York. Thomas Wadams, Jr., brother of the bride, acted as "best man," and the ushers were Frank Brunson, James Sisserson, Dr. Charles Smith, of Clinton, N. J., and Wm. Wadams. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett after a brief wedding trip have taken up their residence on Duer street, North Plainfield. The groom is a brother of P. H. Bennett, manager for R. W. Rice & Co.

Gillespie—Carpenter.

At the home of the bride, 51 Westervelt avenue, took place at five o'clock Monday afternoon, the marriage of Miss Ella Augusta Carpenter and George Augustus Gillespie. The Rev. Mr. Schenck, of the Trinity Reformed church, officiated. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends. The bride's father, Aaron F. Carpenter, was present, and returned again to his business interests in Virginia, Tuesday. The presents were profuse. The groom is connected with his father in the undertaking business at Bound Brook.

May Electrify the Crescent City.

Articles of incorporation have been filed with the County Clerk of Union County by the New Jersey Company, which begins business with a capital of $100,000. The incorporators and stockholders are Frederick A. Sawyer, of Garden City, L. I., Jacob B. Belheimer, of New York, William H. Clark, Theodore F. Levengood, and James F. Dane, of Elizabeth. Dane owns most of the stock. The company is formed chiefly for the purpose of supplying electricity to street railways, but will also engage in mining operations. It may be the company that will some day operate an electric street railway in Plainfield, and is said to be considering the advisability of opening up veins of copper in the mountains back of the borough.

—There is no doubt that Winter has come. A plumber's horse slipped on the ice and fell at the corner of Park avenue and Front street, at seven o'clock Friday morning.

A Dream of Fair Women.

Tennyson in his exquisite poem, dreamed of a long procession of lovely women of ages past. This is all very well; but the laureate would have done the world a greater service if he had only told the women of the present how they could improve their health and enhance their charms. This he might easily have done by recommending the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Health is the best friend of beauty, and the innumerable ills to which women are peculiarly subject, its worst enemies. Long experience has proven that the health of womankind and the "Favorite Prescription" walk hand in hand, and are inseparable. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

A sad scene with which to terminate a brilliant evening. They have returned from a reception. She had felt restless and nervous during the day, but, realizing the demands of society, resorted to an artificial stimulant, one of those Quack Poisons that flood the market under various names. The picture shows the reaction.

Women, this is a fearful fact! Avoid the misery that must ensue from the use of Quack Medicines. They only increase your suffering, and complicate your disease. We extend to you a remedy that never fails, combined with the experience of Mrs. Pinkham.

Timely Warning.

[Written for The Press.

We like to go to Music Hall,
And see the actors play,—
Although we cannot always hear
The things they have to say.
We like the lurid curtain, too,
Because it might be worse,
And say things of the hardwood seats
We would not say in verse.
We love the dear old scenery
That serves so many ends,
Those flats and flies and drops and things
Seem old familiar friends;
And we endure the breezes, too,
That chase about the Hall,
And make the glacial epoch seem
A trifle after all;
But, in spite of these allurements
Of the artistic enterprise,
We always go to Music Hall,
With blood in both our eyes.
We haven't broken loose as yet,
But when we do, you bet
We'd paralyze that heartless fiend
Who plays the clarinet.

AN OPERATOR'S NIGHT OF TERROR.

Bears and Wild Cats Assail Him in His Lonely Mountain Station.

A thrilling story of a highly exciting experience amid the wild beasts of the Pennsylvania mountains is told of Edward Smith, the new night operator at the North avenue telegraph office. Just before coming to Plainfield, in the early part of November, Smith took temporary charge of the office at the Tunnel, eight miles above Penn Haven Junction, on the Jersey Central Railroad. The Tunnel is a lonesome, desolate spot, four miles distant from any habitation, the nearest being a Mud Run, where the great railroad disaster occurred two years ago. The operator at the little cabin built for him at the end of the tunnel from which the lonely office takes its name, seldom sees a human face, except on the passing trains. At night nothing but a smoky lantern and a colored switch light illuminates the dense gloom of the wild region.

Smith was used to city offices, where he could see the constant glare of electric lights, and crowds of people. He had not been on duty two nights before he was compelled to undergo a most terrifying experience. In the early hours of the morning, when the surrounding wilderness was blackest, the awful quiet was broken by unearthly yells, and Smith, looking out of the narrow window, saw great shadowy forms stalking about his cabin. Reflecting the rays of his lantern outward with a bit of mirror, he realized that his cabin was surrounded by blood-thirsty bears, wild cats and other voracious beasts. He feared his time had come, and was in desperate straits. The bears made an assault upon the door and came near crushing it in. The wild cats dashed themselves against the window, breaking the [illegible]. They would have entered but Smith [illegible] them with a crow-bar.

The wild beasts were desperate and wanted human [illegible]. The bears got on top of the roof, demolished the chimney and began to tear the shingles and rafters off the roof. The operator got a red hot poker and burned one of them badly. While the war of the animals was going on no communication could be had with the terminal office and the chief dispatcher had to hold trains. Between blows at the bears and other carnivora the operator finally managed to send word to the next station, White Haven, apprising the operator there of the situation. This operator was a brother of Philip J. MacAndrew, formerly night operator in Smith's present position, and now yard master at the freight station of the Jersey Central Railroad in Plainfield. MacAndrew was a man of quick expedient, and in response to Smith's appeal an engine and a number of railroaders were sent to Smith's rescue. The wild beasts fled at the approach of the headlight, but not before a bear and a wild cat had been killed. Smith was completely exhausted after his battle.

"I wouldn't stay there again"—said he—"for $500 a night. I may be all right for you fellows up here, because you're used to bears and such things, but I don't want any more in mine. I hope I'll never put in another such a night again as long as I live."

This is the story that has followed Smith to Plainfield. It first appeared in milder form in the newspapers of the immediate neighborhood, but has grown to prodigious proportions by constant journeying about the country. The Ashley, Pa., correspondent of the White Haven Journal, intimates that the truth has been greatly distorted by frequent re-telling of the story, and makes the following comment:

Our Ashley contemporary says "You have undoubtedly heard the story circulated about the telegraph operator on the Jersey Central named Smith attacked by bears and wild cats near the tunnel on the Wilkes-Barre mountain recently. The startling (?) news was telegraphed all over the country to the effect that Smith had to fight for his life, and with the aid of an iron bar and a red hot poker, kept the bears and wild cats at bay for three hours. When it reached Chicago the bears had swallowed the operator, the red-hot poker and crowbar. It is presumed that when the story reached San Francisco the trust or combine formed by the wild cats has eaten the operator, the shanty, the car tracks and were about starting in to chew up the tunnel."

LATER.

It is reported that Mr. Smith was this afternoon offered $100 per week to join a New York museum and relate his harrowing tale to the daily visitors.

Another Men's Meeting To-Night.

One hundred and fifteen was the attendance at the Y. M. C. A. meeting, Sunday afternoon. A large number both testified and signified their desire to become Christians. No doubt, however, some of the latter had so expressed themselves during the Mills meetings. E. L. Suffern will lead the meeting to-night at eight o'clock in the Association Hall. All men interested are requested to be present and to bring some young man with them.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

BUILDING FOR THE CENTURIES.

The New Seventh-day Baptist Church Proof Against Fire and Decay.

The new Seventh-Day Baptist church, the corner-stone of which was laid Tuesday afternoon, as reported exclusively in THE PRESS, will be one of the handsomest structures in Central New Jersey. It will be constructed entirely of stone, and will be proof against fire and decay.

The members of the Building Committee who have charge of the work of construction are J. F. Hubbard, Charles Potter, George H. Babcock, R. M. Titsworth, J. A. Hubbard and Elias R. Pope.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, pastor of the church, in his address at the corner-stone laying Tuesday, spoke of the nobility of thus building for others as follows:

"It is apparent to all that we are not building this house for our own use nor for the use of our children, alone. The men and women who are bearing the burden of this work will not worship in this house many years, at best. We are building for the generations which are to fill the next five centuries at least. No material is used in the construction of this edifice which can decay or burn, excepting only the interior finish. We are glad to express our faith in Christ's gospel and in the law of God and the perpetuity of His Sabbath in this way. We are thankful that God has so filled our hearts with the desire and our hands with the means that we can thus testify to our faith and our love for him and his cause. There is a sublime joy in thus living for others."

The Exhibition a Grand Success!

The citizens of Plainfield never saw a handsomer collection of photographs either amateur or professional work, than is now on exhibition in the club rooms of the Plainfield Camera Club.

Especial praise must be given to the display of Charles H. Davis, a former resident of this city, but who still retains his interest in the Club by sending an exhibition to it. His works are marvels of photographic art, both in posing and composition of the picture. A. J. Gavett shows some excellent views of Kennebunk, Maine. Harry Squires, as usual, is exceedingly painstaking in his work and exhibits three large frames mostly composed of Southern views. Lemuel and Harold Serrell deserve special mention for superior work, and Oscar S. Teale's "Codak" display is exceedingly fine. Messrs J. E. Stewart, J. Hervey Doane, George H. Babcock, and Robert Rushmore deserve praise for their work, and also Dr. H. H. Loorie, W. H. Lyon Jr., R. J. Gotthell, C. S. Gotthell, George E. Greenleaf, J. E. Greensmith and S. C. Crane, deserve praise for fine work. Last but not least, are the racing "snap shots" of Ernest Clark, which depict animals in motion. He also exhibits a number of stereoscope views which are exceedingly fine. Want of space to-day prohibits the particularizing of many deserving pictures, but THE PRESS will do so in another issue.

More Palace Cars for Plainfield's Railway.

The Pullman Palace Car Company has received an order from the Philadelphia and Reading Company for 5,000 new cars. This is one of the largest orders given by any railroad for cars this year.

A GREAT AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

The Success of "The Century" and Its Plans For 1891.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE is now so well-known that to tell of its past success seems almost an old story. The N. Y. Tribune has said that it and its companion, St. Nicholas for Young Folks, issued by the same house, "are read by every one person in thirty of the country's population"—and large editions of both are sent beyond the seas. It is an interesting fact that a few years ago it was found that seven thousand copies of The Century went to Scotland—quite a respectable edition in itself. The question in England is no longer, "Who reads an American book?" but "Who does not see the American Magazines?"

A few years ago The Century about doubled its circulation with the famous War Papers by General Grant and others, adding many more readers with the Lincoln History and Kennan's thrilling articles on the Siberian Exile System. One great feature of 1891 is to be

"THE GOLD HUNTERS OF CALIFORNIA," describing that remarkable movement to the gold fields in '49, in a series of richly illustrated articles written by survivors, including the narratives of men who went to California by the different routes, accounts of the gold discoveries, life in the mines, the work of the vigilance committees, (by the chairmen of the committees) etc., etc. General Fremont's last writing was done for this series. In November appears the opening article, "The First Emigrant Train to California"—crossing the Rockies in 1841—by General Bidwell, a pioneer of pioneers. Thousands of American families who had some relative or friend among "the Argonauts of '49" will be interested in these papers.

MANY OTHER GOOD THINGS ARE COMING, the narrative of an American's travels through that unknown land Tibet (for 700 miles over ground never before trod by a white man); the experience of escaping War Prisoners; American Newspapers described by well-known journalists; accounts of the great Indian Fighters, Custer and others; personal anecdotes of Lincoln, by his private secretaries; "The Faith Doctor," a novel by Edward Eggleston, with a wonderfully rich programme of novelettes and stories by most of the leading writers, etc., etc.

It is also announced that The Century has purchased the right to print, before its appearance in France or any other country, extracts from advance sheets of the famous Talleyrand Memoirs, which have been secretly preserved for half a century—to be first given to the world through the pages of an American magazine. All Europe is eagerly awaiting this personal history of Talleyrand—greatest of intriguers and diplomats.

The November Century begins the volume, and new subscribers should commence with that issue. The subscription price ($4.00) may be remitted directly to the publishers, The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York, or single copies may be purchased of any newsdealer. The publishers offer to send a free sample copy—a recent back number—to any one desiring it.

The merit of Mellin's Food consists not only in its superiority over other substitutes for mother's milk, but also in the readiness with which it is prepared. It is a real blessing to the busy or tired mother, for a very few minutes night and morning are all that are necessary to prepare the baby's food for twenty-four hours.

CITY DEPARTMENT

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh [illegible] the freight house?

—James [illegible], of Newark, wants to organize a regiment of colored men in New Jersey, and is looking to Plainfield to help furnish the [illegible].

—Remember that the Camera Club's exhibition will be open every evening this week; also Thursday and Saturday afternoons from 1:30 to 4 o'clock.

—The sale of lots on Ripley Hill, Westfield, have been $1,000 a day and upwards for a week past. Every purchaser builds a first-class house at once.—Westfield Leader.

—The fire bell has been repaired by Manager J. C. Jefferson, of the Postal Telegraph Company, and will now be rung at 12 o'clock noon, and at 2 P. M. by electricity from the District Messenger office.

—John J. [illegible] positively refuses to run for City Assessor, and emphatically declares that no one shall vote for him. Of course, if there was any hope of his defeating Assessor Hubbard—but that's different.

—The Commissioners appointed by the [illegible] of Legislature to frame a bill for equal taxation, will meet at the Court House, in Elizabeth, on Dec. 1 and 2, at 11 o'clock A. M., to hear such persons as may wish to give any suggestions on the subject.

—A Concise Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge is the title of a work covering the whole field of religious knowledge—biblical, theological, biographical, historical and practical. Among the many eminent contributors are Bishop Vincent and Dr. Lewis.

—Pedestrians who have to walk are thinking that the sidewalk in front of the new Coward building on Park avenue is [illegible] becoming passable. The rough plank pathways through that pile of brick and timber and other debris has long enough been a source of vexation.

—The "yearly meeting" of the Seventh-Day Baptists of New York and New Jersey at New Market Saturday was attended by nearly two hundred people, most of whom were from Plainfield. The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. J. G. Burdick of the New York City church.

—Some one has figured out that the daily cost of operating a street railway by electricity is twelve cents per mile, while the cost of operating the same road by mule power is a fraction over [illegible] cents per mile. Nevertheless, Plainfield's electric road will not be run by mule power.

—[illegible] first two piano recitals will be given on the afternoons of Tuesday and Thursday, Dec 2 and 4, at three o'clock, at the Madison Square Theatre, New York. Reserved seats, $1 each, now on sale at the box office of the theatre and at Ed. Schuberth & Co., 23 Union Square.

—The incidental expenses attached to the revival meetings recently conducted in Plainfield by Mr. Mills, for carpentry work, printing, advertising, and other details, amounted to about $700, of which $200 was raised by contributions at the churches the evening of the first Sunday. The balance will be raised by assessment on the churches which joined in the revival. The statement that the amount has all been raised is an error.

[illegible] in Desperation.

The latest campaign [illegible] Joseph A. [illegible], candidate for [illegible] from the first ward, is [illegible] the Council meetings [illegible] those who make [illegible] of it.

Colored Voters Announce Their Independence.

The colored voters of Plainfield have organized themselves into a "Colored Independent Club," with the following officers: President—Wm. Douglass; Vice-President—Wm. Mayhew; Secretary—Wm. Kline; Treasurer—Samuel Wilson.

The Firemen to Choose Their Own Chief.

One of the arguments used among the firemen to persuade them to vote for Alexander Gilbert, is to the effect that if he is elected he will appoint this or that one Chief.

If Mr. Collier is elected he will let the firemen choose their own Chief.

[illegible] Their Escort [illegible].

The Business Men's Cycle League of Newark, will have a slow run to Plainfield, Thanksgiving Day. Members will start from Military Park at two o'clock in the afternoon and after their Plainfield visit will return over a splendid new county roads by moonlight.

He Is a Presbyterian.

To relieve the curiosity of a large number of people, THE PRESS would state that the Rev. B. Fay Mills is a Presbyterian, and was a member in a lower class in Hamilton College at the same time that the Rev. Mr. Cadwell, now of Westfield, was a student at that institution.

Inspecting the County Roads.

Seven? members of the Board of Freeholders, including Director Hubbard and Mr. Vanderbeek of this city, took a tour of inspection of the new county roads, Monday. They started from Rahway in five carriages, dined at the City Hotel here and finished their trip from Summit to Elizabeth. It is claimed that the contractors will have [illegible] deducted from their price for each day's delay in completion, beyond the specified time. The Board expects to find five of the contracts completed to-day.

A Meeting of Importance and Interest.

The [illegible] Circle of this city will meet at Friday afternoon in the Congregational church, at 4 o'clock. As it will be the most important meeting that the Circle has held since its organization, three years ago, it is expected that all the subscribers will be present. It is called by the Advisory Board, whose members are the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, Mrs. [illegible] J. Taylor, Miss Julia E. Bulkley, Miss Isabel Tweedy and W. J. Leonard. A report of [illegible] work will be presented, and it will be of general interest to the public, whose attendance is requested.

Firemen on Hand, but Not Needed.

The fire department had a run to [illegible] Heights Sunday afternoon, in response to a summons by telephone. A defective flue had set fire to the [illegible] of Aaron L. [illegible]'s house on [illegible] avenue near Berkley, but buckets of water extinguished the flames before the firemen arrived. The damage was about $25. While the firemen were still in the neighborhood they were told that the handsome [illegible] residence on the hill [illegible] was in danger from the burning leaves which were blowing about from a fire in the woods, but again no streams from the engine was necessary, as all the fire was quenched when the men responded to the call.

As a cough remedy, [illegible] is, perhaps, the best medicine that has ever been discovered. [illegible]

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. M. J. Coyne, of Park avenue is visiting her uncle at his home in New York city.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Lyman and family will be at home at 2 Washington avenue, [illegible]

Martin I. Cooley and family are occupying the Wm. Mc[illegible] house on Rock View Terrace, North Plainfield.

Miss Alice Ashmead of New York was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. McClymont, Washington avenue, Sunday.

Among the lists of belles and beaux at Elizabeth's charity ball, one evening last week, was David S. Wotherspoon of this city.

H. Tiffany Spencer, late a member of Holy Cross church choir in this city, has joined the choir of the Church of All Angels, New York.

Judge John Ulrich of this city, is negotiating for one of the corners of Park street and the Boulevard, Ripley Hill, Mount Ararat, N. J.

A. E. [illegible], of Maplewood [illegible], East Second street, has rented his handsome home and he and his wife will live in New York this Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Gayle returned from their wedding tour on Friday evening, and took up their residence in their new house, 18 [illegible] street.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, will preach at the union services to be held by several of the local churches Thanksgiving day.

The first of the season's series of Seminary lectures was delivered on Thursday. It was by the Rev. Wm. Hayes Ward of The Independent, on Explorations in Babylon.

Drs. Wm. C. [illegible], of this city, and John M. Randolph, of Rahway, the newly elected coroners of this county, were sworn in as such at the County Clerk's office, last week.

The members of Jerusalem Lodge, F. & A. M., Monday night presented Henry [illegible] with a solid gold past master's jewel. The recipient responded in a very clever speech of acceptance.

George Wharton Edwards, of Madison avenue, has a score of highly interesting illustrations of life in Holland, in a charming story, "The Land of Pluck," by Mary Mapes Dodge, in St. Nicholas for December.

One of the English periodicals has issued as its Christmas supplement, a handsome lithograph entitled "The Queen of the Roses." The portrait is a striking likeness of a young lady of Washington Park.

The Rev. T. Logan Murphy of North Plainfield, and the Rev. S. P. Simpson of Netherwood, were among the guests at the sixth annual festival of the Choir Guild of the Diocese of New Jersey at Elizabeth.

Thomas R. Ford, bookkeeper at R. W. Rice & Co's, has given up his position. About the first of December he will go to California and spend the Winter for his health. He is a deservedly popular young man, and has the best wishes of a host of friends.

Other papers in telling the story in Saturday's PRESS about the starting of a bank in Westfield by Charles L. Hyde, lead people to suppose the latter is Charles Hyde senior. This is not so, it is Charles L. Hyde the son who is at the head of the scheme.

The home of Union County's Warden, Charles W. Dodd, formerly Chief of Police of this city, was invaded Thursday last week by a large party of merry young people, who had come to surprise Miss Maria, daughter of the warden, the occasion being the fifteenth anniversary of her birth.

Edward Kimball, the famous debt raiser, who helped lift the mortgages from the Park Avenue Baptist and Crescent Avenue Presbyterian churches, was one of the prominent figures on the platform at the young people's meeting conducted by Mr. Mills.

By special request the prize [illegible] pictures exhibited by Ernest Marx at the last exhibition of the Camera Club will again be on the walls during their present exhibition. This will afford many people the opportunity to see these curiosities in the photographic art, that did not see them before.

Mr. and Mrs. Carmon Parse left town on Tuesday for Knoxville, Tenn., to visit a brother of Mrs. Parse. After a rest at Knoxville, Mr. Parse will go further South, to remain several months. His many friends in Plainfield sincerely hope that he will be benefited in health by the trip.

Mrs. Augustine VanDeventer, of Washington Park, gave a breakfast recently, in honor of her guest, Miss Bodman, of Astoria, niece of Archdeacon Bodman. Among the ladies present were Mrs. Geo. Dupue, Mrs. Martin I. Cooley, Mrs. Chas. McCutchen, Mrs. S. St. John McCutchen, Mrs. James Middleditch, and Mrs. J. H. VanDeventer.

Martin I. Cooley had been considering for some time, more or less favorably, the idea of removing his family to New York. Thursday morning's fire, probably, will settle his mind in the matter, and North Plainfield will consequently lose one of its most valued citizens, one of its most charitable women, and one of its most charming families.

For many of the interesting facts contained in the biographical sketch of Evangelist Mills published in another column, THE PRESS is indebted to The Christian Herald of New York. Through the courtesy of the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, editor, and Louis Klopsch, publisher, THE PRESS is enabled to make use of that journal's copyrighted biography.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Goodman celebrated their [illegible] wedding at their home on the road between Fanwood and Rahway, Monday. More than one hundred and fifty friends and relatives were present. The evening was very enjoyably spent in games, singing and other pastimes. Refreshments were served in abundance. The host and hostess received many handsome gifts.

The Union County Standard says: "We observe, with profound satisfaction, that Dr. Chauncey B. Ripley is about to open up for sale about one hundred acres of his Westfield possessions, heretofore not in the market. This we hope means a rapid development for the South side; and the Doctor can certainly be depended upon to dictate a class of improvements that will materially advance the welfare of Westfield from an artistic as well as a commercial point of view."

The late Daniel Runkle a few years ago purchased the Hugh [illegible] farm, west of Bound Brook, for the purpose of erecting an iron foundry at the junction of the Jersey Central and Philadelphia and Reading railroads. He even went so far as to have the land staked out for the buildings, but his health failed and the work was abandoned. The farm is now occupied by William Emery. Mr. Runkle had many warm friends in Bound Brook who lament his death.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

Col. C. L. Kingsley, of the firm of Harris & Kingsley, proprietors of the St. Denis and Home Laundry Company, was a guest of J. B. Miller, Saturday. It requires the employment of 275 men and women and twenty-two horses to conduct the business of Harris & Kingsley's extensive laundry. Mr. Kingsley contemplates purchasing an extensive tract of land near Plainfield and erecting thereon a handsome Summer residence. Mr. Kingsley is a prominent member of Tammany Hall, the New York Athletic Club, and the Hoboken Turtle Club. Those who have met him here are unanimous in saying "Come, Colonel, and join Plainfield's Four Hundred."

Mrs. D. M. Minor, of Oneida county, New York, with her daughter, Miss E. L. Minor, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Morse, of Franklin place. Mrs. Minor is the mother of Mrs. Morse.

Frank Halsey Skinner, of Belleville, and Edward Ward, of Newark, were ushers at the wedding of Miss Nettie Lee French, of Plainfield, to Edward Howell, of Morristown, reported exclusively in THE PRESS of Tuesday. The costume of the bride was a becoming traveling dress of golden brown camel's hair cloth and velvet.

The Fire Gong Soon to Test.

Mr. Blackwell, constructing foreman for the Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company, with T. O. Doane, Chief Engineer of Plainfield's Fire Department, has been making a tour of the city to arrange for the construction of Plainfield's fire alarm system, and the work of stringing the wires will be begun at once.

Mills Coming Here Again.

As first stated exclusively in these columns as probable, it has since been definitely arranged that the Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, will be in Westfield on March 20, 1891. Final arrangements to that end were made by the Revs. J. K. Folwell and N. W. Cadwell at a meeting with Mr. Mills in this city, on Monday last.

Maybe the Hospital Would and Maybe it Wouldn't.

In copying without credit from the Plainfield papers the news of the amicable settlement of the Burlingham will case, the Elizabeth Journal adds this more or less probable tale: "It was generally believed that the primary cause of the contest was on account of the legacy of $5,000 to the Muhlenberg hospital. Such, however, was not the case. Had the case been continued and the will broken, the hospital would still have received the legacy which Mrs. Burlingham's heirs knew represented the wishes of the late husband and herself. In justice to the relatives who instituted the suit this fact should be made known."

Knights Wear Their New Uniforms at a Knightly Feast.

The Knights of Honor of Wetumpka Lodge were out in their new uniforms and with a drum corps Thursday, to escort a number of guests from the railway station to their lodge rooms, where a first-rate entertainment was provided. The musical programme included selections by Miss Bessie Walcott on the zither and piano, Mr. L. Baxter on the violin, Miss Clara L. Bowles, contralto, and Miss Edith Mason, soprano. Miss May Colyer, recitationist, was unable to be present, and an excellent baritone took her place. Among the visitors were Grand officers of the State, and people from Brooklyn, Newark, and other neighboring cities. Everyone was royally treated. The banquet at the close of the other entertainment was of surpassing excellence.

Let Those Who Must Loaf Stand Below the Curb.

The reason that so many Plainfield women wear skirts fringed with mahogany-colored material is that so many Plainfield loafers cover the pavements with tobacco-expectorations. The sidewalks near the junction of Park avenue and Front street are constantly crowded with corner hangers in fair weather, and the result of their industry is the chronic filthy condition of the flag stones. Those who are paid to protect the public interests owe it to the men and women of the city to keep the corners clear and the pavements clean. In places of meaner reputation than Plainfield loafers are made to stand below the curb, in the street itself, and their own desire for safety from flying hoofs and whirling vehicles soon ends the nuisance.

A Building You've All Criticised.

The estimated cost of the new building of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, at the foot of Liberty street, New York, is $1,000,000. The granite and brick of which it is built are entirely of home production, and not of foreign importation as reported. The granite comes from Connecticut, and the bricks were all made by the Sayre & Fisher Company, of Sayreville, N. J. The building is as nearly fireproof as it can be made. It will be heated by steam and lighted by electricity. The offices of the Central will be in the eighth or the ninth stories of the building, while the lower portions will be let to other corporations, and to bankers, brokers, etc. The tenth story, the object of so much remark on account of its peculiar construction, will be used as a restaurant and as quarters for the janitor.

After Thanksgiving, Christmas Shopping.

The days before Thanksgiving are the last leisurely loitering ones for many persons until after the holidays. Those women who make a dead-in-earnest affair of Christmas begin the campaign the very day after Thanksgiving, or, at least, the very first day thereafter that their Thanksgiving indigestion lets up. The shopkeepers have already anticipated them, and are stacking their counters and shelves and windows full of all kinds of Christmas goods. And so the women who delight in Christmas buying and planning and giving find their days full of busy activities, and their nights filled with kindly planning. And these are the women who lend the season its kindliest charm and make life so beautiful in spots that the ways between do not seem half so long and dusty.

Somerset's Senator Gives His Friends a Grand Good Time.

Senator-elect Keyes of Somerset county, gave a large number of his friends a sumptious time at his spacious home at South Branch, on Thursday. Mrs. Keyes proved herself a charming hostess, and her daughters assisted her in making everybody glow with the warmth of their welcome. There were present, Gov. Abbett and his staff, Senator-elect Fred C. Marsh of Union, Assemblyman-elect Jas. Bergen of Somerset, ex-Congressmen Clark and Fidcock, ex-Assemblyman Klotz, the Senators-elect of Hunterdon, Passaic, Essex, Camden and Monmouth, James E. Martine of this city, the Hon., "Uncle" John [illegible], Judge Bartine and a hundred others among whom were some of the host's Republican friends.

Governor Hill sent his regrets, but Charles A. Reed, of North Plainfield, who was Mr. Keyes' opposing candidate at election, came not nor sent a declination of the invitation that was extended him. In the large carriage house where a big open fire place was blazing, three tables were spread with all the choicest things a New York caterer could think of. Gov. Abbett occupied the seat of honor, with Somerset county's new Senator and new Assemblyman at his side. There was a flow of wit and wisdom and a grand old time, all around. The extensive grounds were illuminated with Japanese lanterns, and a stack of hay was lighted for a bonfire. Mr. Keyes displayed with great pride a magnificent stallion, the choicest of all his high bred stock, whose name was "Governor Abbett." On their way home the Governor rendered this decision: "Keyes is a dandy!" There was no appeal taken.

John have you seen that woman lately? John in astonishment! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column, and read about it; the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

THE TALE OF A JEALOUS NURSE.

Miss Steers of This City is Accused of a Hopeless Passion That Was Born, and Died in the New York Hospital.

According to the New York News, one of the most amusing and yet, withal, one of the most disappointing terminations to a realistic but hopeless passion, occurred recently in one of the wards of the New York Hospital, the operating surgeon of which is a remarkably handsome man. The lady in the case is Miss Steers, of this city, but she told a PRESS reporter on Friday that the whole story is false and inspired by a jealous nurse called Miss Price.

The New York paper goes on to say that the dark heroine of this narrative was a patient of the brunette type, of massive proportions and generous amplitude of figure. Her hair was a veritable profusion of glossy curls, as black as a raven's wing. Her eyes were as lustrous as twin stars.

Her teeth were large, white and irregular. Her age was uncertain. Her nose wasn't exactly chiseled after the classic models, but had it not been for her nose this story would not have been written. It was neither Grecian, Roman nor aquiline; it was rather of the composite order.

It was on account of its deformity that the lady came to the hospital to undergo a surgical process of reconstruction.

In other respects, however, the lady's characteristics were of the most positive kind. So it was determined, after consultation, to resort to a series of operations which, by the aid of a chicken bone and science, would make it far more presentable than when she came into the hospital.

The first operation was a decided success. The foundation of the new nasal structure was laid, and the patient suffered but little pain.

It was during the healing of the inflammatory period that a marked change came over the patient. She breathed deep sighs, became absent-minded, and whenever Dr Ball was present other patients in the same ward would observe that Miss Steers would endeavor to detain him by conversation.

If he smiled, she blushed. If he spoke kindly, her eyes would sparkle with unwonted brilliancy. If he pressed her hand in sympathy for her misfortune—as doctors often do—her massive frame quivered like a jelly. Her secret, whatever it was, was too intense to carry around alone, so in a burst of confidence she told a fellow patient that she had fallen in love with the handsome operating surgeon.

In less than an hour every other woman patient in the ward knew it, and the lady enjoyed the sweet sympathy of her fellows, with commendations for selecting so handsome a man. "The lady with the chicken bone nose," as she was called, was only happy when the doctor was around. At other times she fed and fattened herself upon contemplation.

But alas! the seeds of her passion fell upon stony ground, and she lacked the courage to tell him of the strong storm of emotion that agitated her study figure like a sapling in a storm. The doctor was oblivious of the effect he had created upon her, and growing weary of her frivolous attempts to detain him, he somewhat sharply reminded her that other patients required his attention.

Thus was the sweetness of her love turned to the bitterness of gall, and she fumed and fretted under the painful consideration that it was all wasted upon the object of its plenitude. Still she did not entirely abandon hope. Her nose healed, and the time approached for a second operation. Her indifference at the prospect was in marked contrast, however, with the former eagerness. Indeed she admitted to more than one patient that she would just as soon go through the world with no nose at all than have the handsomest organ that surgery could produce without possessing the love of its creator.

This about describes the state of her mind when the second operation was performed—a process that was to provide a couple of nostrils, preliminary to the third stage of grafting the skin that was to cover them. The second effort was also successful, but her appearance was only interesting to the cold, practical operator, who pronounced it to be a "good case."

Her fluency of speech was somewhat impaired by the operation, and absolute rest and freedom from unnecessary conversation was imposed. Alas! that cruelty should be added to deformity, and despite the operator's stern injunction that she should talk less, she made a frantic and final effort to detain him by the practice of those minor arts of coquetry in which all women are more or less experienced. But they were a failure, and she was finally convinced that her affection was wasted.

Then did her love turn to fury. Angered by disappointment she burst out one morning into a tirade of bitter denunciation of the handsome surgeon. She accused him of disfiguring her for life; of making her a laughing stock among the community; of wrecking her prospects and making her life a wide waste. Having thus freed her mind she obtained access to the clothes closet during the temporary absence of the nurse, changed her dress, put on a heavy thick veil over her face, and left the institution after having expressed her intention of suing the handsome surgeon for $25,000 damages.

Such is the story published, but Miss Steers says its all false. She is not in love with any surgeon, and has no intention to sue anybody for damages. She says the first operation she underwent was at the hands of Dr. Sands in the Roosevelt Hospital, Feb. 14, 1887. It was a success. There have been two since, and there are two to come.

The Yearly Meetings Not to be Given Up.

Since THE PRESS announced that the Seventh-Day Baptists of New York and New Jersey anticipated discontinuing their interesting "yearly meetings," or annual re-unions, the congregations of the churches of New York City, Shiloh, Marlboro, New Market and Plainfield have in joint assembly taken a vote on the matter and have decided to perpetuate their honored custom. The "yearly meeting" of last Saturday and Sunday was highly successful. The attendance was very large, and the services of the utmost interest. The followers of the denomination are too much attached to their "yearly meeting" to give it up after so many years of profitable re-unions, and especially since their church is growing so steadily and with so much power.

An Interesting Branch of Y. M. C. A. Work.

The Workers' Training Classes of the Young Men's Christian Association, which have been so successful in past years, are soon to be started again. Two classes will be formed, one for beginners, and the other for advanced scholars. The course of study in both classes will be for the purpose of fitting the members for better Christian work. The first part of the lesson hour will be devoted to Bible study, the second half to the study of individual cases of inquirers. The lessons will be entirely different from the Sunday school lessons, but will be very useful to Sunday school teachers. The classes will be open to men only, but the ladies' class will be continued Friday afternoons. The classes will meet Sunday at 9:15 A. M. The class for beginners, to be conducted by W. D. Murray, will begin work next Sunday.

The worst Nasal Catarrh, no matter of how long standing is permanently cured by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

THAT WON'T HELP MR. GILBERT.

Misrepresentation Will Out, and Do a Candidate More Harm Than Good.

In writing of "Our Candidate for Mayor," the Central Times of last week says: "It seems almost unnecessary to tell the Plainfield voters anything about Alexander Gilbert"; and thereupon the Times goes on to tell a lot of things about him that are not so.

Some of the errors of statement are of no matter; as, for instance, that he was "again made a councilman in 1881;" and that he "has been connected with the Market National Bank for twenty one years" yet "has held the position of cashier for twenty seven years." But the following unfounded misstatement of facts may mislead somebody:

> He early identified himself with the town's best interests and was elected to the Councils of 1871 and '72. As chairman of the Special Railroad Committee Mr. Gilbert represented the young city when the Central Railroad elevated its tracks. It is hard to believe now that this improvement should have been opposed by Plainfielders. But the inhabitants of the city were very conservative. In spite of the evils of the grade crossing, there was such a fear that the railroad might overreach the taxpayers in this improvement that it was with the greatest difficulty that the work could be carried out on account of the very general opposition; mainly through Mr Gilbert's personal efforts this was accomplished, however, and the grade crossing in Plainfield was made a thing of the past.

Mr. Gilbert was not in the Council in 1873, and had no more to do with the accomplishment of the grade crossing than any other simple citizen. It was all done by a bare majority of councilmen of whom Mr. Gilbert was not one. Our contemporary is libeling him with a virtue he would not himself have the assumption to claim.

Honesty is the best policy even in politics. Mr. Gilbert is President of the Music Hall Association and the one who has personally done for it about all that has ever been done. He is the originator of the Hillside Cemetery Association, and is to be credited with a large share of its success. He was as good a councilman as ever served the city, in his time. He is a shrewd business man, a philanthropic one, and an model citizen. All this and more may be said in his favor, truthfully. Therefore there is no need of the Times stooping to misrepresentation for the sake of electing a Republican.

END OF A TIME-HONORED CUSTOM.

Mother and Children Churches No More to Meet Together in Re-union.

The "annual meeting" of the Seventh-Day Baptist churches of New York City and New Jersey, held Friday and Saturday at New Market, will probably—says a local member—be the last of those time-honored assemblages. The first of the meetings was held years and years ago in response to the wishes of the older generation who had been Seventh-Day worshipers when there was only one Seventh-Day church, that at New Market, or Piscataway; and the meetings continued annually with great interest. Of late few of the original Seventh-Day people are left to conduct the meetings with their accustomed fervor, and their descendants do not seem to care so much for this religious re-union, so that the old-time spirit is greatly lacking. It is therefore deemed best to discontinue the meetings, and those who met together this week seemed to consider the occasion as much a farewell as a renewal of greetings. The four churches of New Jersey—Plainfield, New Market, Shiloh and Marlboro—and the one of New York City, are all descendants of the one old historic Piscataway Seventh-Day family, and the "yearly meeting" in days gone by was really an affectionate exchange of good wishes and a review of past prosperity, between the founders and members of the Piscataway mother church and those of the four off-spring churches. Now much of that feeling of close attachment between the churches has been lost, through the death of the old members to whom all of the interests and personalities of the children churches were so dear, and though a kindly sentiment is of course still maintained each church has become more of a unit by itself. The "yearly meetings" have as a rule been attended only by the pastors and some of the older members of the several churches.

More Parlor Politics.

The following, printed in graceful script, with poor ink, is being sent through the mail indiscriminately:

Plainfield, N. J., 1890.

DEAR SIR:

You are hereby earnestly requested to interview your personal friends whose usual custom has been to vote the Democratic ticket, and to do your utmost to influence them to cast their ballots for the Republican candidates in the coming City election.

By request of the
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Penny-Ante Players Disciplined.

John Dady, Thomas Fahey, Henry Harriman and William Peterson, the men indicted for gambling in playing penny-ante at Plainfield, were arraigned in the County Court at Elizabeth Saturday, and had nothing to say concerning the charge. Judge McCormick imposed a fine of $1 on each. He said the court wished to impress on the defendants the fact that they were guilty of an offense which often deserved severe punishment. Playing penny-ante is a crime in New Jersey, and cannot be committed and go unpunished. In this instance the court was exceedingly lenient, but cautioned the men against a repetition of the offence.

Richard Lindabury Likely to Succeed Prosecutor Wilson.

It is rumored at Elizabeth that Richard Lindabury, the lawyer who took such an active part in fighting the race-tracks, and who was the assistant to Prosecutor Wilson, is to be substantially rewarded for his work by being appointed to the Prosecutorship. Mr. Lindabury went on the stump for Senator Marsh, and his forcible speeches aided materially in electing the Democratic candidates. It is alleged the powers that be have decided that Prosecutor Wilson, having had two terms, must retire. Mr. Lindabury is well known in this city, in the suburbs of which he spends a part of every Summer.

Mr. Gilbert Neither Paved Front Street nor Elevated the Tracks.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:

Again your paper sets the people right. Mr. A. Gilbert was not a member of the Common Council in 1873, as stated by the Central Times. As to the improvement of Front street, between Peace street and Central avenue, that improvement was made at the request of a majority of the frontage on said street as required by our City Charter. The work was superintended by the Street Commissioner and paid for by the property owners on said street.

As to the railroad elevation, Mr. Gilbert did not compel the railroad to change the grade crossing. The Railroad Company through their President J. T. Johnston, frequently urged through the local press, and at public meetings, the importance of this measure. The railroad authorities needed no pressure in this direction from Mr. Gilbert or any other citizen. With the citizens and council it was only a question of grades and character of bridges. The whole matter was settled by the Council of 1873. A committee meeting was held at the Railroad office in Liberty street, New York, of which committee the writer was a member, at which a profile of grades and bridges was agreed upon, subject to the approval of the Common Council. The Council of 1873—of which Mr. Gilbert would be a part, but was not—proposed and settled the whole matter of grade crossings, bridges, sewers, and detail.

A COUNCILMAN OF 1873.

LAWYER GILMORE'S GREAT CASE.

How a Young Plainfield Attorney Defeated a Famous Conspiracy Which Hoodwinked Even [illegible] Astute Prosecutor.

Edward DeRussey Gilmore, who up to a year ago was a resident of this city, whose widow was formerly Miss Louise Cousens of West Second street, and who—called away four weeks ago in the prime of ambitious manhood, and at the height of honored citizenship—is now one of the silent inhabitants of a Plainfield churchyard, will long be remembered by the legal fraternity of New Jersey for his untiring energy and extraordinary success in his profession. His greatest achievement was perhaps the defeat of the great conspiracy that was formed in Jersey City several years ago to capture the $1,000,000 fortune which old Miser Lewis, of Hoboken, left to the Federal Government to be applied to the reduction of the national debt. Gilmore was at that time the partner of the late Robert Gilchrist, one of the most splendid lawyers New Jersey has ever known. When the newspapers announced the miser's singular bequest, a woman from New York attacked the will. She set up a claim of widowhood and demanded her dower rights, if nothing more, in the property.

The Government was suspicious of her weeds, and retained Attorney-General Gilchrist to dispute her claim. The "widow" made a remarkably strong case, producing the certificate of her marriage to the old miser, and being aided by the defective memory of the minister whose signature it bore, and by the testimony of witnesses who claimed to have seen the ceremony performed. Gilmore became well satisfied that the widow had been put forward by a gang of conspirators. In the course of his investigations he went to Jamaica, in the Indies, whence the old miser had come. When he came back with the information that Lewis had abandoned a wife and three children there the conspiracy was not staggered by this blow. It prepared even to attack the regularity of the marriage to the Jamaica woman, and was making considerable headway when Gilmore struck the convincing proofs that settled the case. He had for years been hunting for the plate from which the blank marriage certificate had been printed. When, after a long search, he discovered it, he established the fact that the plate had not been engraved till two months or more after the alleged wedding. It could not, therefore, have produced the certificate at the time at which the woman swore that the blank had been filled out.

The woman was the first to make her peace with the State when she heard that exposure was certain. Charles H. Winfield, brother-in-law of Charles H. Schermerhorn of this city, had been her counsel. He created a great sensation by throwing up the case in open court one morning, and the next day "Mrs. Lewis" went upon the stand to confess her perjury. She was but the stool-pigeon for a skillful gang of forgers, who looked to Charles Sacia as their chief. Sacia and his crowd, as well as Mrs. Lewis, were indicted for conspiracy, and all were sentenced to long terms in State Prison.

The Government had utilized Mrs. Lewis as a witness, and she had testified on the faith that she would not be prosecuted. The Federal authorities refused to sanction the bargain, and she was indicted, convicted and sentenced with the rest. On the morning that she was to have been removed to the prison to serve her term, however, the door of her cell was left open—accidentally, of course. Before the pursuit began she had escaped to the Pennsylvania woods on the other side of the Delaware, and she has never been heard from since. There was a general suspicion, at the time, that she disappeared with the connivance of her keepers, and it is probable that neither the Trenton nor the Washington authorities made any strenuous efforts to recapture her.

How Much is Your Boy Worth?

The rooms of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union were filled at the 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The Rev. J. C. Fernald, after the scripture lesson, struck the key-note with a decidedly temperance ring in it. One after another caught the refrain and sang forth their determination with God's help to "Rescue the perishing—Duty demands it."—the pledge was offered and four new names were added to the list of white ribbon workers.

The startling statement was made that the merchants of the city, engaged in legalized liquor-selling, need the boys to guarantee them support for future profit. "Could we save these boys" was said "and keep them from the liquor dealers clutch, these men would early look about for more profitable business." And whose boys are the liquor dealers of our country counting? Surely it will pay us to look into these things, reckon up the price high or low that is offered for these brightest and best of boys they are depending on."

Some Results of the Revival.

Fifty-five people were admitted on confession of faith and probation, to membership in the Methodist Episcopal church, Sunday. The meetings were of great spiritual interest. The pastor, the Rev C. B. Mitchell, preached appropriate sermons of much power. The total number of cards signed, during the Mills revival meetings, signifying a preference for the M. E. church, was 190. Of these, some were duplicates, and some were not genuinely meant, as was the case of a small percentage among all the churches. The actual number of new church members out of these signers will, however, be more than 100 for the Methodist. The number of card-signers in some of the other churches was as follows: Crescent Avenue Presbyterian, 170; First Baptist, 160; Trinity Reformed, 152; Park Avenue Baptist, 45. The entire number of card-signers was nearly 1,000, and many at the Mills meetings signified a desire and intention to lead a Christian life and professed thorough conversion, who did not sign cards.

Mrs. McKeown Wins.

Before Vice-Chancellor Green, at Elizabeth, Wednesday, Ruth J. McKeown, of Fanwood, was upon her petition granted a perpetual separation from Alexander McKeown, and her brother is given the custody of their child. The defendant is to pay $500 per annum for the maintenance of the child. All Mrs. McKeown's relatives now in the North were present ready to testify in her behalf. In the face of such an array of evidence, the defendant was glad to concede her demands.

It was further ordered that all papers in relation to the case should be removed from the files of the court. The defendant's readiness to agree to the plaintiff's proposition, exculpates Col. Charles K. Moore from any imputations that may have been cast upon him by Mr. McKeown.

Yet There's Work to Do.

(From the Somerville Gazette.)

The extraordinary success of the Mills Evangelistic meetings in Plainfield, by which about 2,000 persons were led to profess a better life within two weeks, and which seems to have been not a sensational but a deep and real movement, affecting the whole city, shows that even in this day, when in our large centres of population there is a vast amount of irreligion or indifference, Christianity rightly presented meets men's needs. It finds them uneasy and very destitute; it supplies them with faith, peace and infinite riches.

The Farmer Fights the Postal Telegraph.

The New Jersey Postal Telegraph Company has struck a snag in its efforts to reach New Brunswick from Plainfield. Four New Brunswick linemen engaged in the work of construction have been arrested for trespass. It is alleged that they refused to desist when a farmer on the road forbade them to set the Company's poles on the side of the public road in front of his property, he claiming control to the middle of the road. The men entered bail to appear before the Grand Jury.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?
A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time, once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. WHY THEY FED HIM.

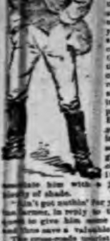
How the Tramp Is Utilized in Texas.

[Written for This Paper.]



MANY and peculiar are the experiences which a cross-roads tourist undergoes as he tramps over the country. A tramp, with a suavity of manner and a wild yearning for something to eat and pants that bagged at the knees and cried aloud for repairs, stopped at a farm-house in the southern part of Texas. He was not a very prepossessing-looking person, and at a first glance a close observer would immediately associate him with a jack-knife and [illegible] of shade.

"Ain't got nuthin' for you," remarked the farmer, in reply to the tramp's request to give him some cold "vittles" and thus save a valuable life.

The cross-roads tourist turned to go, and heaved a heavy sigh like the sad, last breath of an overworked car horse.

"Wait a minit, an' I'll see the ol' woman. Mebbe she'll give yer somethin' ter eat."

"That old property sigh generally fetches 'em in a soft spot," remarked the tramp, sotto voce, as he observed the man and his wife hold an earnest conversation. "Wouldn't surprise me at all, though, of he wanted me to cut a ton or so of hay for a measly little sandwich. I don't kinder take to the cut of his mug, but the old lady looks more soft. The only farm work I ever was good at was eatin' fruit, an' then I didn' want the farmer 'round to boss the job."

Instead of entering into a discussion as to the amount of work the tramp was to do in return for some "vittles," he was politely ushered into the dining-room of the old farm-house, a chair was handed to him, and he was told to make himself "homely," entirely unnecessary, as he was already as homely as a stage beauty off the stage, and the farmer's wife immediately made preparations for his meal. If she had been ordered to prepare a banquet for half a dozen people she could not have been more busy. For about an hour she was as busy as a bee, and when she finally brought the meal in, as she placed dish after dish upon the table, it became a difficult matter for the tramp to realize that he was not dreaming—an illusion which was not dispelled until he began to gorge himself.

"Now don't 'stint yourself," said the farmer, helping the tramp to a large slice of ham, "here's some ham—wife, hand him some of those wheat cakes—a little cabbage will go good with that ham—what's the matter with usin' a fork?"

This last was addressed to the tramp on account of his having abandoned knife and fork for his fingers. The dishes were finally removed—the tramp having removed the contents very effectively—and the tramp leaned back in his chair, picking his teeth with a straw obtained from the broom in the corner, looking the picture of happiness.

"Have you filled yourself to your utmost capacity?" inquired the old lady, kindly. "[Wonder what those two are starin' at me like that fur. Reckon I remind the old lady of some son of hern what's turned out bad.] I tell you what," he said aloud, bestowing a loving smile on the old lady, who kept her eyes upon him intently, "tain't often I gets treated nice like this. There's only a few ladies left like you, madam." Then rising and flecking a small spot of dust from his pants, he was on the point of leaving when he was detained by the old farmer, who said:

"Hol' on. Don't go yit. 'Tain't healthy after eatin' a big meal. How would a little rye go to kinder wash down that grub?"

"First class, governor. I ain't much of a drinker, but just to prevent indigestion I'll take a swifter with you."

The farmer handed him a large glassful but did not imbibe himself. The contents disappeared like a flash. Another glass went on the same mission as the first. The tramp's face fairly shone with happiness, and he leaned back once more in his chair and indulged in half a dozen of the most ludicrous winks in rapid succession at the old lady ever perpetrated by a mortal, and at the same time smiling in the blandest manner possible. He was firmly convinced that the old lady was smitten with him, and it's no wonder, for she had not removed her eyes from him for a moment. "Guess that old stuff of a husband of hern ain't got the style about him I have," reflected the tramp, mentally. "Funny how these wimmin kin tell a single man as soon as they see him. Now that woman's got her eye on me for husband No. 2. Wonder ef he's healthy?"

"Feelin' pretty good, sir ye?" inquired the farmer.

"Bully. But for fear of intrudin' I reckon I'll mosey."

The farmer and his wife withdrew to the kitchen, and held another consultation, in which the tramp overheard the old lady say: "No, don't let him go yit," which caused the tramp to chuckle triumphantly. "A case of mash at first sight," he murmured to himself. "Right before the old man's eyes, too. The old jay wouldn't tumble of a house fell on top of him. Can't help but wishin' she was younger and had a little more style about her, though."

"You'd better rest a little while afore you go," said the farmer, re-entering the dining-room. "Er—you feel all right, do you?"

"Prime."

"Now, ef I was you I'd go right inter that bed-room thar, an' take a little snooze afore goin'."

The tramp [illegible]—they had been so good to him already. The old lady finally induced him to go into the room and lie down. Just as he was dozing off to sleep he heard a noise at the door, and opening his eyes suddenly he saw the old lady looking at him through the door, which was slightly ajar. "O, I'm a killer, I am!" he murmured, softly, as he buried his [illegible]-bedecked face in the [illegible] white pillow. "Wonder what she'd do if she saw me in a new suit? I dunno I remind her of some old flame, but I don't want no guy logharter business in mine," and he got up and gently closed the door.

For two solid hours he slept. When he awoke the old farmer was by his bedside.

"Looks as though you hain't been wrapt in slumber in some time."

"O, many's the time I've been rapped in slumber. One time, I remember, I was on a visit to a friend in New York, an' happened to go to sleep in the park. I was rapped in slumber that time. A cop was the rapper."

But there was a change in both the old farmer and his wife. They did not treat him the same, and there was an air of indifference about the old lady that made him feel uncomfortable. This latter he laid to the fact that he was a talker in his sleep, and he had probably mentioned some female name which made the old lady jealous.

"You're one of God's noblemen," said the tramp, as he picked up his hat and prepared to depart. "I shall allers remember you in my prayers. You are too good to—"

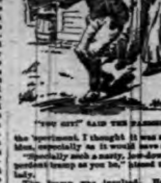
"O, tain't that so much as it's business."

"Business?"

"You see I had a darky cook here last week who was so bad tempered and [illegible] that I had to discharge her."

"Them culled gals is awful. Ask 'em for a little food an' they'll scold yer."

"I gave her a week's notice an' she left yesterday. In the meantime I found out from the drug-store man in town that she had bought enough arsenic to kill [illegible] I thought mebbe she wanted to poison wife and me. I wanted ter figure all the grub out, but wife says: 'No, leave it, an' try it on some good-for-nuthin' tramp. Ef it kills him, then it's time enough ter talk or throwin' it away.' Well, as I thought it would only kill one tramp in the 'speriment, I thought it was a good idea, especially as it would save a lot."



"YOU GIT!" SAID THE FARMER.

"'Specially such a nasty, low-down, impudent tramp as you be," hissed the old lady.

The tramp was insulted. He felt deeply hurt. He looked reproachfully at the farmer's wife, and in a voice trembling with emotion said:

"Madam, you have stung me to the heart. I did not expect this from you. I thought your interest in me was—"

"You git!" said the farmer and his wife in one voice, the latter seizing a rake that stood outside the door, and dealing him a sounding whack across the back of the head as he emerged from the door.

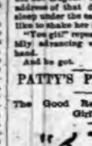
"Guess I've been thumping the wrong watermelon. She's just like the rest of the wimmin—conceitful," remarked the tramp, as he passed sadly out the farm gate. "Whew! but wasn't that a sockdollager she gave me across the cocoanut!" He had gone about fifteen yards when he stopped, and then turning back walked to the gate, and shouted, shaking his fist at the farmer's wife, who still stood at the door: "Hi! there! you old she-dragon! Can you give me the address of that darky that refused to sleep under the same roof with you? I'd like to shake her hand!"

"You git!" repeated the old lady, rapidly advancing with the rake in her hand.

And he got. ALEX E. SWEET.

PATTY'S PRESUMPTION.

The Good Results of a Little Girl's Call.



"HULLO!"

A little white face turned wearily and a gleam of interest shot into the tired eyes as they caught sight of Patty outside the window. Patty was short and fat and her face covered with freckles, but to the little invalid she seemed a picture of beauty, for she belonged to the great outside world of which the sick girl only caught an occasional glimpse from her window in the big red brick hospital.

"Hullo!" she said, returning Patty's vigorous greeting in a weak little voice.

"See, I have brought you some flowers," continued Patty, holding up her hands full of buttercups and daisies. "I got them at a picnic; but how shall I get them up to you? Will they let me climb up to the window?"

Patience nodded, and Patty, tying the flowers in her handkerchief, climbed lightly up, clinging to lightning rod and window sill, and, holding by one hand, emptied the contents of the handkerchief into Patience's lap. The sick child gave a cry of gladness, and, gathering them up, held them to her face.

"They're lots prettier in the woods and meadows," said Patty. "They just peek up among the green leaves so cute. I wish you could see them."

"I wish I could," said Patience, her face full of longing. "I never was in the woods in all my life."

"Oh, my!" gasped Patty, "how sorry I am for you. I wish I could take you there, but we haven't any thing but our baby carriage, and you couldn't double your feet up in that cause you're lame."

Just then the matron entered, giving Patty such a fright that she nearly fell off the window ledge; but the matron smiled when she saw her, and stopped to look at the flowers.

"Her name is Patty," explained Patience, "and she lives next door. She feels so sorry for me because I am lame that she has saved me these flowers. She says if they had a carriage she would take me to the woods, too."

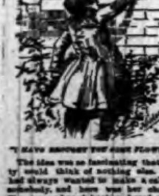
"Well, I don't know about that; if they had a carriage, they would be like all the rest of the folks—never a thought for any one but themselves. I often think that if the people who have carriages would remember the sick in the hospitals, how many weary days would be brightened."

"Patty, Patty," called a shrill voice, "ma says to come home and take care of the baby." And she slid down to the ground pondering the matron's words. Patty lived so near the hospital that she caught many glimpses of the suffering within those high brick walls, but she had never been able to show her sympathy for the little inmates except by an occasional cheery nod and a "hullo," when she caught sight of a face at the window.

Patience had been there so long that she felt very well acquainted with her, and her tender little heart was filled with plans to take her to the woods as she sat holding the baby up and down in his crib. She lived in the rear of one of the great avenues, and as she watched the carriages roll past she wondered why it was only those who had none wanted to take sick people to drive.

Just then a carriage came by that Patty had often admired. The stately horses with their clanking silver chains, the immovable coachman in high top boots, and the soft silken cushions against which Mrs. Muchmore leaned, would be just the thing for Patience's lame back, Patty thought.

"She looks sick herself," she commented, as Mrs. Muchmore's dissatisfied eyes rested on her and the baby for a moment, and then turned languidly away. "I shouldn't wonder a bit if she would do it if she only thought of it. I believe I'll ask her."



"I HAVE BROUGHT YOU SOME FLOWERS."

The idea was so fascinating that Patty could think of nothing else. She had always wanted to make a call on somebody, and here was her chance. She remembered having heard somewhere that people who called must have calling cards, and she set about making one. A sheet of note paper was cut in two, and Miss Patty Hawkins was printed upon it in her very best letters. Then her mother's best hat and lace mitts were borrowed. She did not stop to ask for them, so sure was she that the object of her call would make her willing to lend them. The baby was cross that afternoon and would not go to sleep, and Patty was in despair for fear her visit could not be made. But at last she was free, and, summoning all her courage she mounted the massive stone steps, card in hand, and rang the bell. The tall footman who opened the door stared in astonishment at the queer little figure before him. The fat, freckled face surmounted by the tall hat covered with waving feathers, and the monstrous lace mitts, brought a smile to his usually severe countenance.

"Is Miss Muchmore to home?" asked Patty, serenely handing him the card.

Thomas was about to make reply that Mrs. Muchmore was engaged, when the voice of her maid at his elbow stopped him.

"Don't send her away. The mistress is in one of her worst spells and if any thing can bring her out of it, a sight of that young one will."

So Thomas gravely led the way to Mrs. Muchmore's room, Patty's card on his salver, and followed by Patty herself.

"Miss Patty Hawkins," he announced, throwing open the door.

Mrs. Muchmore raised her languid eyes, and then sat up in surprise.

"Ah! Miss Hawkins, are you well?"

"Yes'm, so as to be about," answered Patty, remembering the oft-repeated phrase of an old woman who visited her mother.

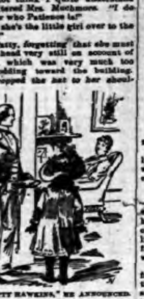
Thomas placed her a chair and departed with a grin. Mrs. Muchmore hesitated for a moment, and then asked: "Is there any thing special you called to see me about?"

"Yes'm," answered Patty, "it is about your carriage. I should like to borrow it." Then, seeing the lady's look of astonishment she hastened to add: "It's for Patience—she's lame, you know—I can walk. If your man is too busy to go, my pa can drive real good. He drives the grocery wagon lots of times."

"I do not think I quite understand you," faltered Mrs. Muchmore. "I do not know who Patience is!"

"Why, she's the little girl over to the hospital!"

And Patty, forgetting that she must hold her head very still on account of her hat, which was very much too large, nodded toward the building. Down dropped the hat to her shoulders, completely hiding her fat face. She hastened to push it back, crimson with embarrassment, stealing a quick glance at her hostess. But no one could have told from Mrs. Muchmore's face but that she was accustomed to having her visitors' hats extinguish them like a pair of snuffers.



"MISS PATTY HAWKINS," HE ANNOUNCED.

By a few words she succeeded in making Patty feel at ease and was listening with interest to the story of Patience.

"Tell her when you see her again that I shall be very glad to take her to the woods to-morrow, if it is pleasant; and my man is never too busy to drive me," she added, with a smile.

Patty, full of excitement, ran home to her mother, forgetting the borrowed hat.

"Why, Patty Hawkins," she cried, angrily, giving her a little shake, "where have you been with my hat?"

"I've been to call on Mrs. Muchmore," answered Patty, eagerly, "and she asked me to come again."

"Well, you are the most presumptionest child I have ever heard of." And Mrs. Hawkins, forgetting vexation, burst into peals of ringing laughter. "Asked you to come again, did she? Ha, ha, ha! with that hat, ha, ha, ha! And those mitts, ho, ho, ho! If you ain't the very funniest looking figure I ever see. You're enough to make the most melancholy woman in the world go into hysterics, ha, ha, ha!"

"She didn't laugh at all," cried Patty, the tears starting to her eyes, "and she's going to take Patience to ride."

True to her word Mrs. Muchmore called for Patience the next day, and it seemed to her, as she sat by the child's side, that she looked at the trees, the fields and the river for the first time, for she saw them through the eyes of the little invalid, whose pleasure was too deep for words.

"It's more like Heaven," she said once, in answer to a question from her new friend. "No, ma'am, I never saw any thing so beautiful before. I got hurt when I was a little bit of a thing, and I never could walk since. Oh! no, I don't mind it so much now, because I can sit in a chair by the window. It is hard to stay in bed all the time."

That was only the beginning of many drives for Patience, and before the summer was over she went for a week to Mrs. Muchmore's cottage by the lake, and Patty was invited to go with her and help amuse her. When she had once begun, Mrs. Muchmore found it hard to know where to stop, and the little inmates of the children's hospital began to think of her as their good fairy.

"What a pleasure it must be to be rich," said a friend to her one day.

"Yes," answered Mrs. Muchmore, "but I never found it out until this summer, and I shall never cease to be grateful to Miss Patty Hawkins for helping me to see the real blessedness in it."—Louise T. Brooks, in Congregationalist.

CLEVER MEN'S WIVES.

An Article Which Could Not Possibly Interest Mr. Austin.

"You seem much absorbed in thought," said Mrs. Austin to her husband, as they were seated in the parlor after tea, the other evening. "What is the subject?"

"I have been reading an article on the subject of Clever Men's Wives."

"I don't see how that can possibly interest you any."

"Hey?" said Mr. Austin, turning sharply around.

"What did the article say about clever men's wives?" continued Mrs. Austin, without heeding the ejaculation. "Did it say that they were clever, too?"

"No, it didn't. It said they were generally dull."

"Then if the reverse of the proposition be true, what a smart wife I must be," laughed Mrs. Austin.

"I don't understand you, Mrs. Austin."

"No, you never did understand me," replied Mrs. Austin, vehemently. "You are always boasting of your smartness and cleverness, but I have never seen it yet. And you hint in a vague way that I am dull. I will admit that I was very dull once."

"When was that?"

"When I married you. Oh, you needn't start to your feet. I'm going to have my say about this thing once. I too have read about the clever men, as they are called, and the kind of lives their wives led. There was Bluebeard—he was a clever man, I suppose. Killed every wife he had except the last one, and she was clever enough to finish him. Byron ran away from his wife and never returned. And there was Lot, who didn't earn his salt, so that his poor wife was compelled to turn herself into a pillar of it, or there would have been none about the house; and Peter, Peter, what's his name, who put his wife in a pumpkin shell, and kept her—while he sat around her rooms telling how smart he was; and now you want to set yourself up for a clever man and hint that your wife isn't up to your level. But I am up to you, John Austin, and I tell you now"—

But when she looked around, John had fled.—Texas Siftings.

—A French paper announces that successful experiments with navigable balloons have recently been carried out at the Meudon Arsenal. After a number of failures M. Renard has succeeded in constructing an electric motor of seventy-horse power, of very small dimensions, weighing only four hundred and eighty kilogrammes, and working for ten hours. It is believed that with the aid of this invention the problem of navigating balloons may be finally solved.

THEY'VE GOT HOME.

And This Is a Sample of the Way in Which They Entertain Each Other.

"Why, is that you?" cries the first woman as they meet on the street.

"And is that you?"

"Just got home?"

"Yes."

"So'd I. Have a good time?"

"Beautiful!"

"So'd I. Splendid time. What'd you see?"

"Every thing."

"So'd I. Gain any?"

"Five pounds."

"So'd I. Baby sick?"

"Yes."

"So was mine. Have any mosquitoes?"

"Lots."

"So'd I. Hate to come home?"

"Yes."

"So'd I. Make lots of friends?"

"Yes."

"So'd I. I just cried when I left. Did your trunks get smashed?"

"Yes."

"So did mine. Isn't it horrid? Did your dresses wrinkle?"

"Awfully."

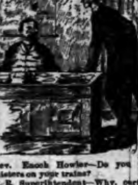
"So'd mine. Got a girl yet?"

"No."

"Neither have I. Isn't it dreadful? Well, good-bye."

"Good-bye."—Detroit Free Press.

NO RESPECT FOR THE CLERGY.



Rev. Enoch Howler—Do you pass ministers on your trains?

R. R. Superintendent—Why, certainly. Just stand along the road somewhere and fifty-four trains will pass you every day.—The Jury.

According to the Necessity.

It was the day of the late unexpected water famine in Englewood. In the house of a man on Yale street there was only half a gallon of the precious liquid, and the youngest member of the family just in from a game of crack-the-whip was preparing to wash his hands.

"Remember, Tommy," said the father, "the water in that pitcher is all there is in the house. You are the smallest of us and your share of it ought to be less than any one else's."

"It doesn't go accordin' to size," replied Tommy, pouring half the contents of the pitcher into the wash-bowl, "but accordin' to the dirt."—Chicago Tribune.

A Nice Pair.

Brown and Smith (on a jag, meeting Jones):

Brown (with a misty recollection of poker parlance)—I sh-ay, Jones, ain't we a good pair to draw to?

Jones (acquainted with the game and knowing their several capacities)—Yes, you are; and a very easy pair to fill.—The Jury.

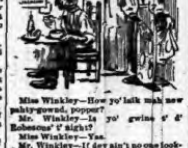
His Error.

Peddler—(in a conciliatory tone)—I presume those lovely children in the yard are yours, madam?

Madam (frigidly)—I have no children.

Peddler—Pardon me; since I see you more closely I see that the brats could not possibly be yours.—Judge.

DRESSY DEPO-ITORIES.



Miss Winkley—How yo' laik mah new pahty-gownd, popper?

Mr. Winkley—Is yo' gwine t' d' Robesons' t' night?

Miss Winkley—Yas.

Mr. Winkley—If dey ain't no one lookin' aftah suppah, conceal a couple ob hams in dem sleeves an' fetch dem hoam.—Judge.

Justifiable Rudeness.

Mr. Smallpurse—I never saw you act so rudely as you did with Mrs. Tourist. You plied her with questions about her summer trips, one question after another, so fast that she got entirely out of breath trying to answer them. What did you do it for?

Mrs. Smallpurse (who had to spend the heated term in the city)—I didn't dare give her a chance to breathe, or she would have asked where I went this summer.—N. Y. Weekly.

A Different Thing.

"Come, dear, just because he has ceased to love you, you must not sit down and cry. On the contrary, you must look your brightest and prettiest. Remember that there are just as good fish in the sea as ever were caught."

"Yes, but auntie, it wasn't because he was good that I loved him. It was because he was bad."—Munsey's Weekly.

A Recommend.

Mrs. Kimper (to New Boarder)—I'm glad to know that one of my former boarders referred you here. He spoke quite strongly in praise of my house, understood you to say.

New Boarder (who came for a purpose)—Yes; he said he lost twenty pounds in the six months he boarded here.—Puck.

An Easy Place.

"Hullo, Bill," said Tramp No. 1, "whatcher going to do for the winter?"

"I've got a place in the post-office."

"What do you have to do?"

"Keep an eye on the police, so's I won't get put out."—Puck.

Prosaic.

Miss Rosalie—Isn't it too bad that the leaves have begun to turn?

Trotter—Oh, I don't know; it's only natural. Even a worm will turn.—Judge.

Why She Wanted Him to Chew.

Mrs. Jones—You should make your husband quit chewing tobacco. If you ask him to do it I reckon he will do it.

Mrs. Brown—I dare say; but I'm not going to ask him to quit chewing tobacco.

"When your husband kisses you don't the taste of tobacco make you sick?"

"Yes; but I want him to keep on chewing tobacco all the same. He kisses three or four more women, and the tobacco makes them sicker than it does me, for they haven't got used to it yet, like I have."—Texas Siftings.

Forced Upon Him.

The poor man was inconsolable for the loss of his wife.

"I will do it now," he cried, in a tone of anguish that melted his hearers' hearts; "I must do it!"

They tried to dissuade him from all thoughts of self-destruction, but their efforts seemed in vain.

"No, no!" he cried. "'Twas she alone that kept me from it. I can not avoid it since she is gone. I'll have to go to work at last myself!"—Philadelphia Times.

—Famous Guest (author of "Elsa Robsmere")—"What is it, my little dear?" Host's Sweet Child—"Mamma says you're a sufferer from in-som-ni-a. Does it hurt?" "Oh, no. Insomnia means inability to get to sleep." "Is that all? Why don't you do like mamma does? She reads herself to sleep, and I'll ask her to lend you the book. It's called 'Elsa Robsmere.'"

Just Beyond Our Reach.

Dear, the sweetest songs are those
That have never yet been sung,
And the noblest deeds of all
Are the deeds we have not done.

And the tenderest prayers are those
That our lips have never said;
While the saddest tears of all
Are the tears we have not shed.

Dear, the joy we found the best
Was the joy that first has flown,
And the truest loves are those
Which our hearts have never known.
—[illegible], in Galveston News.

Before and After.

When he came to woo her,
This was what he said,
As he raised the shining tile
From his manly head:
"How is sweet Evangeline?"
Here he'd bow, polite,
"Sweetest thought, and dearest own,
How's my pet to-night?"

Now he, like a plunger,
Calls in different tone,
As he stalks about the house,
Seeking "sweetest own:"
"Eva Jane McGiggin Smith,"
Shouts he in a pet,
"Where in thunder are you now!
Is supper ready yet?"
BY HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW.

Parables.

Side by side within my garden,
Grew a flower and a weed;
Oft I watched the flower unfolding—
To the other gave no heed.
So the sun smiled and the rain fell
On them both alike, and lo!
Soon the weed's rank growth was spreading
O'er the hidden flower below.

Once, to me, was told a story
Of the sea-girt Netherland—
How the waters forced the dyke-works,
Sending death on every hand:
Yet the first rift was so tiny—
Had they noticed where it lay,
That a man's hand on the crevice
Would have held the sea at bay.

Trifles oft do make or mar us—
If to faults we give no heed,
They rise up and dwarf us—spreading
Rankly as the garden weed:
Stifling in their growth, the nobler
Instincts that our natures know,
Till, like tended flowers, uncared for,
They in dust are trampled low.
—J. Torrey Connor, in the Home.

"Shut That Door."

The winter time is drawing near,
The chilly season of the year
When snow knee-deep
Will wildly sweep
And blizzards loudly roar;
It won't be very long until
In voices loud and deep and shrill
The boys we'll tell
With wildest yell
To Shut!
That!!
Door!!!

Oh, you who deal with men, beware!
If for their friendliness you care,
Take heed that you
Shall not pursue
The methods of the bore;
And mind you everywhere you go,
In calling on the high or low,
Strive with your might,
Secure and tight
To Shut
That Door.
—Chicago Post.

The Woman.

Only a little brown woman she,
Man of the world and profligate he,
Hard and conscienceless, cynical, yet
Somehow, when he and the woman met,
He saw what other there is in life
Than passion-fretting and careless strife;
There came resolve, and a sense of shame,
For she made as his motto but "Faith and Fame."

The world is foolish: we never truth;
We're barred by the gates that we built in youth;
Two were they, surely, and two might stay,
But she turned him into the better way;
His thoughts were purified, even when
He chafed and raged at the might-have-been;
He learned that living is not a whim,
For the soul in her entered into him.

He fights, with others, to win or fall,
And the spell of the Woman is over all.
Bravely they battle, in their degree,
For—"The woman I love shall be proud of me!"
And man and woman, the one in heart,
May be buried together or buried apart,
But the strong will battle in his degree,
For—"The woman I love shall be proud of me!"
—Stanley Waterloo, in America.

From My Window.

I know in yon wide, winding distance sleeps
The shallow river; in its limpid deeps
The woodland shadows, thence departing never
In dreamy undulations sway forever.
I see its silvery gleaming here and there,
Amid the sunlit foliage of the trees;
Upon my lifted brow the kindly breeze
Breathes softly, and the coming eve is fair.

I lift my eyes: the sun is in the West,
And o'er me like a realm of dreamy rest
Lean down—how fair! the mild and tender skies,
And in their brooding deeps what mystic beauty lies!
How faint the outline of that southron fold
Of sunlit clouds, far-streaming into mist!
How high those moving Alps, snow-robed, and rolled
Where'er the breeze's wanton fancies list!

I see the orchard shadows as they stream,
The wild birds' call I hear, the small wings' gleam
Flits by me o'er the fields of scented clover
Till lost to sight—the sweet, wild flight is over.
Over for them: to them the night, the nesting
On some high limb where moonlit foliage maketh
A walled retreat, whose towers the morning taketh
When night hath struck her thousand tents of resting.

O happy birds! [illegible] nature [illegible] and [illegible] loned
A fancy wild, an impulse all impassioned,
A heart like yours within my human breast,
That fain would fly to some far realm of rest?
Give me not, God, long years of large successes,
Of gain or fame, but these—to me more dear;
A hearth my own, leal friends, a life sincere,
Each gift of Heaven that not claims but blesses.

Thou fondest birds! give me the grace to find
The hush of soul—the just and equal mind
That makes itself no rule to measure others—
The sense of limitation that o'er smothers
The sense of [illegible]. The wild birds on Thee call!
Let me, like them, find favor at Thy feet
That I, at least, [illegible] so incomplete,
But Thy Divine completeness covers all!
—Mary T. Downey, in Chicago Inter Ocean.

MANAGING A HUSBAND.

Ethel Carroll's Experience at Such Was Not Pleasant.

"SOMETIMES think that you hate me."

"Well—I—I—do hate you."

As the words passed Ethel Carroll's lips she caught her breath and a frightened expression replaced the angry gleam that flashed from her dark eyes.

"I am glad that you are honest enough to confess your aversion to me," replied Robert Carroll, frigidly, without glancing toward the woman whom he had vowed to love and cherish. He rushed from the house, and, hurrying to the depot, jumped upon the train and was soon speeding toward the neighboring city of N——.

"Thus ends my dream of happiness," he muttered, bitterly. "Ethel is evidently striving to excel Mrs. Edwards in the art of 'managing' a husband, but," pulling his blonde mustache fiercely, "I do not choose to be managed—in that way." The words "I do hate you"—kept ringing in his ears. "She shall never say such words to me again," he muttered, determinedly.

"I am glad that you have made up your mind to take that European trip, Carroll," said Mr. Johnson, the senior member of the firm. "You are better fitted to attend to business of that sort than a man of my age. When do you start?" he asked, as he turned to leave the office.

"I have engaged passage on a steamer that leaves P. St. wharf early to-morrow morning."

"Nothing like promptness in matters relating to business," said Mr. Johnson, approvingly.

During the hour that followed Mr. Johnson's departure Robert wrote a number of business letters, then penned the following missive to his wife:

"ETHEL: I shall leave for England early to-morrow morning. You will receive a liberal allowance during my absence. An interview, under the circumstances, would prove painful to both of us. Good-night and good-bye. "ROBERT."

"Those dreadful words!" she murmured brokenly. She felt half tempted to follow Robert to his office and ask him to forgive her. She hesitated, and the next moment her evil genius whispered that Robert had been "very aggravating," and also hinted that her own dignity would be compromised if she yielded one inch of the advantage gained.

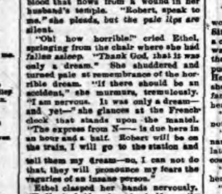
"Mrs. Edwards would call me a weak little fool," declared Ethel, emphatically. "She says that Mr. Edwards would not think of opposing her now." Ethel's brown eyes twinkled and a silvery laugh echoed through the room. "Fancy Robert behaving like Mr. Edwards. He is so little, so meek and so—so extremely insignificant." A sober expression crossed her countenance. "There are husbands and husbands—and also different ways of 'managing' them," she concluded, meditatively.

The afternoon seemed very long to Ethel. She roamed restlessly from room to room and glanced at the clock every few minutes to assure herself that the hands were really moving towards the hour of Robert's home coming. Seating herself in the commodious depths of a great easy chair she clasped her hands above her head and mused on the events of the morning. Suddenly she hears the rumbling of a train of cars. She sees Hadley's bridge in the distance. The train moves rapidly—it is the evening express from N——. The engine dashes against an obstruction—quivers like a human being in distress, and the next instant the whole train lies wrecked upon the rocks forty feet below the bridge that spans the ravine.

"It is Robert's train and I have not taken back those cruel words!" wailed Ethel, wringing her hands.

"You do not care, you hate him," whispers a mocking voice.

"Robert is dead, and he will never know," cried the young wife, as she ran towards the scene of the accident. She dashes down an almost perpendicular precipice. Sharp stones pierce through her thin slippers and her hands are torn and bleeding. She throws herself beside a prostrate figure. "Robert, Robert, speak to me," she cries, frantically endeavoring to staunch the blood that flows from a wound in her husband's temple. "Robert, speak to me," she pleads, but the pale lips are silent.



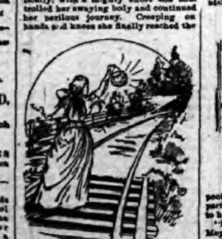
"I DO HATE YOU!"

"Oh! how horrible!" cried Ethel, springing from the chair where she had fallen asleep. "Thank God, that it was only a dream." She shuddered and turned pale at remembrance of the horrible dream. "If there should be an accident," she murmurs, tremulously. "I am nervous. It was only a dream—and yet—" she glances at the French clock that stands upon the mantel. "The express from N—— is due here in an hour and a half. Robert will be on the train, I will go to the station and tell them my dream—no, I can not do that, they will pronounce my fears the vagaries of an insane person."

Ethel clasped her hands nervously. "Hadley's bridge is only half a mile from the village," she mused; "it will be a relief to know that the bridge is all right and, in case there should be any thing wrong I can use one of my Chinese lanterns for a signal."

Twilight was rapidly merging into the somber shadow of night when Ethel reached the bridge. "Every thing seems to be all right," she whispered in a tone of relief. As her eyes became more accustomed to the gloom, she saw what appeared to be a huge body lying across the track near the center of the bridge. Lighting a match, she glanced at her watch. "No time to go back for help. What shall I do?"

The precious moments were passing. With a prayer upon her lips, Ethel stepped upon the bridge. Slowly and cautiously she felt her way. Once she glanced downward through the cross beams that connected the post of the bridge—she almost lost her footing; with a frightened exclamation she clutched the rough post frantically; with a mighty effort she controlled her swaying body and continued her perilous journey. Creeping on hands and knees she finally reached the object that lay upon the track. Miscreants had fastened two immense logs to the rails with strong wire. Ethel almost shrieked in her despair. "I must warn them," she panted. It seemed an age to Ethel ere she reached the opposite end of the bridge. "Thank Heaven that this is safe," said Ethel, taking the little lantern from her pocket. It was the work of a moment to light the small candle, and as the ruddy glare illumined the space around Ethel, she became aware of the fact that her slippers had fallen from her feet, her hands were bruised and bleeding, and, as she raised the lantern above her head, a red stream slowly trickled down the white arm from which the sleeve had been rudely torn during her perilous journey across the bridge.



SHE SWUNG HER LANTERN FRANTICALLY.

A rumbling noise is heard, then a sharp, quick whistle sounds upon the air. Ethel realizes that there is not a moment to lose. A hundred yards have been traversed; onward she flies like the wind; the train rounds a curve in the distance; she swings her lantern frantically; the engineer does not see the signal; the brave little woman will be run down. She totters onward, waves the lantern wildly and shrieks aloud in her agony. The signal is seen. A moment later train hands and passengers crowd around Ethel, who has just sufficient strength left to tell about the bridge ere she sinks into unconsciousness.

"There is no time to lose," muttered Robert Carroll as he hurried toward P. St. wharf. Thrusting a dime into the grimy hand of a newsboy, he snatched a morning Herald and boarding the steamer went directly to his state-room.

At last the moving of freight, hurrying of footsteps and clanking of chains ceases and the great mass of iron and wood moves slowly out of the dock and, guided by a busy little tug boat, moves majestically down the harbor towards the broad Atlantic.

Robert leaves his state-room and going on deck paces restlessly to and fro. At the end of half an hour he takes the Herald from his pocket and glances listlessly through the columns. Suddenly his face blanches, he utters an exclamation, passengers who are in his vicinity gaze at him curiously. The words:

"TERRIBLE CALAMITY AVERTED: HEROISM OF THE YOUNG WIFE OF ROBERT CARROLL, OF THE FIRM OF JOHNSON, CARROLL & CO."

danced before his eyes; with a mighty effort he read on, when his eyes rest upon the words:

"She thought her husband was on the train and went through the terrible ordeal to save him."

He jumped upon his feet and rushed into the presence of the captain. A few words explained the situation and an hour later Robert Carroll was transferred to the returning tug which carried him safely to the wharf from which he had taken his departure earlier in the day.

The hours that followed seemed like an eternity to Robert Carroll. As the train approached Hadley's bridge, he pictured in his imagination the slender form of his young wife moving cautiously across the long stretch of trestle work to save the life of the man whom she declared that she hated.

"Poor little girl," he murmured, tenderly.

With eager footsteps he traversed the well-known pathway. His heart beat tumultuously as he crossed the threshold of the cosy little sitting-room. Ethel met him with a glad cry: "Oh! Robert! I knew that you would come back to me," she exclaimed, joyously. "Forgive me, Robert, and forget if you can the cruel words that have caused us so much suffering."

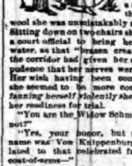
Ethel raised her hands, all bruised and scarred and gently stroked her beautiful brown tresses now so thickly streaked with silver.

Before the expiration of another week Robert Carroll and his wife were on their way to Europe, and Ethel never knew that Robert had planned to go alone.—M. A. Thurston, in The Home.

THE WIDOW SCHMIDT.

A Court Scene in Berlin—Servantgalism at the German Capital.

[Translated from the German for this paper.]



THAT proceedings in a German court of justice do not differ materially from those in our own courts, will be seen in the following sketch from a German journal. The accused was richly dressed and very stout. Although not all wool she was unmistakably a yard wide. Sitting down on two chairs she requested a court official to bring her a glass of water, as that "brazen creature" out in the corridor had given her so much impudence that her nerves were unstrung. Her wish having been complied with, she seemed to be more composed, and fanning herself violently she announced her readiness for trial.

"You are the Widow Schmidt, are you not?"

"Yes, your honor, but my maiden name was Von Knippenburg. I am related to that celebrated family. Our coat-of-arms—"

"We have nothing to do with that here. You are in court now."

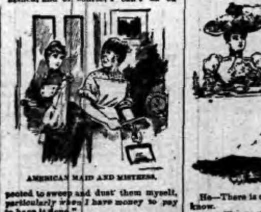
"For the first time, your honor, and you have no idea of the humiliation it is for a Von Knippenburg, who owns three houses on the Lange Strasse, not to speak of bank stock."

"Madame, we have nothing to do with the financial affairs of those who are brought before us. You are accused of having assaulted Johanna Meyer, a servant girl in your employment."

"If your honor keeps a servant girl you must know all about it yourself. There is a great fuss made about German Social Democrats and Nihilists, but they are angels of light compared with the German servant girls. The papers says that the Socialists tamper with the soldiers, but they don't run after the soldiers half as much as these servant girls do. I don't see why the authorities should try to suppress the Socialists and let the servant girls do as they please."

"Please confine yourself to the case on trial."

"Yes, your honor, as I was going to say, I have nine rooms elegantly furnished, and of course, I can't be expected to sweep and dust them myself, particularly when I have money to pay to have it done."



AMERICAN MAID AND MISTRESS.

"Do you admit having struck Johanna Meyer on the head with a poker?"

"It was the parlor poker, and has a nickel plated handle."

"Do you regard a nickel-plated poker as the proper means of communicating your desires to your servants?"

"If your amiable wife, may it please your honor, kept a servant, you wouldn't have to ask such a question. We people of property ought to stick together and help one another out when servant girls try to climb on our necks."

"Once more, madame, will you please state the facts in regard to this case?"

"All right, your honor; on the first of October I hired this good for nothing creature. If I had known what sort of an impudent thing she was, and what an appetite she had, and how many military acquaintances —"

"No personalities, madame; continue if you please."

"I was real good to her, but that's all thrown away on such reptiles. There is barracks full of soldiers on the next block, and whenever I needed her she was promenading the streets hanging to a soldier's arm. One evening my sister, the high-born Baroness Knippenberg von Kuhschwappel-Kuhschwappel Mottenburg and a friend, the Baroness Kreutzmillonen von Donnerwetter—"

"Madame, we do not care to hear the pedigree of your family."

"After the high personages had supped sumptuously, my high-born sister, the Baroness Knippenberg von Kuhschwappel-Kuhschwapple Mottenburg, said she needed some beer, so I pushed the electric button for Johanna. The more I pushed the less she came, and finally my sister and her friend had to leave without the beer. Just think of my mortification, me, a lady of birth, owning three houses on the Lange Strasse, and not one of them has got a mortgage—"

"Confine yourself to the question at issue."

"Well, I sat up, just to see how long that reptile would stay away. About eleven o'clock here she came traipsing home with a soldier, and I had to go to the door to open it for that piece. I says to her: 'Good evening, Miss, have you had a pleasant time?' The saucy minx gave me back talk. She allowed she always had a pleasant time when I wasn't around. I don't know how I came to have the poker in my hand, but I tapped her on her fool coconut a time or so, just to teach her how to talk to a lady of quality."

"That will do. You have, no doubt, had provocation, but that is no excuse for violating the law. I will now examine the witness, Johanna Meyer."

Johanna, an impudent-looking girl, testified to materially the same facts.

"Johanna," said the judge, "you have acted very impolitely toward this lady."

Johanna, tossing her head: "I don't see any lady. None of the ladies I have ever seen mistook a calico apron for a handkerchief, as she does all the time."

Judge—The accused is fined ten marks—for not hitting Johanna a couple of times more with the poker, added his honor sotto voce.

"Call the next case."

FORTUNE'S FAVORITES.

Their Movements Recorded by "The Help Ladies' Elite Gazette."

The following personal paragraphs are from the latest issue of the Help Ladies' Elite Gazette:

Miss Kate McCarty, cook lady to a woman on Fifth avenue, returned on Wednesday from a visit to her old home in Ballyshannon, Ireland. She was cordially received by the local nobility, and reports having had a good time.

The beautiful Miss Nora Cleopatra O'Donohoo spent the summer in the Adirondacks. Miss O'Donohoo is parlor lady for Mrs. T. Vandergoold, and whether at home or enjoying a well-earned vacation, is sure of any number of beaux.

Miss Clytemnestra Bridget Geoghegan, general house lady at Commodore Fletcher's, reports having a very enjoyable outing at Saratoga, from which fashionable resort she returned on Monday last. While there she carried on a delicious flirtation with the Commodore's son, who did not recognize her as one of his mamma's help ladies.

Miss Betsy O'Halleran came back the early part of this week from Atlantic City as brown as a berry. She became engaged three times during her stay. Miss O'Halleran has resumed her duties as wash lady to Mrs. Baxter, of 65 West Steenth street, where she will be pleased to entertain her many friends.

Miss Kitty Venus McMonaghan spent three weeks at Bar Harbor, acting as nurse lady to Mrs. T. Thompson Brewster. She said she had as much fun as though she had gone in an unincumbered capacity, as she jabbed the infant with pins so unmercifully that it yelled when she approached, so that its mamma had to nurse it all the time, thus affording Miss McMonaghan an opportunity to enjoy herself.

Miss Esmeralda Maginnis will be led to the altar in about two weeks by Mr. Dennis Rafferty. Miss Maginnis met Mr. Rafferty while accompanying Mrs. Forundred to Deer Park last summer, in the capacity of lady's maid.

Miss Annie Belle O'Brien, second kitchen lady for a woman on Fifty-seventh street, remained at home this summer, but promises herself a trip to Europe early next season. She will be accompanied by her sister, Judy O'Brien, who is a wash lady for another person on the same street.

The engagement of Miss Mary Anne McGilvray to Mr. Jerry Emerson O'Toole is announced. They will be married at St. Bridget's, and the woman Miss McGilvray has been assisting in the capacity of cook lady has promised to provide a trousseau which will be the envy of all the help ladies in the country.—W. H. Siviter, in Munsey's Weekly.

Not So Monotonous.

First Tramp—Life is awful monotonous, ain't it, Cully?

Second Tramp—Not with me. Not long ago when I was rich and I went into a saloon I slammed down the money. Now when I go into a saloon the barkeeper slams me down and kicks me out.—Texas Siftings.

At the Menagerie.

Drysdale—Say, Brown, that giraffe is a fool!

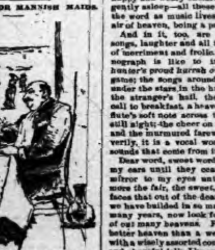
Brown—Why a fool, my boy?

Drysdale—Why, he is eating!

Brown—And why shouldn't he eat?

Drysdale—If I had that neck I'd economize in eating and only drink wine.—Judge.

A QUESTION FOR MANNISH MAIDS.



He—There is one thing I'd like to know.

She—What's that?

He—What do you girls say when your collar-button slips down the back of your neck?—Life.

Domestic Economy.

Daughter—Pa, you remember you told me to save all the pieces of string from store packages and wind them into a ball.

Economical Pa—Yes, my dear, did you?

Daughter—Every bit, and it makes the cutest little ball you ever saw. Now I'm going to knit a handy little bag to put it in. Give me a dollar and fifty cents for zephyr, please.—N. Y. Weekly.

A Strange Coincidence.

Mrs. Wood B. McAllister—Dear, isn't it lovely? I see here by a little article that the Vanderbilt children are sent to bed regularly every evening before eight o'clock, and are made to rise before seven. Isn't it cute?

Mrs. Habber-Dasher—Yes—so like my own little darlings!—Light.

HORN HEARD FROM.

An Epistle Throwing Considerable Light on Oklahoma Affairs.

JACKLEG JERRY McCORD, of Pike County, Mo., is in receipt of the following letter from his brother, Horn, now in Oklahoma. We reproduce the epistle because it throws an interesting light on the social movements of the new and growing Territory.

CHAMPION CITY, Oct. 4, 1890.

DEAR JACKLEG: I take my pen in hand agin to inform you that there is a heap of privation here. You kain't git no whisky for love nor money.

The fruit crop is poor, but the bury business is lively.

That there wooden leg of Hank Parsons' has got him into trouble agin. Th'other day a fire broke out in the timber between the hours of two o'clock and Jerkwater creek, and Hank sashayed down to help put it out. Som'ers or ruther the wooden leg caught fire and was fatally burnt. Also, Hank was, too.

Jim-Tom Purdy lost his wife last week. His neighbor on the next claim east was a Texas man. You see, Jim-Tom was allers braggin' what a mighty peart woman his wife was, and this went on till the Texas man got tired of waitin' for Mrs. Purdy to become a widder in the natural order of events, and shot Jim-Tom. Beats all how little patience some people has got.

During a secret session of the grand jury, yisterday, Bud Thorn was ketched with six aces up his sleeve. His excuse that the mustard plaster on his back drawed 'em up there wouldn't go down. Funeral this afternoon. The way of the transgressor is hard.

There was considerable sport at the shivaree Saturday night. You see, after the boys strung up Hi Springer for som'pin or ruther, Ike Cuddyhunk pestered around the widder considerable. He stirred her soft soap and shot some feller who came foolin' round, and so proceeded till the widder began to smell a rat, so to speak. Seein' she loved him, Ike tried to crawfish out of it, which harrowed the lady's feelings till she pintedly 'lowed he'd marry her or stand a suit for breach of promise. He done it.

Wall, of course, the boys aimed at doing the square thing by the happy couple. So, long toward midnight, two, three dozen of us sashayed over with cow-bells, tin kettles, bull-rattles, sleigh bells, a buzz-saw on a pole, and so forth. At 11:10 we opened up with these various instruments, and unreserved yells. At 11:12 the bride opened up with a scatter-gun loaded with nails and sech, and the groom come out with another. At 11:[illegible] a right lively foot race opened up and continued clear down to the creek. A tourist from the East, who went along to participate in the merrymakin', hain't been seen since.

Sympathizin' people in various communities are sending aid here. Wisht you'd send me some. Send it in gallon jugs in a box, about four of 'em, and mark it "hardware."

My love to all the folks. No more at present, from your lovin' brother,

HORN W. McCORD.

P. S. That there leg of Hank Parsons' is the same one that got fast in the bridge one Christmas eve, and kept Hank there till morning with the thermometer down below Cairo.—Tom P. Morgan, in Munsey's Weekly.

A TOAST TO CAMPERS.

Adirondack Murray's Rhapsody on the Pleasures of Camp Life.

There is no other word in the vocabulary of our language so suggestive of rare and pleasant conditions of living as camping. It is more than a mere word; it is a symbol as well. It stands for a class of experiences so fresh, novel and healthy that it is beloved by imagination and memory alike. It is so truly a mirror to many of us that in it, as in a glass, we see trees, the shores of lovely lakes, the banks of quietly-flowing rivers, wooded islands around which the waves run crossingly, beaches of gleaming sand, and ranges of lofty mountains. In it, also, are cabins of bark, camp fires that crackle and blaze and flare red lights high up amid swaying branches and widely out in a great circle through the dark forest. And in the word are faces and forms that have been companions with us in our forest wanderings, some of whom are with us to this day, and other ones that are not now with us, nor will they ever be again on this earth, and, alas! we know not where they are.

Not only is it a word for the eye, but it is equally a word for the ear. For in it are the sighing of zephyrs, the soft intoning of slow-moving night winds, the roaring of strong gales, the moaning of tempests and the sobbings of storms amid the wet trees. The loon's call, the splash of leaping fish, the panther's cry, the pitiful summons of the lost hound, the slashing of deer wading among the lily pads, and the soft dripping of odorous gums falling gently on the pine stems, listening to which in silence and sweet content, we, who were lying under the fragrant trees, like happy and weary children, have fallen gently asleep—all these sounds live in the word as music lives forever in the air of heaven, being a part of it.

And in it, too, are human voices, songs, laughter and all the happy noises of merriment and frolic. No other phonograph is like to it. The happy hunter's proud hurrah over the captured game; the songs around the camp fire under the stars in the hush of evening; the stranger's hail, the guide's strong call to breakfast, a heavenly sound—the flute's soft note across the water on a still night; the cheer on reaching camp, and the murmured farewells at leaving; verily, it is a vocal word, and all the sounds that come from it are melody.

Dear word, sweet word, keep vocal to my ears until they cease to hear and mirror to my eyes until they see no more the fair, the sweet, and the honest faces that out of the dear old camp, that we have builded in so many parts for so many years, now look forth upon me as of out many heavens. For if there be a better heaven than a well-placed camp with a wisely assorted company of honest and cheerful folk, I know not how to find it in my imagination nor that passage of revelation that tells of it.

To all that camp on shores of lakes, on breezy points, on banks of rivers, by sandy beaches, on slopes of mountains, and under green trees anywhere, I, an old camper, a wood lover, an aboriginal veneered with civilization, send greeting. I thank God for the multitude of you; for the strength and beauty of you; for the healthiness of your tastes and the naturalness of your natures. I eat and drink with you; I hunt and fish with you; I boat and bathe with you; and with you by day and night enjoy the gifts of the good world. Kneeling on the deck of my yacht, stooping far over and reaching low down to fill to the brim the old camping cup that, longer than the lives of some of you, has never failed my lips, and holding it high in the bright sunlight, I swing it to the circle of the horizon, and standing, bareheaded, with the strong wind in my face, I drink to your health, oh, campers, whoever and wherever ye be. Here's health to you all and long life on the earth and something very like camping ever after.—Springfield Republican.

HONEST AND BRAVE.

When President Cleveland three years ago launched upon Congress that memorable annual message, in which he so clearly and forcibly urged a reduction of the tariff from a war revenue standard to a basis consistent with that of peace and the practical needs of industry and trade, many Democrats shook their heads and declared his action premature and unwise. Was not [illegible] judgment sound?

No!

President Cleveland was far-seeing and absolutely right. Being an honest and intelligent statesman, he followed no popularly decided policy, but bowing to the convictions of truth and duty, openly and honorably avowed before the whole people the courage of well-formed opinion regarding a measure of vital public importance.

He was so right as he was nobly brave. Time has grandly vindicated the stand he took for Tariff Reform, and today the most popular name in the United States is that of GROVER CLEVELAND.

STICK FAST, McKINLEY.

Mr. McKinley, Congressman, non-re-elected, is reported as saying—"That not twenty per cent. of the votes cast at the past election were influenced by the tariff, and that the true policy of the Republican party was to stick to protection as formulated in his bill."

Stick fast to that, William!

Don't reduce or amend the McKinley tariff law.

Make it higher and still higher, if you can.

Pass the Force bill, and any and every other measure repugnant to justice and popular freedom that [illegible] the recent political revolution may suggest.

Do your worst!

It will only be driving additional nails into the coffin lid of the Republican party.

The day is approaching when all your bad legislation will be scattered to the four winds. The people have spoken.

But, William, permit us to query—If the McKinley tariff did not cost the Republicans one-fifth of their votes, is not its author, both as a statesman and politician, a marked failure of the age?

The first and great Napoleon met his fatal Waterloo.

The [illegible] of blessings over the land, the McKinley tariff, came nigh upsetting Wall street bulls, bears and lambs.

Democrats of the West and South will not look with favor on any suggested Presidential candidate other than Grover Cleveland.

When Governor Hill of New York and Governor Abbett of New Jersey take their seats in the United States Senate, new life-blood will be infused into that worthy body.

The Independent Republicans of Philadelphia have resolved to maintain their organization until Senator Quay is either deposed or resigns from the leadership of the Republican party.

The Democratic majorities for Congressmen in the State of New York aggregated 80,000, in Massachusetts 8,000, in Iowa 7,000 and in Illinois 24,000. The issue in all was strictly national.

A PRESENTMENT AGAINST PLAINFIELD.

The Grand Jury Finds Fault with that Awful North Avenue Nuisance.

The Union County Grand Jury came into court on Saturday with fifteen new indictments, making the aggregated number of ninety-six for the term. Judge Van Syckel discharged them with the thanks of the Court.

The Jury made a presentment against the City of Plainfield for the outrageous condition of North avenue near the Netherwood railway station, which is seldom in a passable condition owing to its [illegible] being under water.

Two presentments were found against the City of Rahway for the bad condition of the municipal roads.

A presentment was found versus George Neill, an Elizabethport justice-of-the-peace, for having admitted an arrested bookmaker to bail while the prisoner was still on the Elizabeth race track.

Ballots Made Worthless by Signatures.

Some of those whose ballots were rejected in the Fourth Ward seemed to consider it necessary to record their signatures on the envelopes they deposited. As that was a "distinguishing mark" the votes were worthless.

Voted a Receipted Bill for Mr. Ivins.

An absent-minded man who wanted to vote for Ivins for Councilman approached the second ballot box with a Democratic ticket in one hand and a receipted bill in the other. He voted the receipted bill and [illegible] the ballot away among some business documents in his pocket book, then boarded his train for New York happy in the thought that he had voted for a good man.

Now the Pitcher is [illegible].

"Cyclone" Ryde, who pitched great ball against the Plainfield Crescents during the last of the season, made his debut on the dramatic stage in the comedy "A Cup of Tea," at East Cambridge, Mass., a few nights ago. He appeared in the third act of "Othello," and in the comedy [illegible] "Virginius," taking the part of Iago in one and the title role in the other presentation. "Cyclone" pitched wonderful ball all Summer, and it is possible he may be in a National League or Brotherhood team next season.

A Letter That Explains Itself.

Messrs. Loomis & Ross:

GENTLEMEN: Understanding that some objection has been made by the property owners on Sandford avenue to the use of the property I have rented from you as a Retreat for [illegible] invalids, I will say that although I have heretofore had many such cases under my care I have not to my knowledge disturbed the community in any way, nor do I propose or expect to do so now, and I will authorize you to state that at the end of one year from this date should a majority of the property owners on Sandford avenue consider that the Retreat is objectionable, and will so notify me, I will vacate the premises at the expiration of the first term of the lease. Should you so desire you may have this put in legal form and present to me for signature.

Very truly yours,

NO CHANGE IN THE COUNCIL POLITICALLY.

ARTHUR GALLUP RE-ELECTED BY 78 MAJORITY.

RAYNER CUTS DOWN THE PARTY VOTE AGAINST HIM.

IVINS BEATS HIS TICKET, BUT GLENN BEATS HIM.

THE DAILY PRESS ALONE PUBLISHES THE NEWS.

Plainfield's municipal election of the year 1890 is over, and—all join in hoping—the best men have won. THE PRESS again proves its right to the title of "Plainfield's Only Newspaper," by publishing exclusively the full detail of the vote as below.

As will always happen under New Jersey's ballot law, it was a quiet election day and no one knew until the votes were counted, what was the result. The most prominent feature of the vote of the people was the re-election of Arthur T. Gallup in the fourth ward. He ran far ahead of his ticket, showing how eager were even his political enemies to honor him because of his brave stand against the policeman with the foul mouth.

In this connection a passing word may be said regarding the principal cause of Mayor-elect Gilbert's small majority. It was believed by the people that he was an admirer of ex-policeman Carey. Maybe he was before he knew the man. But THE PRESS is assured on the best of authority, that Mr. Gilbert will have nothing more to do with him. The tale of the other candidates is told below:

THE COUNCIL CLAIMS THE STREETS

And Approves the Ordinance Contesting Water-Works Encroachments—The Water Supply Company Clings to Its Old-Time Charter and Says the City Can't Abridge Its Rights—Counselor Marsh Makes a Fight in the Courts—City Fathers Closing Up Their Year of Work.

The Plainfield Common Council, at its regular meeting for December, Monday night, adopted an important ordinance which effectually prohibits the Plainfield Water Supply Company, and everybody else, from laying pipes, whether for water, gas, or what not, along the public streets, and from digging up the streets for the purpose of laying pipes, without the consent of the Common Council. Under this ordinance the Council strengthens the supreme right which it already possesses of saying just where and how pipes may be laid; and anyone, whether person or corporation, who lays any pipes, or digs up the streets for laying them, without first securing from the Council the necessary consent and the required designation of what streets may be used and how the pipes shall be laid, must pay various fines of $100, must instantly restore a disturbed thoroughfare to its former condition, and must heed the further provision compelling him to contribute to the city treasurer the sum of $20 for every day he neglects to take up his pipes and put the streets again in order. The ordinance of course contains its own provision that it shall not tend to prevent the repairing, and the tearing up of streets to repair, gas and other mains already laid.

But besides establishing the prerogative of the Council to protect the city's streets against the encroachments of designing people, the proposed ordinance goes a step further in bringing the Water Supply Company to terms.

No one—it says—may construct and operate in Plainfield a system of water-works without at the same time providing an adequate system of sewerage to carry off waste water and other sewage refuse from the waste pipes of its water-works system. But—it adds—and herein lies a power for compelling the Water Supply Company to adopt in its entirety the old Water-Works Company's contract or one as advantageous to the city—this shall not interfere in any way with the fulfilling of the contract already granted to the Water-Works Company of Plainfield.

Whether or not the ordinance will stand the contest of controversy in the Courts remains to be seen. In the opinion of Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, who addressed the Council at considerable length on the subject, the question of the validity of the ordinance hinges on the charter granted to the Plainfield Water Supply Company in 1869. This—he said—was a charter of very extraordinary powers, and virtually gave its possessors the right to lay pipes for water-works wherever they saw fit. In 1874, the Water Supply Company having meanwhile failed to continue in active organization, a supplement to the charter was secured from the Legislature, stipulating that none of the Company's prerogatives should be injured by any past neglect or lapse. In 1872 the perfected charter of the City of Plainfield was granted, giving the municipal authorities power to regulate and to prevent street obstructions and to govern similar matters. The question whether that city charter limited or repealed in any way the Water Supply Company's charter was one which possessed argument for both sides. The Water Supply Company would probably claim that the charter rights could not be repealed by corporation ordinances; and there could be no doubt that it was as impossible for the city charter to annul the charter of the Water Supply Company as it was for it to annul the charter of the Jersey Central Railroad. The city charter had the power to make reasonable regulations, but this ordinance sought to do more than that. It virtually attempted to repeal the franchise of the Water Supply Company. The Common Council had undoubtedly the right to say in what manner water mains should be laid but that it had a right to say "You shall not lay any mains" was a question. The clause of the ordinance which was most likely to be sustained by the courts was that which stipulated that no water-works system should be constructed unless at the same time a system of sewerage should be provided to carry away the surplus water, so that the public health and safety should not be jeopardized. The Council had the right to prevent a nuisance. But Counselor Bergen, of the Water Supply Company, had assured Mr. Marsh that the purposes of his Company had in them nothing to affect injuriously the value of property or the best interests of the city. Mr. Bergen thought that the city had a misconception of the Company's objects, and had decided views to the effect that it was impossible by ordinance to repeal the Company's charter or to lessen its powers. If the ordinance should become a law, Mr. Marsh concluded, and an attempt should be made to ride rough-shod over the city, the men in the employ of the Company would probably, under the ordinance, be arrested. And if the Company intended to contest the ordinance, they would probably secure an injunction against the city. In any case, it was probable that with such an ordinance as this in effect the city could have the question determined more favorably than if no such ordinance had been adopted; and that, he understood, was the object of the Water Board in presenting the ordinance.

After passing the ordinance on its first and second readings, the Council ordered it engrossed and advertised, preparatory to its third reading and final passage.

The presentment found against the city by the Grand Inquest of Union County, just before adjournment, last Saturday, was read by City Clerk Coward. It called attention to the impassable condition of North avenue near the Netherwood railway station, owing to the road being constantly under water, and reproved the city for its permitting such a state of affairs to continue. The Jury demanded that the nuisance be abated before the next term of Court.

Councilman Smith reported that the whole trouble on North avenue was caused by obstructions on the property of the Railroad Company and Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company, who had repeatedly been notified by the Street Committee that they must remove the obstacles. The matter was referred to the Corporation Counsel, who was instructed to communicate with the Jersey Central Railroad Company and the Land Improvement Company, with a view to abating the trouble.

A number of communications which had been received in response to the city's advertisement in The Electric World for bids for the construction of an electric street railway, were read. The letters all dealt with glittering generalities, and developed nothing of importance. They were mainly from electric "experts" and others who desired to be consulted concerning the construction of a local rapid transit railroad, and whom the city "ought to engage, if it wanted to do well." An effort was made to have these attractive propositions and "advantageous advantages," as a contracting engineer wrote, referred to a special Committee, but the Street Committee was given charge of the matter by the following vote:

For Street Committee — Councilmen Johnston, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore and Smith—5.

For Special Committee — Councilmen Hetfield, Jenkins, Moffett and Spangenberg—4.

The one noteworthy communication was from Manager Moore, of the Plainfield Electric Light Company, who wrote that his Company were ready to furnish the motive power for an electric street railway whenever any reputable concern should construct the road and get it ready for operation.

The Overseer of the Poor, J. Oakley Nodyne, presented his report for the quarter just concluded. During the past three months $778.87 had been expended for the relief of the poor. Forty families had been assisted, and forty-three were now on the roll. During the first quarter of the current fiscal year $930.49 had been spent, and during the second $1,095.63, making a total of $2,794.99 for the three quarters.

The City Judge W. R. Codington, reported 96 arrests for the past three months. Fifty-seven prisoners had been fined, seven sent to jail, six acquitted, and [illegible] sentences had been suspended. The total amount of fines for the quarter was $426.

The following nominations for firemen were confirmed: Wm. H. [illegible], Joseph Wyckoff, Henry C. [illegible], and Nicholas Seeder, to membership in Hook and Ladder Company No. 1; Wm. Chamberlain, Wallace F. Miller and Henry Benner, to membership in Plainfield Engine Company No. 2; and Robert H. Lowrie, Robert F. Murray and A. F. Vosino, to membership in Alert Hose Company No. 1.

On motion of Mr. Newhall the Mayor and Treasurer were authorized to borrow, by notes, in anticipation of taxes for 1890, $1,000 for the use of the Fire Department, $400 for the use of the Poor Fund, and $1,500 for the use of the General Fund, the notes to fall due Dec. 31.

Councilman Smith introduced an ordinance, which was adopted on its first and second reading, and ordered engrossed and advertised, to reduce the salary of the Tax Collector from $1,300 to $1,000 per year, to be paid in monthly sums of $80.

An ordinance to change the official grades of Plainfield avenue, West Fourth, West Fifth, West Sixth, and Liberty streets, was referred back to the Street Committee for examination.

The ordinance compelling every pawnbroker in Plainfield to pay to the city an annual license fee of $50 was adopted on its third reading and final passage.

The motion of Councilman Newhall, to have all out-standing bills against the city presented at an adjourned meeting of the present session, so that the old scores of the dying year might be wiped out as far as possible, and no old bills be left to hamper the new Council, was carried.

Councilman Hetfield, at President Moffett's request, occupied the chair during the entire evening. The absent Councilmen were Messrs Dunham and Gallup.

The Council adjourned to meet Monday evening, Dec. 29. A special meeting will be held during the month to adopt certain ordinances on their final passage.

A BRAKEMAN MAIMED FOR LIFE.

First a Foot Crushed, Then a Hand Ground to Pieces on the Track.

George Stapels, a brakeman of the crew of drill locomotive No. 31, will never use his good right hand again. He was coupling cars Tuesday afternoon when a chain to which he was clinging broke, and he fell on the track. His arm lay across one of the rails, and the wheels ground his hand to a jelly, while his forearm was severely crushed. He was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital. His home is at Dunellen, where he has a wife and family.

Stapels has been peculiarly unfortunate of late. Only a short time ago he had a foot crushed on the rail, and from that injury he was just recovering when the present accident occurred. He was confined to his home for five months and had only been out a few weeks. His wife has been sick abed for three years.

Wanted to Vote Ballots by the Quantity.

The seven men whose ballots were rejected at the Second Ward poll exercised their prerogative of citizenship in peculiar fashion. One voted two Democratic tickets in one envelope; two others deposited two Republican ballots each; a fourth voted two straight Democratic tickets and one Republican ticket scratched; a fifth inclosed in his envelope one Republican and two Democratic ballots, all three straight; a sixth voted a Republican ticket with everything scratched off. The two opposing political parties lost about evenly in this way.

New Officers of Warren Mission.

At the annual meeting of the Warren Union Mission Society, held Monday night in the chapel, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President and Superintendent—Edward C. Pease.
Vice President and Assistant Superintendent—M. Marvin Dunham.
Secretary—Edward B. Ryder.
Treasurer—Frederick Moss.
Librarian—George Squier.
Assistant Librarian—Albert Bodine.
Organist—Charles D. Wheeler.
Trustees—Edward B. Ryder, of the Crescent Avenue church; David A. Ryan, of the Methodist Episcopal church; Frank H. Gardner, of the First Baptist church.

The Electric Light Company Catch It.

President Kirkner, Secretary Murray, Trustees Babcock and Probasco, Principal Bulkley and Clerk Clark, were present at the regular meeting of the Board of Education, Tuesday night. The question of lighting Irving School led to a lengthy discussion.

Mr. Murray said it was an outrage that the Electric Light Company, in the face of the ten-year contract to light the streets, just granted them by the city, should refuse to extend their wire to the school building unless the Board paid full cost of construction. Not only would the Company receive an income from the light used in the school rooms, but also because the assembly room would then be rented for entertainments in that section of the city. The new Chapel now being built by the Methodists, would undoubtedly use the light also. Yet, in spite of such sources of income to the Company, it was trying to compel the tax payers to build its line. The other members of the Board protested in the same plain and emphatic way; and the matter was referred back to the same committee with orders to continue the fight and never surrender.

The Board's proportion of the expense of assessing and collecting the taxes, amounting to $420.94 from April 1, was ordered paid. Chairman Murray of the Finance Committee, reported $2,515.66 as the balance in bank.

The Committee on Teachers reported the engagement of Miss West, "of Massachusetts," a teacher of seven year's experience in public schools. "To correct a discrepancy, and equalize the pay roll," Mr. Murray moved that $1.66 per month be added to the salaries of each of the teachers in the Irving School. It was so ordered. The Board then adjourned for two weeks.

"The Jingling of the Guinea Helps the Hurt that Honor Feels."

But there are deeper hurts than those that honor feels. The seeds of disease are sometimes deeply sown, the system is secretly and surely giving away to some deep seated malady. Especially among females are many sufferers from inflammation, weak back, sick headache, nervousness and kidney diseases. For all these ailments peculiar to women no surer remedy than Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, prepared for their special benefit, can be found. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper and faithfully carried out for many years.

A Letter from Dr. Lewis.

TO THE PUBLISHERS OF THE DAILY PRESS:—The report of my sermon on Thanksgiving Day of last week, as published by you on the 28th ult, and the head lines placed over the note of Dr. Carroll, in your issue of the 29th, call for further explanation. If the report of my sermon had been an accurate stenographic one, no need for explanation would have arisen. The list of "Titles of Religious Bodies," showing the divided state of Protestant denominations, which was the main point in my sermon, was obtained from Dr. Carroll's office, and from this, the facts touching that part of my sermon were taken. That list with Dr. Carroll's permission, I beg to present herewith for publication, if you care to use it. In regard to the statistics, which I did not consider an important part of my sermon, they were, as Dr. Carroll has said, taken from a Lutheran Year Book, loaned me from the Census office. They were presented by me as sufficiently accurate for my purpose, but not as the "official figures" from the census bureau: I never stated in public or private that they were such "official figures". At the request of your reporter, I furnished him the figures, without knowing what connection he was to place them in, or what he had written concerning my sermon. The injustice done me by the head lines placed over Dr. Carroll's note is too apparent to need recital. Such a heading asserts that I said what I did not say.

The central thought in my sermon was this: Protestantism claims to be a reformatory movement, out from the Roman Catholic church. It differs from Roman Catholicism, upon the fundamental point of "church authority", and claims to build its faith upon the "Bible alone". As such, Protestants ought "to be one"; as Christ prayed that his followers might be. It is the duty of the hour for Protestantism to "become one", in order to justify its secession from the Catholic church, and to prevent its overthrow, or its re-absorption by Catholicism. To emphasize this end, I presented the facts concerning the divided state of Protestant churches, and urged them to unite, according to the prayer of Christ.

Yours truly,
A. H. LEWIS.

The following is the list referred to by Dr. Lewis, which will be instructive and interesting to the readers of THE PRESS:

BAZAAR OF HOLIDAYS.

A Good Time Promised Among the Booths Representing the Festivals of the Year.

The Bazaar of Holidays to be held at The Crescent, Dec. 9, 10 and 11, will be in every way a charming affair. Various Booths will represent Feb. 14, Feb. 22, April and May 1, May 30, and July 4; also the first Tuesday after the first Monday in December, and Thanksgiving and Christmas Days.

The cooking class, in spotless aprons and caps, will be ready with flour, milk, eggs, butter, and other ingredients, to receive and fill orders while you wait. They need no further introduction to the Plainfield public since the Canopy Tea held last Spring.

The Art Gallery will be of very special attraction. Go and see why.

A hot supper served each evening.

At one of the booths will be found a few specimens of pressed flowers from Palestine. Already they have been spoken for, but will not be disposed of till the evening of Dec. 9, so that everybody may have an equal chance.

Music and other special attractions will be provided every evening.

All articles of fancy work and donations in money may be sent to Mrs. Cahoone, 164 Broadway, or to The Crescent Tuesday morning.

What the Rev. Mr. Mitchell's "Letter" Has to Say of General Interest.

Dr. Carroll continues to be in much demand for pulpit services, both at home and abroad.

Charlie Hurlbut, [illegible] McGee, Minnie French and Clara Burt were home for Thanksgiving.

Mr. E. P. Stevens, 65 Grandview avenue, has returned from Denver somewhat improved in health.

Mrs. Joseph Yerkes and son, George have returned home from a month's visit in Northern New York.

Mr. James McGee preached last Sunday morning in our church at Westfield, to the delight and profit of all who heard him.

None should overlook the respect and delicacy of taste which prompt the communicant to approach the Lord's Table with ungloved hand.

Mr. George Cornwell, our Assistant Sunday School Superintendent, did most efficient service as Chairman of the Committee on Ushers, during the Mills meetings.

It is remarkable that Dr. Hurlbut can accomplish so much labor with no apparent strain upon his health. We all wonder how much longer he can do two or three men's work.

Recent news from Kansas City informs us of the very critical condition of Mrs. George C. Martin. Her long and painful illness has been a great sorrow to her numerous Plainfield friends.

The plans for the North Plainfield chapel are most beautiful, and have been accepted by the Committee. It will cost $6,000 to erect the chapel.

The Monroe Avenue chapel is now inclosed, and its architectural beauty is admired by all who see it. Go and see it, and, if you have not already, you will want to take some stock in that enterprise. Look at the populous unchurched district in that part of the city, and you will commend the wisdom of our church in going to that people.

The following marriages have been solemnized by the pastor: Oct. 26, Benson M. DeWitt, Port Jervis, N. Y., to Jennie H. Martin, Deckertown, N. J.; Nov. 5, Cornelius A. Haring, Pearl River, N. Y., to Roberta Adams, Plainfield; Nov. 20, Edmond Walter, to Stella D Camp, both of this city; Nov. 24, Geo. A. Clark, Lowell, Mass., to Cora Weldon, Plainfield; Nov. 26, Joseph L. Hummer, Newark, to Laura Force, North Plainfield.

Our Sunday school is in a most flourishing condition. It could not be otherwise with so excellent a Superintendent and efficient corps of devoted officers and teachers. 346 were present last Sunday, and seven new scholars were admitted. So large a school with less than one dozen non-professing Christian pupils speaks most eloquently of the work of that faithful band of teachers.

Gratitude Publicly Recorded.

I wish to express my thanks to my friends and neighbors for their sympathy and help so kindly tended to me during my late bereavement. I may have failed sufficiently to thank them at the time, and I take this means of showing my appreciation of their many kindness.

ADAM DEALAMAN.

A Plainfielder Protests.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

Can not the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals cause the arrest of Dr. Phelps? Certainly this disgusting brutality ought to be at an end. Experiments on living animals are vile things. In the name of common humanity cannot this sort of torture be made such an expensive amusement for the torturer that he will be obliged to give it up? It is nothing but wanton cruelty, for some time it has been well known that very little if any good has ever been done by these beastly experiments. And a man who will practice them as Dr. Phelps has deserves the condemnation and contempt of any decent community.

JUSTICE.

Plainfield, N J., Saturday, Nov. 29, 1890.

Another Big Investment in Plainfield Realty.

Mr. Brownell, a wealthy [illegible] of Brooklyn, has purchased The Crescent building on Broadway. He is the same investor who bought "Oakwood," another part of the Evans estate. The value received for both properties was something over $100,000.

AS VIEWED BY A FELLOW-MINISTER.

Mr. Mills's Success due to the Wisdom of His Methods—No by Appeal to the Emotions, but by Assaults on the Reason.

The Rev Charles Bayard Mitchell, pastor of the M. E. church, writes as follows in the New York Independent of Nov. 20: "Plainfield, N. J., one of the most beautiful of New York suburban cities, is at present favored with the most extensive revival in its history. The results have reached such large proportions that it seems to the writer the readers of THE INDEPENDENT would be interested in knowing something of the marvelous work of grace.

"Several months ago the pastors of all the Protestant churches in the city (the two Protestant Episcopal churches excepted), united in extending an invitation to the Rev. B. Fay Mills, evangelist, to come to this city and hold union revival services. Mr. Mills accepted the invitation, and, assisted by Mr. Greenwood, who has charge of the music, held the first service Monday evening, Nov. 3. The conditions were favorable for a successful meeting. The pastors and churches in this community are on exceptionally friendly terms. There are no un-seemly rivalries, and the best of feeling prevails among the Christian people. Preparatory services had been held in all the churches, and the Christians were thoroughly aroused before the union services began. Another favorable condition was the fact that it had been several years since any extensive revival spirit had been present in the community, and hence there were large numbers of unconverted people to be reached.

"The pastors, in selecting an evangelist, made a wise choice. Mr. Mills is just the man to be influential in such a cultured community as this. He is a Christian gentleman, who impresses all with his unfeigned consecration to his work. He is scholarly, cultured, fluent in speech, guarded in his statements, chaste in all his utterances, yet presents his message with a fervor and abandon of enthusiasm which shows an utter forgetfulness of self. His success is due to the strength of his preaching and the wisdom of his methods. His sermons command the attention and respect of the most thoughtful, yet are easily understood by the children. He does not attempt to be a teacher, rarely offers any exposition of his text, but devotes his energies to persuading men to act, and act at once, on the knowledge they already possess. He does not argue about the Gospel, but presents the great saving truths for their immediate reception. There is little, if any, appeal made to the emotions; but most tremendous assaults are made upon the reason. While all classes are reached, it is to be noted that large numbers of thoughtful business and professional men are led to decide for Christ. Mr. Mills does not possess the slightest eccentricity. There is nothing peculiar in his appearance or address. There is nothing about the man to attract others to himself. The hearer forgets the speaker and thinks only of the message. Although in every service the deepest seriousness and solemnity prevail there is never any excitement nor responsive ejaculations. In the calmest, yet in the most solemn manner, men are led not only to stand up in the great congregation and thus manifest their determination to become Christians, but they are urged to confess Christ with their lips.

"At the present it is not known how many have given their hearts to God, and possibly only eternity will reveal the vast good which has been done; but it is safe to say that many hundreds have started in the Christian life, and the whole church has been stirred to a deeper consecration. The whole community has been so aroused that the largest church edifice, accomodating fifteen hundred people, will not now hold the crowds. In order to accommodate the people, services are held frequently for men only, and at such times the church is crowded with that class. Last Tuesday business was practically suspended, and many commuters to New York remained at home. All day services were held, and the day was spent as a second Sabbath.

"One of the most hopeful signs in connection with this work is the deep interest manifested in the Sunday schools. In most of the Sunday schools all of the pupils having reached the age of accountability have given their lives to Christ. The whole community is shaken as by the power of God, and this favored city will long feel the power of this religious uplift. The pastors and churches feel their responsibility; for on them will now fall the task of shepherding and nursing the hundreds of lambs which have come to their fold.

"These lines have been written for the purpose not only of making known the great joy and thanksgiving of this people, but also for the purpose of commending Mr. Mills and his most devoted and efficient co-laborer, Mr. Greenwood, to other communities. It has been the writer's privilege to be associated with many of the leading evangelists of this country, and, without saying any word of disparagement concerning others, he wishes to express the opinion that Mr. Mills has no superior as an evangelist either in the strength of his preaching or in the effectiveness and wisdom of his methods. He is a young man of strong physique, husbanding wisely his resources, and giving promise of long and effective usefulness in the work to which he has devoted his life. His preaching is free from all sensationalism, and in his methods there is nothing of clap-trap. From what I have thus far seen I am confirmed in believing what others have told me of the permanency of his work. He is a man whom God has raised up for this especial work, and his wonderful success is sufficient evidence that no eccentricity of speech nor peculiarity of method is essential in awakening in men an interest in religious things. Plainfield will long thank God for the labors of Mr. Mills, and hundreds of the redeemed will point to him as the human instrumentality in bringing them to crown and palm-branch."

Woman's Work in Church Debt Cancellation.

The Ladies' Aid Society of All Saints' Episcopal church at Scotch Plains, have accomplished much good, and have succeeded in reducing the bonded debt of the church to the point where it now stands. "This"—comments a member of the church—"is a noble work and worthy of every encouragement, as there is nothing which so retards the usefulness of a church as being compelled to drag along a heavy load of debt. Through every report, whether favorable or otherwise, Miss Kyte has kept steadily pushing forward to the goal set before her, and it is mainly owing to her praiseworthy efforts and influence that the indebtedness has been so largely reduced. Her big book, containing all the canceled bonds and the name of every contributor, is very interesting."

The officers of the Ladies' Aid Society are: President—Miss Kyte; Treasurer—Mrs. Geo. Kyte; Secretary—Mrs. Chas. Richardson.

Borough Property Changes Hands.

Among the recent real estate transfers recorded in Somerset county are the following:

Wm. R. Codington and wife to Nicholas Van Winkle, property in North Plainfield, $407.

Mary A. Thorn and husband to J. Y. F. Benson, land in North Plainfield, $800.

John Carey and wife to James H. Harris, property in North Plainfield, $215.

John Carey and wife to Peterson Anderson, lot in North Plainfield, $215.

THE EXHIBIT IN DETAIL.

Marvelous Work Displayed by the Amateur Photographers of the Plainfield Club.

(From The Press of Nov. 29.)

As promised in its issue of last Wednesday, THE PRESS appends herewith a more detailed account of the splendid exhibition of the Plainfield Camera Club produced entirely by amateur taste, skill and labor.

Prominent among Chas. H. Davis's photographs are two pictures representing the interior of an olden time living-room. The large chimney with its open fire-place forms the back-ground, before which are figures of two women costumed in the dress of our grandmother's days. One is standing beside a large spinning-wheel at work, yet evidently listening intently to the story which her companion is reading, as she sits beside her. Look at the second picture. The reader leaning forward, holds up the book, pointing to the pages to emphasize her words, while the spinner, stopping work, eagerly scans the indicated paragraph. The posing of these figures is exquisite, and every detail, add to the intrinsic worth and charm that is conveyed to one's mind by these works of art. "Four consecutive negatives" show most emphatically how painstaking Mr. Davis must be, to obtain such uniform results, for every photographer knows how uncertain his work is likely to be even with the best of care.

O. S. Teale shows both ingenuity and artistic taste in the construction of the mount upon which he displays his exhibit. Three rough boards are gilded, and bound together by cleats, riveted with large headed wrought iron nails. The effect is decidedly pleasing, and shows off his "Kodaks" admirably.

G. Harry Squires shows some admirable views of Southern scenery. A jungle near Jacksonville, Fla., is one of the gems. Several pictures of the landscape on Jekyl Island, Georgia, are deserving of praise and very interesting, showing as they do the world renowned shell road, lined by immense trees, from which hangs in luxurious growth, the graceful Southern moss.

A. J. Gavett's selections from Kennebunk-port, Maine, are gems—every one of them—the combination of rocks and water views, are most charming, showing careful study, and a thorough knowledge of the beautiful in art.

Robert Rushmore shows many "snap shots" taken during his trip abroad, and they certainly excite much interest in the many that stop to admire them.

Harrold Serrell has one of the most pleasing exhibits. His "Buttermilk Falls," and "Foot ball team," are excellent and "Nature's Mirror" was considered worthy of publication by E. H. & T. Anthony in their Photographic Bulletin.

Lemuel W. Serrell is particularly happy in his selections. He does not confine himself to any particular line, being equally as successful with either groups, marines, landscapes or combination pictures.

J. Hervey Doane's views of Asbury Park attract considerable attention, and deservedly too.

John E. Stewart has a fine frame of pictures, but the interest in them would be greatly increased if some explanation was appended, as is done by many of the other exhibitors.

The Gotth [illegible] her and [illegible]—show a combined frame. The best pictures are [illegible], although the others are far above mediocrity.

Geo. H. Babcock's "Kodaks" are very interesting. One especially so, representing a group in Western Virginia.

Dr. H. H. Lowrie shows various landscape and water views, some of which are exceedingly fine.

W. H. Lyon, Jr., shows but nine pictures, one of which, however, may be considered a curiosity as it was taken on the first day of April 1890, and shows the City Park covered with nearly a foot of snow. He also exhibits one of the finest blue prints that was ever seen.

Geo. E. Greenleaf's snap shots deserve mention especially one of a group of boys playing at leap-frog.

S. C. Crane, although young in the art, shows ability and promises to rival before long some of his more experienced companions.

Foster Milliken has a number of fine pictures, comprising waterfalls and rock studies. Dr. Willis Anderson displays two fine enlargements from photographs taken by him. Ernest Marx's sporting and racing scenes, are beyond comparison. He stands alone in that particular branch of the art, and it seems almost incredible that horses moving at the rate of a mile in less than two minutes, could be taken so distinctly.

It would be almost an impossibility for THE PRESS to enumerate every picture worthy of mention, in this artistic display. They must be seen to be properly appreciated, and everyone should seize an opportunity for a visit during the coming week, as the exhibition will positively close next Saturday evening, December 6.

Now's The Time.

Never put off till to-morrow
That which needs doing today;
If you do you may find to your sorrow,
Too late, that you've trifled away

The golden opportunity of a lifetime. If those who complain of weakness and debility, have hacking cough and pain in the side or chest, poor appetite, broken sleep and other symptoms of a general decay of vitality, would promptly procure Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and take it as directed, they might throw off the disease that threatens them, and soon regain a hold on the health they are surely losing. Consumption may be averted, if prompt measures be taken, by the use of this standard remedy. Let those who have reason to feel that their general vitality is running low, be wise, and do something for themselves at once, for delays are dangerous. "Golden Medical Discovery" is warranted to benefit or cure in all cases of disease for which it is recommended, or money paid for it refunded.

—The prediction made by hunters that this would be a good year for rabbits has been fully verified, say the sportsmen. The cotton-tails were never before known to be so numerous, and the hunter indeed has had poor luck who could not almost any time during the season so far capture six or eight cotton-tails in a day's hunt.

"NO MORE DOCTORS FOR ME!
They said I was consumptive, sent me to Florida, told me to keep quiet, no excitement, and no tennis. Just think of it. One day I found a little book called 'Guide to Health,' by Mrs. Pinkham, and in it I found out what ailed me. So I wrote to her, got a lovely reply, told me just what to do, and I am in splendid health now."

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S Vegetable Compound conquers all those weaknesses and ailments so prevalent with the sex, and restores perfect health.
All Druggists sell it as a standard article, or sent by mail, in form of Pills or Lozenges, on receipt of $1.00.
For the cure of Kidney Complaints, either sex, the Compound has no rival.
Send stamp for "Guide to Health and Etiquette," a beautiful illustrated book.
Mrs. Pinkham freely answers letters of inquiry. Enclose stamp for reply.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh [illegible]!

—A substantial new flagging sidewalk has been laid around St. Mary's church. The gutters have also been curbed.

—D. W. Littell has been awarded the contract for the plumbing, gas fitting and tin work of the Crescent League's new club house.

—The members of Hook & Ladder Company No. 1 were photographed, with their truck, at the corner of Park avenue and Eighth street, Thursday.

—A change of advertisement for [illegible] & Co., Newark, N. J., will appear in our next issue. Look out for it, as it will offer special Holiday inducements.

—John F. Evans, for the past eighteen years an employee of the Potter Press Works, and an attempted Republican candidate for Councilman, has gone to work for the Pond Machine Tool Company.

—Remember that the Casino Club will keep their exhibition open every evening during this week, so that purchasers of tickets that have not had the opportunity to use them may still avail themselves of the privilege.

—The plate collection in the Crescent Avenue church, Sunday morning, amounted to $837. Some who were unprepared to give then, have signified their intention to, and the total will be over one thousand dollars for the Board of Home Missions.

—The newspapers of the State are informing the countrymen of "the legal fact that any one who mails a letter ordering a lottery ticket, or sends a postal card relating in any way to a lottery, is liable to imprisonment for eighteen months, or to be fined not exceeding $500, or both."

—The first occasion when The Casino is thrown open to the public, will be on Thursday, Dec. 18. Amateur theatricals will be given for the benefit of Grace church building fund, of which further particulars will appear in these columns. The musicale at The Casino on December 9, is only for subscribing members of the Metropolis.

A Scotch Thanksgiving Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Scott, of West Third street, gave a reception to a number of their Scotch friends, Thanksgiving Eve. After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts had been duly honored by the quaffing of harmless beverages, singing became an especial feature. Some of Scotland's choicest gems were sung. Dancing was engaged in to the stirring strains of Wilson's band, till the "wee short hour ayont the twal", when, after singing "Auld Lang Syne", all departed for their various homes, happy to meet, sorry to part, and soon to meet again.

Not only Stole, but Threatened His Mother.

Charles Donohue, the fifteen-year-old son of James Donohue of West Third street, was arrested early Sunday morning charged with threatening to cut his mother's throat. The boy ran away from home about ten days ago, but was captured in Newark and returned to his parents. Jewelry valued at $200, stolen from the home of Patrick Dee, was found in his pockets. Mrs. Donohue chided her boy [illegible] for his waywardness, and in return was threatened with a violent death. His father had him arrested. The lad pleaded guilty to the charge, and will be taken before Judge McCormick at Elizabeth for sentence.

To Close up its Affairs.

At a regular monthly meeting of the Middlesex Gun Club, held at Force's Hotel, last Saturday evening, it was decided to wind up the affairs of the club by offering the property for sale and using the proceeds to liquidate the club's indebtedness. This is done partly on account of a notification having been received from the owner of the grounds to vacate the same by January 1, next, as they were wanted for other purposes. The buildings of the club and fence are in good condition, and all the shooting paraphernalia of the best quality and improved make. Bids will be received by the Secretary up to Dec. 8. If not sold then the property will be sold to the highest bidder at auction on December 11 at 3 P. M.

Employes Must Live Near Their Work.

Superintendent Peddle, of the Jersey Central Railroad, has issued an order which has spread unhappiness in the homes of Central Railroad employes from Plainfield to Phillipsburg. The superintendent orders those railroad men who live at intermediate points between the above-named cities to make immediate preparations to move to Bergen Point, Communipaw or some other place nearer to Central's main depot at Jersey City. He has issued this order, he says, because so much delay, trouble and inconvenience has been caused by employes assigned to through runs between Centreville and Mauch Chunk in consequence of their living so far away from their work. Superintendent Peddle wants the men to live where they can promptly respond when called on for services.

Reform Hall.

At Reform Hall Sunday night, after a fervent prayer by Mrs. G. F. Opdyke, the announced speaker, Aaron M. Powell, delivered one of his finished and well-founded addresses. Mr. Powell in a thorough and interesting manner reviewed the temperance question in its various phases, held up to view the terrible evils of liquor drinking and the liquor traffic, urging all to become total abstainers, and to dedicate increased efforts towards awakening public sentiment in hostility to a liquor oligarchy now covering our country with a net-work and endangering home happiness and the best interests of the people. Mr. Powell was listened to with close attention.

The following announcements were made by President Harper:

Regular annual meeting of the Reform Club Thursday evening next for the election of officers.

Sunday evening next, Gospel temperance addresses by Messrs. W. H. Sampson and C. L. [illegible] of Plainfield.

The Bicycle Club in Plainfield's Government.

The Plainfield Bicycle Club stands to-day second to none in the State, as regards number and character of members; its roll bears an even hundred names of bona fide, paying men, of all ages over eighteen, which is the minimum age limit according to the constitution.

Prominent among the active members may be named Mayor-elect Alexander Gilbert, Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, ex-City Judge Wm. N. Stillman, Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed, ex-Mayor of the Borough Dr. J. H. Cooley, Councilmen O. L. Jenkins and Townsend Rushmore, and Councilman-elect Ernest R. Ackerman. The advantages offered for bodily exercise by the addition of the new gymnasium are availed of by the members in large numbers, and the situation of the club house within a half-minute's walk of the North avenue railway station makes it particularly convenient for those who ride to the train in the morning to store their wheels in during their absence in the city.

$500 Reward offered by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for an incurable case of Catarrh.

PERSONALIA.

Thomas Morgan, a brother of ex-Councilman John Morgan, is dead.

Rufus [illegible], Jr., of East Seventh street, has entered Peddie Institute at Hightstown.

The Rev. C. L. Dyson, of Albany, and family, have been visiting their relatives in this city.

Miss Mary E. Norris, of New York city, is spending a few weeks with her cousin, Sadie F. Blyth, at Netherwood.

The Rev. John F. Steen, of New York, with Mrs. Steen spent Thanksgiving with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Currill, of Grove street.

John G. Musgrave, of [illegible] avenue, has purchased a lot on [illegible] avenue, and will soon erect a handsome residence.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Falls, of Prospect place, Brooklyn, are visiting their daughter, Mrs. Fred Haberle, of Manning avenue.

F. H. Martin arrived home from Denver Wednesday evening. He has gained in weight, and looks the picture of health.

The Rev. A. Armstrong of South Plainfield has accepted a call to the Baptist church at Avon-by-the-Sea.—Somerville Messenger.

The names of George White and E. S. Field, of Plainfield, appear in the list of guests at the tenth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bethaw at Bound Brook.

There were twenty-five more added to the membership of the Rev. Mr. Mitchell's church, by profession, Sunday, making a total of sixty in the past two Sundays.

Miss Cora Weldon of Sherman avenue, North Plainfield, and George A. Clark of Lowell, Mass., were married by the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, at the bride's home, Saturday of last week at one o'clock.

Alexander Thorn, Wm. N. Pangborn, John T. Case, Wm. H. VanWinkle, David T. Smalley and Abraham King are the North Plainfield members of the new Somerset county panel of petit jurors.

Twenty-three new converts were immersed by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes at the First Baptist church Sunday. The Rev. Dr. Everett, of Junction, N. J., made an appropriate prayer during the services.

Mrs. Fred Knowland has left Plainfield for a visit with her daughter in Chicago, and Mr. Knowland has gone to New Mexico in the interest of a syndicate that has in view the purchasing of a large number of valuable mines.

Robert Rushmore will give a popular talk to young men at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, Thursday, December 11; and W. D. Murray will tell of "The Land of the Midnight Sun," Dec 18. Reserve these dates.

The sad news was received in this city, Tuesday morning, of the death at Trenton of the father of Stevenson R. Hope, janitor of the Bryant School, and grandfather of Clarkson R. Hope. Old age, 86 years, was the cause of death.

Jennie Houghton was given a grand reception at The Crescent, Thursday. Over a thousand people crowded the building to see and applaud her. An effort is being made to induce her to appear in Plainfield, at least once more.

At the home of the bride's father, D. N. Force, 76 Summit avenue, North Plainfield, Miss Laura Force was married at noon of Thanksgiving day, to Joseph L. Hummer, of Newark. The Rev. C. B. Mitchell officiated. There was a large company present.

Edward Petrie, of Sixth street, a Princeton student, was not injured in the accident at Thanksgiving Day's football match, as reported. He was on the seventh row of seats near the bottom of the "grand" stand, that collapsed, but he miraculously escaped.

Ralph Opdyke, of Broadway, has arrived home from a four-months' trip in Europe. He expected to be absent a year, but the death of Samuel H. Jacobus, whose son was with Mr. Opdyke, called young Jacobus home, and his traveling companion came too.

Their thirteenth child was born to Mr and Mrs. Frederick Deane, of Cedar street, North Plainfield, Sunday night. It was a girl. Of the thirteen, nine are living. They were all born in Plainfield. Mr. Deane is employed nights as a baker, and sleeps in the day time.

J. M. Bingham, partner of the firm of Messrs. J. G. Johnson & Co., wholesale milliners, Broadway, New York, and brother of M. Bingham of this city, sailed Saturday on the Steamship La Bourgogne for Havre, to attend the Paris and London markets. He will return early in January.

The death of Patrick Connolly, uncle of James Connolly and father of Mrs. Peter McDonough, occurred on Monday. Funeral services were held at the home of his son-in-law, 153 West Third street, at 9:30 Wednesday, and at St. Mary's church at 10 o'clock where high mass was celebrated.

The tenth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart H. Whitney, was celebrated at their home on East Fifth street, Monday evening. Only their immediate relatives were present but they numbered a house full of happy folks. Mrs. Whitney is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Force, of West Second street.

The children, grandchildren and friends of Richard R. Coriell, gave him a surprise party, Monday evening, at his home, 8 Liberty street, upon the occasion of his 83d birthday. He is one of Plainfield's very oldest inhabitants. Among those present, was his only living brother, Postmaster Abner Coriell, of New Market. Supper was served and a general good time indulged in.

The First in Plainfield.

A Junior Christian Endeavor Society, the first in this city, was organized in Trinity Reformed church, Monday afternoon. It will consist of young people between eight and fifteen years of age. There was a large attendance, and 53 signed to become members.

Miss Alice Smith was chosen Superintendent, and Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, Assistant Superintendent. An election of officers will be held next Monday afternoon.

He Wouldn't Stop and the Horse Ran Away.

A young but very active politician of the first ward, who is also a member of the Crescent League, fell out of a buggy and had his face run over, the other evening. The girl was driving, and she said: "You must stop, or I'll drop the lines." She waited a few minutes and then dropped them.

In reaching for the lines the young man fell over the dash board and the buggy wheels ran over his forehead and cut it. The horse ran away and the girl jumped out. She was not hurt much although her clothes were torn. The horse and buggy were afterwards found in the woods.

Plainfielders Injured in the Wreck.

Two Plainfielders who yelled for Princeton were injured by the collapse of a crowded stand of seats at the Yale-Princeton foot-ball game at Eastern Park, Brooklyn, Thursday. Edward Petrie, of East Sixth street, a student of Princeton in the class of '93, had a hip severely bruised; and Lawrence VanBuren, of East Ninth street, a Princeton graduate, had his right ankle severely crushed. Both were in the thickest of the crowd, and couldn't avoid getting hurt in that sudden tumble of three thousand people into one big heap.

Arthur Spicer, also of Plainfield, narrowly escaped being crushed by some of the falling timbers.

THE DEADLY OVERHEAD BRIDGE.

Another Brakeman Narrowly Escapes Death at the Fanwood Cut.

Brakeman McGinn, whose home is near Mauch Chunk, was struck by an overhead bridge at Fanwood, on the Jersey Central Railroad, Thursday, and so seriously cut and bruised about the head and shoulders that he had to be taken to Muhlenberg Hospital, where he is resting comfortably under Matron Walrod's kindly care. When the bridge struck him he fell flat on the top of the freight car. Had he rolled off he must have been dashed to pieces, as the train was going at a high rate of speed. The car on which he was standing was an unusually high one, of the refrigerator pattern, and as McGinn was a tall man his head struck the timbers of the bridge squarely. The violence of the blow was sufficient to cause death, and it is a wonder the man was not killed outright. A man of ordinary height, on an ordinary car, would have passed safely under the bridge.

AIMED HIS GUN AT THE FARMER.

A Trespassing Gunner Threatens the Life of a Land-Owner.

Bartell Wormsley, who resides with his family on a farm among the Watchung Mountains, had an experience with a party of hunters Thanksgiving Day that was more suggestive than pleasant. Mr. Wormsley's farm is situated at Smalleytown, about five miles northwest of this city. He has repeatedly put up bills warning hunters against trespassing on his property, but the signs have been as often shot off the trees. Thursday he saw a party of hunters going across a young peach orchard on his land. Among the party was an ex-officer of the Game Protective Society, and a negro, and a man known as Compton. Farmer Wormsley told the parties that he did not allow any one to hunt on his land, and that he wanted them to get off. They paid no attention to him, but continued to hunt. He told them again, when Compton said they were on now and would not go off, at the same time pointing his gun at full cock at Wormsley and telling him not to come any nearer or the weapon might go off. Farmer Wormsley told him to shoot if he dared; he himself was unarmed. Compton then handed his gun to one of his companions, and going up to Wormsley he shook his fist in his face and offered to knock his head off. Compton was finally persuaded by his companions to go away. Wormsley is a quiet man and a good citizen. He went to Borough Magistrate Hardy and swore to the foregoing facts, and a warrant was issued for the arrest of Compton on a charge of pointing a deadly weapon at a person with the intent to intimidate. This is a very serious charge, and Compton will have to explain his conduct before the next court that sits at Somerville, if he is apprehended.

Thanksgiving at Holy Cross.

A large congregation was in attendance at the Church of the Holy Cross Thursday morning, and the services were most impressive. The church was beautifully decorated with sheaves of wheat and other emblems of the harvest-time. The rector, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, was assisted in the services by the Rev. John F. Steen of Ascension chapel, New York, who preached an eloquent and appropriate sermon.

Adjusting the Loss on Mr. Cooley's House.

The insurance companies represented by M. Marvin Dunham have paid to Martin L. Cooley, whose residence in the borough was recently damaged by fire, $2,476.83 as the loss on the furniture. The companies paid Mr. Dunham a compliment by making him their adjuster, instead of sending out a man from New York.

In the matter of loss on the house itself, there is a dispute over the actual damage. The insurance companies' builder and Mr Cooley's builder differ as to the amount which will cover the repairs. A third builder will be called in to help arbitrate the matter.

Plainfield's New Whistle the Best in the State.

Plainfield's new fire-alarm—a mammoth chime whistle twelve-inches in diameter and two feet tall—has arrived in town, and was on exhibition, in one of the windows of A. M. Griffen's hardware store. The whistle has much inherent beauty, as well as usefulness. It is of brass, and its note when sounded, is very musical. The construction of the whistle is such that its tone is very clear, penetrating and far-reaching. It is never annoying, and sounds no louder to an ear near at hand than to one three miles away. It is a very effective fire-alarm and the finest in the State.

The whistle is to be blown by steam, from the roof of the Electric Light Works.

The Crescent League Well Entertained and Well Whipped.

At the Fanwood Club's home, Wednesday last week, the members of the Crescent League were entertained in a royal manner, but in the match games of bowling the visitors were not so tenderly treated.

May Kill the Toads, But the Frogs Remain.

It is at first difficult—remarks a Jersey Central Railroad man—to see what is the relation that exists between toads and railroads. That such a relation does exist,—he adds—is seen in the fact that the railroads are destroying the toads. A man who is not very fond of toads might think that there are already too many of them, although agriculturists do not look at the matter in the same light. The toad is a great eater of harmful insects, and it seems that many localities, especially in the railroad gridironed section of Central New Jersey, the toads are disappearing.

When the young toad is able to jump, its principal amusement is to wander around in cool places. Now, it often happens that after a shower it goes to the nearest railroad, climbs up the bank, and manages to reach the top of the rail, from which it generally falls off on the opposite side. Then it crosses the road and tries to jump over the opposite rail, but, being too small it cannot jump high enough and, in spite of its efforts, is imprisoned indefinitely between the two rails. It hops along the road, but finally, deprived of food and exhausted by its unsuccessful efforts, it dies. A Jersey Central engineer walking along the track near Dunellen, not long ago counted 300 emaciated bodies of toads in a very short space. A story is related of an immense number of toads that fairly blocked a railroad for some distance, the number being so great that the train could make no progress.

These observations, though interesting, need to be generalized before one can admit that railroads are really a cause of the extermination of the race of toads. In any case, it may be counted as certain that, in spite of the mutations of toads, the will exert no influence over the development of railroads. And as long as there are railroads there is bound to be an abundance of frogs.

MUST ROMANISM RULE OUR COUNTRY?

Some Startling Figures from Dr. Carroll's New Religious Census—The Great Need of Protestant Coalition in the United States.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, pastor of the Plainfield Seventh-Day Baptist church, and leader of his denomination throughout the country, preached a powerful sermon at the union service in the Methodist Episcopal church Thursday on "The Union of Protestant Christians as Related to the future of Christianity in the United States."

The cry had already gone forth,—the preacher said—from the platform of the Roman Catholic Convention at Baltimore, that the duty of the hour was to make the United States Roman Catholic. The Roman Catholic newspapers of the land were openly teaching that the next Pope ought to come from America, and then if the powers of Rome and Europe would probably prevent the consummation of this desire the entire church was a unit in its hope of establishing their triumph in America's great republic. The United States was the one country now coveted by the Roman Catholics and the teachings of the leaders of that faith were that they had no longer anything to fear from the Protestants of the Nation, since the Protestants were so disorganized into scores of differing sects. Here are some figures just obtained from the new religious census returns now being compiled by Dr H. K. Carroll of North Plainfield:

The number of titles of distinct religious bodies in the United States, nearly all of which should be classed as Protestants, is 131. Fourteen of the leading Protestant groups are subdivided as follows:

	No. of Sects.	No. of Members.
Adventists	7	110,213
Baptists	13	3,974,380
Congregationalists	1	475,608
Episcopalians	3	499,042
Lutherans	1	1,090,000
Methodists	18	4,787,130
Mennonites	4	100,000
Moravians	1	11,219
Presbyterians	12	1,280,284
Quakers	3	90,000
Reformed	3	277,730
Unionists	2	270,000
Unitarians	7	700,300
Universalists	1	36,780
Total subdivisions	76	Membership..12,872,379

Protestants accord to the Roman Catholics 6,[illegible]. Protestants accord to the Greek Catholics 10,000. The Roman Catholics claim for themselves 10,000,000.

Here was a striking, startling comparison—the one vast church, with its present tremendous organization, and the power of its centuries, behind it, united into one solid army; the other broken up into many divisions and subdivisions. The Roman Catholics were moving unitedly, concertedly, onward with a power against which human forces were well-nigh irresistible. The Protestants, by their disunion, were making Roman Catholic conquest easy. They could not hope, as Christians and as the enemy of this great foeman worthy of their steel, to see such a mighty army overcome except by a Divine miracle such as they had no right to expect from God until they themselves had done all in their power to further an answer to their prayer by answering that other prayer, of Jesus Christ, that they all should be one even as the Father and Son were one.

Dr. Lewis urged, in forcible language that carried conviction with it, the great need of a confederation of all the different Protestant families, as only in such a way could the encroachments of the Roman Catholics on the State, and the United States, and the civil and religious rights of the people, and the utter defeat of Christianity itself in the United States, be successfully defended.

A Pleasure Drive Ends in Death.

The story comes from Bound Brook that James McNabb was out driving with his sister-in-law, Mrs Chas. McNabb, and her six-months-old child, Thursday, when the horses took fright, ran away, killed the baby; seriously, if not fatally, injured Mrs. McNabb, and fractured McNabb's leg.

She Couldn't be Stopped by a Little Thing Like That.

A lady in a party of Plainfield cyclers coming from Fanwood by moonlight, the other evening, was thrown but unhurt. She was racing with a lad when her dress got twisted in her wheel and the accident occurred. One of her skirts was so badly torn that she took it off, threw it over the fence, and mounting her bicycle pushed forward in the race again.

Gone to Somerville, in Devout Thanksgiving for One Quiet Spot.

Dunellen's idea of fun—serenading a newly-married couple until all patience has fled—is said to have driven Mr and Mrs. Wm. J. Hamilton from their pleasant new home in that thriving borough, to the Sabbath quiet of Somerville, where they will hereafter reside. Dunellen's young people are getting ready, it is reported, to serenade another new bride and groom.

The Adventures of Two Fanwooders Who Missed the Train.

G. R. Brown and R. P. Moore of the Fanwood Club, on their way home from a bowl at Elizabeth the other night, stopped off at Roselle for a game of billiards. The contest was so interesting, they missed the last train and started for home on foot along the track. Upon reaching Cranford, Mr. Brown fell asleep on the station platform and Mr. Moore forgetting him tramped on alone. The former subsequently awoke in time to catch a ride home on a freight train. As he rode along he kept a sharp look out for Moore, but saw nothing of him. It is believed that the latter did not go any further than Westfield, that night.

Gas Light on the Jersey Central.

Travelers on the New Jersey Central Railroad must have noticed that in certain of the cars on certain trains, the illumination by gas is quite brilliant—sufficiently so for reading at night. The contrast between such cars and others sometimes adjoining, is very great. The improvement consists in puting in a lamp, the reflective powers of which are most excellent, the general arrangement being upon a new plan. It is a distinct advance for gas to be substituted for oil lamps in the railroad cars. All the car stoves in the country can be abolished, but if the oil lamp remains there will be just as much danger of passengers being roasted to death by fires starting in a collision as before. The new patent light is so excellent that there is no excuse for other railroads to be slow in adopting it.

Westfielders in Burnt Cork.

The Westfield Athletic Company entertained their friends by an amateur minstrel performance in Arcanum Hall Wednesday last week All the best people of the town took care to be present, and right well were they repaid for their pains. The entertainment was most enjoyable from beginning to end, and the largest audience laughed itself hoarse over the quaintness of Messrs. Smith, Taylor, Earle and Grant who were excellent on the ends. Billy Earle pounded a hole in his tambo in the first part, and another gentleman lost a slipper in the after-piece, but these little features only added to the fun. A pleasant number was the admirable rendering of "If the Waters Could Speak as They Flow" by William Holmes of this city, for whose clear baritone voice the selection seemed to have been made to order.

When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

HYMENEAL.

Rushmore—Murray.

At the Crescent Avenue church, last evening, took place the marriage ceremony of Councilman Rushmore, son of ex-Councilman Isaac W. Rushmore, and Miss Jean Bertram Murray, daughter of John W. Murray, all of this city.

The time of the ceremony was fixed at seven o'clock, but although the guests began to arrive long before that time it was after the hour before the stream of carriages could deposit their loads at the door.

The floral decorations, by Denton of this city, were profuse, but in thorough good taste. The church altar was hidden beneath a mass of chrysanthemums, callas, and palms. The numerous white and tinted dresses of the ladies present also added to the beauty of the scene.

The bride was attired in white brocaded silk trimmed with point lace and orange blossoms. She carried Niphetos roses. The maid of honor, Miss Gussie Murray, and the bridesmaids, Miss Minnie Murray and Miss Gertrude Rushmore, wore white and carried Mermet roses. The "best man" was Robert Rushmore, brother of the groom, and the ushers were Wm. D. Murray, James Murray and Walter Murray, brothers, and Jules Erickson, cousin, of the bride, also Ernest R. Ackerman and George Griffen.

Following the ceremony, a reception was given at the residence of the bride's parents. The bridal pair stood in a bay-window under a lattice of smilax dotted with pink and white carnations. Large bowls of roses decorated the rooms, and the refreshment tables were also adorned with flowers. Supper was served in the dining and billiard rooms, under the direction of Marvel. The presents were unusually handsome, and one room was entirely filled with them.

The newly married couple departed on what is called the 9:28 train. It was nearly an hour late, and, as a special car had been engaged, the fact was telegraphed to the house, so that they did not leave till nearly ten.

Lukens—Clark.

The wedding of Miss Edith Clark, eldest daughter of ex-Councilman and Mrs. Edward B. Clark, to Lewis Nevius Lukens, took place yesterday, at high noon, at the residence of the bride's parents, on East Front street. The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman, of the Grace Protestant Episcopal church. The bridesmaids were Miss Helen B. Clark and Miss Bertha M. Clark, sisters of the bride; Miss Mary L. Betts, of Plainfield; Miss Mary L. Clark and Miss Margaret McF. Lukens, of Conshohocken, Pa., and Miss Marion Sharpless Bettle, of Philadelphia. The "best man" was William A. Cooper, of Conshohocken, Pa The ushers were Noah F. Morrison, Frank Lukens, V. Herbert Lukens, and Arthur T. Pendleton, of Elizabeth, and Alan N. Lukens and William W. Lukens, of Conshohocken. A wedding breakfast was served by a Newark caterer. The house was handsomely decorated with flowers and potted plants. The bride and groom have gone South on their wedding trip.

STUNG BY ADA'S HORSEWHIP.

A Westfield Physician Chastised by His Sister-in-law.

The New York papers have been reveling in sensational accounts of how Dr William Gale, the leading physician of Westfield, suffered a horsewhipping at the hands of his pretty sister-in-law, Mrs. Ada Aguirre, of New York, Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Aguirre is a dashing blonde, the divorced wife of Dr. Carlos Aguirre, a well-known Cuban dentist of of New York. She is a daughter of the late Rev Dr. J. T. Wright, a prominent Methodist clergyman of Elizabeth, and is a sister of Dr. Gale's wife, between whom and herself the Rev. Dr. Wright divided his property. She is celebrated for her beauty and accomplishment throughout New Jersey and New York city, where she achieved fame under the stage name of Miss Ada Wright as an elocutionist of considerable ability. She is well and favorably known in society, has travelled extensively and is a woman of rare attainments as a conversationalist and as an entertainer. She is a graduate of a fashionable seminary and is highly educated. Recently, however, her relatives allege, she has become addicted to the morphine habit, and 'tis claimed that 'twas while she was under the influence of the drug that she visited his pharmacy Tuesday. On that occasion she was accompanied by Mrs. Charles Arnold, at whose home in New York she had been under treatment for the morphine habit. When the women appeared before the doctor Mrs. Aguirre's first move was a demand for some diamonds and jewelry which she said belonged to her. Dr. Gale responded that he had none of her valuables. After an altercation Mrs. Aguirre drew from under the folds of her dress a stout whip, with which she struck him repeatedly, lashing his body and arms, which he held up to shield his face. Several lamps and glasses were smashed, and he himself had suffered considerably, before he could get out into the street in search of an officer.

He found Justice-of-the-Peace Hart, who issued a warrant for Mrs. Aguirre's arrest, but when the constable went to the railway station to serve it the woman had gone.

Dr. Gale, who is a tall, handsome man, about fifty years of age, said to a reporter this morning:

"I know nothing about the jewelry which Mrs. Aguirre demanded. There is no money difference between us, nor any trouble about the division of her father's property under his will. I cannot account for Mrs. Aguirre's conduct in any other way than she was under the influence of morphine. I am not hurt much. It was not a big whip she used."

Mrs. Arnold was a calm non-interfering woman during the affair, and walked off with Mrs Aguirre smilingly.

DYING AT THE HANDS OF A FRIEND.

A Young Student from Orange Mortally Wounded by a Fellow-Hunter.

Fred White, an eighteen-year-old medical student, of Orange, is dying from a gun-shot wound, at the home of Israel Vail, who lives about three miles from Plainfield, on the road to Rahway. Young White was out hunting, Thanksgiving Day, with a companion, George Magrath, from Newark. In tramping through the fields and woodland near Mr. Vail's farm Magrath fell over a brush heap, his gun was discharged, and the entire charge of heavy shot lodged in White's hip, causing a terrible wound. Magrath ran to Mr. Vail's house for assistance, and White was carried indoors and put to bed. He has suffered continual agony ever since, and the physicians say is now nearing his end. White didn't want his friends to hear of the accident, so pleaded that the news be withheld. Now that he is dying he is unconscious a great deal, and cannot tell where his family, whom the physicians wish to notify, may be found.

Plainfield Again to Hear the Hampton Singers.

A public meeting in the interest of the Christian education of the negro and Indian will be held in the Crescent Avenue church, Monday evening, December 8, at 8 o'clock. Brief original addresses will be made by negro and Indian young men from the Hampton Institute. There will be singing by a Hampton quartette, and addresses by General Armstrong and the Chaplain, Mr. Frissell. The Rev. E. M. Rodman will preside. All are invited.

A KINDLY GREETING FROM INDIA.

Ramabai Sends Cordial Message to Her Plainfield Friends—Work of the Local Circle—A New President Chosen.

The Ramabai Circle held its third annual meeting in the Congregational church Friday afternoon. The Rev. C. L. Goodrich presided and conducted the devotional exercises. He appointed W. J. Leonard Secretary and Treasurer, and called on him to present the annual report of Pundita Ramabai sent to the Circles of the country from the office of the Ramabai Association. The report was a very interesting narrative of the progress of Ramabai's school for the child widows of India. She sends the following greeting:

"Tell my friends of the Circles to look on these questions as Christ would, and to do to their sisters as they would be done by under such circumstances. Tell them I am very gratified to them for what they have done and will do. All my girls join me in giving them hearty thanks for their kindness."

Mr Goodrich spoke of the loss the Plainfield Circle had sustained by the death of its President, Mrs. Burlingham, and the following resolution on the subject was presented by Mr. Leonard and adopted by the Circle:

Resolved, That the following memorial be embodied in the records of the meeting:

The Ramabai Circle of Plainfield hereby expresses its heartfelt sorrow that since the last meeting of the Circle held in November, 1889, its first and only President, Mrs. Dr. Burlingham, has been called away by death. From the organization of the Circle she was a devoted friend of Pundita Ramabai and her great work, and in this brief minute of her departure this Circle desires to recognize that devotion and to recognize as well her many excellencies as a consecrated Christian woman.

The vacancy in the presidency was then filled by the election of Mrs. S. J. Taylor, who, in accepting the place, referred very pleasantly to the time when Pundita Ramabai was her guest in this city, and when, in preparing to organize a Circle here, she urged Mrs. Taylor to become President of it, which she declined to do. She had been persuaded to accept the office now, she added, because it was in some sense fulfilling the original wish of Ramabai.

In accordance with the request from the national headquarters of the Ramabai Association, at Boston, the Circle voted to change the date of its annual meeting from Fall to Spring.

At the close of the meeting several new subscribers were admitted to the Circle. The yearly dues, which are now payable, were also then paid by many of the members. THE PRESS is requested to say that those who are still owing their dues should send them at once to W. J. Leonard.

THE GERMANS' THANKSGIVING EVE.

Music, Tableaux and a Presentation of Medals to the Champion Shooters.

The Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein gave their members and friends a most pleasing entertainment on the eve of Thanksgiving Day. The programme consisted of several songs by the Saengerbund—quartettes, terzettes and duetts—and solos by C. Maas, Henry Haurand, C. Tonnemann, C. Dresselt and Edw. Mann.

Special mention is deserved by the comical terzette by C. Maass, C. Tonnemann and C. Dresselt, and a recitation by R. Kersting, who was dressed as a lady. A comical song entitled Schwamm drüber by Henry Haurand, in the disguise of a Yankee hayseed, was very much enjoyed, as was also the gymnastics of the pupils of the Turn Section.

A decided hit was the last song by Maass, Tonnemann and Dresselt, that ended in a patriotic chorus, in which all present joined. There were also several fine tableaux, representing in the first scene Emperor William I and Napoleon III crossing swords and in fighting position, with Field Marshal Moltke directing the fight. Second scene: Napoleon handing his sword to William. Third scene: Emperor William crowning Count Moltke with a laurel wreath. These tableaux were produced by colored lights. F. Schulein represented William, H. Haurand, Napoleon, and C. F. Myer, Moltke.

In the course of the programme the four champions, C. Stoeckle, C. Dresselt, Reupert and H. Krenzfeldt, who have made the highest scores during last year shooting, were presented with handsome gold trophies. During the presentation was enacted a shooting tableau that was loudly applauded. After the entertainment, dancing followed until an early hour of Thanksgiving Day.

Saved the House, but Burned Herself.

Children playing about on the lawn of John Giles, on Eighth street, recently, in the absence of the family, set fire to the grass and endangered the house. A niece of Mr. Giles living across the street, saw the danger of the dwelling and succeeded in extinguishing the flames just as they were communicating to the wood-work. Her hands and wrists were severely burned.

The P. M. T. Co. Foot-Ballers Challenge the World.

At 11:30 o'clock of Thanksgiving Day, two foot-ball elevens of The Pond Machine Tool Co's men, met in an exciting contest on their grounds opposite the Works. The score at the close of a hard and scientific struggle stood 1 to 1. The P. M. T. Co.'s team are ready to accept a challenge from any club to play under American Association rules. Address W. F. Brown, care of the Company.

Judge Ulrich Opened the Ball.

Some one suggested the appropriateness of changing the name "Ripley Hill" to "Lawyer's Hill". There are three lawyers living on the eminence to-day, and three more are about to build. The bell-wether has started on the gallop in the direction of Ripley Hill; all the sheep are scampering in that direction now. Let them go; you can't stop them, if you would. It wouldn't take ninety days to unload Ripley Hill, the way things are going on, and the best thing for all of us to do now is to whoop it up for Ripley Hill.—Union County Standard.

Two Valuable Christmas Boxes.

The ladies of the Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed church, sent Wednesday week, a box of clothing to a missionary in Northwestern Michigan. This is a worthy case. The missionary's salary was to be $300 a year, but because of poor crops he got only $200. With that he is to provide for a family of four children and a wife. The box was one of the finest ever sent by the church. It was valued at $275.78, but the contents were more than mere values. There was a new suit for the minister, new overcoats for the boys, three new dresses for the wife, new bed linens, under garments, flannels and many other valuable new garments, besides many garments slightly worn.

The "Whatsoever Circle" of King's Daughters, of Trinity church, sent to the Sunday school of the missionary a box for a Christmas tree. This box was valued at $61.79, and contained gifts for eighty scholars. Some of these scholars walk six miles to Sunday school, and six miles back. The total value of both boxes was $367.57.

Slippery Sidewalks Must Not Be.

George Grant, Captain of Police, calls public attention to the city ordinance which imposes a penalty on property-holders who fail either to remove snow, slush and ice from their sidewalks or to cover the ice with ashes or sawdust, and gives timely warning that he is prepared to enforce the law.

A Good Time for 60 Minutes.

A. C. La Boyteaux, who has had a large experience in conducting evangelistic meetings, both in this city and elsewhere, will conduct the young men's meeting, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms next Sunday afternoon at 4:15. Those who have heard him on former occasions need not be reminded that he is a magnetic and earnest speaker. Let every member strive to take some young man with him to this service. The singing will be an especially attractive feature. Every man is invited.

Slush and Ice Follow the Snow.

Yesterday was almost an ideally uncomfortable day, one of those which open with crisp air and snowstorm and end in a combination of fallen snow, soaking rain, and slush-covered streets.

It began snowing in Plainfield at about two o'clock in the morning, when the election edition of THE PRESS was being prepared for the public. By eight o'clock there was perhaps an inch of snow on the sidewalks. In a leisurely way it continued snowing all the morning, and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon a mantle of snow four inches deep covered the lawns and roof-tops of the Crescent city.

At two o'clock, almost as quickly as a man could turn his hand over, snow ceased to fall and rain came in its stead. An hour afterward, the man or woman who made a pedestrian tour anywhere in the paved section of the city had a most unpleasant experience. The condition of the streets was very slushy. This morning ice covered everything, and people and horses had to exercise great caution in using their feet. The man who complains of mild Winters is not heard from to-day.

A Plainfield Lawyer Against the United States.

Daniel F. Beatty, the Washington, N. J., organ and piano manufacturer, on returning from his trip around the world, found that his enemies had taken advantage of his absence to injure him. The United States Grand Jury soon afterward, on ex parte evidence, found indictments against him under the act of Congress regulating the use of the mails. They are the same character of indictments as that on which he was acquitted two years ago after three days' trial in the United States Court.

Craig A. Marsh, of this city, who conducted Mr. Beatty's defense on the occasion of the former trial, has been retained in the present case. He denounces the attacks on his client as the spiteful work of jealous rivals and enemies of Mr. Beatty in the organ trade, and confidently expects first to gain an acquittal and next to look after the conspirators and see that they are properly punished. Beatty makes no mistake in coming to Plainfield for his lawyer, even though there are eminent counsel already engaged by the government on the other side, who will be assisted by other counsel engaged by rivals of the accused.

CULTURE VS. CHEEK.

Mr. Golightly Talks Very Lightly Indeed on a Serious Subject.

Scene: A corner in a Murray Hill drawing-room.

Characters: Miss Bunker, a lady from the classic corridors of Boston.
Mr. Golightly, a gentleman from the wind-swept boulevards of Chicago.

Time: Evening.

Miss Bunker (with a refined smile)—Charming evening, isn't it?

Mr. Golightly—O, I didn't notice any thing about the evening, except that it was not raining.

Miss B.—But the moon—so exceptionally fine.

Mr. G.—O, yes; of course. Fine moon! Do you know, the finest moon I ever saw was one we used in some amateur theatricals out in Chicago—our club, you know. We made it out of the bottom of a lard can. Nothing like a lard can for almost any thing.

Miss B.—O, you have been interested in amateur theatricals, have you? I know you were intelligently inclined. Do you like poetry?

Mr. G.—Oh! some kinds.

Miss B.—Of course, not all kinds. No one reads the old style of poetry now. Sad death, that of Browning's, wasn't it?

Mr. G. (toying nervously with mustache)—Yes, very. Let's see; he was a relative of yours, wasn't he?

Miss B.—(embarrassed)—Oh, no! Do you—do you know where they are going to bury him?

Mr. G. (making a desperate guess, consummate sangfroid)—In Chicago I think. At least, that's what I heard.

Miss B.—Indeed? That's singular It must be so different there from his beloved Venice.

Mr. G. (bluffing manfully(—O, not so very different.

Miss B. (suspiciously)—Have you read much of Browning's poetry?

Mr. G. (nonchalantly)—O, I used to read a good deal of it when I was a boy, but one soon outgrows him, don't you know. Of late I haven't been reading much poetry, except what I see in Truck. Elegant poetry in Truck, don't you think?

Miss B.—O, very.

Mr. G. (becoming enthusiastic)—I remember a thing they had last month, called "A Kiss in the Kitchen."

Miss B. (sarcastically)—Must have been something like Browning's "Love in a Balcony," I suppose.

Mr. G.—Just about the same, only better. That's where Browning got his start, writing for Truck. They made him. He used to do the "There was a young man from Madrid" kind of work for them. Ten cents a line. Good pay, too.

Miss B.—Really, Mr. Golightly, are you not mistaken in the man?

Mr. G.—O, I can't be. Father used to know him well. Loaned him five dollars once. Browning never paid it. But I must go.

Miss B.—Must you go?

Mr. G.—O, I must, indeed. I'll send you the copy of Truck containing that "Kiss in the Kitchen." I am sure you will like it. Beats Browning all hollow. Good evening.

Miss B.—Good evening.

—Tom Hall in Life.

Absolutely Necessary.

Miss Manhattan—Do you consider marriage a failure, Mrs. Livewayt?

Mrs. Livewayt (of Chicago)—Of course I don't. If it were not for marriage how could there be such a thing as divorce? —Judge.

Woman's Love for Woman.

Louise—Her face is her fortune.

Isabel—Well, it is one of those rare cases where it speaks well for one to have inherited one's fortune, and not to have made it one's self.—Harper's Bazar.

OUR BIG FOUR.

To be called the best store in town, with any sort of meaning, requires BRAINS.

To make and keep the immense stock from which you can be suited, requires EXPERIENCE.

To buy the goods needed right, at the right price, which means for cash, requires CAPITAL.

To sell them so as to give the universal satisfaction we do, requires TACT.

We Have These Requisites.
They Are at Your Disposal.
We Invite Your Trade.

We think we owe our success in the clothing business more to the four things enumerated above than to anything else. They have enabled us this Fall to again take a step in advance and manufacture a stock of Ready Made Clothing!

Which shows that we possess the elements mentioned, and have used them to good advantage. Come in and see what these things we have named can produce, when properly applied to the clothing business. A house that possesses them is a good place to spend your money with.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. Write to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A. St. Paul, Minn., for maps, books and guides. It stands in a sunny meadow,
The house so mossy and brown,
With its cumbrous old stone chimneys,
And the gray roof sloping down.

The trees fold their green arms around it,
[illegible]
And the winds go chanting through them,
And the sunbeams drop their gold.

"UP A TREE."

A Boy's Perilous Adventure in a Church Steeple.

ONE DAY IN climbing over the back fence of the church-yard to indulge in my afternoon dissipation among the books of the Sunday-school library, a couple of boys who were on the borders of the swamp saw me [illegible]. They thought I had [illegible] on hand and naturally [illegible] a share of it. They climbed [illegible] and searched the yard. [illegible] they came to the conclusion that I must be inside, and there [illegible] the latch of the back door [illegible] I lay low in the pew and said nothing, the door very speedily gave way and in the boys came. There was a wild [illegible] when they discovered me there, and they wanted at once to know what was on hand.

They wouldn't believe that I merely entered the church in order to read a lot of Sunday books, for which they had [illegible] contempt, and they reached the conclusion that I was up to some very much deeper game than that to which I acknowledged. There was [illegible] in being in a lonely church in broad daylight on a week day that the boys fairly reveled in it, and we started to explore the church. Into the front of the edifice I had never gone, principally because I was afraid. The stillness and loneliness about the building awed me so much that I never cared to explore the building or get very far from the exit of the back door.

It was only on very bright, sunshiny days that I dared venture into the church at all, and even then the building was not the most cheerful one in the world, for the windows were all of ground glass, and the light at no time was of the brightest. But these boys together [illegible] than those [illegible] we went into the pulpit and so into the front of the church and finally somebody proposed that we climb into the steeple. There was a stairway that opened off the porch, and up this stairway we went and found [illegible] a kind of a loft, lighted by [illegible] Gothic windows high up the steeple, which gave a dim, mysterious [illegible] to that strange, tall, [illegible] room. The inside frame work of the steeple [illegible] a splendid climbing [illegible], and [illegible] of the boys proposed that we should climb to the window and enjoy the view. The whole inside was a mass of cross beams and [illegible] gradually tapering inward, until they reached the dark invisible point where the four sides came together.

We started up, one at each of the [illegible] corners, and the climbing was exceedingly easy [illegible] the [illegible] that the [illegible] had [illegible] developed [illegible]. I was something of a climber myself in those days and went up very much ahead of the other two boys. [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] window, and went down [illegible]. The [illegible] went as far as the window and [illegible] a glance out and were apparently [illegible] to be hurried [illegible] the other boy. But the sensation of climbing was too strong upon me and I kept on while the two boys [illegible] in the window [illegible] and [illegible], and their [illegible] fainter and fainter as I [illegible] up. At last I reached [illegible] of the steeple, and in a few moments my head was wedged [illegible] where the [illegible] joined. [illegible] for the first time I cast a glance [illegible] on the two boys below. [illegible] of the glance with a shudder to this day. I had one look [illegible] of [illegible] faces that had not the [illegible] of consciousness in them. [illegible]

"HE'S NO [illegible] THE [illegible]"

[illegible]

The [illegible] gave the two boys their first idea of the danger that threatened their comrade. One of the boys bolted down-stairs to get help, and the other, being afraid to stay alone, rushed after him. By great good luck they found the custodian of the church in the building, searching round for whoever had left the back door open. He had been passing, it seems, and heard our shouts in the church, and had gone back to get his key. In this time the climbing had been done. When he came around he saw that the back door was open, and then, imagining that we were hidden among the pews, had locked the door and started a search. He was the man of all the village that we dreaded to meet, and it was a wonder that the boys had wit enough left to tell him of my predicament. He came up two steps at a time, and, shading his eyes, gazed up into the darkness where he could see nothing and could hardly believe that any body was there.

"What are you doing up there, you young scoundrel?" he shouted at me.

I had no answer to make to that and began to bewail my fate. He saw that there was no time to be lost, and instead of going and arousing the village and getting rope and other useless paraphernalia, he cried to me, in a milder voice than I had ever heard him use before, to hang on and that he would be up there in a minute. He took off his shoes and stockings and speedily climbed up in the same way that I had gone before him.

"Now," he said, as he felt my trouser leg, "if you are not careful you'll tumble down on me, and if you tumble down on me I'll give you the worst thrashing that ever you got in your life."

This braced me up somewhat, and I told him I would be careful.

"Very well then," he said, "now hang on with your hands to those braces and beams and I will guide your feet. Don't let go with your hands till I tell you to, and remember the thrashing you'll get if you do let go."

Thus we came painfully down, step by step. There is no doubt that he saved my life, but, as one good turn deserves another, I saved his by not dropping on him. When we got down he said to us three:

"Will you take a thrashing from me or from your fathers?"

A postponed thrashing is always preferable in a boy's eyes, to one administered at once[illegible] to be punished by our doting parents. I am afraid we showed too much eagerness for the postponed whipping. Anyhow the grim custodian eyed us suspiciously for a moment and then said:

"A bird in the hand's worth two in the bush. I'll thrash you now."

And he did.—Luke Sharp, in Detroit Free Press.

Progress in Life.

Progress in life is by stages, rather than by an unbroken advance. The pupil who has passed through the primary school has to take a new start in the grammar school. The graduate of a preparatory school must begin anew as a Freshman in college. He who has taken a college degree finds that he must take the lowest place for a start toward a life profession. And so it is all the way along in life. No man ever reaches the point where it is unnecessary for him to be a willing beginner in a new sphere of knowledge or of skill, if he would rise to a plane above that on which he has attained his present proficiency and reputation. Well is it for a man if he has so used the past that it has given him a fitness for a good beginning in the present.—S. S. Times.

THE JACK-POT.

The Party All Chipped In, But Tom Won It.

THERE were five of us in the party—six, counting Long Tom, the guide. After two days' hard climbing, which the burros endured with exemplary fortitude, we arrived at the little valley high up in the mountains through which threaded the trout stream.

"Just you all go over into the cabin there and make yourself comf'table, while I 'tend to gettin' this stuff unpacked," said Long Tom; "there ain't no one there. My pardner, he's down below."

"The cabin appears to be two cabins," said the Colonel, as we approached it.

"This is for economy in ridge-poles," said the doctor; "sleeping apartments on one side and kitchen on the other. In the space between, you keep your fishing-tackle and worms."

We entered the right-hand section of the twin cabin, which proved to be the kitchen side. There was not much furniture—a table of hewn logs, a chair of bent saplings, and a rough bench.

However, we did not notice such furniture as there was, for each member of the party, as he stepped over the high threshold, had his attention instantly attracted by the stove, and a brief wondering of speculations went along the group.

"Well, that staggers me," said the stock-broker.

"H'm," said the professor, in a mysterious tone, and rubbing his chin.

The stove was a plain, small cooking-range, rather old and rusty. The strange thing about it was its position. Its abbreviated legs stood upon large cedar posts, which were planted in the floor and were over four feet in height. This brought the stove away up in mid-air, so that the top was about on a level with the face of the Colonel, and he was a six-footer.

We formed in a circle about the stove and stared at it as solemnly as a group of priests around a sacrificial tripod. We felt of the posts—they were firm and solid, showing that the mysterious arrangement was a permanent, not a temporary, one. Then we all bent our necks and opened our mouths to look up at the hole in the roof, through which the stove-pipe vanished.

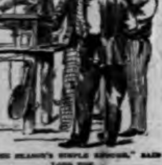
Suddenly the stock-broker burst out into a laugh.

"Oh, I understand it now," said he.

"Understand what?" asked the Colonel, sharply.

"Why Long Tom has his stove hoisted up so high from the floor."

"So do I," said the doctor; "but I suspect



"THE [illegible] SIMPLE [illegible]," SAID LONG TOM.

pose that my explanation is not the same that any one else would offer."

"Well, I will bet that I am right," said the stock-broker, "and put up the money."

"I am in this," said the judge; "I have a clear idea about that stove and will back it."

"Make it a jack-pot," said the Colonel; "I want to take a hand."

The stock-broker drew a small yellow coin out of his pocket and dropped it on the table.

"He has the stove up there," he said, "to get a better draught. In this rarefied mountain air there is only a small amount of oxygen to the cubic inch, and combustion is made difficult to secure than in the lower latitudes. I have heard that if you get high enough up, you can't cook an egg—that is, I mean, water won't boil—or something like that," he continued, amid the [illegible] the professor's eye was fixed upon him with a sarcastic gaze.

"Is that supposed to be science?" demanded the professor.

"Well," said the stock-broker, doggedly, "never mind the reasons. Experience is probably good enough for Long Tom. He finds that he gets a better draught for his stove by having it up in mid-air, so he has it there."

"The right explanation," began the professor, "is the simplest. My idea is that—"

"Excuse me," interrupted the stock-broker, tapping the table; "are you in this pot?"

The professor made a deposit, and proceeded:

"Have you noticed that our host is a very tall man? Like most men of his height, he hates to bend over. If the stove were near the floor, he would have to stoop down low when he whirled a flap-jack or sprinkled a rasher of bacon. Now he can stand up and do it with ease. Your draught theory is no good; the longer the pipe, if it is straight, the better the fire will burn."

"Professor," remarked the Colonel, "I regret to have to tell you that your theory is gone. Long Tom told me, on the way up, that his partner did all the cooking, and he is a man of rather short stature." The Colonel then paid his compliments to the jack-pot, and continued: "Now, my idea is that the stove heats the room better there than on the floor. It is only a cooking-stove, to be sure, but when the winter is cold, it makes this room comfortable. Being up in the middle of the space, it heats it all equally well, which it could not do if it were down below."

The doctor greeted this theory with a loud laugh. "Colonel," he said, "you are wild—way off the mark. Hot air rises, of course, and the only way to disseminate it is to have your stove as low as possible. According to your idea, it would be a good plan to put the furnace in the attic of a house instead of in the basement."

"I think," said the Colonel, "that I could appreciate your argument better if you would ante."

"The pot is mine," said the doctor, as he deposited his coin; "you will all adopt my idea the moment you hear it, and Long Tom, who will be here in a minute, will bear me out. This room is very small; it has but little floor space, and none of it goes to waste. Now, if he had put the stove down where we expected to find it, Long Tom could not have made use of the area underneath, as you see he has done. On all sides of the supporting posts, you will notice, there are hooks, on which he hangs his pans and skillets. Underneath there is a kitchen closet for pots and cooking-utensils of various sorts. What could be more convenient? Under your ordinary stove there is room only for a poker and a few cockroaches."

The judge, who had been listening to the opinions offered by the others with the same grim smile that occasionally ornamented his face when he announced that an objection was overruled, now stepped forward and dropped a coin on the table. He then rendered his decision as follows:

"It appears that none of you have noticed the forest of hooks in the roof just over the stove. They are not in use at present, but they are there for some purpose. I imagine that during the winter huge pieces of venison and bear's meat dangle over the stove, and are dried for use later. Now, if the stove were on the floor, it would be too far from the roof to be of service in this way."

"Here comes old Tom," shouted the Colonel, who had stepped to the open door while the judge was speaking.

The old trapper put down the various articles of baggage with which his arms were loaded and came into the kitchen-cabin where we all stood. He glanced at the group and then at the stilted stove in our midst.

"I see you air all admirin' my stove," said he, "and I'll bet you've been a-wonderin' why it is up so high."

"Yes, we have," said the professor; "how did you know it?"

"People most allus generally just as soon as they come into the place begin to ask me about it—that's how I knowed."

"Well, why is it up so high?" demanded the stock-broker, impatiently, with a side glance at the well-developed jack-pot on the table.

"The reason's simple enough," said Long Tom, with a grin that showed his bicuspids; "you see, we had to pack all this stuff up here from down below on burros. Originally there was four jints of that stove-pipe, but the cinch wasn't drawed tight enough on the burro that was carryin' them, and two of 'em slipped out and rolled down the mountain. When we got here and found that there wasn't but two pieces left, I reckoned that I would have to kinder h'ist the stove to make it fit the pipe—so I just in and h'isted her. And that ther is yer. Say, what's all this here money on the table fer?"

There was a deep silence which lasted so long that Tom ventured to repeat his question about the money.

"It is a jack-pot," said the doctor, sadly, "and as near as I can make out, it belongs to you."—Fred Bayham, in The Argonaut.

"CUTE."

Respectfully Dedicated to the Young Lady of the Period.

Wherever I go, by night or day,
My heart is in torment,
Because this word of slangy grace
By far too large a sphere.

A house is "cute," a bonnet, too,
A ribbon or a gown;
And yesterday I heard that "B—
Is just the 'cutest' town."

A girl is "cute" and so is he
On whom she deigns to smile,
His "cute" mustache, his "cute" white hands,
Her tender heart beguile.

A flower's "cute," a sunset, too,
A [illegible] waterfall;
But, think of it, a [illegible] is
"The cutest thing of all."

Alas! alas [illegible] of old and young
So oft this word repeat,
I wildly yearn to cast it out
Among "words obsolete."

But, if the things you call "so cute,"
Should "cute" one day become,
Now, don't you think, the world would be Exceedingly humdrum?

IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

A Scientist Treed by Swarms of Deadly Tarantulas.

Some of Them Big as Turtles and Venomous as Rattlesnakes—The Guide Killed—Saved by a Blaze and the Blue-Black Wasps.

DR. J. S. DAVIS, who had been exploring Central American mines, writes to the San Francisco Examiner as follows regarding a remarkable adventure.

On the afternoon of the fourth day we camped in a little opening, clear except for grass. This we soon burned off. We had just finished supper, and I was sitting at the base of a tree smoking my pipe, when an enormous tarantula came out of the grass into the cleared circle. He was positively the largest specimen I had ever seen, and as the slanting rays of the sun caught him I noticed a curious, dull, indefinite, reddish line down his back. I regretted that I had not the means to preserve it, but Manuel settled my regret by crushing it with a billet of wood. It had hardly ceased moving when another and equally as large one appeared at the other end of the burned patch. I did not fear them much, as I wore heavy leather leggings reaching to my hips.

"We have made a bad camp, Manuel," I said; "there seems to be many tarantulas here."

"One place is about as another," he answered in Spanish; "they usually go by twos."

He appeared more troubled, however, than his careless answer seemed to indicate, and while I killed the second unwelcome visitor he began to poke around in the grass with a long branch. He uncovered several more of the great spiders and killed them; when he turned around there were fully half a dozen of them in the clear space. They fastened on to the dead ones and seemed to suck their blood.

"We must get out of this!" screamed the Indian.

At this moment our remaining mule began to struggle and kick. He soon broke his picket rope and disappeared. Then I became aware of a steady rustling in the grass. More tarantulas came out.

"I have heard it from the Indians," cried my guide. "It is a devil's army. They say that the people who live in the dead cities were killed by them, and that no one can live there now. They come by thousands, like the red ants, and leave nothing alive where they pass. I thought it was a squaw story. We must fight them with fire."

He seized a flaming brand from the camp-fire and yelled to me to do likewise. He tried to fire the grass on all sides of us, but where the trees grew it was too rank and wet and the fires we started would not go.

Meanwhile the spiteful spiders became more and more numerous. I crushed one at least of them at every step I took. Many of them bit at my leggings and hung there by their fangs. We turned our firebrands to crushing the tarantulas, but they seemed to come thicker than we could beat them off.

"I am bitten!" I heard the Indian scream. I passed him my flask. I could do nothing more for him, and dropping my stick I started to run. Every step the grass seemed to bring me in worse quarters. I tried every direction, but they swarmed everywhere. I noticed that they were in the bushes and on the grass, so high that my leggings would not protect me, and presently I found myself back at the camp. These at least they could not reach me without climbing up. The ground was perfectly black with them. Poor Manuel was down on one knee and the great insects were all over him. He seemed crazy, and I have no doubt his mind was nearly gone with terror and the pain of the bites.

I could barely keep the tarantulas from getting above my leggings. Suddenly it occurred to me that I might find safety in one of the trees. I knew that I would soon be exhausted if I remained among the black beasts, and that would end it. In a moment I had my arms about a small tree, I crushed the insects that clung to my legs against the bark and dragged and scrambled up. A dozen feet from the ground there was a branch from which we had hung some small game I had shot. I pulled myself up on this branch and got the first moment's rest I had had since the tarantulas first appeared. I had had no time to think before this, but now I began to realize what had happened. It seemed more like a nightmare than any thing real. I looked down and almost fell off my branch at the horrid sight below me. My Indian was now fairly on the ground. I could not see him for the poisonous things that covered him, but the irregular black mass, wriggled and squirmed like a wounded snake, and I knew he was not yet out of his agony. On every side were more tarantulas hungrily searching for more victims. Their crushed fellows were always [illegible] to pieces, as, [illegible] were they in their hunger. They were all enormous, some of them as big as turtles, and when the sun struck them I could see the red line that distinguished them from the non-gregarious species that are familiar in other places. They crawled over one another in their desire to find something into which to sink their fangs. Poor Manuel's writhing body was the objective point of most of them. They fought fiercely for a spot of flesh where they could strike, and every movement of the still living man seemed to make them the more fierce.

I LOOKED DOWN AND ALMOST FELL OFF MY BRANCH.

It did not take me as long to notice all this as it does to describe it, and I soon saw that I was not yet safe from the horrible fate that had overtaken my guide.

The insects began to crawl up the tree, though not in any considerable numbers at first. I brushed them down with a small branch, and those that were hurt at all were immediately set upon by their fellows where they fell.

My recital of these things may seem tame, but I have no pen to describe the awful horror of it all. There were about two hours of daylight left me. I knew this, and wondered what I could do in the dark. Then I remembered reading that snakes or centipedes would not cross a hair rope, and I thought that perhaps the same rule might apply to tarantulas.

The game was swinging from the branch by a horsehair riata, and it took me a very few minutes to cut the rabbits loose and wind the rope about the trunk just below me. Pretty soon more of the big spiders came up. Manuel was quiet now at last and they wanted another victim.

My hair rope did some good. They could not swarm over it in such numbers that I could not sweep them back with my branch.

How long I stayed there fighting the insects back I do not know, but the light was fading when I noticed a commotion among the tarantulas. At the same time I observed a number of blue-black wasps darting about. I recognized them as belonging to the Hymenoptera family and realized that they were the tarantula hawks of which I had read. In ten minutes the four or five wasps had become hundreds, and five minutes later there was not a tarantula to be seen, except the numerous dead ones at the foot of the tree.

Manuel's body, swollen and discolored by the venom of the spiders, stared at me. I waited an hour and then came down.

It took me eight days to reach Nevada, and on the way I did not see a single tarantula.

How Silk Is Measured.

The size or substance of a silk thread is usually estimated by deniers. The ounce troy and the ounce poids de marc of Lyons, by the latter of which silk is tested in France and Italy, are equal in weight, but are differently subdivided. The ounce troy is divided into 20 pennyweights of 24 grains each, making 480 grains in the ounce; the ounce of Lyons, poids de marc, is divided into 24 drams, which, multiplied by 24, equals 576 deniers. The denier is, therefore, one-sixth less than the grain troy. The English reel is 818 bouts of 44 inches, and equals 1,000 yards. The French, 400 ells, or 475 meters, equals 520 yards. The standard of silk measure is about 400 yards: that length of a single filament from China cocoons will weigh 2 deniers, and from French and Italian 2½. A 10-denier silk will, then, be the combined thread of four or five cocoons.—Chicago Herald.

WAR IN THE FUTURE.

Railroads Will Play an Unprecedentedly Important Part.

In future wars railways, the number of which in Europe is daily increasing, will play an unprecedentedly important part, not only strategically, but also tactically. For mobilization and concentration at the outset of war their value was shown in 1870; with armies of increased size they will be still more essential. After the commencement of operations they will still occasionally—especially in the case of the army which assumes the defensive—be used for the rapid conveyance of troops, but as a rule they will chiefly be employed for the transport of food and stores. It has been calculated that an army of a hundred thousand men working a hundred miles from its base would require—setting aside the requirements of sieges—an immense quantity of rolling stock.

As to the movements of troops by rail, experience on the Continent shows that time is not gained when the proportion of bayonets and sabers to a mile of double line is greater than four hundred and thirty-five. Apart, therefore, from the fact that once the army is in the field the railroad resources will be absorbed in bringing up stores and taking back sick and wounded, the railway transport of troops will seldom be profitable for an army on the offensive. The strain on the railways needed for the conveyance of food and stores will be largely argumented, seeing that in all probability the size of armies will be much increased. The limit to their size will, in fact, be practically determined by the carrying capacity of the railways.

Hence, two things are obvious: First, that for strategical operations railways will, after the commencement of a campaign, be used comparatively little; second, that even if only employed for the transportation of stores, their capacity will have to be largely increased by the addition of sidings, the construction of platforms, and the doubling of lines. For this reason all armies are daily paying increased attention to the formation, augmentation, and training of military battalions, we, perhaps, least of all.

For operations which lie in the border land between tactics and strategy, occasional use with great effect will probably be made of railways for the conveyance of troops for short distances. Had Bazaine turned his railway facilities to full account at Forbach, the result of that battle might have been different. It can easily be understood that, though there would be no saving of time in transporting an army corps, with all its impediments, a distance of thirty miles by railway, it would be feasible and desirable to convey a brigade of four battalions, with a field battery attached, a distance of fifteen miles.

In the former case 186 trains would be required, and the operation, under the most favorable circumstances, would occupy four days. In the latter case the troops, moving with nothing but men, officers, chargers, and what the French call a train de combat, the whole force could be transported to its destination in two hours from the time the first man entered to the time the last man quitted the train. As to armor-clad trains, they will on exceptional occasions be used and be of great value, as was shown in the case of Sir Archibald Alison's operations at Alexandria in the first Egyptian war.—Colonel Knollys, in Fortnightly Review.

WHEREAS, George A. Phillips, late of the city of Plainfield, Union county, New Jersey, deceased, in his lifetime made a contract in writing, still unfulfilled, for the sale to me of all that lot, tract or parcel of land and premises hereinafter particularly described, situate, lying and being in the city of Plainfield, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey: Beginning at a point in the centre line of George street, in line of land of George M. Phillips; thence running in a northwesterly direction along the said line of land of said Phillips, and at right angles to George street one hundred and fifty feet; thence in a southwesterly direction and parallel with the centre line of George street twenty-five feet; thence in a southeasterly direction parallel with the said line of said Phillips' land, and at right angles to George street one hundred and fifty feet to the centre line of George street; thence in a northeasterly direction along the centre line of George street twenty-five feet to the place of beginning. Notice is hereby given that I will apply to the Orphan's Court of the county of Union, to be held at the Court House in the city of Elizabeth, on Wednesday the twenty-fourth day of December next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, for the fulfillment of said contract according to law.

Dated October 11th, 1890.

THE REALM OF FASHION.

The Day of Long Opera Cloaks and Inverness Capes.

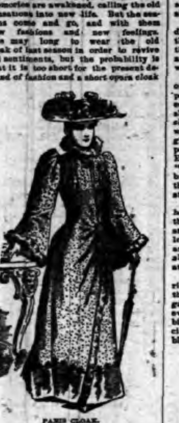
The Louis XV. Cape of Gorgeous Hue—A Nightmare—New Fancies of Corn-Flower Blue—New Fans and Dress Shoes.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

Now, in all verity, are "the melancholy days" near at hand. We realize that the luxurious, dreamy idling of summer is over, and so in the autumn the maiden's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of ball-gowns and opera cloaks. If her purse happens to know the plenishment of spare cash, her fancies may soon become realities, as the many establishments are a perfect blaze of glory with the myriads of charming autumn novelties.

Browns and reds will prevail as leading colors, followed by touches of yellow for millinery purposes. As far as regards outdoor wear, jackets are to be longer, and cloaks looser than ever. Sleeves will retain their present size and shape, and feather trimming will hold a prominent place as adornment for either dresses or wraps.

How one is prone to fall into a reverie over a discarded opera cloak—what memories are awakened, calling the old sensations into new life. But the seasons come and go, and with them new fashions and new feelings. One may long to wear the old cloak of last season in order to revive old sentiments, but the probability is that it is too short for the present demand of fashion and a short opera cloak seemingly falls in its purpose. Undoubtedly the most desirable cloaks are the long ones. Among the many newly imported examples, perhaps the simplest, and yet the handsomest, is one which entirely envelopes the figure and is made in loose coat shape.



PARIS CLOAK.

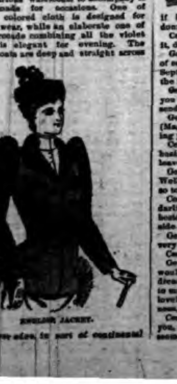
The material is reseda green faced cloth, lined throughout with white corded silk and has wide bell sleeves. The front closes upon the right side, and is edged, like the sleeves, with a broad white silk braid, upon which is woven a Greek key pattern in silver. Silver drops edge the sleeves and the rolling collar. This style of cloak, which is so comfortable and easily adjusted, could be adopted in any combination of materials, but would be especially successful in brocaded silk, lined with a suitable shade of plain satin, and with heavy revers on the sleeves and down the front, of the same. Another similarly shaped cloak is made of tan-colored bengaline, having a pointed plastron, high collar and long, square open sleeves covered with ficelle colored passementerie, heavily streaked with gold. It is lined with yellow satin, and the contrast of tan, yellow and gold is harmonious and charming.

A half long cloak is an exact copy of a man's Inverness cape, and has the great advantage of being very easily slipped on, the body having large, loose arm-holes, and thus avoiding any annoying struggle with the dress sleeves. It is suitable to be made in cloth of any color with a brilliant lining.

A Louis XV. cape, intended for an opera mantle, is of Parma violet plush, lined with silk of the same color. The fronts are handsomely embroidered in colored silks, the effect being heightened by gold and silver threads, and the neck is tied together with silken cord, finished with tassels. A second opera mantle is of dove-colored corduroette, trimmed with gold and white galoon and edged with a mixture of peacock and heliotrope ostrich feathers. The lining is of heliotrope surah, brocaded in a small floral design. A lovely carriage cloak represents a deep coachman's cape, modified, however, by being shaped to the waist and hanging in three folds from each shoulder. The material is ivory cloth, adorned with gold passementerie enriched with jewels, bordered with peacock feather ruching, and lined with pink in the make of silk known as chine.

On many of the new little coats, which our English cousins term "smart" looking, braiding almost entirely covers the cloth. One of gray tweed is beautifully braided all over in vermicelli pattern with black silk, sleeves and all being done alike. The coat is cut straight and rather loose, something in the shape of an old-fashioned sacque. Another of pilot cloth, in a warm ruby tone, is cut to simulate a pea-jacket, with braiding of the darkest shade of myrtle green woven with dead gold threads. This garniture covers the sleeves and collar, and is carried as a band all round the bottom of the coat.

A stylish Louis XV. coat of faced cloth, in a rich mulberry tint, recently made for a trousseau, is cut with open throat and broad revers, and slopes away below the waist line. The center closes with large enameled buttons, and various waistcoats to accompany it are made for occasions. One of putty colored cloth is designed for street wear, while an elaborate one of rich brocade combining all the violet tints is elegant for evening. The waistcoats are deep and straight across the lower edge, in sort of continental style, and fasten up with small buttons matching those upon the coat.



ENGLISH JACKET.

Among new materials exhibited in the shops, the prevalence of corn-flower blue is noticeable. It is to be questioned whether this shade will obtain for long, as it is, as a rule, too trying for daylight, but passable at night. This dense blue asserts itself quite forcibly in millinery, however, and was exhibited recently in an imported dancing gown of bluish-gray embroidered net, upon which sprays of the deep blue corn-flowers were carelessly thrown. Maize-colored ribbon velvet was festooned upon the skirt, and heightened the effect very considerably.

Another pretty dancing dress for a young lady is of shell pink pompadour silk, brocaded with tiny moss-buds, and the lower skirt is festooned with shrimp pink velvet ribbons caught up with the same shade of "Prince of Wales" ostrich tips.

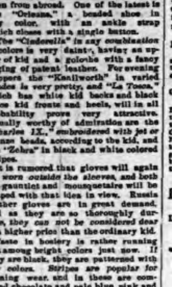
Dress fans are all light and filmy and delicate. Some of the prettiest and most artistic of those lately imported are made of white crepe de chine, decorated with dainty crayon drawings. This is a refreshing change from the brilliant, hand-painted, flaunting variety. Another gauze fan has garlands of artificial flowers, which can be arranged upon the edge, and transposed to harmonize with the change of gowns. Feather fans still hold their own, and are made in every costume tint and shade of tint.

There are innumerable new fancies in dress shoes which reach us now and then from abroad. One of the latest is the "Orleans," a beaded shoe in any color, with an ankle strap which closes with a single button.

The "Cinderella" in any combination of colors is very dainty, having an upper of kid and a golosh with a fancy edging of patent leather. For evening slippers the "Kenilworth" in varied shades is very pretty, and "La Tosca," which has white kid backs and black glace kid fronts and heels, will in all probability prove very attractive. Equally worthy of admiration are the "Charles IX.," embroidered with jet or bronze beads, according to the kid, and the "Zebra" in black and white colored stripes.

It is rumored that gloves will again be worn outside the sleeves, and both the gauntlet and mousquetaire will be shaped with that idea in view. Russia leather gloves are in great demand, and as they are so thoroughly durable, they can not be considered dear at a higher price than the ordinary kid.

Taste in hosiery is rather running riot among bright colors just now. If they are black, they are patterned with gay colors. Stripes are popular for evening wear, and in these are combined chocolate and pale blue, pink and cinnamon, gold and brown and gold and black. For day wear vertical hair stripes, blue and gold on a black ground, are preferred before other patterns. Cashmere stockings with open-work fronts are sought after.



THE "BIRD NEST" HAT.

There are no indications that the plain, straight skirts are going out of vogue, in spite of paniers and flounces. Fashion is creditably rational at present, and may she long remain so.

ELLA STARR.

A SELFISH MAN.

A Pleasant Little Comedy That Ends Happily.

Scene—A pleasant drawing-room. Gertie, seated in a cozy arm-chair. Cecil, in devoted attitude, on ottoman near her.

Gertie—But do you love me unselfishly, just for myself alone—my soul, my spirit?

Cecil (to the ceiling)—Oh, she asks me this after my long worship—my utter—

Gertie—Ah, man's love is nearly always selfish. It's so different from a woman's sacrificing, enduring affection.

Cecil—Only let me prove to you in some way how dearly, how sincerely I love—

Gertie (suddenly decisive)—I will. Cecil, I consent to marry you—

Cecil (breathlessly)—Oh, Ger—

Gertie—Yes, gladly, delightedly—for I am very fond of you—on one condition. You know how I love music.

Cecil (faintly)—Ye-es.

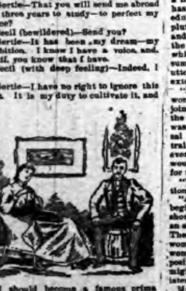
Gertie—That you will send me abroad for three years to study—to perfect my voice?

Cecil (bewildered)—Send you?

Gertie—It has been my dream—my ambition. I know I have a voice, and, Cecil, you know that I have.

Cecil (with deep feeling)—Indeed, I do.

Gertie—I have no right to ignore this gift. It is my duty to cultivate it, and if I should become a famous prima donna, Cecil, think how you would feel.



Cecil (forlornly)—I can just imagine it, dear.

Gertie—But I should need three years of earnest study. This is the middle of September. I could be ready to start by the first of October.

Cecil (grasping the situation)—Then you mean that I shall marry you and send you abroad for three years alone?

Gertie—Or come with me, if you like. (Magnanimously.) I am perfectly willing you should come with me.

Cecil—My dear girl! Leave my business for three years? I could not leave it for three months, much less—

Gertie (with gracious concession)—Well, I would come over every year or so to see you.

Cecil—Every year or so? But, Gertie, darling, I should like to have my wife beside me in my house—not at the other side of the world.

Gertie (sadly)—How selfish, how very, very like a man!

Cecil (calmly)—It is—rather.

Gertie—And knowing my aspirations, would you let me sacrifice this dear dream of my heart, just to be with you, to make you happy? And you call that love? That poor and grasping selfishness, love?

Cecil (reasoningly)—Wouldn't it strike you, Gertie, that you—er—ah—might seem—a little bit—selfish—too?

Gertie (in amazement)—I, selfish? I?

Cecil (humbly)—Well, you certainly—appear to have your own way. But, now, dear, (as if a sudden thought had flashed on him), let us look at this matter rationally—let us examine it just as it is. Ahem! You have made me an offer of marriage—

Gertie (gasping)—Oh, what a fri-i-ghtful thing to say!

Cecil—I mean you have proposed to me—

Gertie—Proposed to you?

Cecil—But, you have surrounded your proposal with conditions that make it simply impossible for me to accept. I realize of course, that you have bestowed on me the highest honor a woman can bestow on a man—

Gertie—Cecil! Mr. Clingon!

Cecil (entreatingly)—I beg you will not urge me. The circumstances that compel me to refuse to be your husband need not wholly estrange us. Think of me as a broth—

Gertie (rising indignantly)—Sir, this is an insult! How dare you?

(Exit, Cecil, hurriedly.)

Gertie (flinging herself on couch and sobbing wildly)—Oh! how horrible of him to say that I made him an of-of-offer! But I did, and he—can tell people! Oh! he wouldn't do that! But he can! And to believe that I'd go abroad—and leave—him! I wouldn't go if I was beaten there. But they'll believe any thing! And he'll never come again, and I can't—can't tell him. Oh! he has no sense—they never have. But he does know that I love him. He does—the outrageous thing! The miserable, hateful— Oh! you poor, splendid fellow! I never did deserve you!

HOLDOFF-CLINGON.—Married at the parsonage, by the Rev. De Rossett Strong, Miss Gertrude Holdoff to Mr. Cecil Clingon, all of this city.

Clippings from the Glebelands (N. J.) Grassmower, October 10:

 We are pleased to learn that Messrs. Bhoomplaise and Yarnlowd have sold one of their new cottages on the Upper Depot Road, this side of Hilzers' woods. The purchaser is Mr. Cecil Clingon, a rising young business man of New York, who, with his charming bride, intends to make a home in Glebelands. We congratulate Messrs. B. and Y., and trust they may be as fortunate in disposing of the other houses they have erected in the same neighborhood.

BRITISH BLUE STOCKINGS

Lady Florence Dixie and Her Crusade for Emancipation.

Mrs. Mona Caird Pours a Good Cup of Tea—At Putney with John Strange Winter—Edna Lyall's Study and Mrs. Haweis' Drawing-Room.

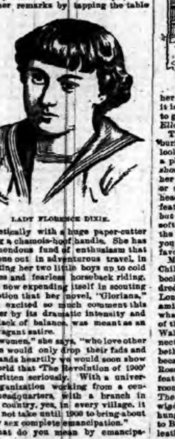
[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

LONDON, Oct. 17.—Lady Florence Dixie is one of the most talked-of women in the United Kingdom. She has a head like a handsome and possibly erratic boy, with short, wavy hair full of threads of gold. Her features are bold, eyes fine, nose a little heavy, mouth attractive and decided. Her complexion is brilliant as of a woman who lives much out of doors.

The first time I saw her she was pointed out to me on a country road, riding a chestnut mare. As all the world knows, Lady Dixie uses a cross-saddle. Her habit was black, the short, divided skirt partially covering high riding boots of a natty description. Indoors she has equally the courage of her dress reform convictions. A very usual costume with her is a white flannel blouse or shirt with tartan kilts just covering the knees and long tartan stockings. To this she added, when a friend introduced me to her library, a loose shooting jacket and shoes with silver buckles.

This library is a long, low room with ivy peeping in at the windows. An open fire burns on the hearth, and souvenirs of travel are scattered about. The prominent feature is a large, *solid-looking writing-table, with proof-*sheets strewn on one side, piles of letters and children's school books on the other, and in front a vase of purple fox-gloves and photographs of Mrs. Mona Caird and John Stuart Mills.

Lady Dixie talks vivaciously, pointing her remarks by tapping the table energetically with a huge paper-cutter having a chamois-hoof handle. She has a tremendous fund of enthusiasm that has gone out in adventurous travel, in educating her two little boys up to cold plunges and fearless horseback riding, and is now expending itself in scouting the notion that her novel, "Gloriana," which excited so much comment this summer by its dramatic intensity and utter lack of balance, was meant as an extravagant satire.



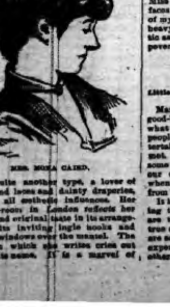
LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

"If women," she says, "who love other women would only drop their fads and join hands heartily we would soon show the world that 'The Revolution of 1900' was written seriously. With a universal organization working from a central headquarters, with a branch in every country, yes, in every village, it would not take until 1900 to bring about for my sex complete emancipation."

"What do you mean by emancipation?"

"A revision of the marriage service to begin with, so that man and woman should pledge the same vows, and woman should not sell her natural freedom. Then we would give the vote to every woman, married or unmarried, and put women into Parliament and into all positions now filled solely by men. We might even have a woman Prime Minister."

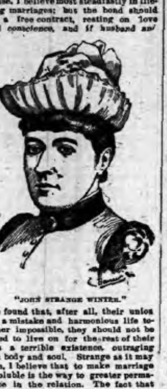
Mrs. Mona Caird, whose views of marriage are known to fame, is a woman of quite another type, a lover of jewels and laces and dainty draperies, open to all esthetic influences. Her drawing-room in London reflects her quaint and original taste in its arrangements, its inviting ingle nooks and the odd windows over the mantel. The "den" in which she writes cries out against its name. It is a marvel of white enamel and delicate tintings, even the book-cases and the pretty writing-desk showing the fleckless finish. Here she has a special drawer for the manuscripts of her new books: "One That Wins," "Whom Nature Leadeth" and "The Wing of Azrael."



MRS. MONA CAIRD.

Mr. Caird proclaims himself ready to maintain against all the world that his wife makes the best cup of tea in London. She is a pretty figure while serving it, clothed in a long, falling house-robe in tints of pink and gold. Her soft, heavy brown hair waving low on her forehead, the dainty cups and saucers, fragile as egg-shells, seeming fitter burdens than sociological treatises for her fingers. Mr. Caird is a son of Sir James Caird, and, judging from his quizzical expression when the subject arises, is more interested in his wife's tea than in her theories. He listens respectfully, however, while she tells me that her views of the marriage relation have been misunderstood quite generally.

"Instead of holding," she said, "that men and women should be allowed to marry and separate as easily as they would meet for a visit in a country house, I believe most steadfastly in life-long marriages; but the bond should be a free contract, resting on love and conscience, and if husband and wife found that, after all, their union was a mistake and harmonious life together impossible, they should not be forced to live on for the rest of their days a terrible existence, outraging both body and soul. Strange as it may seem, I believe that to make marriage dissoluble is the way to greater permanence in the relation. The fact that a thing can not be undone is enough to make many wish to try."



"JOHN STRANGE WINTER."

It is not every visitor to Putney who has the entree of the nursery of Mr. Winter, so-called, until the favorable receptions of "Hoopla" and "In Quarters" induced the author to let the public into the secret of her sex. She is the mother of three chubby babies, the eldest of whom is five years old. These mischievous, sunny-tempered youngsters fill their end of the house with laughter. With a toddler on each knee and another hanging over a chair behind, she answered a question as to the happiest hour she had ever seen.

It is not by haunting the purlieus of Piccadilly or pacing the boundaries of Belgravia that "Edna Lyall's" acquaintance is to be made. The author of "Donovan" and "We Two" does not care for society, as might be judged from the fact that she put the profits arising from the first-named book into a peal of bells for St. Saviour's Church, Eastbourne, instead of buying new gowns. The curate of this church is her sister's husband, Mr. Jameson, and it is with this sister that Edna Lyall, or to give her her proper name, Miss Ada Ellen Bayly, has lived for some years.

EDNA LYALL'S STUDY.

The old-fashioned red brick house buried among trees is almost monastic-looking. Miss Bayly herself dresses with a plainness approaching severity. Her short brown hair is brushed back from her forehead without adventitious crimp or curl, exposing a high, white forehead. Her eyes are her only beautiful feature; they are large and expressive, but rather sad-looking. Her voice is soft and low, and as she sits by the fire, the glowing embers lighting up her face, you are not surprised to learn that her favorite poet is Whittier.

Mrs. Haweis, whose "Chaucer for Children" is included by Sir John Lubbock in his final list of the "best hundred books," is a unique figure in literary London. Mr. and Mrs. Haweis, who are amiably happy in the consciousness that whatever they do is right, live in one of the oldest dwelling-houses in Cheyne Walk, interesting from the legends connecting it with some of Queen Elizabeth's flirtations, but more interesting because, for a brief period, it was Dante Rossetti's home, and retains in some features, notably in the coloring of the rooms, the impress of his personality. The long drawing-room has seven tall windows looking on the Thames and hung with curtains that once belonged to Bonaparte. There is an old Spanish leather screen that was Byron's. Costume parties are an occasional feature, and, clad in robes of all the centuries, literary and artistic Bohemia may be seen discussing the "esthetics of dress," the "art of beauty" and other such mysteries. Mrs. Haweis illustrates her husband's books and designs the covers. She has really been a benefactor to the British matron by introducing art, even of the Pre-Raffaelite order, into home-decoration.

Mention of the Rossetti's reminds one that many American visitors find their way to the rather dreary old house in Torrington Square, near the British Museum, where Miss Christina Rossetti lives in retirement, nursing two aunts who are infirm and advanced in years. Miss Rossetti has one of the loveliest faces ever seen on a woman, a face full of mysticism and spiritual insight, with heavy-lidded eyes. Her life is as ascetic as her verses. She is said to be impoverished by her charities.

ELIZA PUTNAM HEATON.

VISITING MANNERS.

Little Points of Etiquette That Should Be Carefully Observed.

Many of us who pride ourselves on our good-breeding are singularly blind as to what is due to friends who are visiting people unknown to us, or who are entertaining guests whom we have never met. Nor are we more assured as to some of the points of etiquette toward our own guests and to our own hosts when we make an occasional flitting from home.

It is useless to decry etiquette by saying that the best manners in all cases are those which hurt no one. This is true as a general law, but there always are some points which leave no room for experiments as to what will hurt another, and which yet may be settled once for all by a few rules.

If you have an acquaintance who is entertaining friends whom she wishes you to meet, it is your duty to call promptly, and if possible offer some hospitality to both guests and hosts.

If the position is reversed, and your friend is visiting people unknown to you, never go to see your friend without leaving a card for the hostess. If you give any entertainment for the friend, be very sure to invite her hosts also. It does not follow that your invitation will be accepted, but if it is, the hostess must be treated as the guest of honor and shown every deference. If, for instance, the entertainment is a luncheon for young ladies, she may be asked to take the seat at the end of the table opposite to your own.

If the mutual friend is your guest, you may be sure that, if she is a woman of good-breeding, she, in turn, will accept no invitation which does not include you, although you may think best to decline it and insist upon her going alone. Nor will she receive visitors without asking you to join them in the parlor, should her friends be rude enough to have sent you no cards. Here, too, you may excuse yourself, or at most, join them with such delay as to give them a short interview alone.

These same rules hold good for you when you are the guest. Before you go to make the visit, send word to your friends where and with whom you are to stay, so that there may be no idea that you are in a boarding-house, and therefore mistress of your time and surroundings. This constant deference to your hostess should lead you to order all letters and packages to be addressed to her care.

As to the disposal of your time, when you are visiting, no etiquette requires you to accept all the plans of your hostess, if you feel unable to do so; but care is needed to show that refusal means lack of strength, not lack of interest and inclination. With a little tact on both sides, you will have many hours for your own.

Indeed, a skilful hostess will manage to secure you this privilege, and not make the mistake of working too hard to amuse you, and so absorb every moment of your visit into her idea of what is pleasure for you.

No greater compliment is possible than the quiet acceptance of your presence in the intimacy of family life.—A. R. Ramsey, in Youth's Companion.

WITH TAIL IN AIR.

The Main Part of a Tree Is That Which Is Underground.

Yes, a tree is an underground creature, with its tail in the air. All its intelligence is in its roots. Think what sagacity it shows in its search after food and drink! Somehow or other, the rootlets, which are its tentacles, find out that there is a brook at a moderate distance from the trunk of the tree, and they make for it with all their might. They find every crack in the rocks where there are a few grains of the nourishing substance they care for, and insinuate themselves into its deepest recesses. When spring and summer come, they let their tails grow, and delight in whisking them about in the wind, or letting them be whisked about by it; for these tails are poor passive things, with very little will of their own, and bend in whatever direction the wind chooses to make them.

The leaves make a deal of noise whispering. I have sometimes thought I could understand them as they talked with each other, and that they seemed to think they made the wind as they wagged forward and back. Remember what I say. The next time you see a tree waving in the wind, recollect that it is the tail of a great underground many-armed, polypus-like creature which is as proud of its caudal appendage, especially in summer time, as a peacock of his gorgeous expanse of plumage.

Do you think there is any thing so very odd about this idea? Once get it into your heads and you will find it renders the landscape wonderfully interesting. There are as many kinds of tree tails as there are of tails to dogs and other quadrupeds. Study them as Daddy Gilpin studied them in his "Forest Scenery," but don't forget that they are only the appendage of the underground vegetable polypus, the true organism to which they belong.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in Atlantic.

Prof. Newcomb's Bad Break.

Prof. Simon Newcomb, of Washington, is known as a man whose scientific studies have tended to exaggerate a natural disposition to mental abstraction. The professor's friends, who are also his strong admirers, understand his peculiarity, and overlook in him what might not be excused in an ordinary person. A Washington lady is very fond of telling this incident: She was at a reception given at Prof. Newcomb's house. The occasion had been made delightful by the professor's wife and daughters, and every thing was very enjoyable. Toward the close of the evening, the lady, who had enjoyed the affair greatly, approached the host and asked him with much enthusiasm: "How often do you have these delightful reunions, professor?" "But once a year, madam—thank goodness!—but once a year." There was no polite prevarication in that reply.—Golden Days.

A Pig Sticker Stock.

Here's a true story of the Princess Engelichieff, who has been in Chicago, says the Brooklyn Standard. Not long ago that beautiful Russian lady attended a reception given at the Calumet Club. She was regal in old satin and gold jewels and was escorted by one of the handsomest officers of the club.

In the old settlers' room the portrait of Long John Wentworth was pointed out to her. Now, the late Mr. Wentworth was far from spirituelle, and at the first glance the Princess, with a little start, exclaimed, looking at a circle of friends:

"Do show me a pig-sticker! I have heard so much about the Chicago pig-sticker."

The gentleman flushed a little, there was an "audible silence" and her hostess replied:

"Princess, you are on the arm of one."

Art Note.

Livingston Snobberly is a distinguished New York amateur artist, who got his picture into a New York gallery. A sarcastic friend met Snobberly a few days afterward, and said:

"I was in the art gallery yesterday. By Jove! I saw such a big crowd. I spent half an hour before your picture. Yours was the only one I looked at."

"Ah, thanks, thanks. Quite complimentary. But why didn't you look at the rest?"

"Well, you see, there were crowds of people in front of all the other pictures, but there was nobody in front of yours except myself."—Texas Siftings.

Genius in the Kitchen.

Bridget (not to be put down)—Shure, an' there's bailin' shprings roight in the creeks, sor.—Judge.

His Judgment Was Warped.

She—What do you think of this lace, John?

He—How much did it cost?

She—Ten cents a yard.

He—O, it is bewilderingly beautiful. How much more exquisite it is than the expensive kinds you used to buy!—Munsey's Weekly.

PUBLIC OPINION.

Intelligent public opinion is a conquering power when fully incited to action. Like a body of snow rolling down the mountain side, it rapidly increases in bulk and gathers strength to inflict crushing blows upon all who dare attempt to arrest its onward course.

There is no adequate force, nor more reliable safeguard in free representative government than intelligent public opinion. It can, as it ever ought, defeat the purposes of [illegible] partisanship, and render [illegible] laws made in defiance of popular rights.

Politicians, in official place and out of it, [illegible] with brief authority or ambition with unwarranted ambition, presuming themselves greater than the average people, sometimes venture too far and are mown down like stubble by or then hammered on the anvil of popular fury.

That fact is proven by the political history of this country and history is wont to repeat itself.

The people are sovereign, and if the grand Republic of George Washington is to endure, the people must be on the alert and resolutely compass ruling power.

President Harrison, in his late voluminous and special pleading annual message, [illegible] insult upon the intelligence of the American people by insinuating that they did not understand the effect of the tariff and other odious Republican party measures passed or in process of being passed by the present Congress, and still advocated by him, notwithstanding the thundering protest through the ballot boxes.

President Harrison makes a fatal mistake.

The people are not ignorant and profligate, they know right from wrong, and loving justice, they hate the opposite.

The Farmers constitute an important part of the people of the United States. At the West and South, joining hands as an Alliance, they played havoc with those Republican Congressmen who blindly followed McKinley-Reedism and foolishly judged their constituents to be a pack of simpletons.

November 4th dispelled the illusion.

From the adopted platform of a Farmers' Alliance we extract as follows:

"Believing in the doctrine of equal rights to all, and special privileges to none, we demand that taxation, national or State, shall not be used to build up one interest or class at the expense of another. We believe that the money of the country should be kept, as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all revenue, national, State or county, shall be limited by the necessary expenses of the Government economically and honestly administered."

That is political truth clearly and concisely expressed. It squarely antagonizes McKinley tariffs and the reckless expenditures of the present Congress, and furthermore, it voices the openly avowed doctrines of the Democratic party.

AN ARMY OF FAIR WHITE HANDS.

Plainfield Women Arranging for a Charming Season of Festivity.

The bazar of holidays to be held in The Casino for the benefit of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Building Fund, Dec. 9, 10 and 11, is already assured of abundant success. The affair will be a beautiful presentation of a new idea. All of the popular festivals of the year will be represented by booths appropriately arranged and handsomely decorated. The division of labor in connection with the preparation has been very skillfully made, so that the work of the many departments is shared by an army of fair white hands. The holidays to be commemorated, and the committees in charge, are as follows:

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Committee—Fancy No. 1; Mrs. Geo. Babcock—Chairman; Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, Mrs. A. L. Titsworth, Mrs. F. A. Dunham, Miss Florence Titsworth, Miss Ernie Smith, Miss Ida Randolph, Miss Louise Clawson, Miss Grace Lewis, Miss Mabel Potter, Miss Mabel Marcott, Miss Bessie Titsworth, Miss Jessie Utter, Miss Myra Clarke.

VALENTINE'S DAY.

Committee—Stationery, Post Office; Mrs. S. J. Taylor—Chairman; Miss Mary E. Mosher, Miss Florence J. Rushmore, Miss Mary S. Miller, Miss Ella Taylor, Miss Ida Rose, Miss Luvinia L. French, Miss Lottie Porter.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Committee—Fancy No. 2; Mrs. C. Randolph—Chairman; Mrs. M. I. Crosby, Mrs. E. J. Waring, Mrs. W. Hartland, Mrs. A. T. Slauson, Mrs. L. T. Worthington, Mrs. E. W. Ware, Miss Mary E. Miller, Mrs. H. C. Squires, Mrs. S. B. Strothers, Miss Mary S. Janes, Mrs. F. C. Stevens.

DECORATION DAY.

Committee—Flowers; Miss Grace Howard—Chairman; Miss Lina Hart, Miss Carrie Betts, Miss Lulu Pangborn.

PAINED TO SEE CHRISTIANS WRANGLE.

Philadelphians Witness Deplorable Scenes at the Sabbath Union Meeting.

Notwithstanding the peculiar avowal of Col. Elliott F. Shepard, of The Mail and Express, of his abhorrence of the idea of being President of the American Sabbath Union another year, Dr. H. K. Carroll, of North Plainfield, editor of The Independent, Robert Grahame, and the Rev. Jas. H. Darlington, a majority of the Committee on Nomination of Officers, felt it their duty to nominate him at Tuesday's session, but the Rev. W. J. Robinson, of Allegheny, Penn., and the Rev. James Parker, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, did not, and they nominated the Rev. Sylvester Scovell, of Wooster University, Ohio. Worried and disgusted delegates began to leave. Still protesting that he did not want the office, the Colonel toyed with the subject of declination or acceptance, assuming, of course, that there could only be the preordained result. He presided during the balloting, and announced the result: "Shepard, 34; Scovell, 10; John Wanamaker, 1." He again declared his repugnance for the office, and finally said that he would declare his intentions to the Board of Managers. He thought the convention "ought to felicitate itself" on its size and its successful termination. He is probably the only man—remarks The New York Times—that thinks so. Men of all parties unite in deploring the unseemly, unblushing scenes witnessed yesterday.

An interested spectator of the proceedings—continues The Times—has been the Rev Dr. A. H. Lewis, of Plainfield, a leading spirit among Seventh-Day Baptists in this country and a pronounced opponent of the Sabbath Union, and yet he confesses that the pain from seeing Christians wrangle had been greater than the satisfaction of seeing a society with a wrong basis disintegrate.

Ripley Hill as a Place of Residence.

For Ripley Hill as a superior place of residence, it is claimed, that it combines the following conditions: Neighborhood [illegible]; nearness to Railroad station, 3 to 5 minutes walk; good drainage; wide avenues well kept and shaded with elms and maples of twenty years growth; pure water; low prices of lots, liberal discounts off to those who will build at once; facilities for obtaining loans for those who desire; a low commutation, 23 trains a day; rapid transit, 42 minutes from New York City; a location where your children can attend school, near enough to the Academy to reach at hourly; first-class neighborhood.—Union County Standard.

THE MELOPOI'S MUSICALE.

It Opens the Union County Country Club's Casino, and Charms the Souls of a Large Audience in Evening Dress.

The first private musicale of the Melopoia Society of this city, took place at The Casino Tuesday. It was the event of the season, so far, and also the inaugural entertainment of the building it was given in.

The array of talent imported for the occasion exceeded anything of the kind that had gone before. Emil Fischer, who receives $500 a night for three nights a week in German opera at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, sang, as did also Miss Clary, who had been announced in private as a "phenomenal contralto from Kentucky." Miss Blanche Taylor, soprano, and Mr. Hartdegen, the violoncello virtuoso. Besides, Mr. Chapman conducted, and Mr. Vecino—who is more deservingly appreciated and more entirely enjoyed than any other pianist who ever appears in Plainfield—played.

The affair was a thorough success—socially and musically. The hall was filled to its limit, evening dress was the rule (as announced on the tickets), and everyone was in such excellent spirits that there was almost a continued round of applause from the time the chorus began to assemble on the stage, till the closing of the concert. Because of this epidemic of gratification, an excuse may be found for the unnecessary and uncalled for applause by the chorus of its conductor. It was very much out of place. What would the audience think if the chorus of the "Merry Monarch" loudly clapped and clapped Francis Wilson's entree? And yet Wilson is just as funny as Chapman.

The Casino is a very attractive room, although not yet entirely finished; and the acoustics are very fine, though at times Herr Fischer's voice and the chorus hardly had head room. The programme was as follows, and every soloist was rapturously encored:

PROGRAMME.
PART FIRST.

1 Spring Song, ... Pinsuti
2. a "Vanitas," .... Volkman
b "Mignon," .... [illegible]
MR. HARTDEGEN.
3. "L'Estudiantina," .... Lacome

3. "Still as the Night," .... Bohm
MISS CLARY.
4. "Evening Star"—Tannhauser .... Wagner
HERR FISCHER.
5. "Air De Ballet," .... Servais
MR. HARTDEGEN.
6. Finale To "Die Meistersinger," .... Wagner
SOLO BY HERR FISCHER.

Miss Blanche Taylor, who has never sung here before, is a lyric soprano, with a pleasing voice of good quality, especially on the medium tones. Both her solo and the duet with Miss Clary, received a recall. Miss Mary Louise Clary is a young contralto who has recently come to New York to study. She has naturally a wonderful voice, deep, rich and pure in tone, and which with cultivation will assist her to such a future as has been granted to few. Herr Fischer was the lion of the evening. The many lovers of German opera in this city need no introduction. The easy way with which he took a low C, captivated the hearts of the basses, and he good naturedly responded to all the recalls. The manner in which he sang Lassen's "It Was a Dream," showed that he was equal to any style of music.

Adolf Hartdegen charmed the audience, as he always does. There was a dead silence through the room while the deep, rich tones of his 'cello throbbed and swelled. In the "Air de Ballet" the imitation of a bagpipe was perfect, and during the air that followed the heads of the audience involuntarily kept time, and their feet would have liked to. Mr. Vecino also did not disappoint his admirers. He played in a technically fine manner, although handicapped by a wretched piano of uneven tone. He was recalled but modestly declined to play again. The honor of being selected as the only home artist worthy to appear in such a galaxy of stars from abroad, is no more than is due his talents and his merits. Special mention should be made of Victor Harris, who is an exceptionally good accompanist.

The chorus did well. If there could be a fault found with it—the members did too well; that is, they sang with their whole strength, and sometimes tried to run away with their conductor. This showed especially in "Spring Song," "Evening," and "Only Thee," where there was not sufficient modulation, and the diminuendoes were given too abruptly. "Beneath the Stars" is a waltz song which was translated into English for Mr Chapman, and has not been rendered before in this country. It was heartily sung and very much enjoyed. The most finished production was probably "My Love Dwells in a Northern Land," which is a beautiful song, and is also new to America. The finale to "The Mastersinger" was, according to Fischer, sung better than the opera chorus sing it.

To William R. Chapman is due the greatest praise for producing from a chorus, the majority of whom were unaccustomed to singing with a leader, such really beautiful music. The public are now anxious to compare this year's work of the Choral Society. Last year the latter did fully as well as the Melopoia of last night.

The Hymn to Apollo by Bender, will be given at the January concert of the Melopoia.

St. Mary's Christmas Choir.

Special music for the Christmas services is now being prepared at St. Mary's Roman Catholic church. The church has two choirs, both of which are under the charge of Mrs. Rowan. Some of the singers in the chancel choir, which is composed of excellent voices, are to be joined to the large choir, and are soon to begin rehearsing, under Mrs. Rowan's competent direction, for the holiday music. A large and thoroughly instructed body of singers will be the result. The members of the large choir include Miss May Flanagan, Miss Katie Reed, Miss Nellie Casey, Miss Alice Quinn, Miss Lucy Rafferty, Miss Maggie Sheehan, Miss Maggie Conway, Miss Julia Day, Mr. O'Rourke, Mr. Conner, and Mr. Traynor. The chancel choir is composed of Miss Josephine L. Shafer, Miss Lucy A. Rafferty, Miss Nellie T. Casey, Miss Maggie A. Lawler, Miss Sarah Sheehy, Miss Mary Reilly, Miss Maggie Conway, Miss Tessie Reilly, Miss Lizzie Casey, Miss Katie Flanagan, Miss Lucy McIntyre.

Captain Grant Finds a Missing Son.

Cornelius Dunn, a demented young man, twenty-one years of age, wandered away from his home in South Orange, Friday, boarded a railroad train, and was put off by the conductor at Elizabeth. Subsequently he boarded another train and reached Plainfield. Then he disappeared. His mother enlisted the sympathy of George W. Grant, Captain of Plainfield's Police, and that dignitary succeeded, by a prompt and thorough search, in finding the missing youth at Somerville. Peter Dunn, the young man's father, came to Plainfield last night and took the son home.

NEWS OF OUR NEIGHBORS.

Bits of Gossip from the Boroughs, and a Reminiscence of the War.

WASHINGTONVILLE, Dec. 9.

The Rev. J. C. Fernald, and father, Judge Fernald of Washington, D. C., addressed an appreciative audience Sunday evening in the Mary E. Wilson Memorial Chapel.

Mrs. Underhill is confined to her home by a very heavy cold bordering on pneumonia.

The promptness of the general government in settling claims is most proverbial. The case of W. H. Smith illustrates this. Smith was one of the crew on board the United States corvette Shecora, which was attached to the Atlantic Squadron during the war. The Shecora, being a very fast sloop, made a great many captures of blockade runners; and as the government allowed the sale of the vessels and the contents that were intended to aid the Confederates in their rebellion, large proceeds were divided from time to time as shares among the crew. Many richly laden blockade runners whose custom it was to run in under the cover of darkness were captured while making the attempt. The proceeds of the final sales the government has just apportioned, informing Mr. Smith that his share is $300; and a check for that amount he found in the post-office yesterday. This will make things bright for the holidays, although he had given over hoping that he would ever get his share of the prize money. One large vessel that was trying to run the blockade, and that they had chased thirty hours without being able to come up to, would not heave to, although they fired several shots at her; finally the Captain ran his vessel up a creek, in the early morning, when he found he could not escape from his relentless pursuers. The water not being very deep they grounded, and then set fire to their own vessel and escaped. When a boat's crew of twenty men, all armed, went to the burning vessel, they could find no one, and the vessel was so far gone as to destroy her identity.

The ice on the ponds on the average is four inches thick, and the ice harvesters are accordingly happy in their prospect of a large crop.

The linemen setting the electric light poles in North Plainfield say that the frost is ten inches deep in the ground.

JALEB CUSHWOOD.

A HUNTSMAN'S GUN EXPLODES.

Almost a Fatal Shooting Accident in the Mountain Woodland.

[Special to THE PRESS.]

WASHINGTONVILLE, Dec. 10.

A serious shooting accident that might have proved fatal happened to Peter Burnett, a young man living near Millington, Tuesday. With a party of friends, Burnett went out hunting, in the morning, the light fall of snow of the night before having made good tracking for bunnies. Burnett started a cotton-tail, and raised his gun to fire. He pulled the trigger, and that is all he remembers. The other members of the party heard a terrible report, and, looking around, saw Burnett lying on the ground, the stock of his gun in one hand, while the rest of it was scattered around promiscuously. The left hand was shattered so badly that Dr. Jones of Basking Ridge found it necessary to amputate the two first fingers. Part of the palm is torn away. The shock was so great that Burnett had to be carried home. Everything possible was done to alleviate the sufferings of the young man, who is about twenty-two years of age, and who works on what is known as the Frank Coris farm, which he manages with his brother.

A Few More About Bowlers Would Make Them the Champions.

At a match game of bowling at the Fanwood Club, Saturday evening, the following scores were made:

Walter Force	115	Clarence Smith	126
Mrs. Robinson	80	Billy [illegible]	74
Howard Williams	99	H. Hamlin	119
Miss Bertha Smith	97	H. Robinson	113
Chas. Richardson	94	Abner P. Downer	143

As usual, Abner P. Downer leads in the bowling, and it is thought that if the Fanwood Club should substitute a bowler equal to Mr. Downer in place of Mr. Force the Fanwoods would, with the help of E. P. Moore and George Brown, be invincible.

Grand Officers Attend a Plainfield Election.

Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, at its regular meeting Monday, elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

Regent—Lewis M. Stover; Vice Regent—Aug. Wm. Kleinecke; Orator—Chas. W. Kellogg; Secretary—H. A. Thorne (re-elected); Collector—Wm. J. Leonard; Treasurer—Thos. R. Cone; Chaplain—Wm. B. Reeves; Guide—John M Dayton; Warden—H. W. Stover; Sentry—A. W. Rand; Organist—Robt. H. Lowry; Trustees—A Swain, R. M. Stover and Wm. J. Ford (re-elected); Representative to Grand Lodge—E. W. Conklin; Alternate—Wm. J. Leonard.

Besides a large attendance of the members, there were present on their annual visit the Grand Regent of the State and his staff of eight grand officers. During the evening remarks were made by Grand Regent W. A. Tompkins, Grand Orator F. S. Potter, Grand Secretary R. H. Alberts, Past Regent P. H. Charlock, grand officers R. F. Feish and Chas. Mencke, and many others. After the speechmaking supper was served.

A Sharper Law is to be Made for Truants.

Edwin O. Chapman, State Superintendent of Schools, thinks that there will be some action taken by the Legislature toward remedying the plan that exists in the Truancy Act now on the statutes. Mr. Chapman says that truancy is on the increase, and that not only is the evil no longer confined to the bad little boys who rob the robins of their nests, but that little girls have learned to remain away from school without parental sanction. One trouble is that the law provides no way for the truant officers to get their pay.

In Newark the policemen are also truant officers, and consequently are paid in that way, but in smaller places, such as Plainfield, constables are asked to run down the delinquents, and they receive no compensation for their difficult and unpleasant work. Truancy, in Superintendent Chapman's judgment, is a great evil, because it fosters many others.

In some localities it is found that very small children write forged notes to explain their absence from school. They learn to forge, deceive and lie. While playing truant they get into very vicious habits and cause trouble. One of the reasons given for the existence of truancy in the large cities, like Newark and Jersey City, is the lack of school room. Newark has accommodations for only forty per cent. of the school children, consequently the law there cannot be enforced. Plainfield has an abundance of school room, and truancy is only an occasional freak among the children. When a pupil is known to be playing "hookey" Special Officer Hope, or some similar dignitary, hunts him up and hauls him before the teacher. Just now skating is the only existing invitation to the student of truant mind.

In croup and whooping-cough it is important to have a remedy at once at hand that is reliable and safe. [illegible] Cough Cure fills the bill better than any medicine that has ever been discovered. Its effects are positive, quick, and sure. It acts like magic. Remember it.

WHERE IS JOHN LARUE?

His Son Peter Writes from Paris, Trying to Find Him at Plainfield.

As has already been recorded in THE PRESS, the Plainfield police are eager to obtain news of John Larue, who worked on a farm near Plainfield four years ago, but who has mysteriously disappeared. In order that the search for the missing man may be facilitated, THE PRESS now gives publicity to the following letter:

[Translation.]

PARIS, Nov. 5, 1890.

To the Chief of Police:

DEAR SIR:—Allow me to write you these few lines, to express the desire I have to obtain news of my father, Jean Larue, age 43, born at Entrange, department of Moselle, France, who left seven years ago for America. The last letter I received from him was dated July 21, 1886. He was then working for a French farmer by the name of Bertrand, at Plainfield, New Jersey; post-office box 1196. I have addressed myself to the Chief of Police of New York, and he has directed me to you. I hope, dear sir, that you will be able to give me information of my father, and calm the anxiety of a loving son, who will have for you the deepest gratitude.

Kindly address,
PIERRE LARUE,
No. 42 Rue Championnet,
Paris, France.

The Middlesex Gun Club's Sale.

At an adjourned meeting of the Middlesex Gun Club, Monday night, it was decided to offer the Club's property at public auction on Thursday, Dec. 18, instead of Dec. 11 as before announced, so that the sale could be more extensively advertised.

Wants Others to Experience the Same Benefits.

A business man found that by leaving home ten minutes earlier than usual, for his train, he could spend that length of time with profit, and spiritual refreshing to himself, at the business men's prayer and praise service, held every morning at 59 North avenue, from 7:55 to 8:20; and he earnestly hopes that all business men will avail themselves of this unusual privilege in our city.

Young Church Workers Elect Their Officers.

At a meeting of the new Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the Trinity Reformed church, held Sunday, the following officers were elected for the ensuing six months:

President—Josie B. Runyon; Vice President—Ada Miller; Secretary—Edgar Sheppard; Treasurer—Olive Wikoff; Lookout Committee—Maud VanDyck, Adelaide Baxter, Sadie Holmes, George Snedeker, John H. VanWinkle, and Elmer Wheeler. Other committees, such as Flower, Temperance and Missionary, will be appointed later.

The last Monday in every month a consecration meeting will be held. A manual of instruction entitled "First Lessons in Christian Truth," will be used as a text book on the other meeting days.

The Superintendent of the Society is Miss Alice Smith; Assistant Superintendent, Mrs. C. Schenck. The Society has sixty-three members, sixty of whom were present yesterday.

Somerville Twice Defeated.

Plainfielders who visited the West End Athletic Club at Somerville Monday night had a merry time. A large number of guests attended the opening of the West End alleys. The Crescents scored two victories, as follows:

After the games supper was handsomely served in rooms adjoining the alleys.

Abundance of Need for Charity Here at Home.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Within the last few days I have heard, from independent sources, of urgent, and perhaps unusual cases of need among the poor of Plainfield, and on the other hand of unsuccessful efforts made to collect partly worn clothing, with which to relieve this need. The fact seems to be that the ordinary supply of second-hand clothing was drawn upon pretty heavily, if not well nigh exhausted, by the recent call from the Florence Mission of New York. Everyone must certainly be glad that that call met with such a generous response; but there seems to be some danger that the final cost will fall upon the needy ones of our own city—a possible result which ought not to be. I would like to suggest to those who still have clothing which can be spared, be it suitable for either sex or any age, that they can hardly do a better thing than to use it at once to relieve some of the pressing need among our own poor. I am sure that either of the four mission schools or the Relief Association will gladly receive and distribute any such donations.

H. B. MUNGER.

Buy at Home.

There is no season of the year when the injunction "buy at home" is more appropriate than just before the holidays. It is good advice at any time, but the more so at this season because it is, of all others, the season when large purchases are made and much money is expended.

Reliable local business men, like reliable local newspapers, help greatly in building up a place. They take great care to select fine stocks of goods, and bring them right to the doors of those who live here. More than that, they offer the goods, as a rule, at reasonable prices, and relieve the purchasing community of any necessity of going out of town. It is only right, to say the very least, that those who wish to buy shall see what is offered at home and at what price it can be bought before going anywhere else. Anything short of that is discourteous to those who have tried their best to supply all the needs and requirements of a cultured community, and is more or less disadvantageous to the city at large.

The advertising columns of THE PRESS show, better than any other medium, the places and the individuals who are most entitled to local patronage. Reliable merchants who have been the leading business men in their respective lines for a quarter of a century find it to their advantage to make use of these columns, and the people of Plainfield find that they can learn more of the business and the business men of this city from these columns than from any others.

There is no better way to build up a city than by patronizing the institutions of that city. The stores are for the convenience of the people, as well as for the prosperity of those who own them, and the fact that they are home-institutions ought to entitle them to preference over any that are beyond the limits. It would give a wonderful impetus to local business if the money to be expended by citizens of Plainfield within the next three weeks were all expended in buying at the stores in this city; and it will assuredly increase trade in every department if those intending to buy will first see what is offered here before going elsewhere.

GRATEFUL FOR PLAINFIELD'S CHARITY.

A Noble Work Splendidly Assisted by the Generous Contributions of the Crescent City.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I inclose two letters addressed to me, acknowledging the receipt of money and clothes contributed by Plainfield people for Rescue Work in New York City. Of the $490.30 which came into my hands, I gave $300 to the Rescue Band of the Florence Mission, and sent $190.30 to S. H. Hadley, Superintendent of the old McAuley Mission, 316 Water street.

There were pledges for about $19 more which were collected by the ladies who re-packed the clothing, and the money was sent directly to New York by them.

Trusting that those who contributed this money and clothing may receive rich blessing from God,

I remain cordially yours,
B. FAY MILLS.

Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 2, 1890.

To the Rev. B. Fay Mills, Syracuse, N. Y.:

DEAR BROTHER:—I have your esteemed favor of the 25th, inclosing check for $190.30, which I understand was contributed by the Christian men and women of Plainfield, N. J., to help us in our rescue work, which is not provided for by our regular current expenses. I thank you with all my heart, and those dear people also, for this generous gift. Scarcely a day passes but what some poor souls come in either from prison or from the holes of vice and crime, which are so thick around us, naked and starving. We must help them, and we always do help them. Every penny shall be used as you suggest. We also received four barrels of splendid clothing. Oh, how glad we are! If some of those good people will come over some night we will show them some of our new converts dressed up in their clothing, and they won't be ashamed of them, either. This gives us new courage, and will increase our faith, to feel that you and others are thinking of us and praying for us.

Yours in His Name,
S. H. HADLEY.

McAuley Mission, 316 Water street, New York, Nov. 26, 1890.

DEAR BROTHER MILLS:—It is with much thankfulness that we forward you a receipt for the $300 you gave us for our work with the Florence Mission Rescue Band, and also for the five barrels and two cases of clothes. You and our kind friends of Plainfield will never know how they have strengthened us for our work, for which we have each dedicated our lives. We have worked and prayed and prayed and worked in the past, but have been so hampered for want of room!—Poor miserable men and women coming unto us, and we unable to assist them, often waiting in our labor because of want of means; and we never fully realizing how large God's store-houses were, and so we were willing to stop in that way; but now—praise His name!—we are enabled to take a big room to store our goods, and in which to dress our men and also to hold a Bible class in, for the men who are saved through our work. As you know, in the missions themselves it is one constant appeal to the unsaved, and so there is nothing on which a young convert is to grow strong. And here we will meet them and talk to them over their plans, for these men are as children at first, and we are their only friends and consolers.

This will be a wonderful help to us, and meets with the entire satisfaction of the heads of our mission, as we never take any important step in expenditure, etc., without consulting our Advisory Board, of whom A. S. Hatch and G. Mackay are members. And we have also to spend money to buy coffee and food for the men and women we find hungry and cold, in our work. And when they first come unto us we have to feed and bed them for a time. As you know, they are wretchedly weak, and require a little looking after until they get work. For this we buy meat and lodging tickets, so as not to tempt them with the money to buy drink, which they might do just in the beginning; and then as for clothing, we are always in need of clothes, particularly for men, as when they first come from those Mulberry street dives they must bathe and change from head to foot, for when they come a Christian man would hesitate to send them into his cellar to chop wood as they then are, and yet many of these men when saved are capable of holding good positions or have good trades. And now again, thank you and all our kind friends. Trusting that you will pray for us and that God may give us many precious souls, and with best wishes to Brother Greenwood and yourself, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,
CHARLOTTE RESSEQUIE.

P. S.—If you send letter to Plainfield papers please make plain the difference between the Florence Mission and the Florence Mission Rescue Band, as we have distinct funds. Mr. Crittenton supplies the needs of the house, while subscriptions to the Band should be sent to me.

FLORENCE MISSION RESCUE BAND,
312 East 25th street, New York.
Nov. 28, 1890.

Warrenville Warblings.

An entertainment was held at the public school house Thanksgiving evening, for the benefit of the school. The net proceeds were $19.

A sociable was held the same evening at the house of Professor G. E. Whitten. Dancing was indulged in till 3 a. m., when all left for their homes, having spent a very pleasant evening.

A Victory for Methodist Women.

The question "Shall women be admitted into the General Conference as lay delegates?" has been submitted to the congregations of all the Methodist churches in the United States, and the members of each were allowed to vote upon it. The voting was all done during October and November, mainly in the latter month. The results from the churches throughout the country are not all in yet, but the Philadelphia Methodist says that enough of the returns have been received to show that the women have carried the day, and, so far as the popular will goes, they are entitled to seats in the General Conference as lay delegates. Plainfield voted in the women's favor.

A Farewell Testimonial for a [illegible].

The scholars and associates of G. E. Hasselmann will give him a testimonial entertainment at the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein Hall, Dec. 17, on the occasion of his removal from this city. Mr. Hasselmann's long connection with Holy Cross church choir, and his able direction of the many successful musical and dramatic performances of the Gesang and Turn Verein in the past three years, have won him a host of friends, and there is no doubt that the testimonial will meet with the encouragement it deserves. The programme promises to be a most enjoyable one, and comprises some of the best and brightest of local talent, as well as several artists from New York.

Wonderful Popularity.

The fact that the sale of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets exceeds that of any other pill in the market, be it great or small, is on account of the fact that they are tiny, little, sugar-coated granules, and that in most cases one little "Pellet" is sufficient for a dose; that they are purely vegetable and perfectly harmless; and for biliousness, sick headache, and all diseases arising from derangement of the liver, stomach or bowels, they are absolutely a specific. A gentle laxative or active cathartic, according to size of dose.

THE GUILD OF THE TELEGRAPH KEY.

A Plainfield Dispatcher Tells an Interesting Story of the Men Who Send Our Lightning Messages.

Telegraph operators—says a manipulator of the key who handles dispatches at the Western Union office in Plainfield—form strong friendships over the wires. Metaphorically they shake hands cordially twice a day—when they begin work and when they end it. And when business is dull they hold long conversations, with many miles separating them, as two friends might do over a dinner table. They tell of their hopes and fears and ambitions and impart very confidential information to men whom they have never seen. Of course, all these exchanges take place between those who have been in communication constantly for some time.

There are pairs of men who have been in daily communication with each other over the same telegraph wire for years, and who have never seen each other. Each is well acquainted with the other's temperament, his moods, his disposition, and his sentiments. Telegraph instruments and telegraph wires are unfeeling and stolid-looking things. Yet, through them a man is able to convey emotions of sorrow or joy almost as plainly as they may be expressed facially. The fact is perfectly palpable to the man at one end of the wire, while he is receiving dispatches, that the man who is sending them is ill or well, or—though the sender may make use of no terms of friendliness or of swear words—that he is in good temper or bad.

When the feeling between two operators in two cities, instead of being that of gentle affection, is that of strong dislike, the fact can be made just as apparent as though they were within a few feet of each other. No personal collision can occur, of course. That is one of the drawbacks. But a man can call names and make threats over a wire with almost the same facility as by word of mouth. One of the favorite resorts when two operators are quarreling is that professionally known as "fighting circuit". Not much is accomplished by this, however, for when two operators strive at the same time to call names over a wire, neither can succeed.

In their conversations telegraphers use a system of abbreviations which enables them to say considerably more in a certain period of time than they otherwise could. The morning greeting of a Plainfield dispatcher to a friend in New York, Somerville, or some other city, is usually "g. m." and the farewell for the evening, "g. n.," the letters of course standing for good morning and good night. The salutation may be accompanied by an inquiry by one as to the health of the other, which would be expressed thus: "Hw r u ts mng?" And the answer would be: "I'm pty wl; hw r u?" or "I'm nt fig vy wl; fraid I've gt t mlaria."

By the time these courtesies have taken place some early messages have come from the receiving department or from some other wire, and the man before whom they are placed says to his friend, many miles away: "Wl hrs a fu; Gol hang ts everlastin grind. I wish I ws rich." And the other man says: "No rest fo t wickd, min pen," the last two words indicating that he wants the sender to wait a minute while he adjusts and tests his pen. Presently he clicks out "g. a.," meaning "go ahead," and the day's work has begun. If the sender is old in the business, he will take a steady, even gait, and the fact that the messages are piling up faster than he is getting rid of them won't worry him. When the pile gets too big he will notify the chief operator, and that important individual will probably take a portion of them away and have them sent by another wire. But, if the sender is young and ambitious, he will, as soon as the messages begin to accumulate, deem it his duty to "whoop 'em up," and unless the other man is ambitious, too, there will be trouble pretty quick.

The receiver will "break" a good deal, and directly he will observe, "Oh dt b in sch a bloomin hurry, u won't gt ur salary raised tt way." And the sender, being young and "fresh," will reply to the effect that the receiver is a "ham" and will advise him to "get rif," which means that he ought to get up and let a competent receiver take his place. Then he will snap out the figure "4" peremptorily, which is the arbitrary sign standing for "Where shall I go ahead?" But although he may hurry and perspire, he won't send as many messages as the steady old fellow during the day.

No two operators send alike. The click of the instrument is always the same to the ear of a man who does not understand it, but one operator recognizes the sending of another if he has ever heard it before for any length of time, just as a familiar face is recognized. Operator "Tommy" Snaggs leaves Plainfield, and, after roaming from one city to another, finally lands in an office on the line of Plainfield's wire and goes to work. The man in Plainfield begins to send. Mr. Snaggs pricks up his ears and, interrupts the sender. "Ain't tt u Cholly Schermerhorn?" he asks, and the popular Plainfield manager says, "Yes, tts I, & ur ole Tommy Snaggs." Mr. Snaggs returns, "tis wo I am, I thot I reconized ur sendin." Then they devote a few minutes to telling of their travels.

It is a peculiar fact also that an experienced operator can almost invariably distinguish a woman's sending from a man's. There is nearly always some peculiarity about a woman's style of transmission. It is not necessarily a fault. Many women send very clearly and make their dots and dashes precisely as they were intended to be made. It is impossible to describe the peculiarity, but there is no doubt of its existence. Nearly all women have a habit of rattling off a lot of meaningless dots before they say anything. But some men do that too. A woman's touch is lighter than a man's, and her dots and dashes will not carry so well on a very long circuit. That is presumably the reason why in all large offices the women are usually assigned to work the wires running to various parts of the cities.

Operators laugh over a wire; or, rather, they convey the fact that they are amused. They do this by telegraphing "ha, ha." Very great amusement is indicated by sending "ha" slowly and repeating it several times, and a smile is expressed by sending "ha" once or perhaps twice. Transmitting it slowly and repeating it tells the perpetrator of the joke at the other end of the wire that the listener is leaning back in his chair and laughing long and heartily.

Twenty or twenty-five years have made great changes for the telegraphers. In the old days an operator was an individual to whom great interest was attached, and around whom was a halo of mystery. Then he received a salary which was deemed handsome for what was apparently such light work. In a boarding house he was always the star. Railroad passes were obtainable by him for the asking. He was frequently given the freedom of cities, and when it was not given to him he sometimes took it. But now—well, the old-timers assert that the business has gone to the dogs.

The Borough's Electric Light.

Work on the proposed electric light system of North Plainfield is progressing rapidly. Poles are being erected on all the main streets, and the line will soon be completed. The poles are of the plain wooden variety, and are not very handsome. Workmen are clearing away the brushwood on the Allen lot on Race street, at the rear of Smalley's butcher shop, and will break ground this week preparatory to the erection of an Edison Electric Light station at that point. The works will be operated by steam.

Indians and Negroes Tell Their Own Story of an Education's Value.

Generous contributions were made to the cause of Indian and negro education, through donations to the Hampton Institute at the public meeting held Monday night in the Crescent Avenue church. The exercises of the evening were very interesting. Besides brief original addresses by negro and Indian young men from the Institute there was good singing by the Hampton quartette, besides addresses by General Armstrong and Chaplain Frissell. The Rev. E. M. Rodman presided.

Jack Jenks was a victim of liver complaint,
His strength was exhausted, his pulse had grown faint;
He had ulcers and tumors and all sorts of humors,
And the ills that he suffered would weary a saint.
Folks said that Jack Jenks would never be cured,
But Jack said he would—that they might be assured;
Pierce's G. M. Discovery wrought his recovery,
After all the poor fellow so long had endured.

Such a multitude of serious, distressing and often fatal maladies spring from a disordered liver. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery creates a healthy action of this important organ, and the ills that have their origin there can be cured by its prompt and faithful use. All druggists.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

A. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, where the freight house!

—Keep the snow shovel handy.

—Nothing but Christmas is now the thought.

—Plumbers' prospects are brightening every day.

—Colds, red noses and rosy cheeks, are abundant.

—"Mamma, when is Christmas?" "Buy and buy, my dear."

—Christmas slippers for local pastors are being embroidered.

—A Plainfield chef says that there are [illegible] ways of cooking an egg.

—Ear tabs, fur caps, frozen toes, and [illegible] are seasonable.

—Pictures of [illegible] sardines are now, and they are sure for dyspepsia.

—Good sleighing means good holiday trade from the neighboring farmers.

—Policemen hug warm spots on the lee side of big buildings these nights.

—Chinamen generally travel by threes and fours, and are always chattering.

—Sheriff Hicks will draw his first panel of jurors next Tuesday, for the January term.

—The Trenton Times has been sold to [illegible], editor of The [illegible].

—Now is the time to advertise holiday goods. No better medium can be found than The Press.

—Some one who has been observing the young people at their sports says that girls always slide left foot first.

—Who will be President of the incoming Common Council is a question now agitating the minds of many of our citizens.

—A Plainfielder who has traveled a great deal says that Russia has more good horses than any other country in Europe.

—John Bowman pleaded non vult contendere to the charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct, Wednesday, and was fined $12.

—The Fanwoods and the Crescents each won a game at bowling, Tuesday. The Crescents' victory was by 30 points; the Fanwoods' by 42.

—The recent fall of snow did not make good tracking for rabbits, on account of the icy crust, which therefore saved the lives of many bunnies.

—The foreign mails are now overburdened with money orders and Christmas gifts for the loved ones, left behind on the other side of the Atlantic.

—So many building contracts are under way that building operations, instead of ceasing with the frost and snow, now continue all through the Winter.

—This is the time of year for the Christmas-shopping woman to buy her husband a box of poor Havana cigars for 50 cents and a saving of $4.50 on his usual outlay.

—"Please-close-the-door" signs are obsolete since the introduction of door springs, but it often seems as if those ugly "[illegible]" warnings would never die.

—More than $5,000 worth of lots were sold on Ripley Hill, Westfield, last week. Every purchaser builds a first-class house at once. Many lawyers are among the purchasers.—Newark Advertiser.

—If your stove polish is one of those patent mixtures containing a large proportion of benzine or other quick-combustion substance, don't apply it while the stove is hot, or a serious blaze may result.

—A hospital in Camden has been closed up because the public were not generous enough to support it properly, and now Elizabeth is threatened with suffering a similar misfortune for the same cause.

—A Bible class for men and women is being organized at the First Baptist church, to be conducted by the Rev. J. C. [illegible]. It will meet every Sunday afternoon, in the body of the church, at half-past two o'clock.

—A member of the Plainfield Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals holds forth as an argument in favor of abolishing blinders, which hide from view the most beautiful feature of the horse, the eye, that in Russia, which is the great horse country of Europe, they never put blinders on a horse, and a shying horse is almost unheard of.

—The "open" season for shooting, taking or having in possession ruffed grouse, quail and rabbits, in this State, ends Dec. 15. Licensed or established dealers in game are allowed ten days from that date to dispose of game, provided that such game was killed within the period allowed by the game act, or was killed and purchased outside the limits of this State.

—Attorney General Stockton, in an application to restrain the New Jersey Terminal Railway Company from taking possession of Oyster Island, lying eastward of the Jersey shore in New York Bay, says that the Government of New Jersey is just two days older than the Federal Government. On July 2, 1776, he says, the people of the Province of New Jersey met in convention at Burlington and declared themselves free and independent.

—Among the good things which are promised at the Hazeldeane testimonial, Dec. 18, are several piano selections by Mr. Hazeldeane himself, one of the numbers being an original composition. Miss [illegible], of New York, whose elocutionary powers are well remembered by all who had the good fortune to hear her at Reform Hall not long ago, will also take part in the programme. Tickets are on sale at Reynolds's and Shaw's pharmacies.

—Almost as soon as the sun is up, these crisp, invigorating mornings, the unfortunate householder may be seen rushing wildly down the street, and some time later the merry plumber's boy, whistling a cheery tune, leisurely approaches the house from which the frantic man has come, and spends half a day running up stairs for "[illegible]" and finding out what is the matter with the pipes so he can go and tell some one else what work has to be done.

—Going to bed is getting to be more and more of a luxury for the rich. What with patent head rests, book loops, electric-light holders and many other comfortable complications, the would-be sleeper must go through a regular drill previous to enjoying them all. But after all the sweetest rest comes to a poor man with a good digestion and after a hard day's work. His bed may be a blanket upon a board, but his sleep is sound, and he arises refreshed for the duties of the new day.

—Gunners who love to track rabbits in the snow thought they were going to have some great fun when they woke up Wednesday of last week, and saw the earth shrouded in white. The change to rain, however, blasted their hopes. In New Jersey it seldom happens during the short time that the law allows rabbit shooting that sufficient snow falls to give the hunters a chance to track them. When such a thing does come the farmers' boys shoulder their guns and start for the woods. The deeper the snow the better the chance of getting a number of rabbits, but when the snow is only light the multitude of tracks makes trail-following very hard. A rabbit will not wander far in deep snow, and when once his footprints are found he will soon be traced to his cosy little home in a warm clump of grass or under the more protected covering of a brush heap.

PERSONAL.

J. J. Henderson of Rockview avenue is in California.

S. E. Flower has been elected Representative to the Grand Lodge, Knights of Honor, from Wetumpka Lodge of this city.

Mrs. J. H. Comstock, wife of Prof. Comstock of Cornell University, spent Sunday at the house of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Runyon.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Scarborough will administer confirmation at Grace church the afternoon of the fourth Sunday in Advent, Dec. 21.

George White of Plainfield was one of the ushers at the wedding of Joseph C. [illegible] and Miss Laura F. Smalley, at Bound Brook, Tuesday.

The Christmas service produced by the Rev. Robert Lowry, of Madison avenue, this year, is entitled "The Child of Bethlehem," and is especially beautiful.

The reading of a paper on Holland, by George Wharton Edwards, announced to be given in the Unitarian rooms Wednesday evening, is unavoidably postponed.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, pastor of the Plainfield Seventh-Day Baptist church, has gone to Philadelphia to attend the annual meeting of the American Sabbath Union.

Councilman and Mrs. Townsend Rushmore have returned from their wedding trip and are settled in the new home the groom has presented to his wife, on Grant avenue.

Mail Carrier Peter V. Weaver is still encased in porous plasters, as the result of a fall on the ice on Madison avenue, last week. He pluckily remains on duty, although pretty badly shaken up.

Borough Counsel Chas. A. Reed with Mrs. Reed attended the ball of the West End Athletic Club at Somerville last evening, and Mrs. Reed will remain at the home of her father, ex-Congressman Alvah A. Clark, at Somerville, for the Christmas holidays.

J. M. Hager, the "Great Republic" man who, with the public school children as his helpers, has conducted successful entertainments in Stillman Music Hall, was in town today seeking to make arrangements for a production of his allegory under the auspices of the North Plainfield school.

A children's party was held at 34 Central avenue Monday night, in celebration of the fourth birthday anniversary of little Miss Alla Westphal. More than two score of the young lady's friends gathered in her honor. The hours from four till seven were spent in pleasant games and songs. An enjoyable feast was provided. Many handsome gifts were bestowed on the young hostess.

Since The Press told the story of night operator Smith's thrilling experience with bears and wild cats in a lonely mountain station in Pennsylvania, Mr. Smith has been the cynosure of all eyes at the North avenue railway station. The other evening when a number of club men were waiting for a train they arranged themselves in theatrical attitude outside the windows of the telegraph office and drank in fascinating glimpses of the hero, through their opera glasses.

The friends of Miss Jessie L. Archbold will regret to learn of her death, which occurred at the home of her sister, Mrs. A. Spencer, on Elmer street, Westfield Tuesday morning. The funeral services will be held Thursday afternoon, at three o'clock, at the Scotch Plains Baptist church. Miss Archbold was a most estimable young woman, and was dearly beloved for her many beautiful attributes of mind and heart. She had been ill several months with consumption. Her age was twenty-seven.

Another Result of the Bible Meetings.

The Rev. Dr. Ketcham and the officers and congregation of the First Presbyterian church were gladdened by an accession of forty-three members to church membership Sunday morning—thirty on confession of faith and thirteen by letter.

Demarest—Bovey.

The wedding of William Demarest, one of Plainfield's highly efficient mail carriers, and Miss Louise Pauline Bovey, of Somerset street, North Plainfield, took place Thursday. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the Trinity Reformed church, performed the ceremony. A host of friends unite in wishes of good fortune to the bride and groom.

The Water Company Decides to "Bide a Wee."

The Plainfield Water Supply Company had a meeting Wednesday afternoon, and though much that took place is not yet to be made known to the public The Press is enabled to inform its readers that the Company has decided not to attempt to tear up the streets this Winter. Definite action is postponed—"on account of the frost" (?)—till next Spring, when some agreement between the Company and the city may be reached. The people will commend the apparent disposition of the Company to heed the commands of the new pipe-laying ordinance which is to be adopted on its final passage at the next meeting of the Common Council.

A Plainfield Pastor Relinquishes an Able Editorship.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church of this city, is so overwhelmed with work that he has felt constrained to relinquish some of his pleasant duties, and has resigned the editorship of the Sabbath Reform Department of The Sabbath Recorder, published at Alfred Centre, N. Y. He writes to the Recorder as follows:

"Much against what would otherwise be my choice, I am compelled, by pressure of other work, and by the warning given by overtaxed nerves, to relinquish the editorial charge of this department. I have aimed to give you glimpses of the movements in the world of Sabbath Reform, and to make such suggestions as would aid you to a better understanding, and a deeper interest in the cause of Sabbath truth. I trust that some more able pen will carry forward the department which I am compelled to relinquish."

A Christmas Journey to Bethlehem.

The Emmanuel Baptist church and Sabbath school will start on a "Christmas Journey to Bethlehem" Tuesday evening, Dec. 30, and will continue the same till Thursday evening, Jan. 1, at Cutler's Hall. The travelers will be accompanied to Bethlehem by a band of music, and will partake of hot supper, ice-cream, and other delicacies, on the way. The first evening the travelers will take a bird's eye view of the ancient City of Bethlehem, and its surroundings. Wednesday evening, which is designated as Children's night, the wise men from the East will appear, in search of the infant child Jesus. The third night, Jan. 1, Herod's proclamation, to destroy all children under two years of age, will be read.

The Committee of Travel includes Mrs. Mary J. Mitchell, Mrs. E. Randolph, Mrs. E. R. Maynard, Mrs. Francis Wyckoff, Mrs. George Wilson, Mrs. Tilly Martin, Mrs. Mary Thomas, Mrs. E. M. Johnson, Mrs. Tilly [illegible], Mrs. Jennie [illegible], Mrs. Emeline Connett, Mr. P. Robinson, Mr. J. Wilson, Mr. Fred Dunham, Mr. John Connett, Mr. A. Wyckoff, Mr. E. Osborn, Mr. W. R. Connet, Mr. E. E. Maynard, and Mr. J. W. Mitchell, pastor.

—A household occupying one of John Darling's houses on East Ninth street was alarmed, two or three mornings ago, to find the building filling with smoke. Mice and matches had set fire, to some shavings packed about the water pipes on the lower floor, and quite a blaze had started. Buckets of water judiciously applied prevented serious damage.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

(In Charge of Superintendent of Press Work.)

The monthly business meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, held Thursday, was very largely attended. Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson presided, officers were in their seats, and as usual the Treasurer's report was listened to with great interest. Questions were asked pertaining to the methods of carrying on the different branches of work. Reports from Superintendents were submitted as follows: Juvenile:—Loyal Temperance Legion increasing rapidly in numbers; sessions every Wednesday at 3:45, for one hour only, during the afternoons. The children as well as the older people, who occasionally drop in, are particularly interested in the blackboard lessons. The entertainment given this last week, in which the members took part, was much enjoyed. The pledge is thoroughly understood before offered. Parents and friends of the children are always welcome. The Kitchen Garden has still a few vacancies. Meets Mondays and Tuesdays, at 4 p. m. sharp. Promptness is one of the foundation stones to good house-keeping, and these little housekeepers are not behindhand in their studies here. Ask any of the children who have been through the Kitchen Garden how to wash dishes without shrinking them into nothing. The Cooking Class are quite ready for their exhibition of Art in the Labor Booth at the Bazar. The Superintendent of Temperance Literature in Sunday schools reported that the Young Crusader was taken in the Methodist Sunday school. Miss Lucia Kimball, of the National Union, in her report states that 3,670 temperance books were introduced this last year into Sunday school libraries. The Superintendent of Evangelistic Work reported the four weekly meetings growing in numbers. Many have come in to "lend a hand", in the work for "God and Home and Native Land." The Sunday afternoon four o'clock meeting for the present will be in charge of Frederick Moon. Last week many coming in late had difficulty in finding seats. Many took part. One testimony was given from the vestibule. Judge Fernald, of Washington, was upon the platform. Those who once come to these Gospel Temperance services, Sunday morning to the prayer and consecration meeting, in the afternoon to the general praise service, or Saturday evening to the temperance meeting, count it a loss to be absent. The Superintendent of Literature reported that nearly 4,000 pages of temperance literature had been distributed within the past month. The rooms, at 73 West Front street, will be open New Year's Day from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m. An invitation is extended to everyone. Books and papers will be loaned for the day. Light refreshments and music will be furnished throughout the day. At 3:30, the usual hour for Thursday's meeting, there will be a special programme arranged and carried out. The coffee cart will be on exhibition at the Bazar. Oh, for a W. C. T. U. Building!

The Policemen Get Handsome New Uniforms.

The Plainfield policemen are the happy possessors of new uniforms, and very nice uniforms they are. They were made by Collyer & Co., the famous Newark clothing firm, with which Lewis C. Dunn of this city is connected. This house manufactures the excellent suits worn by the Jersey Central Railroad employes, and not only is its work of the best quality but its prices are of the kind that will suit every purse.

But Plainfield is Always Happy.

The new Elizabeth Council will stand twelve Democrats, ten Republicans and two Independent Democrats, and The Journal, Elizabeth's Republican organ, feels lonesome and forlorn. Therefore this plaint:

"Plainfield is the banner Republican city. It may swerve a little one way or the other, under bad advice or misapprehension, but when it knows what is doing it is overwhelmingly Republican every time. There was scarcely a Democrat elected in that happy city, Tuesday."

How Many Days in the Month is the Contract Kept?

This is the particular season of the year when street lights are especially needed from sunset to sunrise, as the contract with the Plainfield Electric Light Company stipulates shall be the case the year 'round. But who of those who are on the streets in early morning or early evening can testify that the Co. fulfills its agreement and keeps the lights burning from sunset to sunrise? As a matter of fact, does n't the city lose an hour or two of lighting, every day, just now?

"Garry" Still, Swindler, Caught at Last.

A dispatch from Baltimore states that Garrison W. Still, alias William F. Richards, who represented himself as the traveling salesman of B. Solomon & Sons, of New York, upholsterers and dealers in lace curtains, has been committed for trial on the charge of attempting to swindle Crichton Malcolm. This is the same fellow who visited Plainfield some months ago, sported about town in good clothes, flourished an abundance of money which subsequently turned out to have been borrowed, swindled several local merchants, tried to make a bigger haul through a number of forged checks, was detected, and disappeared. Local merchants will be glad to know that he is caught at last.

Good Speaking from Plainfield Men.

The speakers in Reform Hall Sunday night were Messrs. Sampson and Kissam, both of whom based remarks on Bible texts and in a very instructive and interesting manner followed out their selected themes. They showed the awful ravages of strong drink, and detailed several instances, coming within their own personal knowledge, of men totally ruined and families made unhappy because of the curse of liquor. The dangers of temptation were vividly portrayed, and the necessity of avoiding them justly urged. Both gentlemen were listened to with profound attention.

President Harper presided, Mr. Sampson read the Scripture lesson, and Mr. Kissam offered prayer. The music was under charge of Mr. Vanderbeek as leader, with Miss Dorsman as accompanist.

Modern Sleeves Bother Photographers.

The present mode of dressmaking is causing a great deal of bother to photographers. One of the most skillful members of that craft in this city said a day or two ago: "It is almost impossible to take a good picture of a lady who wears a dress with sleeves puffed and elevated at the shoulders. Some of those 'shoulder humps' are so high that they cause a shadow to be cast over the wearer's neck and the lower part of the face. I have had several instances of spoiled pictures on this account. At first the failure of the photograph to bring out the sitter's chin and neck in strong relief puzzled me. I studied the matter for several days, and tried experiments with my patrons until I became satisfied that the trouble was caused by the high-topped sleeves. I demonstrated that such was the fact to one lady by drawing a scarf closely about her shoulders. Without the scarf all attempts to get a good picture of her failed. With the scarf I succeeded the first time in getting a picture that revealed clearly the outlines of her face and neck."

POSTMASTER POPE THEIR PRESIDENT.

A Monopoly of Public and Private Lighting Secured by a New Plainfield Incorporation.

The Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company filed articles of incorporation at Elizabeth yesterday with the County Clerk of Union County. The company begins business with a capital of $175,000. Its President is Elias R. Pope of Plainfield, while the incorporators and stockholders include Mr. Pope, William Runkle of Orange, and Henry G. Runkle of Plainfield. The new concern has purchased the Plainfield Electric Light Works, and will lease the plant of the Plainfield Gas Light Company, which, however, continues to exist as heretofore. The new company will operate both of the plants jointly.

Concerning this matter, The Press of Nov. 18 published the following:

THE SAME OLD STORY.

GAS COMPANY AND ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANY COMBINE, AND MONOPOLY IS ESTABLISHED.

One of the members of the Council said to a Press reporter, last evening, that if he had known that the Electric Light Co. had been purchased by the Gas Light Co. he would not have voted to pass the ordinance giving the former the right for ten years to string wires through all the streets, alleys and lanes of the city, until he was assured by the new owners of the Electric Light Co. that there would be no increase in the rates to private consumers.

"I have a good notion," he continued, "to present another ordinance at the next meeting, repealing the privilege. Manager Moore, of the Electric Light Co. is certainly guilty of deceit, if not outright dishonesty, in his dealings with the Council. Now that all competition in street and domestic lighting is wiped out, the people can be charged outrageous rates with no redress."

But the story of the sale is not yet true. As one of the principal stockholders and directors of the Gas Light Co. said this afternoon: "If you don't see it in The Press it isn't so. If any documents of sale and transfer had been consummated I would know it, and I assure you nothing of the kind has taken place. However, I do not deny or affirm that it might happen. The Plainfield Electric Light Co.'s plant has been in the market two or three years. Should the Gas Light Co. buy it, it will not be to raise the rates." The same reporter was told by Manager Moore, "I have just returned from Boston and have no knowledge of any sale occurring in my absence."

Lillian Zeiss Gets the Doll.

The Odd Ladies' fair at Amphion Hall closed Monday night. The large-doll contest was decided Saturday evening, when the contestants stood as follows: Lillian Zeiss, $10.50; Jennie Sheppard, $8.05; Jessie Hall, $7.46; Tessie Kahman, $7; Edith Hand, $3.70. Mrs. Wm. C. Smith drew a beautiful pair of vases.

James McGee the New Reform Club President.

At the annual meeting of the Reform Club held Thursday night, the following were duly elected officers for the coming year:

President—James McGee.
1st Vice President—George F. Opdyke.
2d " " —Edward F. Williams.
3d " " —Francis C. Harder.
Secretary—George Musgrove.
Financial Secretary—J. W. A. Runyon.
Treasurer—J. B. Spicer.
1st Marshal—William Hand.
2d " —William C. Smith.
Sergeant-at-arms—Mark Lee.
Chaplain—The Rev. Wm. E. Honeyman.

Their Twenty-fifth Wedding Day.

The silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Kriney, of 321 West Front street, was celebrated Friday, when a host of friends made them a happy visit. Everyone brought handsome gifts, and overwhelmed the host and hostess with compliments and good wishes. A fine supper was served, and dancing to excellent music was kept up till four o'clock in the morning. The people were having such a good time that they didn't want to stop even then, but the musicians were tired. Mr. and Mrs. Kriney were married at Scotch Plains twenty-five years ago yesterday.

New Leaders for Wetumpka Lodge.

At the regular meeting of Wetumpka Lodge, No. 3401, Knights of Honor, held last evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: Past Dictator—C. J. Feytel; Dictator—E. C. Pease; Vice Dictator—Geo. W. Houseman; Assistant Dictator—C. H. Boggs; Reporter—Wm. Addis; Financial Reporter—C. E. Vail; Treasurer—J. C. Pierson, Jr.; Chaplain—C. Dickinson; Guide—E. S. Rogers; Guardian—J. Y. Barrett; Sentinel—Geo. McGuinness; Trustees—C. T. Benedict, A. A. Johnson, E. A. Frey; Representatives to Grand Lodge—C. J. Feytel, F. P. Haffner; Alternates—J. G. Betzler, H. J. Martin.

The Plainfield Post-Office Robber.

The man arrested in Colorado, who is believed to be the notorious James McDonald, alias Milky McDonald, was caught after an attempt to crack the safe of the Denver Brewing Company. He tried to escape arrest in Denver the same as he did in Englewood, and was captured after being shot in the leg by Detective McAndrews. His picture was taken in the hospital. He refused to open his eyes in front of the camera. The picture of McDonald, in the Rogues' Gallery in New York, shows him with his eyes closed. He now calls himself John J. McDevitt, and claims his home is Cincinnati. If the Denver authorities agree to the immediate surrender of their prisoner, Sheriff Haring, of Bergen county, will take him to Hackensack for trial on the charge of burglary. This is the same man who was identified as one of the burglars who forced open the safe in the Plainfield post-office some two years ago.

Some People are Wondering

—When a permanent pavement will again cover the sidewalk in front of the new Coward building.

—Who will be the first victim of the vicious habit the gallery gods have of throwing lighted matches on the ground, where the ladies' skirts brush the flames and invite an awful death, at the entrance to Stillman Music Hall, at the close of the performance.

—How long it will be before Music Hall audiences possess the good breeding to keep their seats till the curtain falls.

—When the cigarette and bad-tobacco fiends who rush out in a hurry to block the exit and otherwise discommode everybody will cease the practice of choking the long passageway from Music Hall to Front street so that the more deliberate people are nearly asphyxiated with the horrid fumes.

—What "oldest inhabitant" will be alive when a crosswalk adorns Park avenue midway between Front and Second streets, and makes glad the hearts of the people.

—What Plainfield woman it was who asked in a drug store yesterday: "Do you keep postage stamps? Are they fresh? If they are, send me up a dozen."

—Why certain wealthy property-owners and big corporations don't keep their pavements free from slippery ice.

—When street loafing, and its disgusting accompaniments, will be abolished.

—How some drivers can be so cruel as to leave their horses standing unblanketed, shivering in the icy wind, and with their feet suffering from the cold of the pools of water accumulated in clogged-up gutters.

BOROUGH LEGISLATORS PUZZLED.

One Councilman Presents a Proposed New Ordinance, and No One Knows What to Do With It.

The Borough Council of North Plainfield Friday proved its decided right to be known as a deliberative body. Nearly two hours were spent in transacting a minor amount of routine business. Considerable of this time was spent in informal committee consultations, and in the Councilmen running about to talk with the Tax Collector and the Borough Clerk. During these various interims the crowd in the lobby had a nice time cracking questionable and vulgar jokes, and giggling themselves into a state of semi-maudlin ecstasy over the frequent crowing of a frog-voiced rooster in the yard back of the engine house. All the evening the gas lights flared up and sank down in bewildering alternations of illumination and darkness, and this furnished further amusement for the funny men outside the railing within which sat the august Borough Fathers. The janitor was told to "git that water out'n them gas pipes before the next meeting", and the Councilmen said how happy they were that they were going to have electric lights next year.

Those present at the meeting were Mayor Place and Councilmen Buckle, Needham, Sebring and Smalley. Councilmen Emmons and Hegeman were absent.

H. H. Brokaw and Dr. J. H. Cooley were made firemen and members of Warren Engine Company, No. 1. Bills amounting to $392.17, of which $260.67 was for public lights, were ordered paid. The extension of Westervelt avenue at the new bridge was accepted as a public roadway. Borough Magistrate Hardy reported three months' profits of $25.10 in the police department of the borough. Treasurer Spencer reported $1,401.15 as the amount of taxes collected thus far for 1890. The Mayor and Clerk were instructed to "raise" $200 for street purposes. To pay for the new lock-up now nearly finished $400 was appropriated from the $600 already paid in for license fees. Arrangements were made to pay two notes, for $1,200, falling due Dec. 20, on the light account, and one for $1,100 on the road account. Councilman Buckle presented an ordinance to prohibit the posting of hand bills, posters, placards and notices on telephone, telegraph, electric light, or electric-railway poles, but none of the legislators present knew how to proceed to make the ordinance a law. It was read once, then a motion "to read it a second time" was carried, and it was read again; then a discussion ensued as to the proper method of procedure, and as a bright way out of the quandary a motion, presented by Mr. Needham, was adopted, that the ordinance be brought up at the next meeting for final adoption. The Clerk was instructed, in an aside from Mayor Place, to consult with Borough Counsel Reed as to what ought to be done with the ordinance in the meanwhile. But it has n't yet been adopted on either the first or second reading.

Easter Lodge Election.

The following new officers of Easter Lodge, Knights of Honor, have been elected:

Dictator—Thomas R. Cone; Vice Dictator—Chas. W. Kellogg; Reporter—H. A. Thorne; Financial Reporter—George A. Hallock; Treasurer—Wm. H. Lyon; Guide—John Messersmith.

Didn't See the Notable.

The train to which was attached the Jersey Central Railroad Directors' private car containing Vice President Morton's party, was thirteen minutes' late, and when it whizzed through Plainfield Saturday afternoon it was making up for lost time. As it did not stop, those who had assembled at the station could distinguish nothing but the name "Monmouth" on the car.

Jovial in the Face of Danger.

A tin-roofer at work on the top of John Blackford's new house on Grove street, near Rockview avenue, slipped and fell from the eaves to the ground on Saturday. As he fell he shouted to his fellow-workman, "Here I go, Pete!" He landed safely on his feet, with his roofing-furnace still clutched in his hand. He was severely shaken up, and just escaped being mangled on a pile of jagged timbers.

But Think of that Half-Hour They'd Have to Wait at Bound Brook!

The Bound Brook Chronicle arises to remark that those who complain that there is no train leaving New York for Plainfield between 11 A. M. and 1 P. M. overlook the fact that passengers can take the 11:30 A. M. train from New York and go to Bound Brook, where they can board the 12:45 P. M. train towards New York again, and reach Plainfield at 1 o'clock.

The Dog a Pet, the Tax a Roaster.

One of the county assessors has complained to the State Tax Commission that nobody ever pays either poll tax or dog tax in his bailiwick. It is notorious that the dog tax especially is dodged very generally throughout the State. And the men who have most to say about the way in which the public money shall be spent are often those who will not even pay a poll tax. But in some localities there is a general disposition on the part of the assessors to charge every taxpayer with a dog. If he owns one, he pays without demur; if not, he "kicks," and the dog is taken off, so to speak. One man, not far from Plainfield, who never owned a dog, was regularly and annually charged with one until, after three years of that experience, he made a long and vigorous protest. Perhaps New Jersey does not collect as much money by a dog tax as it should, but that is not the fault of some of the assessors.

A Young Man's Lesson for Paying His Court Abroad.

A Plainfield young man who has promising business connections in New York, and who, oblivious of the charms and beauty all around him, courts an Orange maiden, tells a quaint story of himself, concerning a recent call on the young woman whom he especially delights to honor. He is quite a young man, and his experience with florists had been neither deep nor varied. It occurred to him, however, on this particular evening to stop at a flower merchant's on leaving the metropolis for a pleasant evening at the fair one's home, and to choose some blossoms for the pretty girl towards whose home he was wending his way.

"Give me a bunch of roses"—he said carelessly to the man of nosegays.

"Yessir; how many, please?"

"Oh, a couple of dozen or so."

In a short time they were ready, and the purchaser was feeling in his vest pocket for a two-dollar bill to pay for them. "How much?"—he asked, before the bill made its appearance.

"Eighteen dollars, sir"—replied the florist's assistant, with what, his hearer said afterward, seemed diabolical glibness.

The young man felt giddy for a moment. He had unwittingly selected roses that were 75 cents apiece. But, as has been said, he was very young, and it seemed to him a very serious thing to go down before that flower clerk. So he paid his money and took his bouquet. "And"—he says—"I spent the evening watching a pretty girl nibble and chew up $18 worth of roses."

—Blacksmiths are busy.

—Drivers walk to keep warm.

THE FEDERATION OF PROTESTANTISM.

Interesting Argument Awakened by a Plainfield Pastor's Sermon.

The New York Sun, in an editorial in Sunday's issue, has the following to say of the "Protestant Effort to Get Together," as suggested by the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city, in a recent sermon:

Last Monday a large number of clergymen, Presbyterians mostly, lunched at an up-town restaurant and discussed the subject of "The Church of the Future." That, at least, was the theme as laid down in the programme of debate, though the real subject was the best means for the extension of Protestantism.

The necessity for some sort of a union among the different Protestant denominations was insisted upon by Archdeacon Smith, an Episcopal clergyman who took part in the debate. He did not argue for organic union, but for a system of practical co-operation, more especially in districts of this town where there is a deficiency of Protestant churches. At a dinner of Presbyterians held the same evening at the Metropolitan Opera House, William E. Dodge spoke of the 600,000 or 700,000 people in New York who are practically outside of the reach of the churches, whose increasing numbers, in his opinion, constitute a serious danger to the town which united Protestant effort must seek to avert. If his estimate is correct, two-fifths of the population are given over to infidelity and religious indifference.

The Rev. Dr. Lewis, a Seventh-Day Baptist preacher at Plainfield, New Jersey, discussed the same general subject in his Thanksgiving Day sermon. He showed by religious statistics, compiled by one of the editors of the Independent, that there are more than one hundred different varieties of Protestants in this country. He argued that such division interferes seriously with the progress of Protestantism as opposed to Roman Catholicism, a solid force "moving unitedly, concertedly onward with a power against which human forces are well-nigh irresistible." The great need, he contended, is a confederation of all the different Protestant families.

It will be seen, therefore, that all these preachers were in substantial agreement. Their common appeal to Protestants was to get together as different corps of a consolidated army.

Yet the very partisanship and competition which division engenders tend to increase the aggressive energy of Protestantism. Each organization strains itself to do its utmost, for each believes that it possesses the fullest measure of spiritual truth. The multitude of divisions, also, provide a home for every phase of belief under the Protestant theory of the freedom of conscience and the right of private interpretation of Scripture. "I will wear no harness which men would thrust on me under threat of ostracism," exclaimed the Rev. Dr. Behrends at the Presbyterian luncheon. That is the distinctively Protestant sentiment, and it makes impossible anything resembling the unity of Catholicism. If a Protestant cannot find anybody to agree with him in his interpretation of Scripture, he makes a church of his own. The basis of Protestantism is its denial of any other authority over the conscience than the Word of God itself, as read by each individual. "Whatsoever is not read therein," the Thirty-nine Articles of the Episcopal church lay down, "nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the Faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation."

Accordingly, the divisions of Protestantism must always be many. It cannot have a common belief, so various is the constitution of men's minds. The stronger the faith of the period the more rigid must be the lines of separation. Only when Protestants lose the fervor of conviction and fall into doctrinal indifference, substituting ethics and the spirit of humanity for religion, can they be brought into any union which disregards the differences that originally separated them. The disposition to compromise for the sake of consolidation is a sign of decline in the vital faith which gives religion its true impulse.

We do not see how even the confederation advised is possible, if sincerity of belief remains in each of the divisions. They might combine for certain charitable and philanthropic purposes, but how can they get together for the propagation of religion when they differ so essentially as to what true religion is? The divisions would not exist if each and every party did not believe that obedience to the law of God makes its independence necessary. When such belief dies out it is usually because the spark of all vital faith is quenched. Are Baptists going to enter into a confederation to assist in the propagation of pedobaptism, Arminians to foster the growth of Calvinism? Will Episcopalians assist in the building up of churches which reject the apostolic succession? Yet if confederation means anything, it means that they must all turn in to help one another while preserving their own individuality. They must not enter into each other's fields, but rejoice at the success of each as a gain to the common cause.

That is not possible under the theory of Protestantism and consistent with sincerity of conviction in its various divisions. They can only exercise charity toward each other, recognizing that the Protestant demand for freedom of conscience makes essential the existence of many religious parties in order that no individual may be restrained in his opinions. Protestantism implies division by rejecting church authority and substituting individual judgment. The principle upon which it rests produces diversity as surely as the opposing theory of church authority compels the unity of Roman Catholicism. If men form their own opinions as to what religion requires, they are bound to differ. They can only agree when they agree to let the church make their faith for them as the divinely inspired authority over their conscience.

An Insurance Agent Accused of Embezzlement.

Wm. J. Rouse, of West Fifth street, local agent of the Prudential Insurance Company, was arrested Tuesday and sent to the County jail on complaint of Wm. W. Dougal, an inspector of the concern, on the charge of embezzlement. Dougal's affidavit, issued before an Elizabeth justice-of-the-peace, accuses Rouse of appropriating to his own use $312 belonging to the Company. Dougal now has charge of the local office. He told a Press reporter who sought an interview that he might tell him a column story about the case, but was under contract with the Company not to talk to reporters without his President's permission. Much sympathy is expressed for Rouse, who is believed to be an honest man, and who is known to have paid money to the Company out of his own pocket rather than have some of his customers lapse in their payments. Whatever deficit there really is, it is believed will be found to be due to customers' lapsing rather than to Rouse's own shortcomings. Judge Codington, his counsel, will have him released on bail, and he will return to his wife and children. An indignant friend says: "These petty insurance concerns are always causing trouble for some one."

John have you seen that woman lately? John in astonishment! What woman? That woman picking grapes for Speer's Wine. Just see her in another column, and read about it; the wines are found by chemists to be absolutely pure and equal to the best in the World. The Board of Health in large cities and leading Hospitals have adopted their use where wines are needed.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Absolutely Pure.

CHILLS LURKING IN OVERCOATS.

Some Reasons Why a Light Coat is Better Than a Heavy One.

At a recent professional meeting of physicians in this section several of the medical men became involved in a discussion of overcoats. The substance of their verdict, in which all agreed, was that the use of thick and heavy overcoats is indirectly accountable for the very chills that they are intended to prevent.

This fact should be borne constantly in mind by the man of sedentary habits. He emerges from a warm breakfast room clad in his ordinary Winter garments, with perhaps thick woolen underwear, and a heavy ulster on top. After walking a few blocks he finds that the sense of comfortable warmth with which he started is more than maintained. He gets warmer. Arrived at his office, he throws off his overcoat, though the air of the room may be nearly as cold as that outside, not to mention the innumerable draughts. During the day he runs out to luncheon or to a neighboring office without his overcoat. The result is that somehow, between morning and night, he becomes chilled.

No doubt he would run as great a risk if, lightly clad, he were to face the rigor of a Wintry day, but in this case exercise and habit might do much to develop the power of endurance, and there would at all events be less danger of sudden cold acting upon a freely-perspiring surface. Woolen underclothing, it was argued, represents a state of healthy comfort intermediate between these extremes, and more resistant to chill than either.

In the case of newspaper men the physicians made an exception. Theirs is a life associated with night air and unusual severity of weather, and in such cases they are compelled to add some form of overcoat to the ordinary amount of clothing. "But"—said one of the party—"I'd rather see the ordinary business man, especially if young, clad warmly next the skin, and in fairly robust condition wear either a very light topcoat or none at all."

Important to Fishermen.

The case of Schanck vs. Ely, decided in the Court of Errors and Appeals on Tuesday, Nov. 18, is important to all lovers of sport with the rod and line. Ely went to Schanck's millpond, at Hightstown, and placed his nets for fish. Schanck brought proceedings against him for trespass, before a Justice of the Peace, and he was fined $50. He went to the pond a second time, and this time he was fined $100. The third time he repeated the act he had to pay $150. The judgment of the Justice was appealed to the Mercer Court and was there affirmed. The Supreme Court did the same and the Court of Errors follows suit. The effect is that any one who pleases cannot go into a private millpond and fish with a net, thus clearing the waters of all fish.

A State Board of Tax Equalization Needed.

At a recent meeting of the State Tax Commission one assessor complained that no one paid either poll or dog tax. Another said his experience leads him to think that honest people and the poorer classes pay their taxes, while the richer and those who are dishonest invent all sorts of schemes to evade them. He favors deduction for debts of record only, and the establishment of a State Board to equalize assessments of the cities and townships.

During the taking of testimony, Attorney General Stockton observed that a State Board of Assessors would have trouble in securing a standard that would operate in all the counties alike. Counselor Abbett stated that the assessment on real estate in Ocean county he found to be 50 per cent.; in Monmouth, 95 per cent.; in Mercer, 60 per cent., and it could never be equalized except by a State Board.

The Divorce Proceedings are Off.

The telegraph played a merry game with a Plainfield commuter, the other day. He has been in the habit of using the wire to convey all sorts of messages relating to family matters, and has labored under the delusion that everybody in the telegraph company's employ could read his handwriting with ease and accuracy. When he reached his New York office on the day in question he got a piece of news that sent him to the nearest telegraph office in a hurry. He wanted his wife to know the glad tidings at once. There had been a certain joyful event in the household of a cousin who dwells up the Hudson, and so the good man wrote out his message with a light heart: "Am going to K's. Pretty girl. Won't be home till late to-night." He made his trip up the river, saw the new arrival, had a pleasant, leisurely day, and did n't reach his Plainfield domicile until midnight. Much to his surprise, his wife was sitting up for him. So was her mother, who was paying them a visit. Both ladies were icy cold in their demeanor. They spoke rather viciously of double-faced, false-hearted husbands, and of what happened to such evil persons. The man was thunderstruck. It was all a mystery to him. "Convicted by his own telegram"—said his judges. The man was still more perplexed. He wanted wanted to see the dispatch. It was laid before him, and he read: "Am going to kiss pretty girl. Won't be home till late to-night." The man has since then succeeded in convincing his womankind that it was all a telegraph's blunder, but when he sends a message home now he prints it out in capital letters.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. KILLING ANIMALCULES.

A Remedy That Is Infinitely Worse Than the Evil.

The following item has been going the rounds of the papers:

"Mr. Thomas Holmes, of Birmingham, Eng., [illegible] He will not drink water because he [illegible] the animal life in it, but drinks whisky, etc."

Probably [illegible] drinking plenty of whisky and no water he will be able to [illegible] "animal life," such as snakes, on dry ground. But substantially the same plea is made in seemingly scientific [illegible] of various "malt whiskies" and other intoxicants. People are urged to put a dose in every cup of water they drink, and to use it even for [illegible] little children, to "destroy the animal life" or the "disease germs." We could give numerous instances of this, were it not for helping the [illegible] with free advertising. The question, especially as it concerned the home and the nursery, seemed to us so important that we submitted it to that accomplished scientist, Dr. Felix L. Oswald, and received from him the following replies:

1. Will an admixture of alcoholic liquors destroy infusorial life as found in impure water (and, for that, in any water exposed to a moderately warm atmosphere for a couple of hours)?

It will. To deny it would be denying the fact that alcohol is a poison. Any strong poison can be used as a disinfectant, i. e., antiseptic for the destruction of organic life-germs or the prevention of their development. Arsenic is thus used by taxidermists, alcohol by collectors of zoological curiosities. A toad pickled in brandy can be preserved for years; maggots and microbes that would otherwise promptly inaugurate a process of putrefaction know better than to touch viands stored in a medium of virulent toxics.

2. But, can articles of food and drink be improved by such admixture? "Is it not right, even a duty," to use a little antiseptic alcohol, not only for ourselves, but for our wives and children?

We might as well undertake to keep off gnats by drenching our night-shirts with vitriol. We might as well recommend a plan of exterminating flies by filling our parlors with clouds of arsenic fumes. The vendor of alcoholic disinfectants proposes to obviate a possible, and mostly trifling, trouble, by inviting us to run a serious and almost inevitable risk. He recommends a remedy infinitely worse than the evil. The organism of a normal human being will protect itself against an infinitude of microscopic disease-germs; our lungs, our digestive organs, eliminate myriads of—almost omnipresent—microbes in the course of a summer day. Nature has provided abundant safeguards against natural perils. Alcohol, on the other hand, even in small doses, inflicts a positive and unavoidable injury, and, moreover, the alcohol habit, like every poison-vice, is progressive; a few drops, administered once a week for "medicinal purposes," will soon beget a craving for daily drams—with beneficial results limited to the pocket of the rum vendor.

In other words, the advertisers of "malt whisking," "bitters," etc., propose to exorcise comparatively harmless microscopic imps with the aid of a Mephistopheles almost sure to summon seven times seven able-bodied accomplices. There is a better way of dealing with infusorial microbes.

The question as to the prophylactic value of alcoholic febrifuges (——'s Bitters, etc.) turns upon an exactly analogous dilemma. The cure is worse than the evil, and (since alcohol, in the long run, tends to weaken the disease-resisting power of the system, and can not be mixed with all articles of food and drink nor with the atmospheric air) is, after all, spirits prove no cure at all. Dram-drinkers succumb to numberless disorders that spare total abstainers.—Better Day.

IN A JOKE FOUNDRY.

Howard Fielding Surrounds Himself with a Cheerful Atmosphere

How He Drew Inspiration from a Comic Artist, a Punster and the Knock-Kneed, Dyspeptic Editor of a Bow-Legged and Bilious Funny Column.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

[Special Correspondence.]

"A man in your business," said my friend, the artist, "should be surrounded by a more cheerful atmosphere when he works."

"I don't wonder that you speak of it," said I. "Nobody can come into this office without being struck by the atmosphere, and it's as solid as a club when all my tenants are at home. The Kentucky Colonel has an briar-root pipe in which he smokes disintegrated West Virginia 'stogies;' the real-estate man raises his own tobacco on Staten Island, and the agent burns Egyptian cigarettes which smell like an inferior grade of mummy and are assessed as rags at the custom-house. All these together make an atmosphere which, as you say, is not cheerful. It is not so favorable to work as it is to tuberculosis."

Then he told me that it wasn't the air he meant, but the psychic status, the fine influence of surroundings, the inspiration of companionship. I looked about me sadly and admitted that I lacked some of those things.

"You ought to have some jolly fellows in here," said he. "Get some men in the humorous line, and every one of you will inspire the others. Just fill the place up with mirth and laughter."

"You're right," said I, slapping him on the back. "I'll turn this shop into a regular joke-foundry if I can find the men. Ha! ha! Let us be merry! I'll have this crowd 'fired' by next Monday, and you send round half a dozen of the funniest men you know. Tell 'em it isn't rent that I want; it's jovial company."

* * * * * * * *

The foregoing is supposed to be Act I. An interval of six days elapses between Acts I and II. The jolly fellows have moved in. I had never met any of them before. They all come late in the morning and look as if they hadn't slept well.

At half-past nine o'clock I am there alone. Enter Willard, editor of a funny column. He is tall and thin, and his face is shaped like a coffin—broad high cheek-bones; narrow forehead, and lantern-jaw with a beveled edge. I always imagine that his nose is a silver plate with a piece of mortuary poetry on it.

"Good morning, Mr. Fielding," said he, "do you suffer much with dyspepsia?"

"No," said I. He looked so disappointed that I felt as if it was unkind of me to have a good digestion. Then he brightened up.

"Perhaps you may have it soon," said he. "It attacks long, thin, bilious looking people very suddenly, sometimes."

"I will do my best," said I, humbly. "Why do you ask?"

"I am a great sufferer myself," he replied, with a sigh. "A friend has just recommended a remedy to me. He says it is a sure cure in some cases, while others die in horrible agony. I am looking for a man whose symptoms are similar to mine. Do you ever feel a sort of—"

"Never," I replied firmly; "I can eat a fifty cent table d'hote with North Carolina claret, and not even feel remorse."

"None of your family afflicted?"

"No; my wife eats her own cooking three times a day while I lunch down town."

He sank into his chair and began to open a batch of contributed jokes. By and by I heard him swear.

"These fellows have no souls," he muttered; "here are ten jokes and every one of them deals with dyspepsia, as if that were a subject for mirth."

He put his hand upon his stomach, and resumed work, with a groan. I was just touching up that subject myself, and I began to feel mean. Just then Durgin entered. He is another jolly fellow. He draws humorous illustrations. An editor sends him jokes, and he makes pictures to go with them. He looks a good deal like Willard, and they hate each other because of the resemblance.

"Fielding," said he, ignoring Willard altogether, "what do you think of a funny picture representing an entire family being run over by a street-car? Don't you think you could write a few pleasant lines to go underneath it?"

Willard groaned.

"You'd better apply to George Washington Childs," said I; "he's in that line of business."

"There's a good humorous suggestion in it," he persisted. "I've dreamed of it all night. Most frightful nightmare I ever had in my life."

"Some of those street-car companies might like it for an advertising cut," I said, not wishing to discourage him. "They're the only people I know of who seem to regard that sort of thing as a joke. Why don't you try it on Dan Lamont?"

Willard groaned again.

"If this is the Chamber of Horrors," said he, "I'm sorry I moved in."

"If it is," said Durgin, "I don't see why you should regret an action so eminently appropriate."

They glared at each other for a minute, and then Willard's dyspepsia got the better of him and he leaned over the edge of his desk. Seeing that hostilities were temporarily suspended, I resumed work. Durgin got out his drawing materials. Willard opened another letter. It was a bad morning for me. Words came hard. I sighed. Willard groaned. Durgin swore. The atmosphere was not so cheerful as I had been led to expect.

The door opened slowly and a head appeared around the corner. Then a body cautiously followed the head into the office. It was Bender, a general contributor and collector of valuable books. His method of collection is such as to dissuade me from bringing any portion of my library down to the office. It is said that he acquired his manner of entering a room by long experience in dodging creditors.

He never meets anybody by chance nowadays. Bender has a fearful habit of making puns. I have known him to write poems that were as full of them as Harlem is of flats. But, gentle reader, don't be alarmed. I am not going to work any of them into this story. I will indicate the places where they occur, and leave the rest to the imagination.

"Come in, Bender," said Willard, cheerfully, "there's nobody here to be afraid of. It's so long since I lent you those two dollars that I've forgotten all about them."

"You are quite ! * * *, as usual, Willard," said Bender. "Good morning, Mr. Durgin. * ! ! ! * * !"

"Shut up, Bender," said Durgin, "or I'll make a picture of you being run over by a horse-car. I'll have done it any way, only I didn't care to raise false hopes in those who know you."

"We shan't see your name in the papers so often, now, Fielding," said Bender, turning to me.

"Why not?" I asked, wearily, perceiving that my turn had come.

"Because the b—s b—l season is over," he replied, with a chuckle. I threw four bound volumes of Harper's Weekly at him; Durgin contributed some water-colors; and Willard wound up the bombardment with a waste basket full of rejected manuscripts.

"I regard this as flattery," said Bender, crawling out from under the magazines. "By the way, Fielding, I've got a good story that you can have. I can't use it myself, and I'll let you have it for a dollar and throw in an autograph of Pocahontas."

"What's it about?" I asked, and then went on working, and tried not to hear. But I couldn't help catching something about the census, whereat I ventured to remonstrate on the ground that anybody who sprung a census joke at this late day was almost certain to have justice done him. He wouldn't stop, however, but persisted in telling me of a man who mixed up the enumerator, the dumb waiter, thermometer in a way susceptible of infinite [illegible] if he only had time to work them out.

"Bender," said Durgin, "I want you and Willard to pose for me a minute. I'm going to draw a picture of the most disagreeable man in the world throwing the biggest infernal nuisance in the world out of a seventh-story window. How do you like the idea?"

"I like it first-rate," said Willard, and he threw Bender out into the hall. "If you didn't catch my attitudes that time, Durgin, I'll go through it again with you."

"I don't allow any knock-kneed dyspeptic editor of a bow-legged and bilious funny column to talk that way to me," exclaimed the artist, with fire in his eye.

GOT RID OF THEM ALL AT LAST.

They tackled and wrestled, and whether Durgin threw Willard out or Willard threw Durgin, I really couldn't say, but at any rate they both followed Bender and I heard them bumping down the stairs.

Then I locked the door on the whole mob, and for the first time in some months enjoyed a cheerful atmosphere.

HOWARD FIELDING.

SAVED BY HER APRON.

It Issues a Cry for Help Her Lips Dare Not.

A LONG, dusty, noisy street. Seemingly unending streams of trucks, drays, cars and struggling, jostling humanity below. On either side high, dingy, brick buildings, with row upon row of windows, each grimy, each filled with stacks of merchandise, or showing bent heads, belonging to busy hands, and each the counterpart of its neighbor. Nothing but noise, heat, bustle and toil.

At a window on one side of the street sat a young man busy at a desk. Occasionally he would raise his eyes, as though to rest them, and glance out of the window. But it was all so monotonous—nothing to be seen except the high, dingy buildings, with the same grimy, tired-looking workers, each intent on finishing his day's work. Aimlessly his eyes would wander until they reached a window almost directly opposite, rest there for a moment, and then return to the work before him. Why this particular window should attract his attention in this manner he had never explained to himself. Perhaps it was because its occupant formed the only bit of brightness in all that dingy row; perhaps it was because its occupant was a young girl with neat, dainty form and golden hair. So much the young man could see from his position across the street, and he found himself wondering who she was and what she was doing, what her name was, and then, with an impatient shrug of the shoulders, would resume his work.

On the other side the young girl had also noticed her vis-a-vis, at first with indifference, and then, she, too, with growing interest. And so it happened that they were in each other's thoughts oftener than either suspected, and, being high-minded and honorable, flirtation was never dreamed of; and so matters might have stood to this day, but for the incident about to be related.

Jennie Alton was assistant book-keeper in the branch office of Silas Stanton & Co., the large iron dealers. The only other occupants of the office were the book-keeper, a young lady who acted as cashier and general office assistant, and the office boy. On certain days of the month Mr. Stanton, the senior partner, spent a few hours at his desk, the remainder of his time being devoted to the principal office.

Jennie had passed a very trying morning. The young lady cashier had asked and obtained leave to visit a sick relative; the book-keeper had been called away on business, and, finally, even the office boy had to be sent out with a message to a customer. So she was left entirely alone. Although this was unusual, Jennie thought little of it, as she was particularly busy.

Suddenly the door opened softly, and a strange voice asked: "Is Mr. Stanton in?"

Jennie, startled, turned and saw a tall, gaunt form, clad respectably enough, but with strange, wild-looking eyes. She answered quickly: "No: Mr. Stanton is at the general office in B——."

"Ah, then he has not yet come. I will wait for him. He usually spends the fifteenth in this town. He will be here soon. I will wait, as my business is of the greatest importance."

He was right. Mr. Stanton did come the fifteenth of each month—a fact she had for the moment forgotten. She resumed her work, or attempted to, but the stranger was regarding her with such a fixed stare, and, glancing at him a couple of times, and still finding him looking at her with that peculiar gleam in his eyes, which did not turn from her as she looked up, she grew uneasy and found it impossible to accomplish any thing.

A few minutes passed. Still the silent stare. Would the book-keeper or the boy never come? Or Mr. Stanton —why was he so much later than usual? If the man would only say something. She must try and get rid of him in some way.

"If your business relates to the office, sir, perhaps I can be of service," she said, timidly.

Without a change of feature, with eyes still fixed upon her face, he terrified the girl by replying: "Yes; I was just thinking you might help me. When I leave this office I must take with me Mr. Stanton's brains!"

"I MUST TAKE WITH ME MR. STANTON'S BRAINS."

Without seeming to notice the white, terror-stricken face of the girl, he continued: "Listen—I will tell you. But wait, it will not do to be disturbed." So saying, and to Jennie's increased terror, he turned the key in the door. Her brain reeled; she sunk, faint and trembling, in her chair. Locked in with a madman! Would no help come? She strove to cry out, but could give forth no sound. The man returned, and again seated himself near the frightened girl.

"I must be brief. I must finish before Mr. Stanton comes. Mr. Stanton and I started in business at the same time. I had plenty of money and he comparatively none. I started on a grand scale—he on a small one. I had hosts of friends. I married, had a beautiful home, and every thing that man could wish for, and the future seemed bright. To be sure I lost steadily in my business, but I still had plenty, and it would only be a matter of a short time when the business would pay. Mr. Stanton was succeeding with his small capital, why should not I with my great wealth? But, finally, and almost before I realized it, the crash came. Every thing was swept away. Business, home, friends, all. Why was it? Why could not I succeed when I had every thing to start on, and Stanton nothing? My once friends laughed, and said: 'You didn't have Stanton's brains, you know.' And, again, as I struggled hopelessly to regain a footing, the sarcastic remark was: 'Get Stanton's brains.' I tried in every way to succeed. But no; I got deeper in debt each day. And then, when all hope had fled, those words rung in my ears. Ah! that was the grand secret of future success! I must get Mr. Stanton's brains. I hear the words night and day. I see them wherever I look. And now, not only my success, but my peace of mind depends upon accomplishing my object. I must have them, and you will help me!"

Like one turned to stone the girl sat, too frightened to speak. But the maniac, his eyes flashing, his hands convulsively working, noticed nothing, so intent was he telling his story.

"See," continued he, "I have a knife, a surgeon's knife. Ah! but it is sharp! Now I shall soon have rest," and he handled the gleaming, polished steel with a caressing motion.

Jennie's eyes, full of agony, instinctively sought the window where young Darcy sat. But he, looking at her, could see nothing of the pain and terror on that young face. Oh! if she could only signal to him! If she could only cry out! Once or twice some one tried the door, but finding it locked, walked away. But no sound issued from her lips. And bear in mind all this took but a few minutes, although it seemed hours to the almost paralyzed girl. If the man would only leave her, do any thing but finger the shining blade, it would be a relief. Again she looked across the street. Again the appealing look from the girl. Oh! surely he sees something is wrong, for he has placed his pen on his desk, and his face is turned steadily toward her. Perhaps he has caught a glimpse of the steel and is puzzled to know what it means. If she could only signal to him for help now that he is looking. But what can she do with this man before her, watching her every movement. But see! the man with stealthy tread now moves slowly toward the door, and with bent knee places his ear to the key-hole, as though listening for footsteps.

Now is her chance. She raises her arms on high with an imploring gesture. She dares not cry, even, though she could. Thank Heaven! the young man has risen to his feet and stands with his hand resting on the back of his chair. Again the imploring gesture. The young man turns in an uncertain, hesitating manner, while her eyes roam across the room, wildly hoping for some other means to convey to him her need of assistance. She sees the marking-pot, with its big, black brush, but where the paper large enough for her to write on in letters that he may see across the street?

Suddenly the watcher across the way sees a hurried movement on her part; the arms are again raised, and, between them, on a white surface, he reads: HELP! Her neat white apron, in which she had take such pride that morning, had formed her signal.

Young Darcy hesitated no longer; but, with a hurried call for assistance, rushed across the street, closely followed by a fellow-clerk.

None too soon, for the maniac had turned, and, seeing the white signal raised, had sprung toward the girl with uplifted knife. Then, with a wild scream, Jennie fell, just as the upper glass sashes of the door were burst open and the men rushed into the room.

The man was captured and his story found to be substantially as he had related it to Jennie. Inheriting money from his father, being naturally extravagant, and with no business ability, the inevitable crash came almost unexpectedly, not so much, as one of his boon companions and intimate friends said, because of lack of money, but because of lack of brains. The worry, loss of his business, and, finally, of his health, deprived him of his reason and necessitated his incarceration in a private asylum, where he constantly raved over what his friend said was the cause of his failure, and from which he one day made his escape, with the result given.

As to our two young friends, they were married, of course, and one of their most valued keepsakes is the white apron, which Jennie insists was the means of saving her life.—Chicago Daily News.

A Run of Bad Luck.

"Fate is sadly against me. I have suffered three losses in the past year."

"Indeed. May I ask what they were?"

"I lost my opera glasses in January, my pet dog was stolen in March and my husband died only last month."—Chicago Mail.

Not Infallible.

"Remember, my son, that college is no playground. Improve your opportunities from the start."

"Father, I will graduate with honors, if it be possible. But do not expect too much. I may not be able to master the in-curve, after all."—Munsey's Weekly.

A Good Position.

"That man has a good position."

"What is it?"

"Head up, chest well out and legs straight."—West Shore.

There Are Bars and Bars.

"Yes, Jimmie must belong to a gymnasium now," remarked old Mrs. Jones to her husband, who inquired what the boy did in the evening. "I heard him tell a friend the other night that he could find him down at the corner hanging on to a bar most any evening in the week."—Texas Siftings.

Not What Was Expected.

"Well, Kennilboy, whom do you love?" asked Kennilboy's father.

After a moment of deep thought the answer came.

"Kennilboy," he said.—Harper's Young People.

Agricultural Reports.

First Farmer—I raised a fine crop of wheat this year, and lots of potatoes and cabbage.

Second Farmer—Well, I did better than that. I raised a four thousand-dollar mortgage.—West Shore.

A DAY OF TRIALS.

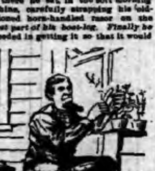
How It Was That Uncle Bobby Didn't Go to Church.

OLD BOBBY GIVENS sat on the steps of his little back porch early one Sunday morning strapping his razor preparatory to shaving himself. This was a regular Sunday morning job, for Uncle Bobby, as the neighbors called him, although a tolerably fair Christian and an elder in the Sugar Run Presbyterian church, was not so strict in his orthodoxy as to deny himself the luxury of his Sunday morning scrape. He even went so far sometimes as to take a pan of salt and go out to the "far end of the plain" and salt the sheep, although he never did this without a protest from his good wife Polly, who thought it "a sin an' a shame to work on the Sabbath 'nless there was a needcessity for it."

It was his custom, too, in summer time to go out on the little back porch, which fronted the south, to sharpen his razor; this done, he would go into the house and, taking down the little kitchen mirror, would take it out and hang it on a nail on the porch where he could get a better light for his weak, old eyes. On the particular morning of which I am now writing Uncle Bobby had been having a hard time of it. He had started out early, as was his custom, to do the chores, and found that the horses, led by old Tom, the equine rogue of the farm, had all been in the cornfield all night. The old gentleman had a vast lot of trouble getting them out and up to the barn. He finally accomplished it, however, but not until he had kept the breakfast waiting for nearly an hour and worried the "wimmin folks" nearly to death for fear they'd "be late to meetin'."

Then the next trouble came when he found that he was utterly unable to get his razor in "good runnin' order." Three different times had he tried to shave and had given it up in despair.

So there he sat, in the soft morning sunshine, carefully strapping his old-fashioned horn-handled razor on the softest part of his boot-leg. Finally he succeeded in getting it so that it would "cripple a hair," although it would not cut one clear and smooth like any good, well-behaved razor ought to do. Once more, then, he lathered his face and had just nicely finished one side when he heard a loud and excited "Helloa," proceeding from the lungs of somebody who had stopped at the front gate.



SO THERE HE SAT.

With razor still in hand, Uncle Bobby stepped off the porch and around the corner of the house to see who it could be that had hailed him in so boisterous a manner and on a Sunday morning, too.

The individual who had thus so broken in on Uncle Bobby's morning toilet was none other than Jake Taylor, the village postmaster, and that he had an important communication to make, the following will show:

"Helloa, Uncle Bobby," he exclaimed, as soon as he caught sight of that personage. "I was jest comin' around the crick road an' I seed Bill Honnicut's hogs in that air bottom field a-wheat o' yours. They're tearin' down shocks an' raisin' the devil. I thought I'd better stop and tell you even of 'tis Sunday."

"Much obliged, Jake," replied the old man, "I'll go right down and git 'em out." Then turning, he hurried back onto the porch, laid his razor on a chair, seized a towel and wiped the lather off his half-shaven face, snatched his hat from its accustomed nail inside the kitchen door and was hurrying away when Aunt Polly stopped him with: "Whar on airth are you a-goin' now, Robert?"

"Them yar dad-burned, dog-bited hogs o' Bill Honnicut's has got into the bottom wheat-field an' I've got ter go an' git 'em out; whar's Tige?"

"Pap Givens!" ejaculated the old lady, "do you know what you're a-sayin'? Don't forgit that you're an elder in the church an' this is communion day, too."

"Oh, go long, mother. I hain't got time to listen ter you now. Yer, Tige, yer, Tige, yer, yer!"

The dog came bounding out from under the porch, his accustomed sleeping-place, and the old man, foaming with wrath, set off, Tige at his heels, "to get them fetch-taked hogs outen the wheat."

An hour later he returned to the house only to find fresh troubles awaiting him. As he came up the steps there sat his two daughters, Tillie and Callie, both in tears, while from the inside could be heard the shrill tones of the old lady alternately scolding and wailing over the ill-luck which had this morning befallen them. "Oh! pap," said Tillie, the younger of the daughters, and herself a buxom, rosy-faced girl of eighteen; "Oh! pap, what do you think? Cal and I went to hitch up Doll to the buggy, and the mean old thing got away from us with the harness on, jumped the bars in the hoss lot, an' she's way out there in the back pastur' now. What'll we do? It's time now we was gettin' ready for meetin'."

"Gosheramighty!" exclaimed the old fellow in despair, "what on airth'll happen next, I wonder? Well," he continued as he took off his hat, and, sinking down on the steps, began to wipe his heated face, "wall, gals, unless you kin go an' drive her up she'll hev to stay thar 'till I git a leetle mite rested. I'm too mity nigh tuckered up now to go racin' around after that old heifer."

The girls demurred to that proposition and went upstairs to finish their cry, while Uncle Bobby quietly stole into the cool, old-fashioned front parlor, where he lay down on the floor and soon forgot the troubles of the morning in sleep. When he awoke, dinner was ready and old Doll had, of her own accord, come back to the house and was standing at the watering trough in the barn-yard neighing for a drink. He went out and watered her, put her in the stable, ran the old buggy back to its place under the shed and then went into the house and took another long nap. That evening a neighbor driving by stopped to chat for a few moments and, in the course of the conversation, asked Uncle Bobby why his folks had not been to church that day.

"Well," answered the old fellow, and there was just the faintest suggestion of a smile playing around the corners of his mouth: "Well, it warn't jest quite convenyent for us to git out to-day, so we concluded to stay at home an' git rested good for nex' week's meetin' [illegible] at our house."

But that particular Sunday was long remembered in the Givens family as "a day of trouble."—Ed. R. Pritchard, in Arkansaw Traveler.

HE SAW THE DRIFT.

The Old Man Did Not Fall In With the Plan Proposed By His Son William.

IN ONE of the Southern counties of Arkansaw lived a pair—old Bill Aikens and his son Bill—who were characters in their way. They were well-known as sharp dealers and to drive a hard bargain. Young Bill was married and lived with his wife at his father's house. Bill assisted about the farm, while Sally, his wife, assisted his mother with the onerous duties that fall to the lot of a farmer's wife in the rough countries.

When strangers and uninitiated traders were scarce the two Bills would trade with each other, and it often happened, as a result of disagreement concerning these inner-family transactions, that a hand-to-hand scuffle between the father and his dutiful "chip" would ensue. The results were generally a draw, with the odds in favor of the old man.

Young Bill had been unusually sober and thoughtful for some time, and the old man suspected that something was on his mind, but he said nothing. One day they were behind the barn looking at the field of corn, when young Bill opened the conversation:

"Pap, you've done a heap of work in your day!"

"Yes, William, I've scratched er bit."

"You've just kept at it frum sun-up 'till after milkin', and by the sweat ov yer brow raked together this hull farm!"

"That's so, William," replied the old man as he shifted his quid of tobacco uneasily from one cheek to the other, "that's so."

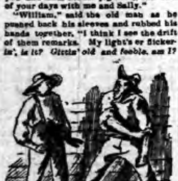
"And, pap, it's gin me a deal of oneasyness to see you, at your age, rasslin with the cares of life. You oughter be jest settin' 'longside the fire, smokin' your pipe, or layin' out under the trees in the shade."

"That's so, William, I oughter."

Bill was so engrossed with the beauties of his own thoughts and plans that he did not notice a dangerous light in the old man's eyes, and that he spat on the palms of his hands and rubbed them together once or twice.

"Now, pap, bein' as you are gittin' old and feeble and your light just a flickerin' you give me a deed of the farm and you and mam kinder jog along the rest of your days with me and Sally."

"William," said the old man as he pushed back his sleeves and rubbed his hands together, "I think I see the drift of them remarks. My light's er flickerin', is it? Gittin' old and feeble, am I? When your old pap's ready for the poorhouse he'll talk to you. William!"



THE OLD MAN SEES THE DRIFT OF WILLIAM'S REMARKS.

"Yes, pap."

"See that field of cornstalks?"

"Yes, pap."

"Well, to show that your old pap's light ain't er flickerin' as much as you reckon on, I'm goin' to knock down half an acre of them stalks with your heels."

When the argument was concluded Bill crawled painfully from under the barn and whispered to himself:

"Sally was to kinder bring mam to the point at the same time. I wonder if her light's put out, or if she's only crippled for life."—Edwin Ralph Collins, in Texas Siftings.

Who Buys Diamonds.

During a trial, in which it was necessary to call in some expert testimony as to the value and quality of diamonds a certain pawnbroker took the stand.

"Well, sir," asked the attorney, "do you sell diamonds?"

"Yes, when I can," was the reply.

"Is trade very good now?"

"Not much."

"Who buys the most diamonds?"

"The biggest fools, sir, who have the money."

The testimony was considered decidedly expert.—Texas Siftings.

He Had Not Finished.

Whopper—Yes, sir, that cat of mine could spring fifty feet after a mouse, and—

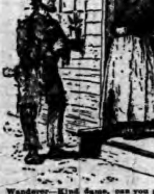
Whopper—It's not a lie, and I'll knock you down if you don't take that back!

Breakley (calmly continuing)—l—l—lively cat!—Boston Traveler.

UNSYMPATHETIC.



Wanderer—Kind dame, can you give me a place to lay me down to die?

The Kind Dame—Certainly. Just go up to the barn. My husband is the county coroner an' he hain't had a case for a month.—The Jury.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

De Braggs—There, look at that!

Pugsby—That cracked jug?

De Braggs—Cracked jug! Manalive, that's a tenth century devergne.

Pugsby—I wouldn't have it in my house. It's ugly.

De Braggs (stiffly)—It cost three thousand dollars.

Pugsby—Three thous— How beautiful!—Texas Siftings.

No More Dodging.

George—I say, Gus, what's happened? You strut along the street as if you owned the whole city. Fallen heir to a fortune?

Gus—No, but I've been dodging my tailor for eighteen months, and to-day I've got the money in my pocket to pay him.—N. Y. Good News.

No Cause for Alarm.

Mrs. Cobwigger—Oh, dear, I've spilled the bottle of ink over your table cloth. I'm afraid I've ruined it.

Mrs. Brown—Not at all, my dear. It's only the bottle of indelible ink.—Munsey's Weekly.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

ANIMALS' TOILETS.

Most of Them Are in the Habit of Taking a Daily Bath.

As a rule, all animals are cleanly by nature. Even pigs will keep clean if they are not confined in a pen or yard. Brushes and combs, says Golden Days, most animals carry with them, and ducks and divers are always supplied with oil in a handy reservoir.

Birds especially are very particular about the quality of their "toilet dust," and equally nice as to the water in which they prefer to wash. Some use water only, some water or dust, others dust and no water.

Partridges are a good example of the dusting birds, and are most careful in the selection of their dust baths. Dry loam suits them best; but perhaps their favorite place is a meadow where a few turfs have been removed. There they scratch out the loam, and shuffle backwards under the grass roots till their feathers are full of the cool earth. In wet weather they find, if possible, a heap of burnt ashes on the site of a wood fire, and dust there.

Sparrows, on the contrary, always choose road dust, the dryest and finest possible. Meadow larks, also, are fond of the road, and dust there in the early morning. But they, too, have their fancy, and choose the dry, gritty part, where the horses' hoofs tread.

Wild ducks, though feeding by the salt water, prefer to bathe in fresh-water pools, and will fly long distances inland to running brooks and ponds, where they preen and wash themselves in the most vigorous and thorough way.

But though passing so much time on the water, ducks seem to prefer a shower-bath to any other; and in a heavy rain they may be seen opening their feathers and allowing the rain to soak in, after which they dress the whole surface with oil from the reservoir which we mentioned above.

Swallows and martins are likewise nice in their choice of bath water; nothing but newly-fallen rain water thoroughly pleases them, and if tempted to bathe, it is generally by some shallow pool in the road which an hour's sun will evaporate.

Cats, large and small, make the most careful toilets of any class of animal, with the exception of some of the opossums. The lions and tigers wash themselves in exactly the same manner as the cat, wetting the dark, India-rubber-like ball of the fore foot and the inner toe, and passing it over the face and behind the ears. The foot is thus at the same time a face sponge and brush, and the rough tongue combs the rest of the body.

TABBY AT HER TOILET.

Sporting dogs, which are used in mud, snow and wet, are strangely clever and quick in cleaning and drying their coats, and it is a sure sign that a dog has been over-tired if he shows any trace of mud or dirt next morning.

Most of their toilet is done with the tongue, but they are very clever at using a bush or the side of a haystack as a rough towel. One small spaniel which was allowed to live in the house was well aware that if he returned dirty he would not be admitted indoors.

About an hour before the close of the day's shooting he used to strike work and begin to clean himself, and if urged to do more, would slip off home and present himself neat and clean in the dining-room.

One day the dog had been left at home, and his master returned and seated himself, wet and with half-frozen drops of ice sticking to his gaiters, by the fire.

Pan ran up and carefully licked off the frozen ice and snow, stopping every now and then to give an anxious look, which said as plainly as possible:

"Dear me! If I don't get him clean quickly, he will be sent to lie in the stable."

CONJURING FOR GIRLS.

How to Conceal Small Coins in the Palm of the Hand.

When you have mastered the art of palming coins other objects will be managed easily. Girls' hands being small as a rule it is better to practice with five-cent pieces. To commence with, turn your right hand palm upward and lay the nickel in the palm (you will soon discover the exact spot), contract or draw the thumb inward till the ball of the thumb holds the nickel between it and that part of the palm in a line with the third finger, and if the nickel is in the right spot it will be a fast prisoner and you can turn your hand over, use your fingers and lift things without any inconvenience or fear of dropping it. Practice this until you feel quite at ease with the coin in your hand, and remember, in practice, to keep the back of the hand uppermost or outwards, otherwise the nickel would be seen by the audience. When you have arrived at this stage you may study one or two "passes." By a "pass" is indicated the apparent passing a coin from one hand to the other, although it does not leave the hand in which it is first seen, and [illegible] by palming. Thus, now the nickel lightly in the right hand between the second and third fingers and the thumb. Draw the thumb quickly out of the way, close the fingers smartly, and you will have the nickel in the right spot for palming; contract the thumb and open the fingers and to any one standing in front of you the hand will appear empty.

Practice this until you can make sure of safely stowing away the coin in a second of time and while the hand is at rest. Next, in front of a looking-glass try it again, while moving the right hand towards the left, which is held open, and which immediately, on the fingers of the right hand touching it, closes upon the coin it is supposed to contain. Let your eyes follow your left hand, for where your eyes are directed those of your audience are sure to follow; drop your right hand carelessly to your side and let it hang as if empty.

Here is another pass which is easier and which is a very good one for coins of smaller size than a nickel. Rest the coin between the sides of the third finger and the first finger, supporting it behind by the second finger and in front by the thumb. Slightly close the fingers, drawing the coin down the inside of the thumb until the joint of the thumb overlaps its upper edge, when the coin will be found to be tightly held between that joint and the junction of the thumb with the hand.—N. Y. World.

HOME OF THE PEAFOWLS.

Birds Which Have a Wonderfully Bright and Varied Plumage.

You would be delighted if you could see our peafowls.

We have many of them, sometimes nearly a hundred, and though we enjoy a fat peafowl for Christmas dinner, we think our chief pleasure in them comes from watching them; sometimes as they strut, again as they walk gracefully along carrying their long trains of feathers just above the grass.

In the springtime when their feathers are of full length, we sometimes see twenty-five or thirty strutting at once, each tail full spread and very rich and beautiful. The peacock, you must know, has a greater variety of colors in his plumage than any other bird. The peahen is dove colored, with a green neck, and has not a long tail.

Peacocks appear vain, and each one has his favorite place of strutting, and there he spends most of his time in the spring; he comes to the same spot year after year to display his beauties. One who spent his time before the sitting-room window was very handsome. Some one caught him and hung a coin by a cord round his neck, and it shone there over his glossy blue breast for years.

We have some who are fond of perching on the gate posts, and we think them handsome ornaments.

SUNNING HIMSELF.

They roost up in the tall forest trees, and sometimes in snowy weather do not come down till late in the day. Sometimes when weighted with snow, they sit down, and their plumage freezes to the ground, and if not cut loose they would die.

In summer they do not go to roost till late, and, if rain is coming on, they utter their strange cries at all times of the night. I knew a little girl who said she believed they talked in their sleep, for she thought they could not stay awake to call as steadily as they did. The voice of the peafowl is thought to be harsh, but we like it, for it is to us a home sound.

Their eggs are large. They make their nests in the wheat-fields or orchards, and do not bring their young to the house while small.

In May and June their feathers are ripe for plucking, and after a heavy rain, while they are too wet to fly or run fast, boys catch them and pick out their beautiful tails. As they miss the weight of their feathers, they stagger around and hide in the bushes for a few days.

The peafowl is said to be a native of India.—Anna R. Henderson, in Little Men and Women.

THE WORLD'S COFFEE.

Where It Comes From and What It Is Worth in Cold Cash.

Of the vast quantity of coffee supplied to the United States something like two-thirds of the whole comes from Brazil, which country, it might be mentioned, produces considerably more than one-half of the world's total supply of that article.

Not long since Ceylon was the third coffee country in the world, and promised to be second, but the crop in that country has fallen off from 968,328 hundred weight in the season of 1874-75 to 150,000 hundred weight in the season of 1887-88. Such a sudden and almost complete collapse of a great industry has seldom been known.

The coffee plant itself is best described as a shrub. Its appearance is graceful and attractive, and under favorable circumstances it will attain a height of from fifteen to twenty feet. The seeds are commonly termed coffee beans, not because they resemble beans proper, but from the Arabic word "bunn." The berries are not usually picked until they become fully ripe. It is believed that it is owing to the careful attention to the matter of picking by the Arabs that Mocha coffee, although inferior in size and appearance, commands its high price in the market. Brazilian coffee stands in value much below even the native Ceylon and East India coffees, because of the fact of being carelessly grown, gathered and cured.

The imports of coffee in the United States in 1821 were 19,186,150 pounds; in 1824, 36,501,172 pounds; in 1827, $47,727,-203 pounds; from 1821 to 1837, 970,000,-000 pounds. The receipts of coffee at all ports in the United States in 1887 were nearly $550,000,000 pounds; considerably more in one year than one-half of the imports of the sixteen years between 1821 and 1837.

We give below some interesting figures of the world's production and consumption of coffee.

The world's present production of coffee:

	Total product, Tons.
Brazil	480,000
Java and Sumatra	60,000
Ceylon	8,450
India	21,000
Central America and Mexico	40,200
Venezuela, Columbia, Peru, Bolivia and Guianas	50,000
Hayti and San Domingo	42,000
Cuba and Porto Rico	20,000
Remainder of West Indies (Jamaica, etc.)	7,500
Arabia, Madagascar, Abyssinia and northeast coast of Africa	25,000
Liberia and west coast of Africa	19,500
Philippines (Manila), Celebras and rest of Eastern Archipelago	11,000
Sandwich and rest of Pacific Isles	1,300
Natal	210
Total	[illegible]

The value of the world's production of coffee say 17,000,000 hundred weight, would be about $300,000,000 in the wholesale markets.

The world's consumption of coffee:

	Tons.
Europe	[illegible]
United States and Canada	[illegible]
Mexico, Central American States and West India Islands	[illegible]
Brazil, and rest of South American States	41,500

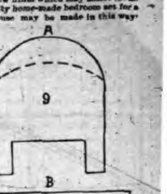
THE HOUSEHOLD.

FURNITURE FOR DOLLS.

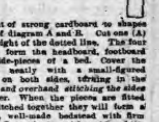
Pretty Home-Made Bedroom Set for Miss Dolly's House.

The dolls must be cared for as well as their owners, new houses must be had, old ones refitted, and many a small housewife is considering the subject with all the anxiety due to so grave a subject. To mothers who have to cater to the tastes of these little critics we give a few hints which may assist them.

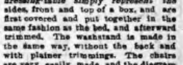
A pretty home-made bedroom set for a doll's house may be made in this way:



Cut out of strong cardboard to shapes each of diagram A and B. Cut one (A) the height of the dotted line. The four pieces form the headboard, footboard and side-pieces of a bed. Cover the pieces neatly with a small-figured calico on both sides, turning in the edges, and overhand stitching the sides together. When the pieces are fitted and stitched together they will form a strong, well-made bedstead with firm legs. Cover the top with a piece of the same chintz as a rest for the mattress; add a little flounce as a valance to the bed, a hair mattress made of ticking and it is ready for use.



The sides and front and top of the dressing-table simply represent the sides, front and top of a box, and are first covered and put together in the same fashion as the bed, and afterward trimmed. The washstand is made in the same way, without the back and with plainer trimmings. The chairs are very easily made, and the diagram will show the shape of the pieces: No. 1 is the back and back legs; No. 2, the front legs and side pieces (three of these should be cut), and No. 3 the seat after they are covered and stitched together. A flounce gives the chair a pretty finish.

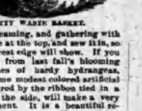


Sets made in this way sell very readily at fairs.—N. Y. Tribune.

WASTE-PAPER BASKET.

A Pretty and Useful Ornament for My Lady's Boudoir.

One whole pasteboard, a half yard of scarlet silesia, a yard of dress binding, a yard and a half of shaded green ribbon, some flowers, needle and thread, a basket of lichens scaled off in as large pieces as possible from old decaying logs or fence rails; with these and two hours of leisure a pair of deft hands can make this pretty, useful writing-desk appendage. Bring the ends of the pasteboard together and secure them in a flat seam. Cut a round piece to fit the bottom of this cylinder, sew on and cover the seam with the binding. Now begin at the bottom, crowd closely together and sew securely round after round of the lichens until the whole surface is thickly covered with them. If care has been taken to put them on smoothly, the results will reward the pains; the blending of color is beautiful. Make the lining, by seaming, and gathering with a little ruffle at the top, and sew it in, so that the merest edge will show. If you have saved from last fall's blooming some bunches of hardy hydrangeas, these, or some modest colored artificial flowers, secured by the ribbon tied in a loose bow at the side, will make a very pretty ornament. It is a beautiful receptacle for tall grasses, if you should wish sometimes to use it as a bouquet receiver in a corner of the room.—American Agriculturist.



PRETTY WASTE BASKET.

Utilizing Cotton Waste.

Until lately cotton waste has been cleaned and reused, but the grease extracted from it has been thrown away. It is now found that the oil thus extracted can be made, after very simple treatment, to yield first-class printing ink. The cotton waste is placed in steam chambers and a solution of bisulphate of carbon is pumped into the vessels. This disengages the oil and grease, which is then passed into a series of heated coppers, from which it emerges as varnish, from which the printing ink is made.

An Embarrassing Question.

Artist—You say you want your portrait painted.

Miss Elderly—Yes, I would like to have it life size.

Artist—All right; and now one more question—which do you prefer, a good likeness, or handsome? You can't have both.—Texas Siftings.

A Pointer for Canvassers.

Gentleman—Why do you always begin to beg on the top floor instead of beginning at the first floor.

Mendicant—Well, you see if I begin at the top floor and am thrown down a flight of stairs I can keep right on begging on the next floor.—Texas Siftings.

Why He Got Six Months.

Judge—How far did the thief carry your pig?

Complainant—Fully two miles away from my house.

Judge (to prisoner)—What have you to say to this charge?

Prisoner—It was only a joke, judge.

Judge—Six months—because you carried the joke too far.—Fliegende Blaetter.

Time Is Money.

Scene—General S. S. Agency, Broadway; six months hence.

Mr. B. Z. Ness—Book me for the Plutonic, to-morrow.

S. S. Agent—Well, I can accommodate you on her; but if it's an urgent business, I'd advise you to go by the City of Hoboken. She's ten minutes faster!—Puck.

CHRISTMAS.

We are again at the threshold of the most joyous of all anniversary days.

Christmas is nigh at hand.

Other days may commemorate events of historical value, but by far the brightest and best page of history is the recorded story of Christmas, that eventful period when the Infant Jesus lay cradled in a manger, and where the star of Bethlehem, emitting rays of unwonted brilliancy, led shepherds from the surrounding hills and wise men from the East to seek out and pay homage to the newly-born Redeemer of the world, and when through the stilly air resound the angelic anthem of "Glory to God in the Highest, Peace on Earth, and Good Will to Men."

The meaning of Christmas is to keep in remembrance Christ, and endeavoring to be Christ-like in the essential of Christianity. His mission was to succor and save, to rescue the perishing, care for the poor and needy, and to point the way to mansions of eternal bliss.

Christmas is fittingly observed in the augmentation of human happiness.

To realize that is our sincere wish for all, high or humble, rich or poor.

POLITICAL PARTIES.

Political parties are worthy of public respect when and only when honestly and honorably conducted, but no one party has rights and privileges superior to any other.

There is absolute free trade in the organization of parties. McKinleyism cannot prevent American citizens from banding together under distinctive partisan names, be they Democratic, Republican, Prohibition, Labor, Farmers' Alliance, Single Tax, Greenback, Free Silver or what else. Each possesses the same legal authority to exist, advocate principles and measures, and to make converts.

For any party to assume the royal right to govern the country without limit is, to use a mild term, preposterous. It has no title either in law or freedom.

The people make political parties, and when the actions of politicians become glaringly obnoxious, the people can scatter them like chaff before the rushing wind.

The recent national election clearly affirms that fact.

The Republican party being in power in Congress, madly bent upon perpetuating its authority regardless of means, in defiance of the people and just principles, and negligent of the business interests of the country, adopted measures which the foolish leaders thought certain would secure their arbitrary designs and muzzle public opinion for an indefinite term of years.

How absurd, and how truthful the saying—"They whom the Gods wish to destroy they first make mad."

The ballot is the weapon of freemen, and as soon as the sovereign people could exercise different power they indignantly drove out offending Congressmen, and elected a larger opposing majority to take their places than was ever known in the history of the United States.

The people can make and unmake political parties.

To defy popular sentiment is to court fatal shipwreck.

ELIZABETH'S BOWLERS BURIED.

Crescent League Pin Knights Capture the First Game of the Season, With Ease.

The Elizabeth Athletic Club, whose bowlers are the champions of the State, thought it was not necessary to send all their picked players to Plainfield Tuesday night. They made up a team of good ones, however, and included R. P. Moore of Fanwood, who has no equal as a steady roller. But the next time Elizabeth rolls against the Crescent League of this city, she will have out her experts.

It was the Plainfield boys' first match, and being barred out of home they had had but little practice. The Elizabeths, on the other hand, are kept in training all the time. Still C. C. Burnet had the courage to make the match, and faith enough in the Crescent League bowlers to believe they would win if they tried. The result proves he was right. Plainfield won by 207 pins.

VanEmburgh was high man. He never broke until the 10th frame, and beat Pugh (who rolls [illegible], sometimes) by over a hundred pins. Dilts started in fine shape with three strikes but broke badly in the 4th, 5th, and 6th frames. He pulled himself into second place, however. Vail, the Quaker, astonished them all, and Rogers did himself proud. Everson had hard luck. VanWinkle bowled a good game after his 5th frame.

J. W. Murray, Jr., was umpire. The score was:

TOM'S TEACHERS.

What Bishop Vincent Told the People in St. Paul About the Boy.

Bishop John H. Vincent, D. D., LL. D., formerly of this city, gave a most interesting lecture the other evening at the People's church, St. Paul, Minn. Bishop Vincent is known the world over as a popular educator and the founder of the C. L. S. C. He is not an entire stranger to St. Paul audiences, having lectured or preached in the city several times. The audience which greeted him was from the most refined and cultured people in the city, and he held the rapt attention of his hearers during the entire discourse. The subject of the lecture was "Tom and His Teacher." After greeting his audience the speaker said:

Who is Tom? Who are Tom's teachers? What shall Tom's teachers teach Tom? These are the questions which I shall consider.

Tom is the average American boy. Whether rich or poor matters not to him. Whether clad in homespun or broadcloth matters not him, so he has a good time. Whether he was born on American soil or not is no matter to me. I have no sympathy with the narrow-mindedness which says only those born on American soil are Americans. So the boy or man has American ideas and the spirit of American institutions is sufficient to make him an American.

Next, who are Tom's teachers? I am not now going to consider professional teachers. There is a great army of them, but it is not my intention to speak of them. I mean the great mass of unprofessional teachers, who have more influence upon the boy's life than the professional teachers. The tone of voice in which the father complains of his underdone or overdone steak has an effect upon Tom. The way in which the mother gives her commands to the servants also has its effects. Tom is influenced by the remarks of the fellows on the street corners. He is influenced by the pictures on the bill boards. The time is coming—I see it has not yet arrived in your city—when the women of our cities will convene, and they will take effective means to demand of the authorities that those vile caricatures shall no longer be flaunted in their faces from every dead wall and every other available spot where they can be placed. [Applause.] Tom is also influenced and educated by the arrangement of the school room; by the grounds about the building; by the daily paper, by the news which creates an excitement, and about which people talk on the streets. All of these things have part in moulding Tom's character, and are counted among his teachers.

Next I come to consider the question, "What shall Tom's teachers teach Tom?" As preliminaries I want to mention three things that I consider should be taught to Tom. He should be taught to think on his own account. It is not enough to be able to transfer the printed pages from the book to his brain, and then to repeat them to his teacher; in short, to make an echo of the boy. Some fellows will stand up before their teachers and repeat correctly what the printed page contains, and the teacher, listening to the boy and looking at the book, will tell him he has done very well, and he will be promoted, and after a while a diploma will be given him—a larned stick. Parents should at the table put to their boys all sorts of possible exigencies, and ask them how they would get out of the difficulty. They will thus become trained to use their judgment. I do not deprecate book knowledge nor undervalue training the memory, but I do exalt that which trains the judgment.

[illegible] should also be taught to speak with accuracy. He should be trained to [illegible] accuracy and fidelity to truth [illegible]. He should also be trained to express himself in good English. Train the boy to habits of careful observation, and to be truthful about the minutest details. That is the only scientific way of study and expression.

Tom should also be trained in ethics. I am not over-particular about religious services in business houses, nor in railroad depots, nor in the public schools. But I insist that it should be given in the home. The children should be taught to distinguish between the right way and the wrong way. They should also be taught to be considerate of the happiness and comfort of others.

But there are more important things in which Tom should be trained. He should be taught to consider himself as a person and not as a thing; a cause and not an effect. There is a vast deal of nonsense taught about heredity and circumstance and habit. I want Tom taught to overcome inheritance, trample circumstances under foot, and break the power of habit, and stand as a man, and not as a thing.

He should also be taught that he is a power and not an effect; that, being the centre of power, he is independent. I detest tramps, whether rich or poor. I honor the boy who works his way. The man who learns the value of money will respect all who have to earn their living by hard toil. There are no classes here, except those formed by culture and refinement.

I would not have Tom forget the law of independence. Therefore I believe in the public school. It puts every candidate for citizenship alongside of his fellow citizen. Thus he is trained in independence, responsibility and individuality. I suppose this is the reason of some opposition to the public school system. The more ecclesiastical is this opposition the more dangerous it is. But we will teach them that in this country the public school will continue to exist, and withered be the hand that tampers with it. [Applause.]

Lastly, never give Tom up. He may be dull; but do not use sarcasm or speak with contempt. A teacher who will so treat a pupil ought to be discharged forthwith. And never give him up morally. And though he be wayward, kindness and gentleness and prayerfulness will some day have its reward.

The lecture abounded in apt illustrations and touches of humor which added largely to its interest.

At the close a reception to the speaker was given in the church parlors, which was attended by most of those present at the lecture.

A Flourishing and Influential Society.

A special meeting of The New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society was held Friday night in the Secretary's office, this city, during which matters of interest to sportsmen generally were fully discussed. President [illegible] occupied the chair, and presented some interesting statistics regarding the protection and propagation of game throughout the State. Treasurer E. M. Stelle reported a handsome sum remaining in his hands. On motion of Gen. Wm. H. Sterling, the President was empowered to appoint a committee of three members, to be known as the Legislative Committee, whose duties shall be to look after the interests of the Society and game protection generally at the coming session of the Legislature. Reports were received of numerous arrests having been made the past year, of parties violating the game and fish laws, through the efforts of members of the Society, the membership of which is steadily increasing. The New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society was organized in [illegible], and is today the most independent game protective society in the State.

A DENTIST'S ADVENTURE WITH A WOMAN

Just as Things Looked Most Suspicious the Wife Appeared, and It Took Three Men Fifteen Minutes to Explain.

What threatened to place one of Plainfield's most reputable professional men in a highly embarrassing predicament happened in a well-known dentist's office a day or two ago. The doctor of dental surgery was alone in his office when a good-looking young woman entered, threw herself into the operating chair, and gasped out that she wanted a tooth pulled, and that as she did not want to be hurt she wished to be rendered thoroughly unconscious with an anaesthetic. No sooner, however, did she see the dental instruments in the dentist's hands than she fainted in an agony of apprehension. The forceps-plier grasped the opportunity by the forelock and yanked the offending tooth from the maiden's gums. The pain of the operation revived the girl from her swoon, and although the dentist had not given her any drug whatever she let her imagination have full sway, and, believing that she was under the influence of the powerful anaesthetic for which she had asked, and of the results of which she had heard so much, she rushed frantically about the room, screaming "You've poisoned me! You've poisoned me!" The dentist sought to allay her excitement and fears, caught her by the arm and asked her to listen to reason. "Don't touch me!"—she shrieked—"You've poisoned me, and I'm going to die." Springing to the front of the building, she threw up a window, leaned forward over the sill, and shouted "Murder! Murder!" The dentist dragged her back, using only such gentle force as was absolutely necessary, and slammed the window down. The girl was still struggling in his arms when a physician and a druggist who had heard the cries rushed in, and stood for a moment aghast, mistaking the meaning of his embrace, then as the girl cried "Take him away! He's poisoned me! I'm going to die!" they seized the dentist and released the girl from his grasp. In an instant, however, they themselves had to make the woman a prisoner, for she began to smash the furniture and to tear her garments into shreds, in the violence of her hysteria. All sorts of cries she uttered, and continued to struggle and to scream till, well-nigh exhausted, and considerably on the [illegible], she flung herself on a sofa and excitedly ran over a list of treasures which she wished to bequeath to certain loved ones. Then she became more quiet, and breathed heavily, and sobbed now and then, and wondered why she didn't die. The physician sent the druggist out to get a prescription filled, and had himself stepped out of the room for a moment when the dentist's charming young wife, who had been unconscious of all that was happening in the office, chanced to enter. What she thought when she saw her husband bending eagerly over the sofa and seemingly caressing a pretty young woman, she will never tell, since she has had the matter satisfactorily explained; but for an instant she was speechless with amazement, and it took the three men, dentist, doctor and druggist, what seemed to the dentist an interminable while, to smooth over all the details of the story and to disabuse the grieved and sobbing wife of the idea that her husband had not been discovered in a compromising situation.

While the clouds of threatened domestic discord were being dispersed the dentist's fair patient was recovering, and by the time all other difficulties were arranged she arose, pressed the dentist's hand, said "That was an awful ugly tooth, and I'm glad you got it out, though I was such a goose over it," and with her cloak wrapped carefully about her entered her carriage, which had just arrived.

The dentist followed her ruefully with his eyes. "I have many kinds of customers,"—said he—"but I never had a harder one to manage than that one, and I never found myself in a more delicate position than to-day." And then the dentist and the doctor and the druggist lighted their cigars and spent an hour or two swapping deliciously exciting experiences.

The men all agreed, as a result of their exchange of confidences, that it was within the power of a woman to blast forever the reputation of a professional man who was in reality the soul of honor. A physician, a dentist, or even a druggist, is such an intimate adviser of individuals that they experience many adventures spiced with sensational excitement which the outside world might easily develop into a scandal.

Mrs. Opdyke and Sister Charlotte Speak.

Mrs. G. F. Opdyke, of this city, and Sister Charlotte from the Florence Mission, New York, delivered addresses in Reform Hall, Sunday night, before a deeply interested audience. The thrilling accounts given of human degradation and misery, caused principally by intoxicating liquor, were heart rending, and the fervent appeals made for individual labor and greater zeal in the Master's work betokened the true Christian spirit.

But the Lock-ups That They Long for Fail to Materialize.

The editors of neighboring villages are losing sleep nights and fretting themselves to death in the daytime because of a dearth of lockups. The Westfield Standard has been sighing for one these many moons, and seems no nearer having its desire gratified now than ever. A recent issue contains this plaint:

> The lungs, we are informed, contain 75,000,000 cells; and yet Westfield can't have a lock-up.

And while Editor Pearsall of The Standard is trying to get his constituents to trade off their spare lung-cells for space in a local jail Editor W. B. R. Mason is endeavoring to communicate a similar desire at Bound Brook. In The Chronicle he mourns:

> A lock-up is being built at Madison. We wish the same could be said for Bound Brook.

But the editor of the Madison Eagle is either ungenerously inclined, or else has a grudge against Editor Mason and desires to consign him to dungeon walls, for he responds, in his column of "Eagle Feathers", in this wise:

> Come over, Bro. Mason, in about two weeks, and we will show you a neat and secure lock-up. We have needed it for years.

Just why the editorial "we" of The Eagle has for years needed a lock-up and did not go somewhere where his want could be supplied, is not clear. He might have come to Plainfield, where is at least one empty cell.

There continues, however, to be considerable unanimity of desire among the rural editorial brethren for a building of iron-barred doors and sickly smells and dingy appearance. If they really want a lock-up that will strike terror to the hearts of their friends the tramp and the intoxicated individual they are welcome to the Plainfield edifice. There are better things than lock-ups to ask for.

Physicians say that there is no remedy for consumption. In some cases this may be correct. We know however of many cures made by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and we will guarantee relief.

A sensible woman will not fail to keep a bottle of Salvation Oil on hand for man's aches and bruises.

HID HER LOVER IN A CLOSET.

But Her Husband, Unexpectedly Home from Church, Yanked Him Out, and Drove His Faithless Wife Away.

A sensational story of domestic faithlessness and scandal, involving a Plainfield man who is connected with prominent families, comes from Somerville, where a once-happy home has been visited with disruption, and is threatened with divorce, because of a wife's duplicity.

The injured husband in the case is a Somerville merchant who attends church Sunday evenings because of a professional position he holds in the musical department of the services. His wife never would accompany him to the Sunday evening meetings, always giving some excuse which on careful analysis seemed insufficient to the suspicious husband.

One Sunday night, two or three weeks ago, the husband slipped out of church as soon as the opening hymns had been sung and went quietly homeward. The gleam of a light in his wife's apartment upstairs came to him from the curtained windows. The doors downstairs were all locked, and the windows were fastened, so he rang the bell. His wife, bewitchingly attired in a new gown of rich material, which she stammered was a gift from "a friend," and which he had never before seen, answered the ring. She was greatly surprised to see him.

"I thought 'twas some neighbor's child"—she said—"come on a brief errand."

The husband told her he had returned for something which he had forgotten, and which was upstairs. She followed him tremblingly, and paled perceptibly when he went direct to the clothes closet of her bedroom and tried to open the door.

"It's locked,"—she said—"and I've lost the key."

To burst open the door was but the work of a moment, and the husband dragged forth from his place of concealment a well-known Plainfielder. The scene that followed can be as well imagined as described.

The upshot of the affair is that the husband refuses to permit the wife longer to remain beneath his roof, and she has taken refuge at her father's home. A petition for divorce, it is said, is being prepared, and further developments may soon be expected. Out of regard to the families involved THE PRESS for the present withholds the names of the guilty parties.

The neighbors of the injured husband say that they long knew of the Plainfield man's secret visits to his home. His wife first met her paramour at a place of public entertainment, three or four years ago, and the present denouement is said to have been developing ever since.

His Final Condemnation Yet Delayed.

The counsel for Carey says there will be no decision by the Supreme Court in the case of the foul-mouth policeman against the Mayor and Board of Police, until February.

Another Score of Converts.

The number of converts baptised at the First Baptist church Sunday was twenty-two. Among the number was a little daughter of the Rev. J. C. Fernald, who was baptised by her father. The others were immersed by the pastor, the Rev. D. J. Yerkes.

The New Year Will Bring a Fire-Alarm that Can be Heard.

The new fire-alarm gong is to be placed in position above the roof of the Plainfield electric light station this week. The work of constructing the new fire-alarm system is well under way. Wires are being strung, and the entire apparatus will be working by probably January 1.

Saved from a Frightful Death.

The lives of at least a score of people were saved Saturday night by the presence of mind of Rowland Smith, night baggage man at the North avenue station. Forty or more passengers were crossing the track to board a late train for New York just as a Washington express came rushing towards them. No whistle or other alarm was sounded, and the people were unaware of their peril, but Mr. Smith, at the baggage car of the train from Somerville, saw the express approaching, and at the risk of his own life ran along the track and with violent shouting and in some cases using physical force, drove the people beyond the danger-point just as the train whizzed by.

VanNest Alleged to be Wealthy.

The New York World, in one of its articles attacking the State Board of Pardons, speaks as follows:

"It is alleged that VanNest, one of the Plainfield fire-bugs whose depredations in that city kept the residents in a panic for months, obtained his release from State Prison chiefly on account of his money. His two confederates were less culpable than he, but one died in prison while the other languishes there. It was shown at the trial that VanNest paid the others money to set fire to the building for the destruction of which he was convicted. He was, according to the evidence, the leader of the incendiary gang, yet he is now returning thanks to an indulgent Board of Pardons."

Governor Noble and His Wife and Daughter, All Dead Within a Few Weeks.

Less than two months ago, there was published exclusively in THE PRESS an account of the death of ex-Governor of Wisconsin, Butler G. Noble. He died at his home in Williamsburgh, from the effects of a fall down the basement steps. He left behind at that home a wife, a daughter and the latter's husband, Frank M. Underhill, son of Samuel B. Underhill, of East Fifth street, this city.

Sunday morning his wife and daughter both died suddenly of pneumonia. Mrs. Noble was 65 years of age, and Mrs. Underhill was 30. The latter had written but a few days ago to her husband's relatives in this city, inviting them all to spend Christmas with her. The funeral services of both were held at Christ church, Bedford near Division avenue, Brooklyn, Tuesday afternoon at one o'clock.

A Bright Little Woman Smashes Hearts and Ten-Pins.

A merry party of ladies and gentlemen held possession of the bowling alleys of the Fanwood Club Saturday evening. Some of the scores on the board were as follows:

Mrs. Force	[illegible]	Mrs. Miller	[illegible]
Billy [illegible]	111	Miss Hamlin	[illegible]
Geo. B. Brown	79	Miss Clark	[illegible]
Beth	[illegible]	Olga	[illegible]

Both of the ladies having the highest scores were warmly complimented on their skill and proficiency. Olga's exquisite methods were especially admired. This famous Russian actress, whose histrionic genius is soon to win the plaudits of the American people at a prominent theatre of the metropolis, is spoken of as a most charming little woman, one of the most popular that Fanwood society has ever known. She is thorough master of of billiards as well as of bowling, and is smashing the hearts of the gallant swains of Quality Hill as skillfully and sweetly as she smashes the frames of ten-pins to pieces.

"News."

The word "news" is derived from the initial letters of the four points of the compass—North, East, West and South. To all points of the compass let the good news go that for deranged liver, nervous headache, impure blood, [illegible] and many other disturbances of the system that make men miserable, there is a remedy. Thousands testify that Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets cure these troubles. Small but potent; one a dose.

SOCIETY'S HISTRIONIC ASPIRANTS.

Those of Plainfield's 400 Who Will Grace the Amateur Stage this Week, in a Good Cause.

As promised a day or two ago, THE PRESS presents below the programme of next Thursday evening's amateur theatrical entertainment at The Casino, and the names of those who will interpret the several characters. There will be a romance, a comedietta and a comic drama in one act, as follows:

Ruth's Romance,
A Summer Evening's Sketch,
by
Fred. W. Broughton.

Ruth Carey	Miss Caroline E. Potts
Jack Dudley	Mr. E. C. Perkins
Capt. Wilson	Mr. W. T. Pelletier

Petticoat Perfidy,
a Comedietta,
by
Sir Charles L. Young, Bart.

Mrs. Mountrevor	Miss Maude Adams Bowers
Mrs. Norwood Jones	Miss Mamie VanBoskerck
Juliette	Mrs. Charles E. Brooks

Little Toddlekins,
A Comic Drama in One Act,
by
Charles Mathews.

Mr. Jones Robinson Brownsmith	Mr. W. T. Pelletier
Mr. Barnaby Babbicombe of Babbicombe [illegible]	Mr. W. E. Cock
Capt. Littlepop	Mr. C. E. Brooks
Amanthis	Mrs. C. E. Brooks
Annie Babbicombe	Mrs. W. T. Pelletier
Susan	Miss Bessie Morgan

The profits of the affair are to be for the benefit of Grace church building fund, and it is gratifying to be able to state that tickets are rapidly selling. They may be obtained at Reynolds' pharmacy.

Some delay was occasioned the large attendance in leaving The Casino, after the Melopoia concert, but it was because of the unfinished condition of the building. There are six exits, however, and no building is better provided in this respect.

A PLAINFIELD DOG THAT CANNOT BARK

Its Master Dosed It for Consumption, and Its Voice Vanished with Its Cough.

Robert C. Dingee, of East Fifth street, owns a dog which is so strangely afflicted that a correspondent of The Tribune has succeeded in getting the animal's story into print. The dog has lost entirely the use of its voice, and is so dumb that for barking and other obstreperous purposes he might just as well be an oyster. A big savage-looking Newfoundland, the Tribune man describes the brute. It is chained to a kennel at the side of the house. Tramps think twice before attempting to enter by the gate, and on second thought generally decide to call elsewhere for cold victuals. Although it cannot bark or growl Mr. Dingee's pet is a first-class watcher, and by showing two rows of gleaming teeth, and by excited rushing to the length of its chain limits, generally frighten intruders away.

The handsome brute has not always been dumb. Until a few years ago it howled its midnight answer to far-away dogs in stentorian tones of no mean calibre. But one unusually hard Winter it caught a severe cold and nearly died. Dog doctors are an unknown luxury in Plainfield, and Mr. Dingee was at a loss to know how to treat his consumptive pet. He is a man of action; and one, too, of genius, in certain lines. He argued that what was good for a human cough must also necessarily be good for a canine cough. Accordingly he procured from a druggist the best bottle of rock and rye in the market and prescribed liberal doses of this, of quinine, and of other drugs, to the dog. The animal at once felt the soothing effects of the medicine, which by the way, it was not loath to take, and rapidly recovered. As the cough left the animal so did its voice. This new complication was more than Mr. Dingee could master, and during the intervening years perhaps the only dumb dog in New Jersey has lived a not unhappy, though perhaps somewhat uncomfortable, life.

Mr. Dingee still lives in Plainfield and thinks a deal of his dog. When he comes home every night his pet welcomes him with a rattle of its chain, and on occasions of unusual joyfulness it indulges in a wheezing sound, which is no more like a dog's bark than is the noise made by escaping steam.

A Syndicate Buys Property in the Heart of the City.

All that fine stretch of residence sites fronting on Sixth street, opposite Grace church, from Sycamore street to the W. C. T. U., lot at the corner of Park avenue, has been sold through the real estate agency of E. C. Mulford, to a syndicate of capitalists who will erect thereon a number of desirable homes. The party they bought of is Mrs. Lalor.

Thanks to All.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union wish to express through your columns their thanks to all who aided toward the success of the "Bazar of Holidays," held Dec. 9, 10, and 11; to the ladies who assisted in the booths, to those who donated fancy articles or provisions, to the carpenters for their moderate charges and to the public for its patronage.

The Official Cause of the Fire.

Though the flue of the chimney in the kitchen of Wilson Fiske's house, on Woodland avenue, that was damaged by fire Saturday evening, was so defective that one could put a hand through some of holes, the cause of the fire was because of the bricks on the hearth becoming overheated from the workmen's fire, and communicating with the wood-work, and not because of any passage of sparks through the defective spots. This is the official declaration of the fire department, as a result of careful investigation.

The invincible carrier of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, Chas. S. Cook, will greet his patrons with his annual address January 1, 1891, and hopes as prosperity and fortune has smiled upon his readers, he will be made doubly happy by their worthy generosity.

Invested a Dollar and Realized a Million.

Brown and his friend Perkins were talking about investments.

"Once I invested $1,000 in real estate," said Perkins, "and doubled it in less than six months. That was the best investment I ever made. Pretty good, wasn't it?"

"I've done better than that," said Brown. "Two years ago I was told by all my friends that I was going into consumption, and I thought they were right about it. I had a dry, hacking cough, no appetite, my sleep came by fits and starts, and seemed to do me no good, and often there was a dull, heavy pain in my chest. I kept growing weaker and weaker, and at last night-sweats set in. I thought it was all up with me then. I had consulted two doctors and taken quarts of their medicine, and received no benefit from it. One day I happened to read something about Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and I made up my mind to give it a trial, but I didn't expect it would help me. I invested a dollar in a bottle of it, and it helped me from the first dose. It helped and it cured me, and when I compare my present good health with the miserable health of two years ago, I think I am safe in saying that my investment was a much better one than yours. You can't reckon health by any measure of dollars and cents; if you could I should say that I had realized at least a million from my $1.00 investment." The "Golden Medical Discovery" is guaranteed to benefit or cure in all diseases for which it is recommended or money paid for it will be refunded.

DEVIL-TAKE-THE-HINDMOST INSURANCE.

Something About the "Progressive" Associations That are Tempting Plainfielders Also.

The attention of Superintendent of Insurance Maxwell of New York, was first directed by persons in Syracuse to the business being fraudulently done in that State by a host of associations organized outside his department, but properly under his supervision. The ruling of Attorney-General Tabor that these organizations are amenable to the insurance laws and must shut up shop is the result of this notice on the part of Superintendent Maxwell. Extraordinary interest has been taken in these concerns by people throughout the State, but in central New York in particular there has been a veritable craze to participate in the shadowy benefits of the "endowment" or "progressive" systems of insurance.

The associations have organized by filing certificates as mutual benefit organizations with the Secretary of the State, thus eluding the restrictions of the Insurance Department. It is estimated that within the last six months 200 of these concerns have been organized. Several of them have opened offices in Syracuse, Auburn, Rochester, Binghampton, and other places, where they do business, but for the most part the work is done by lawyers and real estate agents as side issues. The general illusion which they present to their patrons is that they operate on the basis of the insurance tables used by the old line companies—the idea that a considerable percentage of persons taking out policies allow their policies to lapse. On the theory of the inconstancy of man the progressive and endowment associations promise the holders of their certificates returns of from $300 to $1,000 on monthly investments of perhaps $150 to $500. These are about the proportions that are promised, the certificates to be liquidated in the order of their issue as fast as the dues paid in place funds at the disposal of the officers. Naturally the incentive is to keep organizing new associations in order that the originators may issue to themselves the first certificates. At the same time every holder of a certificate becomes an active agent of the concern. He joins with the object in view of hurrying the payment of his own certificate.

As transparent as this fraud is, it has prospered everywhere, hundreds of business and professional men of good standing being induced to accept office in the concerns to give them character. In establishments where there are employed large numbers of hands, shrewd men have launched such enterprises with profit to themselves by making the fees and the certificates small. Of course, in the end, now in sight in New York through the interference of the State officers at Albany, the number of persons who will be out of pocket is only to be guessed at. One of these concerns was recently projected by the policemen of Syracuse, but, before it was incorporated, it was interfered with by higher officials to whose notice the matter was called.

The progressive and endowment societies have been happily dubbed "devil-take-the-hindmost" associations. Both the old line and co-operative insurance organizations have been arrayed against the new device, and had not the Attorney-General ruled against it, legislation would have been asked at Albany this Winter to exclude it from recognition by the Insurance Department. There is no telling what hardship the collapse of hundreds of these fraudulent concerns will work, as thousands of people in every city of considerable size in central New York are interested in them.

Ripley Hill and Ripley Till.

Plainfield real estate agents and owners will do well to follow the example of Chauncey B. Ripley, whose advertisement of "Ripley Hill," at Westfield, is rolling the dollars into the Ripley till at a rapid rate.—Central N. J. Times.

Quite right, esteemed contemporary, but real estate agents and owners in Westfield say that the merits of the property itself, together with the low prices, have largely to do with the rapid sale of lots on Ripley Hill.—Union County Standard.

The Gentlemen Were all Accompanied by Their Wives.

Through the zeal of the Rev. Dr. Reilly, pastor of All Saints' church, Fanwood, the attendance at the Sunday evening services has greatly increased. Dr. Reilly has adopted a novel feature. At each Sunday evening service he has arranged to have some layman address his congregation from the foot of the chancel steps. Last evening Mr. Sille, of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, addressed the congregation, and, although a young man of but 25 years, he held the attention of the church members and their friends for a half hour, and all expressed themselves as desiring his re-appearance at All Saints.

One remarkable feature, in the face of certain remarks made about Fanwood people, is the fact that the gentlemen last evening were all accompanied by their wives. Among the prominent residents present were Col. C. K. Moore, Abner P. Downer, R. P. Moore, and Assemblyman-elect George Kyte.

A Chance for Sewell Yet.

(From the Newark Journal.)

If by any possibility the election of the Democratic Senator in Somerset county could be invalidated and a Republican take his seat, the outlook for a Republican United States Senator in 1893 would be improved, granting that in the meantime no changes shall be made in the territorial representation in the Senate. The Democratic majority this Winter would be reduced to five, and the calculations for a Democratic Senate in 1892 and 1893 would have to be modified.

Notice of a contest for the seat of Senator-elect Keys of Somerset, on the ground of his ineligibility, has been served upon him by his defeated Republican opponent, Chas. A. Reed, of North Plainfield. Mr. Keys has said that he hasn't voted outside of the State within the limit of four years fixed by the constitution, and his statement carries due weight. The Republican State Committee apparently think that it will do no harm to make a contest, and hope to develop something by an investigation. It is a desperate chance, but chances are everything in the game of politics.

A Short Legislative Session.

The feeling among Democrats is that the Legislative session this Winter should be as brief as possible. With a two-thirds vote in both houses the majority will have no opposition of any importance to its measures, and they can be put through in short order after a reasonable time for debate.

The most essential work of the session is already outlined, and will be in good shape when the Legislature convenes. The Governor will indicate in his message what measures will take precedence in legislation. If they are introduced and taken up at once, the minor business introduced can afterwards be sifted to get the wheat from the chaff, and nothing will stand in the way of an early adjournment.

Long legislative sessions are not popular, and they are too apt to be attended by scandals. The people would like to see a short, energetic business session, with the calendar cleared of every important bill before the hour of adjournment. It is in the power of the Democratic majority to give just such a session and thereby make an excellent impression upon the people of the State.

THE STORY OF CHRISTMAS TOLD IN SONG

Gutterson's Sublime [illegible] to be Produced by Local Talent—the Angel Imported.

A notable musical event is to take place at Dunellen Thursday evening, when A. C. Gutterson's grand cantata "Christmas" is to be sung by six well-known soloists and an excellent chorus. The concert will be conducted under the auspices of the Dunellen Presbyterian church, and that the affair will be thoroughly enjoyable the final rehearsal held last night, ably testifies. The most prominent Biblical characters introduced into the story of the songs are Joseph, Mary, the Three Wise Men, and the Angel. The music is full of melody, and every part is well rendered. All except one of those who participate in the singing are of home talent, as the following list will show:

Soloists—Miss Blanche Fellows, of Plainfield, and Miss Annie Hamilton, of Brooklyn, sopranos; Mrs E. H. Bird, of Plainfield, contralto; George O. Stevens, of Evona, and Morris C. VanArsdale, of Plainfield, tenors; Arthur F. Freeman, of Plainfield, bass.

Chorus—Miss Louise V. Apgar, Miss Maude L. Benton, Mrs. Albert S. Roe, Mrs. W. C. Stinson, and Mrs Edward Taylor, all of Dunellen, sopranos; Miss Earnie Giles, Miss Nannie Humpston and Miss Jacques Smith, of Dunellen, Mrs. Robert Gorton, of Plainfield, and Miss Mary Titsworth, of New Market, contraltos; W. F. Gaston, of Plainfield, M. L. Rarick, of Dunellen, and Louis T. Titsworth, of New Market, tenors; Alberne E. Burdick, Charles F. Dayton, and Harry C. Gaskill of New Market, Robert Gorton, of Plainfield, and W. C. Stinson, and Edmund Teel, of Dunellen, basses.

Leader—Albert S. Roe; Organist—Charles E. Apgar; Pianist—Miss Martha Serans; all of Dunellen.

The programme of the cantata is as follows:

Make a Joyful Noise……Recitative and Chorus
For Unto Us a Child is Born, (Air)……George O. Stevens
Cry Out and Shout……Chorus and Solo
The World Seems Full, (Trio)……Three Wise Men
First Wise Men—Arthur F. Freeman.
Second Wise Man—Morris C. VanArsdale.
Third Wise Man—George O. Stevens.
The Stars Are Shining……Quartette.
Miss Blanche Fellows,
Mrs. E. H. Bird,
Morris C. VanArsdale,
Arthur F. Freeman.
Judah is in Bondage……Recitative and Chorus
Arthur F. Freeman, Morris C. VanArsdale
Behold, I Bring You Good Tidings, (Air)……(Angel)—Miss Annie Hamilton
Shepherds, Haste Your Lord to Greet……Chorus
We Come! We Come!……Chorus of Shepherds
Where Rests the Babe?……Contralto Solo and Chorus
Enter Ye Here, (Solo)……(Joseph)—Arthur F. Freeman
Oh, Virgin Mother……Quartette and Chorus
To Thee, We Bow……Duet and Chorus
The Star Hath Rested, (Trio)……Three Wise Men
Let Earth Break Forth……Chorus
Father of All, (Song)……(Mary)—Miss Blanche Fellows
Glory be to God……Chorus

THE STATE COMMITTEE'S BUSY YEAR.

Plainfield's Building a Pattern for All New Jersey—Railroad Work to be Extended to the Central.

At the recent meeting of the State Executive Committee of the Young Men's Christian Associations of New Jersey, at Elizabeth, members were present from Bridgeton, Trenton, Princeton College New Brunswick, Plainfield, Newark, Jersey City, Orange, Madison, and Morristown.

This committee is composed of representative Christian men from all parts of the State. They are elected by the State convention, and have direction during the year of all the forms of work conducted except that of the local associations. They employ both a State Secretary, D. L. More, of Newark, who devotes all his time to the work, and an office secretary who is required to give the committee half his time. The present chairman is the Hon. Elkanah Drake, of Newark.

In his report for the last three months Secretary More stated that both the State Committee and the Associations had been very active. In the matter of Association buildings alone great progress had been made. The Trenton Association had just paid $30,800 for a fine lot, and was perfecting plans for a building to cost not less than $75,000. The Jersey City Association was finishing a $5,000 addition to its $20,000 building, to be used as a gymnasium and bowling alley. The Rahway Association would probably be able to enter its new $9,000 building, which has a frontage of fifty feet and a depth of one hundred, by the first of the new year. The Plainfield Association had $50,000 subscribed or guaranteed for a handsome building; its lot was already purchased, its plans were perfected, and the work would be begun in the Spring. The Bridgeton Association had just taken possession of excellent new rooms.

Railroad work was reported as established in a very promising condition at Weehawken, New Durham and Hoboken. Four hundred railroad men already belong to this branch, and an average daily attendance of one hundred and sixty is recorded at the rooms. The men are greatly pleased with the privileges afforded them in their commodious and home-like apartments, where they "visit" one another, play games, read, write, eat, bathe, sleep, study, worship, and attend lectures, concerts and receptions. Efforts are being made by the Railroad Company to have a similar work started at the terminal of the Jersey Central, Pennsylvania and other railways, at Jersey City, Camden, Trenton and other places.

The report of the State Treasurer, Fred M. Geer, of Orange, showed that the finances of the State Committee were in a healthy condition. The work this year will have entailed an expenditure of $9,200, which has been fully pledged by the Associations and individuals. The sum needed for next year will be about $4,000.

The keynote of several interesting addresses made during the session was that one great essential to the success and continued prosperity of a place was a working Association and fine building, such as Trenton and Plainfield are securing, and such as Newark, Orange, Morristown and Jersey City now possess. These buildings, with gymnasium, bowling alleys, reading-room, lecture hall, class-room, and what not would meet an essential want which agitated many a community.

DEVOTEES OF A USEFUL ART.

Short-Hand Writers Get Together for Professional Advancement.

The Stenographic Association, which has been mentioned in these columns at various times heretofore, has completed its work of organization, and is now under the leadership of the following officers:

President—J. A. Robinson.
Vice Presidents—Geo. S. Clay.
Secretary—Miss Laura L. Runyon.
Treasurer—Harry Judson.
Librarian—Irving Brady.

These, together with Miss Lizzie Moss, Miss Anna Marsh and Miss Julia Taylor, compose the Committee of Management.

The chief object of this union of short-hand writers is personal improvement in the skillful practice of their profession. They meet ever Tuesday evening at the rooms of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Last night many nimble fingers were hard at work at the place of meeting, writing at various rates of speed. Some were taking down the measured words of a slow reader, while the fingers of others glided swiftly over the paper as they fixed in mystic characters the words falling from the lips of a more rapid enunciator.

The stenographers composing the society have already achieved considerable success in their beautiful and eminently useful art, and their organization will help them to other laurels.

NOT "LIQUOR IN A CLUB CAR."

It Was David Prescott Hall's Tin Cup Rolling Upon the Floor That Produced the Laugh.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I have just read a copy of your issue of the 11th inst. Will you permit me the use of your columns to reply to an item contained in that issue under the heading "Liquor in a Club Car"?

On Monday, the 8th inst., I left New York on the seven minute boat for the 5:15 train. Until the arrival of the last boat there were only three persons in the rear portion of the Club Car Fanwood besides myself. In extracting a paper from my hand-satchel, a tin cup which I had bought for use in the kitchen rolled out upon the floor and produced a laugh.

It is a demonstration that the item referred to was written or inspired by one of these three persons. Two of them are friends of mine, and I have every reason to believe that neither of them had any share in its preparation. The third member of the group was one who, on the way out to Fanwood, took occasion more than once to express his determination to get even with me for my share in the defence of a recent suit, and I have no manner of doubt but that the item in question is the commencement of his efforts in that direction. I have also reason to believe that it will be followed by others.

DAVID P. HALL.

A careful search through the columns of THE PRESS of the 11th inst., fails to discover any reference to the correspondent above, either by name or inference, unless it is wherein the following intimates that he is not admitted to practice at the New Jersey bar. The article Mr. Hall objects to is this:

> LIQUOR IN A CLUB CAR.
> It has always been supposed that the Fanwood Club Car was governed by similar rules pertaining to the Howard Club Car of Plainfield, in the case of the Howard Car no intoxicating liquors are permitted, but last Monday evening, while hurriedly opening his satchel on the Fanwood Car, a prominent lawyer of Scotch Plains—who, however, does not practise in New Jersey—let fall on the floor a very suspicious utensil which in the eyes of the initiated resembled a most important adjunct to a whisky bottle. When asked to explain he remarked "I am a gentleman and above reproach."

Certain too personal references in Mr. Hall's communication, have been eliminated. No attack of the sort has ever been made upon him or anyone else in these columns, and neither he nor anyone else can attack others herein.

The Bright Side.

Look on the bright side. It is the right side. The times may be hard, but it will make them no easier to wear a gloomy and sad countenance. It is the sunshine and not the cloud that makes the flower. The sky is blue ten times when it is black once. You have troubles; so have others. None are free from them. Trouble gives sinew and tone to life—fortitude and courage to man. That would be a dull sea, and the sailor would never get skill, where there was nothing to disturb the surface of the ocean. What though things look a little dark: the lane will turn, and night will end in a broad day. There is more virtue in one sunbeam than in a whole hemisphere of clouds and gloom. See how the mist flees before the brightness of one little darting ray. So will trouble disappear before the ever-cheerful heart.—Demorest's Magazine.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—Advertising is the spice of trade.

—Church choirs are busy on Christmas carols.

—The ever-welcome mistletoe is almost here again.

—Y. M. C. A. Marsh is building a new house at Mount Ararat.

—The most successful business men are the greatest advertisers.

—Just 55 years ago to-day occurred the great fire in New York city.

—The season for land-bird gunning for Jersey game closed Monday.

—"Reduced prices" is the [illegible] phrase in the shop windows.

—Plainfield merchants are displaying splendid stock of holiday goods.

—Druggists report a demand for [illegible] that cure chapped lips.

—Nobody seems to have any doubts at all of the ice crop this season.

—This is the time of year when the seed men are hustling around filling up orders for farmers and planters.

—Twenty-six men were laid off by the Pond Machine Tool Company Tuesday on account of slackness of work.

—"People come here to get the odor of a burning hoof," says a blacksmith.—"The fragrance gives one an appetite."

—Frank Lynch, an employe of the Pond Machine Tool Company, had his hand caught in the machinery, Monday, and severely bruised.

—The first of this season's Assemblies was held at The Casino, Monday night. The list of patronesses includes this city's women of wealth and culture.

—The silliest of all false rumors started since election, is to the effect that Street Commissioner Meeker has discharged all of his men who voted for Joseph Cutler.

—Bill Friese the younger slept in the police station Thursday because Bill Friese the elder locked him out of the house for disobediently going to the theatre.

—The people are duly grateful for the elevation of the sidewalks under the Park avenue railway bridge. The flagging is now above the high-water mark of heavy rain storms.

—Jupiter and Mars now appear in the South-west at six or seven o'clock in the evening. They are the largest stars to be seen in that direction. The larger and the Westerly one is Jupiter.

—During the coming session of the Legislature of New Jersey a bill will be introduced, by those who want Jersey deer protected, preventing deer shooting in the State for five years.

—It is estimated that New Jersey pays $200,000 a year for salaries to State officers, exclusive of the salaries paid to the superintendents and employes of several State institutions, such as the lunatic asylums and reform schools.

—The first masquerade ball of the Oriental Social Club, to be held at Gerang Hall, Somerset street, Christmas Eve, is the talk of the town. Tickets are eagerly sought for. O'Reilly will furnish the music. The grand march will commence at nine o'clock.

—Charles Bock commenced this morning the bringing forward of the front of his building on a level with the new club house of the Crescent League. Whitlock & Rusick are the contractors. Bock's front will also be widened so as to join the club house.

—That intelligent compositor who was responsible for the typographical error in the programme of a local entertainment which issued the startling command "Kiss Annabel Blank!" instead of merely recording the name of the young lady, has been told by admirers of Miss Annabel—whose real name is of course something else—that they don't blame him for losing his head, but that he must n't do it again.

—Charles F. Hoagland, representing the Gordon Steam Pump Co., manufacturers of improved pumping machinery, had a meeting with Col. Chas. K. Moore, of the Water Works Company, Saturday, in relation to building the mammoth pumps necessary to supply Plainfield with water. Mr. Moore expressed himself to a Press reporter as very much in favor of the machinery built by the Gordon company.

Mr. Gardiner's Third Stroke Fatal.

David Gardiner, who was stricken with paralysis, while seated at the breakfast table, Sunday morning, and rendered so completely helpless that he could not speak a word or move a muscle, as reported exclusively in Monday's Press, died at his home on Somerset place on Tuesday, without recovering a particle from the shock. He was in his seventy-ninth year, and was one of Plainfield's oldest settlers. This was the third paralytic stroke he had suffered during his life. He leaves an unmarried daughter, with whom he lived at the time of his death, another daughter who is the wife of John Darling, and a son, ex-Councilman Wm. E. Gardiner.

Odd Ladies Elect Officers.

At a regular meeting of Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, United Order of Independent Odd Ladies, held Thursday evening, the following officers were elected for ensuing term:

Past Lady—Mrs. Ella Demarest.
Noble Past Lady—Mrs. Julia C. Drake.
Vice Noble Past Lady—Mrs. Minnie Kursell.
Recording Secretary—Mrs. Emma Cox.
Lady Reporter—Mrs. Lockery.
Financial Secretary—Jennie D. Smith.
Chaplain—Mrs. Amanda Corwin.
Conductor—Miss Abby Stryck.
Guardian—Miss Ella Boswell.
Right Hand Assistant—Mrs. Nettie Buckly.
Left Hand Assistant—Mrs. Kerman.
Senior Warden—Mrs. Procter.
Junior Warden—Mrs. Reed.
Senior Representative—Mary Morse.
Junior Representative—Mrs. Hannah Westphal.

Can't Westfield Have a Bank Without Charley Hyde?

The meeting of certain gentlemen interested in the new bank says the Westfield Standard, was held at the Reading Rooms. There were present Messrs. Henry F. Alpers, Postmaster Whittaker, Charles L. Hyde, W. I. Kesler, W. G. Peckham, Andrew Smith, C. A. Smith, Freeholder Pierson, A. F. Grant, Augustus Alpers, W. J. Alpers, W. C. Darton, B. A. Fairbairn, John Ingram, Mr. Harden and others. Mr. Hyde read a large number of figures to prove his assertion that a National Bank might not be able to pay. Others mention the fact that with $200,000 going into new buildings, large sums disbursed in this township for the county roads and considering that large estates and large properties are represented by citizens of Westfield, it would be possible to maintain a National or State Bank that the people have full confidence in.

The sentiment of the trades-people is unequivocally in favor of a National Bank. The difficulties seem to be to raise enough money to found a National Bank without the assistance of Mr. Hyde, or some other wealthy non-resident. It was also stated that if Mr. Hyde should come here with the bank, his friends would furnish money enough to promote various enterprises of much importance to the town. An offer was received from Mr. A. D. Shepard and others to double their former subscriptions. The alternative was presented of going on in some safe fashion with Mr. Hyde, or, perhaps, of leaving the bank altogether for some years to come.

PERSONALIA.

Wm. Colther, uncle of Wm. Colther of Duer street, died at his home in Bunker Hill, Ill., Dec. 4.

Miss Fanny Cuthbertson, of Norristown, Pa., is the guest of Mrs. Charles W. Runyon of Park avenue.

Mrs. Dexter O. Tiffany of Crescent avenue is one of the re-elected Managers of the State Charities' Aid Association.

Miss Lulu Tucker of Newton, Sussex county, has returned home from a visit to her uncle, George R. B. [illegible].

Miss Lillian Dunham, daughter of Wm. V. Dunham, died at New Market Wednesday, last week, at the age of twenty-two.

C. C. Brewer has recently purchased the property on Park avenue beyond the driving park, formerly owned by Mr. Little.

Mrs. C. K. Moore of Fanwood gave a delightful crystal dinner in honor of the Rev. and Mrs. Beatty of the All Saints' church, last evening.

The Rev. Dr. Joseph L. Hurlbut was elected Vice President of the Alumni Association of Wesleyan University at the annual meeting yesterday.

Mrs. Caroline E. Sullivant and family, of Columbus, Ohio, have leased the residence at Crescent avenue and Second place. Mrs. Sullivant's father was the founder of Columbus.

A sociable, under the auspices of the Young People's League of the First Baptist church, will be held at the home of the pastor, the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, this Thursday evening.

Forty were admitted to membership by confession of faith, in Hope chapel, Sunday morning. It was the Rev. Mr. Newell's first communion Sunday, and a very auspicious occasion.

The Gilbert Dramatic Society, composed of the pick of Brooklyn's amateurs, has been secured by Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, to play at Music Hall, Tuesday evening, January 20.

The Scotch Plains Baptist church seems to be investing in real estate its newly acquired legacy from the Lee brothers. The Trustees have just paid to W. H. Dean and wife $1,300 for property in Warren.

The amount realized from the fair held recently, as announced by the Rev. Father Smyth Sunday morning, was $1,200, which was a very creditable sum, he said, considering the inclemency of the weather at the time.

Considerable landscape gardening has been done at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Martin, at Washington and Mercer avenues, and the grounds are greatly improved in appearance. Trees and shrubbery have been trimmed, removed, and transplanted, and at first glance one hardly recognizes the place.

Charles E. Gates, principal of School 35, in Thirteenth street, New York city, and for thirty-six years a teacher, died at his house in Newark Thursday afternoon, leaving a wife and five grown-up children. He was sixty years old. A number of his old pupils, among whom is the writer, are residents of this city.

At a recent meeting of the Christian League for the Promotion of Social Purity, Mrs. Dr Russell read a paper by her father, the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city, who was unable to be present, on "Ancient Baal Worship and Modern Social Vice," a subject which has been given thorough study by that excellent clergyman.

R. F. Sheen, of Carlton avenue, has bought through the real estate agency of E. C. Mulford, one of the handsomest of the new houses on Sandford avenue. He paid $6,500 for the house, and is now having it fitted throughout with steam heating apparatus and other of the latest improved comforts. He will take possession in the Spring.

The death of Albert Volling, stepson of Joseph Bletz, occurred at Muhlenberg Hospital, Friday night, at ten o'clock. He was brought to the Hospital at eleven o'clock, Friday morning, in an unconscious state, from which he could not be roused. Severe kidney trouble was the cause. He had been seriously ill, however, only a few days.

Among those who are to take part in the amateur theatricals at The Casino, Thursday evening of this week, is Maude Agnes Bowers and a number of other prominent society people whose names will appear later. The plays are to be: Charles Matthews' "Little Toddlekins;" "Ruth's Romance," by Fred W. Broughton, and "Petticoat Perfidy," by Sir Charles L. Young.

The marriage of Miss Edna Ray Park, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson Park, of this city, to F. Maurice Dudley, of New York, took place on Monday afternoon of last week, at Grace church, Broadway and Tenth street, New York city. The Rev. R. Huntington officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Dudley will make an extended tour of the South, and on their return will be at home in New York city.

In commending the wisdom and sincerity of the Methodist people in putting up the Monroe Avenue chapel in just the location they have for mission work, the Rev. Mr. Mitchell's Visitor should not call it an "unchurched district." Mrs. Dr. J. P. Taylor, wife of the pastor of the church of the Heavenly Rest, at Evona, and others of his congregation, have been doing earnest mission work for months past in just that neighborhood, with great results.

Joseph H. Hough, who has for forty-eight years been Secretary of the New Jersey Grand Lodge of Masons, died of heart failure Monday at his home in Trenton. He was a native of Bucks county, Pa., and was seventy-five years old. The Masons had intended an impressive celebration two years hence in honor of his fiftieth anniversary as Grand Secretary. He was a thirty-third degree Mason, and at one time was Secretary of the New Jersey Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows.

Corporation Counsel Marsh was one of the guests at the third annual dinner of the Union College Alumni Association, at the Hotel Brunswick, New York, last Thursday. The wittiest speech of the evening was made by the Rev. Dr. A. V. V. Raymond, who kept the assemblage in a continual ripple of laughter. He wanted more loyalty shown for Union College. He wanted a fund of $1,000,000 raised to help the Alma Mater, and he wanted the New York graduates to contribute at least half of that sum.

The New Brunswick Home News has the following to say of a young newspaper man who has made his home in Plainfield and with whose work readers of The Press are familiar: "Walter Irving Clarke, who received his book-education in New Brunswick's institutions of learning, has an interesting story, 'A Newspaper Christmas', in the current 'Holiday Special' of The New York Journalist. A portrait of the author accompanies the story, to which is appended a fac-simile of the writer's autograph. Mr. Clarke is on the staff of regular contributors to The Journalist, and his special articles and other literary work find a ready market among publishers."

W. Manning, Superintendent of the Fanwood Stone Crushing Company, has among his collection of curiosities a rare time table of the Central Railroad of New Jersey for the Winter of 1858. Plainfield then had eight passenger trains a day—four to Easton, and four for New York—and one freight train daily each way. Cranford was then Craneville; Fanwood was Scotch Plains, and Dunellen was New Market. The trip between New York and Plainfield occupied from two hours to two hours and a half; from Easton to New York occupied from four to seven hours. The fare from Plainfield to New York was fifty cents one way; from Plainfield to Easton $1.25.

Halstead C. Compton has returned from the far lands of the Pennsylvania mountain region, and tells tall stories about big game.

Among the names in the necrology read by the secretary at Monday night's meeting of the New England Society at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, was that of Harvey Fisk father of Charles and Pliny Fisk of Plainfield. One of the prominent members present was Clarence W. Bowen, Secretary of New York's 400, and brother of Henry E. Bowen of Netherwood.

It is rumored that a number of prominent women who visited Linden Park as guests of the officers of the association, to witness the races, will be subpoenaed at the trials commencing in Elizabeth to-day, to testify as to their impressions of the sport. One of the handsomest and best known women of Plainfield's upper circles, who was a constant attendant at the races with her husband, may be included in those called upon to testify. She resides not far from Central avenue.

The marriage of Miss Laura Burnett and Charles E. Doane of this city, took place at the home of the bride, 486 Clauson avenue, Brooklyn, Tuesday at half-past two o'clock. Only the most intimate friends and relatives were present. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John K. Burnett, well known and highly esteemed residents of Brooklyn. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Doane of East Fourth street. He will bring his wife to this city, where he has built a handsome home.

Joseph H. Hough, late Secretary of the New Jersey Grand Lodge of Masons, whose death at Trenton, was recorded in yesterday's Press was the oldest Masonic officer in the world, having been Grand Secretary for forty-eight years. He was a member of Ashlar Lodge of Trenton, but was initiated and raised in Trenton Lodge in 1838. In that year he became Deputy Grand Secretary and in 1842 he was made Grand Secretary. He was the owner of a number of valuable jewels given him by Masonic friends and lodges and by the Grand Lodge.

ANOTHER NEW BUILDING LOAN.

Opportunity for Investment, and a Chance to Build Homes.

The People's Building Loan and Saving Association was organized Tuesday in the office of Wm. A. Coddington, 34 West Front street, with one hundred and twelve shares. J. C. Pierson was appointed Chairman of the meeting, and F. O. Smith was made Secretary. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—John F. Laire.
Vice-President—J. A. Smith.
Secretary and Treasurer—Wm. A. Coddington.
Directors—G. L. Jenkins, J. Fred MacDonald, J. C. Allen.

The new organization is a branch of the People's Building Loan and Saving Association of Geneva, N. Y., which is the first Association doing a general loan association business throughout this State that has been incorporated under New Jersey laws. Arrangements have been made so that borrowing members of the Association can be accommodated with loans as soon as the necessary papers can be completed. This fact gives the Association a prestige in the field, as most of the building and loan companies have to accumulate a fund before they can accommodate borrowing members. That Plainfield will be benefited is evidenced from the fact that already a number of its careful and trustworthy business men have already invested: some with a view to borrowing money for building purposes, and others for profitable and safe investment. All officers through whose hands any money will pass are heavily bonded, thereby making the concern as safe as a Government bond, and better because it will pay larger interest. Investors can withdraw the amount of their deposits with interest thereon at any time after the expiration of one year.

Amateurs' Lantern Slides.

The members of the Camera Club had a lantern slide exhibition in their rooms, Tuesday last week, that was a very entertaining affair. Among the members who contributed pictures to the display, was the Rev. Dr. Hurlbut, whose assortment was extensive and of the best.

Officers of Westfield's Lodge.

At the annual communication of Atlas Lodge, No. 125, F. and A. M., of Westfield, the following were elected officers for the ensuing year:

Worshipful Master—Wm. W. Gilby.
Senior Warden—John T. Dorvall.
Junior Warden—Chas. D. Reese.
Treasurer—Chas. F. French.
Secretary—John O. Bissell.
Proxy to Grand Lodge—Addison S. Clark.

Positively Her Last Appearance.

Jennie Houghton's engagement at the Eden Musee, New York, does not commence until Jan. 12. She so much appreciates the great reception given her at The Crescent, Thanksgiving Day, she has consented to appear once more in Plainfield. On Christmas afternoon and evening there will be general skating and a band concert, at The Crescent, and Miss Houghton will give exhibitions.

The Burglar Fled Before the Bullets.

A covetous individual slyly pried open a window at The Crescent at a midnight hour on Friday, with the evident intent of entering the building and appropriating some of the valuables left from the Bazar of Holidays. Night Watchmen S. K. Hope and Stephen McIntyre were awake to their duties, and had the fellow under cover of their revolvers the instant his head appeared. When they fired two shots into the air the burglarious individual fled in terror down East Fourth street as fast as his legs would travel. He was recognized.

A Prayer and Its Answer.

During his lecture at The Casino last Thursday, at a point when a pretty summer house scene with Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, host and hostess of the famous coaching tour, in the centre of the picture, appeared on the canvas, the Rev. Dr. Eaton paused and in a brief impressive prayer invoked the Divine Spirit to restore Mrs. Carnegie from dangerous illness to perfect health. Like a speedy answer to the prayer came the news Friday that Dr. Janeway, Mrs. Carnegie's physician, has pronounced his patient out of danger.

And the Rev. Mr. Richards Indorses Him.

Dr. Francis S. Patton, President of Princeton College, who preached at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church in this city Sunday, caused a sensation by a sermon delivered at Philadelphia, Thanksgiving Day, on the text, "Righteousness exalteth a nation." During his discourse he gave a glowing description of the splendid material resources and advantages possessed by our country. Reaching his climax, he paused an instant and then, lifting his hands said: "And yet, in spite of all this, we lift our hands and pray—McKinley, protect us!"

Masonic Election.

At a regular convocation of Jerusalem Chapter, No. 24, R. A. M., held last evening in their rooms, this city, the following officers were elected to serve the ensuing year:

High Priest—P.H.P. Benjamin Franklin Corlell; King—Henry Woodland; Scribe—C.H. Hoag; Treasurer—Alex Titsworth; Secretary—Henry S. Mason; Captain of the Host—Joseph G. Miller; Principal Sojourner—Daniel C. Adams; R. A. Captain—Charles P. Leggett; Trustees—John R. McGill, Charles Westphal, C. F. Leggett; Representatives to Masonic Association—P. H. P., Wm. H. [illegible]; P. H. P., John Chandler; P. H. P., Wm. E. Gavett.

WINDS UP IN THE COUNTY JAIL.

A Tool Thief Who Says He Lives in Plainfield Captured in Elizabeth.

Chief of Police Grant went to Elizabeth, Thursday, to try and place a self-confessed thief who was in the hands of the authorities of that city. The prisoner said he came from Plainfield, but he proved to be a stranger to Chief Grant. The latter thinks his name also is assumed.

Late Tuesday night Officer Eimiger arrested a man on North Broad street, Elizabeth, on suspicion of having stolen a lot of carpenters' tools which he was carrying in a feed bag.

The man at first denied the theft, but Wednesday admitted his guilt to Sergt. Hess, and said he took the tools from a large box on the roadside at Lyons Farms.

Wednesday evening Officer Eckert at the Union depot was approached by two men, who have been at work in this vicinity for the Lehigh Valley Railroad company building bridges and stations on the line of the Roselle and Newark extension. They inquired of the officer if there were any pawn shops in the city, and when further questioned stated that they were looking for some tools, which had been stolen from their chest at Lyons Farms.

From the description of the tools, the officer was satisfied that the men were the owners of the articles found in possession of the prisoner who said his name was Boggs. He arranged to meet the men the next morning and accompanied them to police headquarters where they identified the tools. One of the men was Wm P Bright, whose name was marked on several of the tools. The other carpenter was John White. They made complaint against Boggs, who was sent to jail. Bright and White said the tools were kept at night in a large work box, which had been forced open by Boggs. The complaints against Boggs are for grand larceny. It is believed that he has been stealing tools all along the line from Bound Brook to Elizabeth.

ALL FELL IN A HOLE.

Big Excitement Over a Little Fire.

The residence of Wilson Fiske, on Woodland avenue, near Broadway, was damaged by fire to the extent of probably $100, Saturday evening. The house was unoccupied and was undergoing reconstruction for Mr Fiske's occupancy. All day Saturday the workmen had a hot fire blazing on the brick hearth in the kitchen, to dry the new plastering. The flue must have been defective, and sparks must have crept through the brick-work to the wooden clapboards, for an hour after the workmen left, when it was rapidly growing dark, Mrs. Potts, a neighbor, saw flames issuing through the boards and enwrapping the wood-work of the rear porch. Quite a blaze was in progress when the alarm was given, but buckets of water judiciously applied put an end to the incipient conflagration. The services of the fire engines were not required, though half a mile of hose was stretched to be used if necessary. The hook and ladder men tore down the ceiling in the kitchen, and chopped away the wood in other suspected places, to be certain that the fire was all out; and everybody fell off the back steps of the house, in the darkness, into a deep hole in the ground, and, after groaning awhile from the resultant aches, succeeded in limping homeward. The fire occurred at what housewives consider an unfortunate hour, for the men who ran to see the blaze kept the table waiting, and many dinners were spoiled. The loss of the fire is covered by insurance.

More New Officers.

At a regular meeting of the America Lodge, No 161, of the Fraternal Circle, held on Monday, in the Sons of Temperance rooms, the following officers were elected to serve the ensuing term:

Worthy Past President—George H. Carpenter.
Worthy President—Isaac R. Giles.
Worthy Vice President—Arthur Scott.
Worthy Secretary—Daniel J. Randall.
Worthy Treasurer—William L. Clock.
Worthy Chaplain—Sarah A. Mattox.
Worthy Marshal—Mrs. J. C. Manchester.
Worthy Guard—Jonathan Wilson.
Worthy Sentinel—William S. Crook.
Worthy Medical Examiner—Andrew Manning.
Trustees—Charles Bahr, Fred Bird, William Fisher.

A Westfield Physician's Patient Commits Suicide.

Alfred Lister, a prominent citizen of Newark, sailed for the island of Hayti on the steamer Adirondack of the Atlas Line two weeks ago. He undertook the voyage in search of health, and was accompanied by his physician, Dr. Cooper, of Westfield. Thursday it was announced that Mr. Lister was dead, and it is probable that he committed suicide. Dr. Cooper has sent only meagre tidings of the affair, but it is understood that the patient jumped into the sea when the vessel was two days out from New York.

Fled in Terror.

A coachman riding a spirited horse rashly ventured underneath the Broadway bridge of the Jersey Central Railroad, while a train was thundering overhead, Wednesday last week; the horse, startled at the clatter, pranced around till it stumbled over the curb stone and fell, with its rider, to the pavement. Men who rushed forward to grasp the animal's bridle thought at first that the coachman was crushed to death, but he had only had the breath rolled out of him. When he recovered his breathing facilities he mounted his horse again and rode away, and the women who had fled for safety to the door yard of the Friends' meeting-house also breathed easier and came timidly forth from their place of refuge.

Wants a Fire-Alarm Like the City's.

(From the Fireman's Herald.)

The new stables for stabling the horses of Warren Engine Company, No. 1, of North Plainfield, are about completed, and probably next week the Company will have its horses in the house in case of fire. As soon as practicable, the company's driver, Peter Seeder, will purchase another horse to be used exclusively for driving the hose cart to and from fires, and a new set of snap harness is also forthcoming. Probably in the near future a steam fire-alarm gong will also be put in position, and then, the members of the North Plainfield Fire Department claim, they will be as well equipped to fight a fire as their brethren in any city.

Issued Life Insurance Policies for Gravestones.

Friends of Wm. J. Rouse, the local agent of the Prudential Insurance Company who was arrested last week on the charge of embezzlement, claim that he is the victim of dishonest assistants. It is said that two young men fleeced him out of considerable money by entering his employ and having him issue life insurance policies to people whose names they had copied from headstones in the local churchyards, collecting their commissions from him on the bogus policies, and causing trouble for him with the companies because of the lapses of payments that very naturally resulted, and some of which he paid for out of his own pocket. Rouse says that he can prove by documentary evidence that he is entirely innocent of the charges made against him, and that he has always been thoroughly honest in his dealings with the company. He does not expect even to be indicted for the alleged offense. The charge of inspector Wm. W. Dougal, the complainant in the case, is said to be the result of false testimony given by another agent who is now in trouble with the concern, and who is said to be partly responsible for Rouse's having been duped into losses by others.

SUES FOR HIS COMMISSION.

Mr. Runyon's Big Claim Against Wilkinson Gaddis & Co.

Orris E. Runyon, a prominent Newark real estate agent, son of the late J. C. Runyon and brother of Telephone Manager Charles W. Runyon, of this city, has begun suit against Wilkinson, Gaddis & Co., of Newark, for $200,000. The papers have been filed by Counsellor Edward S. Black.

The action is the outcome of negotiations for the sale of the business of the firm to a syndicate of English capitalists about a year ago. Mr. Runyon conducted the negotiations as published in The Press at the time, and an agreement was reached between the syndicate and the firm whereby the latter was to receive $1,800,000 for the transfer of its plant and business. After the death of Elias Wilkinson, the senior member of the firm, Elisha B. Gaddis, the President of the Company, repudiated the agreement and the sale was not consummated. As Runyon was conducting negotiations on commission he had his pains for his trouble and did not receive a cent. He brings the suit to recover the amount of his commission, which would have netted him about $90,000.

"A year ago, when I was negotiating with an English syndicate for the leather factories and business of Newark," said Mr. Runyon yesterday, "Mr. Wilkinson sent for me to come and see him, I did so, and was requested by him to find purchasers for the business of his firm. I communicated with the Englishmen, and they expressed willingness to buy up any business in which more than $1,000,000 was involved. I consulted with Mr. Wilkinson, and he estimated the business to be worth $1,600,000. The Englishmen were willing to purchase at that price. The contracts were drawn and signed and were sent to the firm. The latter raised the price to $1,700,000 and then again to $1,800,000, which the syndicate agreed to pay. The contract was drawn up anew and signed by the foreigners. It was then forwarded to me. I placed it before the firm, and it was signed by Elisha B. Gaddis as President, and Alonzo Somerville, as Secretary of the Company. A few days before the death of Mr. Wilkinson he urged me to close the contract. Shortly after he died Mr. Gaddis came to me and asked to be placed directly in communication with the syndicate. I did so, and he notified them that the firm would not keep its agreement. I have spent considerable time and money in my endeavor to consummate the sale for which I have received nothing."

Two members of the syndicate are at present in this country. They will remain here for some months. They will produce at the trial the original contracts as signed by Messrs. Gaddis and Somerville.

An Old Inhabitant Drops Dead.

Lewis Dayton, one of New Market's oldest residents, and a deacon of the Samptown Baptist church, dropped dead while hitching a horse in his stable, on Wednesday morning of last week.

Killed by the Cars While Picking Coal.

An unmarried man named Giers, who was picking coal near the New Market station of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, this morning, was struck by a train and instantly killed. He had lived at New Market many years.

What's Become of That Suit?

Under date of July 31, the following was printed in these columns:

EVERYBODY WILL SMILE AT THIS.

The publishers and editor of The Press were served with papers to-day in an alleged libel suit brought by ex-Captain Carey. Considering the source of the complaint, the public will be able to judge how much of it is "bluff" and how much because of wounded spirit.

Bowling for a Badge.

As Winter advances, Fanwood gaiety seems to be progressing. A Handicap Bowling Tournament is being arranged by Abner P. Downer in which the great and only R. P. Moore will give points to every other member of the Club. One member, however, declines to accept the handicap, and therefore stands on the same plane as "R. P." The prize to be bowled for is a gold badge with a diamond centre-piece, and to be surrounded with miniature likenesses of the gentlemen entering the tournament.

No Such Scheme.

The Plainfield gas and electric light companies have consolidated and begun business with a capital of $175,000. The Press of that city intimates that this is a scheme to advance the price of light there, and regards the move as a dangerous monopoly. There has been some talk of a consolidation here, which might be a good thing, as far as reducing operating expenses, but the tendency of all monopolies is to make the "dear public" pay the piper—New Brunswick Home News.

If The Press "intimated" (and we do not think we did) that the consolidation was a scheme to advance the price of light, we take it all back. The Press does not believe it is that kind of a scheme.

Liquor in a Club Car.

It has always been supposed that the Fanwood Club Car was governed by similar rules pertaining to the Howard Club Car of Plainfield. In the case of the Howard Car no intoxicating liquors are permitted, but Monday of last week while hurriedly opening his satchel on the Fanwood Car, a prominent lawyer of Scotch Plains—who, however, does not practice in New Jersey—let fall on the floor a very suspicious utensil which in the eyes of the initiated resembled a most important adjunct to a whisky bottle. When asked to explain he remarked "I am a gentleman and above reproach."

Mr. Meeker is Doing No Better Than His Predecessors in This Respect.

Street Commissioner Meeker is making the rich and poor clean snow and ice from their sidewalks. He has served over 300 notices of warning.

So says The World in its Plainfield correspondence. But, as a matter of fact, the sidewalks in front of some of Plainfield's handsomest residences have not yet been cleared of the ice which formed on the pavements a week ago. Some very wealthy taxpayers haven't yet made any attempt to save people from falling in front of their residences.

Miss Willard Denies a Silly Rumor.

A statement having been published that Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the World's Christian Temperance Union, would be a candidate for the office of Bishop in the Methodist Episcopal church, provided that the vote taken in the churches and the other necessary action proved favorable to the admission of women to membership in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, Miss Willard refutes the statement in a letter recently received, as follows:

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 27, 1890.

The newspaper talk about my candidacy for a bishopric in the Methodist church is the idlest, freakiest of all [illegible]. Never, by word or deed, have I intimated the faintest thought or purpose in that direction. I have said that women should have no artificial barriers placed before them in church or State, and I firmly believe that to be the only rational position on the woman question.

Somebody has jumped from this broad generalization to a specific conclusion without troubling himself to remember that I have never been either licensed or ordained, and am consequently outside the line of any ecclesiastical promotion; but I see no reason in the nature of the case why a woman might not be a bishop, and I believe that if the united brain and heart power of man and woman were brought into every circle of power in church and State it would be the very best thing that could happen to humanity.

A MEMORABLE COMMUNION SABBATH.

Ninety-four New Members Admitted to One Church, the Largest Single Accession in Plainfield's History.

The largest number of communicants ever taken into one church at one time in the history of Plainfield were received into the fellowship of the Trinity Reformed church Sunday, when ninety-four new members were admitted—eighty-six on confession of faith and eight by letter from other churches. Thirty-five of the converts were baptized by the pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, previous to the ceremony of welcoming the new comers into the Christian fold.

The spectacle was a most impressive one as the new members, nearly a hundred strong, stood before the pulpit and received the right hand of welcome. There were two rows of the people, extending from one side of the church to the other, besides a shorter row behind these. The gathering presented a grand sight to the eyes of the congregation, and the hearts of the pastor, his office-bearers, and his people generally, were truly thankful to God for this great ingathering of precious souls.

At the communion service of the morning the church was crowded, and many hundreds partook, with the new members, of the Holy Sacrament. In the evening Mr. Schenck preached a strong sermon especially to young converts, explaining their duties in a clear and powerful manner. His text was the sixth verse of the second chapter of Colossians—"As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him."

Serious Results of a Fall.

Samuel Hudson, of 294 Somerset street, an old resident of North Plainfield, fell on the ice near his house, Wednesday, last week, and received severe internal injuries, besides fracturing a rib. Dr. O. L. Jenkins is in attendance.

Getting Ready for Business.

A steward from the Union League Club of Philadelphia, two butlers and a maid, have already been engaged as a part of the retinue of the Union County Country Club. H. M. Stockton is chairman of the house committee that has such matters in charge.

Iron Hall Officers.

At a regular meeting of Branch No. 1199, Iron Hall, held Tuesday, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Chief Justice—C. W. Tallman; Vice Justice—John Becker; Prelate—C. Hammeal; Adjuster—Wm. Dagnall; Herald—Wm. Newman; Watchman—Jacob Kittering; Vedette—Jos. Kingston; Treasurer—T. J. Young; Accountant—F. P. Storr; Past Chief Justice—E. C. Morse; Trustees—V. W. Nash, Wm. H. Brokaw, John T. Cass.

Our Slow Old Boat.

The ferryboat Elizabeth on the Central Railroad line was launched in 1867. She is to-day one of the finest of New York's fleet. That shows that for at least twenty-three years the art of making ferryboats has been at a standstill. Other cities less than a third of the size of New York have capacious and comfortable ferryboats, with a great open main deck for the men who want to smoke and a fine glass-enclosed upper saloon for the ladies. How long a time must people along this line endure the present turtle contrivances with a pigsty on one side for men and a little, cramped box for the women?

Housewives Pay for Promises that are Never Kept.

Various reports are coming to The Press about a man who says his name is Wright, and who claims to live at New Brunswick. Plainfield housewives say that he is a swindler of the meanest sort. He shows them forged letters from prominent residents, tells them a pitiful tale about a sick wife and hungry children, and in the goodness of their hearts they give him money and food and clothing, and believe his liberal promises that he will repay them in fancy boxes and other things of his own manufacture. The fellow made a good living for the next six months, by his visits here a year ago, and now he is up to his old tricks. The women say that he never fulfills his promises.

Borough Property Changes Hands.

Recent real estate transfers recorded in Somerset county include the following:

Joseph Crow, Special Master, to John K. VanNess, property in North Plainfield, $1,300.

Thos. E. Warman and wife, to Elizabeth J. VanMinden, property in North Plainfield, $2,400.

Alfred I. Smalley and others, to Tillie S. Biker, property in North Plainfield, $500.

W. R. Codington and wife, to Daniel I. Smalley, land in North Plainfield, $467.

Emmor K. Vail and others, executors, to Helen M. Harned, property in North Plainfield and Warren, $450.

L. M. Codington, Sheriff, to Elizabeth C. Allen, property in North Plainfield, $2,725.

Caroline B. Spencer to Wm. F. Spencer, title in land in North Plainfield, $1.

Wm. F. Spencer to Loftus Hollingsworth, property in North Plainfield, $500.

Henrietta B. Berry to Margaret M. Walker, property in North Plainfield, $1,000.

John W. Moore to Ida H. E. Musgrave, property in North Plainfield, $3,500.

An Election at Wetumpka.

Wetumpka Commandery, No. 34, Knights of Honor, has elected the following new officers:

Commander—S. E. Flower; First Vice Commander—L. I. VanAlstyne; Second Vice Commander—E. S. Rogers; Secretary—John Sylvester; Treasurer—Frank P. Haffner; Past Commander—C. J. Feytel.

These were appointed by the Commander:

Senior Aid—J. C. Pierson, Jr.; Junior Aid—E. Odam; Guard—J. VanMiddlesworth; Sentry—J. Y. Barrett.

F. P. Haffner was selected for appointment as Judge Advocate on the staff of Brigadier-General Hayward, commanding the Department of N. J. The next regular meeting of the commandery will be held Wednesday evening, Jan. 14.

Will the Next Assessment be Based on Such Estimated Increase?

Union county in eighteen months has expended $300,000 in the building of new roads. It is needless to say that this money was all raised by the sale of bonds, and it is not perhaps impertinent to suggest that the readiness with which the county created this immense debt, is not entirely unconnected with the ease with which Rahway and Elizabeth succeeded in scaling down their municipal indebtedness by refusing to pay either principal or interest, and defy the Courts to compel them to do so. Perhaps this expenditure may be wise in a speculative sense, but we are inclined to dispute the assertion of the Newark Journal "that for every dollar spent on the roadways property has appreciated at least five dollars worth." If the next report of the Union county ratables, published in the Comptroller's report, shows an increase of $1,500,000 in the taxable values of Union county real estate, we shall be very glad to publish the fact. We do not believe it will, and we must conclude that the precedent set by Union is not a proper one for Mercer to follow until some better way of paying for the improvement shall be devised than the wholesale issue of bonds and the increase of the county debt.—Trenton True American.

DR. CARROLL'S RELIGIOUS CENSUS.

The First Bulletin of Church Statistics Soon to be Issued.

The important inquiries being made by the Census Bureau, under the direction of Dr. H. K. Carroll of North Plainfield, in regard to the statistics of religious bodies in the United States, is gradually approaching completion, and in a few days a preliminary bulletin will be issued from Dr. Carroll's office.

The statistics of this preliminary work, however, relate to only a few of the 140 religious bodies, besides many independent congregations. In this pioneer effort the inquiries have been restricted to a few questions, the answers to which will show—first, the locations by cities, towns, counties, and States and Territories; second, the number of congregations, (including churches, chapels, missions, and stations;) third, the number of ministers; fourth, the number of church edifices, also the number of halls, schoolhouses, and private houses used as places of worship; fifth, the value of church property, and sixth, the number of members or communicants.

The tables include statistics of the following denominations by counties, and summaries by States: United Presbyterian church of North America, Church of the New-Jerusalem, Catholic Apostolic church, Salvation Army, Advent Christian church, Evangelical Adventists, Life and Advent Union, (Adventists,) Seventh-Day Baptists, German Seventh-Day Baptists, General Six-Principle Baptists, Christian church South, Schwenkfeldians, Theosophical Society, Brethren in Christ. The final bulletin will contain statistics of all denominations.

According to the figures at hand, the United Presbyterian church has the largest membership of any in the above list. It is credited with 94,402 members, the Advent Christian church coming next with 25,816 members. The Christian church South with 13,004 comes next, and is followed by the Seventh-Day Baptists with 9,317 members, and the Salvation Army with 8,662. In regard to the Salvation Army, the statistics show that it has 329 organizations in this country, 40 church edifices, 287 halls, with a total seating capacity of 102,261, and that the church property is valued at $37,350.

Woman's Relief Corps Election.

At a regular adjourned meeting of Winfield Scott Relief Corps, No. 10, held in the Post rooms Friday night, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Mrs. E. McVoy.
Senior Vice President—Emma Cox.
Junior Vice President—Emma Stephens.
Secretary—Mary M. Morse.
Treasurer—Mrs. Julia C. Drake.
Chaplain—Susie Day.
Conductor—Mrs. M. Terry.
Guard—Mrs. Brosher.

Few Cosmetics, but Many Poisons.

The agent of the Board of Health has been searching upon and down the State for cosmetic and face washes, and finds that they are a scarce article in New Jersey. A month ago he received notice from the Board of Health of Massachusetts that two brands of facewash, extensively advertised, and manufactured in New York, were full of poison. After reading the analysis and seeing danger ahead for the New Jersey girl, he instructed his deputies to go on a search for these particular washes and to get samples of any others that looked suspicious. Among the cities searched were Trenton, New Brunswick, Plainfield, and Elizabeth. Only two places in the State were found selling the articles. It is, however, found that the sale of opium, morphine and chloral is on the increase, and that these dangerous articles are much used by both men and women as narcotics. Some druggists have been notified to stop their sale at once or stand trial for violating the law.

New Jersey's Best Villa Sites in Suburban Plainfield.

The reputation which Union county has gained by the building of nearly forty miles of county roads is increasing day by day. When a point is sought to be made anywhere in this State in favor of county roads, Union county is taken as the standard and referred to as most exemplary and most progressive, and the Union county roads are pointed out as an expenditure of money that has already enhanced the value of real estate beyond the cost of the roads themselves.

Already good-road advocates are claiming that "for every dollar spent on the roadways property has appreciated at least $5 worth." And yet the greatest benefit to be derived from these roads is still to come. Property has appreciated, it is true, and the roads have practically paid for themselves, in affording market facilities for produce at all times of the year, in affording pleasant means of communication where formerly there were, at some seasons, nothing but great gulfs of mud. But the great demand for country residences has scarcely yet begun. The reputation of these roads has only just commenced. When it has extended thoroughly through New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City and other places, and when the beauty of thousands of villa sites in Union county thus comes to be fully appreciated, then the thousands of acres that front on these elegant roads will be in constant demand, and houses will go up like magic.

What could be more replete with suburban beauty than on the level plains of Plainfield, or at Netherwood Heights, or on the mountain-side? With handsome railway stations so convenient and easy of access as those of Plainfield, the man who has business in the city is not for a moment delayed on the road, but can meet his train regularly as clock-work and be in the city at any hour he chooses.

Few if any counties in New Jersey are richer than Union in delightful locations for suburban residences, and in some places, right along these unsurpassed country roads, are sites that cannot be excelled for picturesqueness and natural beauty.

In good time—comments the Elizabeth Journal—the county roads will bring all these to public notice, and will find purchasers for them; and a few years more, and hundreds if not thousands of new houses in all parts of the county will add to the wealth of this section of New Jersey and will attest the progressive wisdom and judgment that built the county roads.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. DRUNKEN DUCKS.

Mickey Finn and Mrs. O'Brien Have Some Fun.

IT WAS such an August day on Coney Island as suggests ice, lemons, sugar, and water. All inanimate nature was athirst. The leaves on Biddy's wood hung pendent, waiting for a breeze. The grass in the meadow was as dry and husky as Mike Finn's throat on the evening before pay day. The cheerful peewee was mute as a stomach, and even the jovial sparrow had ceased his noisy wooing for the season. Flies, but it was hot! The flies bit with [illegible] malice. When repulsed they returned with renewed vigor to the attack, just as they do to a shining skull when the pious are at rest in church.

The clock in St. Mary's steeple had tolled a single stroke when Mrs. O'Brien crossed the Old Point road to the Finn shanty. Leaning on the window sill and looking into the kitchen she said:

"Have ye 'ere a cup o' flour, Biddy, that ye could lind me 'til pay day? Ye see, I want to make an Irish stew for Paddy whin he's comin' home the night, and I want the flour to thicken it a bit."

"Come in, come in," said Mrs. Finn. "Don't be standin' there in the sun and sukin' yersel' like a boiled mackerel. Now, that's right. Take the rockin' chair, and while I'm brewin' a drop o' tay to cool ourselves, I want to tell ye that I have sorrow mighty heavy on me, as Tom, the turkey," said while the [illegible] ate his bed."

"Dear, dear," said Mrs. O'Brien, sympathetically, as she rocked back and forth and fanned herself with her bonnet. "An' what's ailin' ye, Biddy? Did the goat ate your petticoat?"

"Faith, he did not, thin. I hung it too high on the line for him. No, it's not the goat this time, Mrs. O'Brien; it's Flannigan's ducks."

"Do ye tell me so!" exclaimed the visitor as she drew her chair up to the table, where Mrs. Finn was pouring out the tea. Both women lifted a cup and sipped the Chinese ambrosia with fine appreciation. As Mrs. O'Brien set her cup back upon the table she resumed: "An' what quarrel have you with Flannigan's ducks? Shure, I thought they were as dacent ducks as you would find on Coney Island."

"Thrue for ye, Mrs. O'Brien, and so did I until I [illegible] them up to their divilment. Faix, they were as harmless as the wrong end of the billygoat till they found a hole in the fence. And since that time I couldn't kape thim out o' the garden. Didn't I stand here by the windy and see the drake and the ten ducks waddlin' their way without sayin' 'by your lave,' all over me garden, standin' on their hind legs and atin' me cowcumbers and chewin' me lettuce and stealin' me peas! Oh, dear, oh, dear! I dunno what I'll do at all, at all, wid the dirthy waddlers."

Mrs. O'Brien's nose had been buried deep in the cup during this mournful plaint. Just as Mrs. Finn concluded she withdrew it and looked inquiringly over toward the simmering teapot on the stove.

LAYS THEM TO ME.

Mrs. Finn took this delicate hint, and as she replenished the cup she asked:

"What shall I do, Mrs. O'Brien, about the ducks?"

"Lave thim to me. I'll fix thim. What does Mickey get home from school?"

"At four o'clock."

"Whin he comes sind him over to me and kape a still tongue in your head."

When little Mickey returned from school his mother sent him over to Mrs. O'Brien. Five minutes later he was running at the top of his speed in the direction of Brady's grocery. While he was absent Flannigan's ducks, headed by the drake, had left Brown's pond and were serenely waddling their way homeward. They walked in single file, like Indians on the trail, the drake now and then uttering a peaceful, contented quack, which was taken up in succession by each of the ten ducks in the procession. It was a peaceful, resolute scene, and the ducks were cool and comfortable after their protracted bath.

Instead of going around by the road, which was his usual custom, the drake took a short cut through the meadow, followed by his harem. When they arrived at the summit of the knoll adjoining the Finn estate the drake stood up and shook his wings. The ducks followed his example. Then the leader led [illegible] under the fence into Mrs. Finn's garden.

Little Mike, who was on the lookout, saw them enter the garden. He hugged himself with delight and whispered to his mother and Mrs. O'Brien:

"There they are!"

Mrs. O'Brien had a large earthen bowl in her hand. It was partly filled with broken pieces of pilot biscuit, evidently soaking in some liquid. Dipping her fingers in the bowl and stirring the pieces of cracker, she stepped to the door and began calling:

"Kip, Kip, Kip! Come, Kip, come and get your supper!"

The ducks needed no second bidding. The invitation was an exact counterfeit of the one Mrs. Flannigan uttered every evening. They tumbled over each other in their eagerness to get the food. Ducks are notorious gourmands. These proved to be no exception to the rule. They gorged themselves on the crackers as Mrs. O'Brien threw them upon the ground in handfuls. As the last handful was gobbled by the drake, Mrs. O'Brien said:

"Now, Mickey, me lad, you run out and drive the ducks into Flannigan's yard where they belong."

Mickey had no difficulty in executing this order, for the ducks seemed to be more than ordinarily sociable. Little Mike lay down behind a [illegible] to await [illegible] developments. Meanwhile the two women had gone into the kitchen, where Mrs. Finn exclaimed:

SMELL THE CRATUR'S BREATH.

"I hope you didn't pison the ducks, Mrs. O'Brien. It 'ud be a shame to waste all that duck mate. Flannigan's [illegible]."

"Don't I know he is," smiled Mrs. O'Brien. "But ye needn't worry, for self. Divil's the harm'll come to thim ducks."

"What did you give thim?" asked Mrs. Finn, in a whispering tone.

"Didn't ye see me givin' thim soaked crackers, sweetie? Be aisy now for a few minutes and ye'll see somethin' ye'll make ye hurt yer apron strings wid laughin'."

When the ducks went through the fence into Flannigan's yard they had marched in the customary single file. But when they filed out into the dooryard they broke ranks and fell into disorder. The drake began to quack louder than usual and to be more than usually demonstrative in his marks of affection. Somehow his quack was unnatural. It began with a protracted "qua," and ended suddenly with a "ck" which was explosive. The ducks, too, acted queerly. Some of them leaned against the fence in negligent, careless attitudes, and their voices were quiet and subdued. Others swayed a little as they walked and leaned against each other for support. They rubbed their heads together and nodded sleepily. At last the drake staggered to the middle of the yard, flapped his wings, and, with one despairing squawk, gently rolled over on his back. The ducks, as if sympathizing with their leader, all followed his example, and, waddling heavily and vacuously to the side of the drake, gave up the attempt to walk and lay down with their feet in the air.

By this time the Flannigan family had become alarmed. They rushed to the door in a body, and gazed in astonishment and dismay at the picture of ten ducks and a drake all lying upon their backs in the yard, each waving its webbed feet gently back and forth, and all of them uttering in a chorus: "Quack, quack, quack!" which died away in a graceful diminuendo, only to be resumed again with recovered breath.

Mrs. Flannigan picked up one of the ducks. As it lay on her arms its head hung backward over her arm, as if the bird was just about to waddle into eternity.

"Bad luck to thim as pisoned ye, me darlint," said Mrs. Flannigan, as the tears ran down her cheeks. "Oh, what shall I do, what shall I do, whin I have no more duck eggs of a Sunda'?"

Meanwhile Mr. Flannigan had come home. He proved himself to be a man of action.

"Mickey," he said to little Mike, who was looking over the fence with mock concern on his face, "run and get your putty blower!"

Turning to his wife he exclaimed:

"Go in the house, woman, and bring out the saleratus."

By this time the ducks had all become quiet. Their wings were outspread and they lay as if dead. When the saleratus and the putty blower were handed to him Mr. Flannigan took the ducks one by one upon his lap and blew a teaspoonful of saleratus down their throats with the putty-blower. There was no perceptible effect from this course of treatment for nearly twenty minutes. Then the drake slowly opened his eyes and emitted a gently protesting quack, which revived hope in the breast of Mrs. Flannigan. Slowly the drake came back to life. His quack gradually became stronger, and at last, with a supreme effort, he rolled upon his feet and began in a maudlin and uncertain way to preen his rumpled plumage. One by one the ducks assumed a decorous attitude until they were all back upward. As the last one regained its feet Mr. Flannigan picked it up and handed it to his wife, saying:

"Smell the cratur's breath!"

Mrs. Flannigan put the duck's bill close to her nose and sniffed long and carefully.

"It seems to me, Patsy, that I smelled something like that before!"

"Faith you did, thin," said Mr. Flannigan, whose suspicions had been awakened by the antics of the ducks. "If that ain't Brady's poor whisky I'll ate that duck, legs, feathers and all."—N. Y. Sun.

HE TOOK IT HARD.

The Bobs That Broke the Poor Fellow's Confidence in Himself.

My room in a Virginia hotel was a large one, and the bed stood in the middle of it. As I lay on my right side I faced two windows opening out on a veranda. At one o'clock in the morning a sudden draught of air awoke me up from a sound sleep. It was bright moonlight, and a man had just entered one of the windows. I carefully lifted my head and clutched the revolver under my pillow, and then I waited to see what the intruder would do. He kept perfectly quiet for five minutes, and then tiptoed over and took up my trousers. There wasn't over thirty cents in change in the pockets. He then tried to open my trunk, but it was locked. He picked up my coat and vest, but I had removed every thing. He stood for awhile as if in doubt, and then started to come to the bed.

"Want any thing?" I asked, as I covered him with the pistol and sat up in bed.

"Oh, shucks!" he exclaimed, as he sat down on a chair.

"Who are you?"

"Nobody nor nothin'! I hain't fitten for hogs. If I knowed any thing, I'd hev pizened myself last year."

"You seem to take it hard, old fellow."

"Can't help it. Every thing I go into busts up on me. I've busted a sawmill, a sand bank, a yoke of oxen, a tobacco crap, and a saloon, and I was in hopes to get cl'ar of the county when this had to happen. Git up 'n tote me off to jail, and finish me up, for I hain't fitten to be around alone."

I talked with him awhile, and, finding him down on his luck, I let him out by the window and closed it after him, giving him two dollars to start the world anew on.

"I'll try it, stranger," he said as he climbed out, "but I shall look for a bust up. When a feller hain't fitten with fitenness, then he hain't, and all the fitten he kin do won't gin him proper fitenness. Good-night."—N. Y. Sun.

Archæology from the Ark.

There is a town on the shore of Lake Ontario where dwells a widowed clergyman, who boards at the house of a middle-aged woman who always knows every thing and never fails to show it. One day at dinner the minister began to talk about a young boy whose acquaintance he had made—one who seemed to him more than ordinarily bright.

"Why," he said, "he was greatly interested in history, and even in archæology he had made great progress. He's got a collection of archæological specimens."

"Archæology?" said the landlady. "Oh yes! all about the ark."—N. Y. Tribune.

HONORS TO COLUMBUS.

Chicago Wants the Earth as Basis for a Monument.

Columbus, according to the latest plan, is to be remembered at the world's fair by a monument that is to beat the Eiffel tower all hollow. This project is designed to be worthy of Chicago at all events, says the New York Herald.

It is by a fellow-countryman of Columbus, Alberto de Palliardo, and, as will be seen from our illustration, it is a globe resting on a pedestal or base. The pedestal is of graceful proportions, three hundred feet high. The monument is a globe, whose diameter will be equal to the height of the Eiffel tower. Surmounting the whole will be a full-rigged ship.

The total height of the monument may be put down at about one thousand four hundred feet. At the equator a gallery will run around this globe which will be about two-thirds of a mile in circumference, while on the surface will be marked the continents and oceans, just as on a school globe. From the equator to the north pole, winding round the outside, there will be an inclined railway nearly four miles long.

A large statue of Columbus will stand in the center of the base under the globe, while a Columbus museum and a library devoted to literature in connection with his discoveries and those of other explorers will be established, and restaurants will be placed here and there at more or less elevated positions. An observatory will also be built at the summit of the monument. The cost of construction is estimated at about £1,000,000, while an additional £100,000 will be required for the lifts and other machinery.

O'REILLY'S TOMBSTONE.

Nature Has Provided a Tomb Worthy of the Irish-American Poet.

Nature has provided for John Boyle O'Reilly a tomb worthy of the man. On the highest point of Holyhood Cemetery, Brookline, Mass., there crops out a ledge of rock whose base is in the foundation walls of the earth. Countless æons ago the great glacial plane passed over this ledge, cutting its iron face and leaving a polished surface which the rains and frosts of thousands of years have hardly dimmed. Grinding its way slowly over the roof the mighty glacier left its indelible imprint behind, and left also an equally enduring memento of its passage—a giant boulder of conglomerate rock, fifteen feet high and, roughly speaking, about twelve feet square—seventy-five tons of weather-stained, time-defying, eternal rock. It stands on the crest of the picturesque height, a landmark conspicuous above all else in the neighborhood, solitary, massive, and majestic.

It is to be the tombstone of John Boyle O'Reilly. No mark, save a single tablet on its face, will be allowed to mar the severe simplicity of the noble monolith, which is nature's fitting memorial to God's nobleman. Mankind will honor him by a suitable work of man in the city of his adoption, but this monument will stand for all time, imperishable as the fame of the man who sleeps beside it.—Boston Pilot.

Daughter of Henry Clay.

"Speaking of Henry Clay," said a gentleman to a Cincinnati Times-Star reporter, "reminds me of the fact that he has a daughter buried at Lebanon, O. She died while Henry Clay and his family were on their way to Washington by stage coach many years ago. She was a girl twelve years of age and her loss was a sad blow to her father, who at the time was so pressed with business cares that he was compelled to bury the body and go on to Washington, intending some day to return and move it to Lexington, Ky. But he never did so, and the grave may be seen yet in the old burial ground surrounded by wire fence. The tombstone is one of the flat-tablet style, and relic hunters have so marred it that now it presents a dilapidated appearance. To such an extent was this spirit of relic seeking carried on that the graveyard authorities at last set posts every two feet apart around the grave and wrapped them around with wire strands to the extent of twenty or more, so that it is almost impossible for anybody to climb over and chip off a piece of the gravestone. As the old burial ground is being rapidly abandoned it is only the question of a few years until Henry Clay's daughter will be the only occupant."

Where the Sugar Went.

A teacher desiring to classify her pupils put questions to them to find out how much they knew. During the examination of the son of a leading Austin politician the following dialogue occurred:

"You say that there are three kingdoms—the animal, the vegetable and the mineral?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, where do you put the sugar?"

"Pa puts it in the water and then the whisky in afterwards and stirs 'em up with a spoon."—Texas Siftings.

On a Street Car.

"Twenty-fourth!" bawled the conductor, opening the door. Every one knew it wasn't true, but she was so mad that she shut her mouth tight and the car heard no more.—Kansas City Star.

A Delicate Letter.

King of the Cannibal Islands (to his typewriter)—My dear, just take this note for the Board of Missions, in New York.

Typewriter—I am ready, O noble Tumtum.

King—Gentlemen: The last lot of missionaries you sent me were old, and tough, and stringy. If you can not do better—got that?—if you can not do better I shall have to make a change, and —get —my— missionaries —elsewhere. Yours truly, Tumtum, Rex.—Life.

Uncle Hayseed—No, James, I can't stay all night with ye. I'd like to, but New York is an awful dangerous place, and I must be gettin' home.

James Upton—New York dangerous! How do you make that out, uncle?

Uncle Hayseed—Why, I see there were over two hundred thousand mysterious disappearances here this year.

James Upton—Where did you get your figures?

Uncle Hayseed—From the Federal census.—Puck.

A NOVEL RAILWAY.

Its Underground Trains to Be Propelled by Electricity.

An Unique Undertaking Carried to a Successful End—A Railway Running at Great Speed Under the Streets of London.

Mr. J. H. Greathead, chief engineer of the new City and South London Railway Company, was interviewed a few days ago by a reporter for the Pall Mall Budget, and had this to say concerning one of the most wonderful enterprises of the age:

"In the construction of this line we have developed a new system of tunneling which is very safe, and enables work of this kind to be carried out without interfering with the traffic of the streets and without pulling down property in the wholesale way that was done when the underground railways were constructed. At the same time the work can be carried out very rapidly. At one time Messrs. Walter Scott & Co., the contractors, were doing more than 100 feet of tunnel daily, and in one half year did two and one-quarter miles. Near Stockwell we came on a bed of sand and gravel—we were formerly working in clay—and that caused delay, as it necessitated the manufacture of additional plant, but when we got that, and the men became accustomed to work under compressed air, the work went forward very steadily. We had to go through 300 yards of sand and gravel, which was done without pumping the water. Had we removed the water we might have done damage to the adjoining property, and to avoid any risk we decided not to do so, but to work under compressed air. It was the first time tunneling was ever carried out in that way, and to show the value of the method I may say that the St. Clair tunnel has since been constructed in the same way by the Grand Trunk railway of Canada, and the Hudson river tunnel, which was started several years ago on another plan, is also to be executed on my method, and so will be the new Glasgow subway, which will involve four tunnels under the Clyde.

"Electricity is the motive power on the line. The current will be generated at Stockwell, and will be taken by a main conductor through the tunnels both up and down. Connected with the main conductor at each signal-box is the working conductor of steel, which is placed on the line between the rails.

"Each train will be made up of three carriages and a locomotive, weighing altogether thirty tons. A train will be capable of seating 100 passengers. We shall begin with a five minute service, but it is our interest to run a three-minute service and eventually, if required, a two-minute one. For the three-minute service we shall have ten trains. Including stoppages, we expect to maintain a speed of fifteen miles an hour, which is 25 per cent. in excess of the speed on the Inner Circle railway. As the approach to each station is on an incline and the departure on a decline the trains can be stopped easily and get up speed quickly. The Westinghouse brake which has been adopted will bring the train up in five seconds. The passengers will enter by two platforms between the carriages to which there are gates, which open and shut rapidly like a pair of lazy tongs. There is a passage from end to end of the train, and only one class.

"The carriages are cushioned and lighted by electricity, the current being obtained from the working conductor as the train passes along. At each station there are two lifts to raise and lower the passengers. They will each hold fifty persons, so that they can carry a full train-load. As the descending passengers leave one door of the lift those ascending will enter by another, so that no time will be lost. The lifts are worked by hydraulic power, which is generated in the same engine-house as the electric power at Stockwell. The water passes from the accumulator through a pipe in the down tunnel extending to the city. Having done its work it returns by a pipe in the up tunnel to the pumping engines at Stockwell, and is again circulated. The pressure is about 1,200 pounds to the square inch. The lifts are capable of raising 8 tons, but they will not have to raise more than 3½ tons. They will bring a full load to the surface in about twenty seconds."

Snagsby Had a Narrow Escape.

"Cornelius," said Mrs. Snagsby, shaking that unfortunate gentleman vigorously as he lay in bed; "Cornelius, what in the world is the matter with you?"

"Wha—what, Elyria?" gasped Snagsby, rubbing his eyes.

"What is the matter with you, Cornelius? What makes you cry so in your sleep?"

"What did I say, Elyria?" asked Snagsby.

"You shouted: 'A horse on me, Truffle. Shake it off!' What did you mean?"

"Oh, nothing, Elyria. I see. Simply had a nightmare and wanted somebody to wake me up, that's all. Thank you, Elyria, for doing so."—Chicago News.

"HE LOOSA DA MONK."

How a Light-Fingered Gentleman Lost His Pet.

A Nineteenth Century Fagin and His Pupil—An Artful Dodger of the Simian Race Put in the Clutches of Inexorable Law.

The unusual sight of a monkey appearing as a witness in court occurred in this city recently, says the San Francisco Examiner. "John Doe" was charged with being an accessory to the crime of pocket-picking. The monkey was really the one that was guilty of the more serious charge, but doubtless the little fellow was innocent of any evil intention.

A lady was horrified while passing along Post street to find a monkey perched on her shoulder, and before she could recover from the paralyzed condition, her gold watch and chain were in the monkey's grasp and the little thief disappeared. A number of people saw the theft committed, but all seemed to pay more attention to the shrieking lady than to the thief. When she had been brought out of her hysterical state a thorough search was made for the robber, but not the least trace could be found.

Nothing was seen in the immediate vicinity but a tall, well-dressed man leisurely proceeding down the street. Doubtless he would have continued his stroll had not the officer noticed a suspicious bulging under the right side of his loosely-fitting Prince Albert coat, and he was overhauled. Clinging as closely to him as possible under the coat was found the monkey!

Of course the stranger was indignant at being so grossly insulted, but nevertheless was compelled to accompany the officer to the Central Station, where upon being searched several gold watches and articles of valuable jewelry were found upon his person, not considering the handsome diamonds worn by him. Next morning when the case of John Doe was called in court none of the frequenters showed any particular interest, even when a tall, swarthy man arose in the dock, passed through the little gate in the railing, approached the witness stand and agreed to tell the truth and nothing but the truth. They had often attended murder trials and gloated over the bloodthirsty details recounted by witnesses, and the mere fact of a man being charged with picking a pocket was nothing startling, even though he was tall and handsome. When the witness finished giving his testimony in a foreign accent the majority present felt satisfied that no case could be made out against him, and wondered how an officer could make such a blunder.

"Your honor," said the prosecuting attorney, "I have but one witness to introduce when I am willing to close the case. Call Miss Mono."

Miss Mono was at once brought into court in the arms of a stalwart police officer. Miss Mono was not a young lady, but a South American monkey of diminutive size. Her language could not be interpreted either for or against the witness, as the monkey alphabet has not yet been perfectly translated into English, but her actions could. With a wriggle and a jump the little animal landed plump into the arms of the prisoner, chattering and bobbing about with every demonstration of joy.

THE COURT LOSES HIS WATCH.

John Doe didn't seem to relish such evidence of recognition, and impatiently pushed the gleeful little beast away.

"If the court pleases," continued the attorney, "I wish to prove by this monkey that the defendant is guilty as charged." He then waved his hand at the crouching animal, which regarded him attentively. Another motion made in the direction of the judge caused the chattering little thief to comprehend, and before the court knew what was up his watch and chain were in the hands of the monkey, scampering over to the accused. The latter's face assumed a deep pallor, for he then knew that his former means of living was lost to him and that San Quentin stared him in the face.

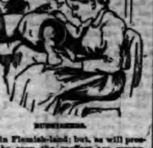
RHINELAND POTTERS.

Something of the Ware Formerly Made Exclusively in Germany.

Long-Established Potteries Broken Up by the Seventeenth Century War—The Condition of the Business at This Time.

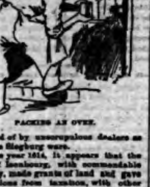
Connoisseurs here—and many who have no pretension to that title are familiar, says the English Illustrated Magazine, with—the quaint drinking mugs and other vessels which are known as Gres de Flandres. Scoffers have said that the peculiar stoneware in question has been so named because it was never made in Flemish-land; but, as will presently be seen, the scoffers are wrong. The province of Limburg, however, now divided between Germany and Belgium, which was so long one of the principal seats of this manufacture, has always been a frontier State, and had always been up to 1814 subject to the counts and other rulers of Flanders.



BURNISHERS.

The ware is in truth essentially German in its history, and in the characteristics of its diversified forms and artistic embellishments. The precise date and place of its origin remain unknown. A well-authenticated fragment of the brown ware bears the date of 1539; but examples of a rude, unglazed, white ware, and of a coarse, earthen body of dark gray, smeared with a lead glaze, have been found in excavations, and may be supposed to have been the productions of a very remote period. But evidently, by the middle of the sixteenth century the art had attained to something like perfection. For two centuries Germany retained the monopoly, and kept Europe supplied with drinking vessels adapted very much to the tastes, to the measures and to the usages of different lands. It was toward the end of the eighteenth century when a successful attempt was made by one Dwight, of Fulham, to produce the like articles in England. This was, however, a period of remarkable activity among English potters. The picturesque, though rude, puzzle-jugs and tygs had been the product of much ingenuity; but they were disappearing before the beautiful salt-glaze ware, much of which has never been excelled in perfection of form and sharpness of ornament, and which had attained to the highest degree of artistic quality before the advent of Josiah Wedgwood.

The stoneware, however, properly so called, was probably produced in numberless localities all over Germany and the low countries, where suitable clay and natural aptitude existed. But there are a few districts to which peculiar interest attaches; these were seats of characteristic and often remarkable original styles. Among the most notable places was Siegburg, situated not far from Bonn, on a tributary of the Rhine. There were produced the tall, cylindrical cannettes in what was long known as Cologne ware, and other articles of a like kind in a white body, often unglazed, but richly embossed with elaborate figures and ornaments in relief. Siegburg suffered severely during the seventeenth century wars, and the potters, despairing of carrying on their industry in peaceful security, emigrated to other lands. All attempts to induce them to return were unsuccessful; but some fifty years ago an enterprising potter undertook to revive the business. With the aid of old molds, gathered from different directions, and following closely the old traditions, he began the production of ware of the old type. These pieces found a ready sale, being disposed of by unscrupulous dealers as genuine Siegburg ware.

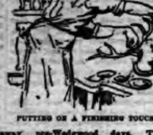


PACKING AN OVEN.

In the year 1614, it appears that the Earl of Isenbourg, with commendable sagacity, made grants of land and gave exemptions from taxation, with other tempting privileges, to one Bertrain Knodtgen, a potter of Siegburg, by way of inducing him and his fellow-workers to transfer their art from its old home and to settle in this locality. The men of Siegburg and of Raeren thus encouraged flocked into the new country, and found there the peace and the protection for which in their old homes they had sighed in vain. Their art thus transplanted has survived many vicissitudes, at times has been well-nigh extinguished, but has happily revived, and it flourishes to-day in greater volume than ever, the name of Knodtgen being still borne by many of those who are associated with its fortunes.

In the earlier days of which we have spoken the stoneware of the Kannenbackerland had no special character of its own sufficient to make it easily distinguishable from the productions of the Limbourg center from which it had been imported. As a general rule, it may be said that one seldom finds original figure subjects, or delicate friezes of ornamentation, such as those which are the glories of the treasured examples of old Siegburg and Raeren. When subjects of this kind are found they are generally borrowed from the older types. The relief ornamentation was generally impressed by small metal seals, and these rosettes were then connected by stems and branches incised in the clay. Often enough a medallion portrait or heraldic panel occupies the center of the piece, but such always has the appearance of being a mere accessory rather than an essential detail in the general and harmonious design. The effect thus obtained was heightened by the employment of bright colored enamels, in deference to the rather gaudy taste of the age; harmonious blendings of purples and blues are the principal characteristics of the ware.

The Kannenbackerland of to-day comprises nine busy villages, of which the two most populous, Hohr and Grenzhausen, give a common title to the whole district. Hohr has between two and three thousand population, and signs of the craft obtrude on every hand. The process of manufacture is often carried on under the public gaze. There are about fifty ovens in which ware is fired, and these belong to fully as many master employers. [illegible] utensils and drain pipes are among the special goods manufactured. Grenzhausen's greatest fame, however, rests on the making of a certain jug and mug that are the joy of every beer-drinker in Germany. In general appearance the town is much like Hohr, as are also Baumbach, Ransbach, Hilgert, Mayendorf, Wirges, Hillscheid and Arzbach. The last place chiefly produces mineral water bottles, of which millions are disposed of annually. At the Staffordshire potteries, where the Wedgwood ware is produced, the whole or nearly all the material is brought from a distance, the clay and marls found at hand a century and over ago having been exhausted. In the Hohr-Grenzhausen country, to the contrary, raw material is contiguous and abundant. In general appearance the factories of Hohr-Grenzhausen suggest a comparison with the small potteries that might have been built in Staffordshire in the far-away pre-Wedgwood days. There is the same absence of architectural design, the same look of haphazardness, the familiar mass without the smallest suggestion of a plan. All the world over, indeed, there is a family likeness between the workshops, wherein the potter's simple craft was pursued until the very modern edifices of the great houses of to-day came to be constructed. It is not impossible that under the influences thus foreshadowed the handicraft may disappear, and with it the imagery that is as true to-day as it was thousands of years ago, of clay in the potter's hands, and of the power which he possessed, of his simple volition, of the same lump, to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor.



PUTTING ON A FINISHING TOUCH.

It is, however, noticeable that the ancient art of the "thrower"—the potter of antiquity—is largely practiced here, though many of the objects are pressed from plaster molds. Women are employed to attach the handles and spouts and to finish the ware after it has left the thrower. Upon the women too devolves the delicate work of scratching in the clay such patterns of flowers and arabesques as form a rough decoration on the surface. Models or patterns are rarely used. The women trace their design with great freedom of hand. These devices in "scratching" are subsequently relieved by broad touches of color, the cobalt used being mixed with water and clay, with a further admixture of salt to make the pigment run fluidly under the brush.

The apprentices serve a term of from three to four years, and the work people are paid upon a system of piece work called "Tagewerken," under which a given number of differing articles are adopted as the unit for calculating the work per day. For example, a man is understood to make in one day two hundred and forty mineral water bottles or one hundred and sixty mugs of one liter size.

The process of firing differs materially from that commonly pursued in the ordinary manufacture of pottery. There the oven is vertical, inclosed within a bottle-shaped "hovel," which protects it and the fires from the external weather. At Hohr-Grenzhausen the oven is of a long horizontal form, with apertures at intervals along each side of the arched roof, covered with earthenware slabs which are removable at particular stages of the firing. This is for the purpose of throwing in the salt, the fusing of which at the proper heat gives to the ware its glazed surface.

Water Rent Off.

At a recent Sunday-school service in the West, the superintendent was illustrating the necessity of joining the church, and in order to make it apparent to his listeners he said: "For instance, I want to introduce water into my house. I turn it on. The pipes and faucets and every convenience are in good order, but I get no water. Can any of you tell me why I do not get any water?" He expected the answer to be that he had not made connection with the main in the street, but the boys looked perplexed. They could not see why the water should refuse to run into his premises after such faultless plumbing. "Can any one tell me what I have neglected?" reiterated the speaker, looking over the flock of faces, bowed down by the weight of the problem. "I know," squeaked a little six-year-old. "You don't pay your water rent!"—Golden Days.

WHY SHE CRIED.

Mr. Charley Younghusband—Why, what's the matter?

Mrs. Younghusband (in deep anguish) —I gave—a—a—tramp—a p—p—piece of my fresh home made bread and—and —he gave it to Rover.

Mr. Charley Younghusband (consolingly)—Well, I wouldn't cry about a little thing like that.

Mrs. Younghusband—You don't u—u—understand. I'm crying about Rover —he is dead—hoo—hoo—hoo.—Life.

In a Hurry.

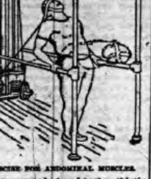
HOPE FOR FAT MEN.

Special Gymnastic Machinery for Reducing Their Girth.

The Growing Popularity of Athletic Exercises Stimulates the Ingenuity of Inventors—Health-Giving Devices.

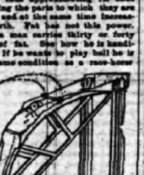
The growing popularity of all manner of athletic sports among the youth of this land, and among middle-aged people, too, for that matter, which has led to the formation of large athletic associations, with magnificent club-houses and spacious grounds, has also stimulated inventors to produce new and improved forms of gymnastic apparatus. The visitor to a modern well-equipped gymnasium will see a number of machines of peculiar form, the uses of which are not apparent at first sight. Nothing like them was to be found in the athletic clubs of a dozen years ago, and many of them are still so new that probably nowhere else than in New York can they be seen to-day in actual use. Moreover, as the science of physical culture advances the knowledge of the suitability of certain forms of exercise to certain constitutions increases, and so does the experience of the results that follow the exercise of particular muscles.



EXERCISE FOR ABDOMINAL MUSCLES.

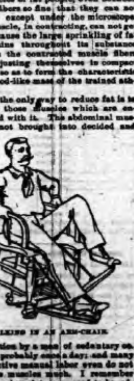
Said J. W. Spalding, an expert in such matters, the other day: "Many a man has tried to reduce the size of his waist by exercise, and after he has spent hours every day for weeks in walking, running, club-swinging, dumb-bell lifting, riding, etc., has found that while his actual weight has perhaps decreased perceptibly, yet his waist measures about the same as usual. The fact is that fatty degeneration of the muscular tissue begins nearly always in those muscles which are used the least. For this reason the abdominal muscles are generally the first to be attacked. Every ounce of fat which fastens upon a muscle is so much dead weight, clogging its contraction, or working, and rendering the muscle less active than before and therefore inviting more fat to accumulate upon it.

"Muscle alone has the power of contraction, thus approximating its ends and moving the parts to which they are attached and at the same time increasing in girth. Fat has not this power. Suppose a man carries thirty or forty pounds of fat. See how he is handicapped. If he wants to play ball he is in the same condition as a race-horse handicapped with the same weight of iron, and of course it is readily seen that it is not desirable to be fat if strength is to be as great as possible and hence economized. Endurance is but another term for continuous expenditure of strength. Hence a fat man has less endurance than if he had no fat. Besides having fatty deposits around the muscles and thus handicapping by dead and useless weight alone, it is found in small amounts throughout the muscles of fat people, even between muscle fibers so fine that they can not be seen except under the microscope. Such muscle, in contracting, can not get hard because the large sprinkling of fat it contains throughout its substance prevents the contracted muscle fibers from adjusting themselves in compact bundles so as to form the characteristic hard, wood-like mass of the trained athlete.



THIS REDUCES THE WAIST.

"Now the only way to reduce fat is to exercise those muscles which are encumbered with it. The abdominal muscles are not brought into decided and strong action by a man of sedentary occupation probably once a day; and many men of active manual labor even do not use these muscles much. I remember the time when fat men used to be advised to lie down on a hard table on their faces, place their hands behind their necks and, while lying flat, raise the head and shoulders as high in air as possible. This, no doubt, gave the abdominal muscles some exercise, but gave those in the back and neck a great deal more; so that a man's spine ached long before the abdominal muscles felt any strain on them. In these days there are a couple of machines on the market which are especially adapted for bringing the abdominal muscles into active motion."

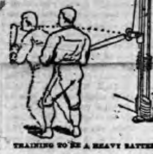


WALKING IN AN ARM-CHAIR.

Cuts of these machines are produced with this article. That part which is the same in both is the iron standard against the wall, up and down which the weights run smoothly, as they are raised and lowered by the ropes that run through swivelled pulleys. The man who is pulling on the ropes with his head is giving his abdominal muscles the most severe work. The other man, who has a curved board to support his back, takes some of the weight off his stomach muscles by means of his arms. It is best for beginners to start with this machine, and after their muscles, long unused to action, become a little accustomed to the strain, let them try the direct weight, and pull by means of a head-stall, using only light weights even then at first. Half an hour of such exercise each day will do more, it is said, to reduce the girth, especially if combined with as great a degree of abstinence from drinks of any kind as possible, than any other form of exercise known.

Speaking of liquids, a man who generally knows what he is talking about said recently:

"Liquids make fat. The character of the liquids has a good deal to do with it, but the practice of drinking generally leads to unwieldy bulk. In Spain, where men drink little, fat is unknown. In Paris, where men content themselves with sipping thimbles full of absinthe or small cups of black coffee, the French are thin to a remarkable degree. The women, on the other hand, drink great quantities of champagne, Burgundy, and latterly of beer, and they are, as a result, prone to stoutness. In England, men drink ale and beer, and they are a thick-necked, pudgy, and heavy race, as a rule. I had observed all this many times, and when I went to Germany, where I knew the consumption of beer was very great, I had prepared to find fat men in abundance. I was not disappointed. There would seem to be absolutely no end of big, corpulent and unwieldy men in Germany. While they are in the army they are slim and splendid looking warriors, but two months after they leave the ranks they become heavy, puffy, and beefy to the last degree.



TRAINING TO BE A HEAVY BATTER.

Another piece of gymnastic apparatus, made for a special purpose, is also shown in the accompanying cut. It is intended for men who wish to keep the muscles of the leg and thigh in constant trim for walking. It may be fastened to the bottom of almost any arm chair of solid construction, and is intended for use in the office mainly. The weights under the chair can be increased or lessened at will, and the pedals are not in the way when not in use, and indeed afford a convenient foot-rest and a welcome change of position once in awhile. A busy man need not lose a moment from his duties during the day, and yet get considerable healthy exercise out of his handy machine.

Many other machines are already invented, or are in process of invention, which are intended to develop special muscles of the human frame, but there is not room to illustrate them within the limits of this article, and much of the success of the modern instructor in physical culture consists in knowing what muscles of his pupil most need development and then how to give them what they want. Even additional beauty may be imparted to the face and neck, it is asserted, by developing those muscles of the cheeks and neck which become flabby under disuse and make the cheeks look sunken or the neck scraggy. Speaking on this head, a woman who has devoted much thought and time to such matters said last week:

"It is an actual fact that the muscles of the face are as susceptible of development as any muscles of the body. The method is a very simple one, but thorough. No one can doubt for a moment that a full, round neck and plump cheeks add greatly to one's beauty. The only way to get the full neck and plump cheeks is to go to work in an intelligent manner and develop the neck and facial muscles, which development causes the lines of beauty to exist. You may think, perhaps, it is unnecessary to develop muscular tissue in order to gain beauty, but that you can get it only by gaining a little more fat; this is a very great mistake. The lines of beauty can only exist where the muscles are plump and firm. The development of the muscles of the face and neck fills up the hollows and causes the flesh to have a firm and healthy look, whereas the addition of fat without muscular development will cause the flesh to look weak and flabby."

SAVE THE SCRAPS.

How to Be Economical in Practice as Well as in Theory.

There are a great many persons who are economical enough in theory but who waste a great deal in practice. It requires patience to separate the bits of fat from a cold roast, to try them out and lay them aside for use in the storeroom. For this reason many housekeepers throw away the remnants of a roast after it has been served up twice. A woman who will sew industriously for many hours to save paying a seamstress half a day's work will, sometimes thoughtlessly throw away more than the equivalent of the seamstress' wages in these scraps. The fat of beef nicely tried out is equivalent to butter and equally valuable for frying. Try the experiment of saving every scrap of beef, veal and chicken fat, strain and it weigh it, and its value will be a cause of genuine astonishment if you have never undertaken the experiment before. Save every scrap of mutton and other strong-flavored fats and try them out for soap. It takes only a few moments to prepare good home-made soft soap, and the saving from this source alone will be found nearly equal to the saving of butter from making use of the scraps of fat suitable for cooking.

No scrap of meat or vegetables should ever be wasted. Bits of meat, however inconsiderable in quantity, can be combined with some other, put in an omelette, made into croquettes by addition of rice or some other meat and re-served in many ways that will leave no hint that it has previously appeared for perhaps a third time. It is a little more difficult to know what to do with vegetables that are left over. The most appetizing method of disposing of such as can be used in this way is in a salad. Spinach, string beans, beets, bits of turnip and potatoes can be used in this way. The next method is an omelette. Cold asparagus, peas, bits of fried egg plant, oyster plant and other vegetables are delicious served in this way. Most mashed vegetables, like parsnips or mashed potatoes, are delightful served in balls. In preparing all rechauffes it should be remembered that the food is already cooked, and any further continuation of the cooking will impair its flavor. It should therefore be heated to the point of cooking, but not beyond it. A little boiling hot sauce is a great advantage to these dishes where it can be suitably used. Steaming is one of the best ways of heating food which is re-served. Not one crumb of bread in a household need be wasted. Each week after baking, all stale bread should be collected, dried and sifted to serve for breading meats, for croquettes, pudding, stuffing to fowl, or many other dishes.—N. Y. Tribune.

TO THE NORTH POLE.

Voyage of Discovery to Be Made in a Huge Balloon.

The Strange Plans of Two French Enthusiasts—Mechanism of the Most Remarkable Air Ship Ever Devised by Human Brain.

What is there at the North Pole—water, land or ice?

The solution of this problem—one of the most fascinating presented by nature to the ingenuity of man—is about to be again essayed, says the New York Herald. This time the attempt is to be made by two young Frenchmen.

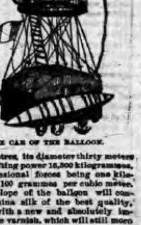
They are members of the Ecole Superieure de Navigation Aerienne and their names are M. Besancon, an aeronaut, M. Gustave Hermite, nephew of M. Charles Hermite, of the Institut.

These two young men, the elder of whom is not yet thirty, are going to avail themselves of a scheme which, while not unheard of, has never advanced beyond the experimental stage. In 1870 Silbermann, demonstrator of chemistry at Sorbonne, and Sivel, in 1874, published the results of experiments, from which they reached the conclusion that to reach the North Pole by means of balloons was a possibility.

By one of those coincidents not infrequent in the history of discoveries, MM. Hermite and Besancon formed their plan without any knowledge of the work done by their predecessors in this line of research. It is only recently that they were informed of the documents written by their predecessors, and were thus enabled to utilize them.

In recognition of the unexpected aid thus received, and also in order to render a tribute to the memory of an illustrious martyr of aeronautic science, the travelers have given the name of Sivel to the machine they are now building, and by the help of which they hope to secure a collection of topographical photographs complete enough to serve as the basis for a map of these unknown regions.

The Sivel will be inflated with pure hydrogen. Its cubic contents will be 15,000 metres, its diameter thirty meters and its lifting power 16,500 kilogrammes, the ascensional forces being one kilogramme 100 grammes per cubic meter. The envelope of the balloon will consist of China silk of the best quality, covered with a new and absolutely impermeable varnish, which will still more increase the resisting power of the silk and make it capable of enduring without rupture a pressure of 2,400 kilos per square meter.



THE CAR OF THE BALLOON.

The balloon will be made in forty-eight pieces or gores; its volume will be 14,960 m. c. 661, and its surface 2,933 m. c. 568. In form it will be a perfect sphere.

The Sivel is to be provided with a small interior balloon or air pocket peculiar to itself, and whose capacity will be 3,000 cubic meters. The object of this contrivance is to keep the exterior balloon always completely inflated and under an equal pressure, and it will also to a considerable degree obviate the serious dangers incident to possible sudden changes in altitude due to those hygrometric and thermometric variations, which are the principal causes of the instability of balloons.

The interior balloon, or ballonnet, is itself provided with two automatic safety valves: it will communicate with a ventilator of great power moved by an electric engine. The ventilator will be so under the control of an exterior manometre or hand gauge that when the gas in the exterior balloon expands the ballonnet's volume is proportionally decreased; if it contracts the ballonnet enlarges and the Sivel will remain perfectly inflated.

Furthermore, the difference in temperature, which is always greater within a balloon than that of the surrounding air amounting to twenty-eight degrees centigrade, is sufficient to cause a loss through the dilation of the gaseous mass equaling another tenth of the balloon's volume.

These two effects combined—atmospheric depression and variation of temperature—are sufficient to necessitate the one-fifth volume given the ballonnet. With the Sivel will be carried four "ballonnets pilotes," fifty cubic meters in size. These are to be set free at the pole to assist in the study of the aerial currents in that region. There will also be provided sixteen small balloons, whose contents will be used to make up any loss of gas from the great aerostat. These will be attached to the periphery of the Sivel's netting and in case of need one of these will be drawn by means of a rope down under the orifice of the great balloon, into which its contents, when required, will be transferred. When this has been done the voyagers will cast off the empty envelope, to that extent decreasing the dead weight of their air-ship. The safety valve of the Sivel will open only when subjected to a pressure of ten millimeters of water.

The basket of the balloon, made of wicker, with a steel framework, insuring absolute rigidity, will be closed over and made impregnable to water, like a boat. Its interior will be padded so as to keep up in the chamber occupied by the aeronauts a comfortable temperature.

JEFFERSONIAN.

Where are those political prophets who so often and confidently predicted the final dissolution of the Democratic party?

Their tongue voices no longer reverberate through the land. Silent are they as the grave they idly imagined had been opened for the reception of all Democrats.

Year after year we were told that the party of Jefferson, Madison and Jackson was at its death-bed and nothing remained but to give it everlasting burial.

Where are the prophets?

Has the re-animated body of dying Democracy caused them to flee in terror to the dark woods?

Some men are actuated by silly thoughts, and the silliest of all is to suppose the death of Democracy.

Democracy cannot and will not die so long as Freedom lives.

Mark that, ye valueless political prophets!

The Democratic party lives as the intrepid champion of popular rights, and today the people repose more confidence in it than ever.

Why?

Because its integrity to just principles has been proven, and its capacity for good government fully established.

For a hundred years it has braved every species of political hostility without faltering in its onward course, and it promises to be the people's only safe bulwark.

Unswerved and [illegible] it steadily pursues the allotted mission of securing to all classes of people the blessings of equity, peace and prosperity.

Other parties have gone under, others will encounter like fate, yet that of Democracy is ordained to live and flourish.

THE COMING COUNCIL DEADLOCKED.

Rogers, Smith and Gunn for President, and Messrs. Coward, Leonard and Dunham for Clerk.

As the incoming Council stand 5, 4 and 3 on organization, and as 6 is necessary for a choice, so far nothing is apparent but a deadlock.

The 4 Democrats being the political minority, consider themselves as not in the fight, and [illegible] the division amongst the Republicans of the latter—Rushmore, Ackerman, Gunn, Johnson and Dunham—are for Gunn as President, while Roberts and Smith are for the latter. Thus is the deadlock created, and it surely seems as if there is no key for it.

Councilman Smith is probably more entitled to the office of President than is Councilman Gunn. The former's past year of active, effective and faithful service deserves reward. The latter is but newly elected—and then he is not half so broad or progressive a man as Councilman Smith. Councilman Roberts appreciates all this fully and "he'll stick by Smith." Councilman [illegible], however, who owes his election to Messrs. Smith and Roberts more than to any other two men, has deserted them at the very start.

The Democrats will probably cast their first votes for President Moffett with the occasional straying of one or two to Roberts or Smith as a slight token of the esteem of the Big 4 for one another. Councilman Hetfield will also be tendered many a complimentary vote, and there are signs just now that point to him as the key to open the deadlock. The Council could not have a better presiding officer, and so it [illegible]—the place is just made for such as he. But then it is a Republican Council, and although they will all tell you they do not allow politics to influence them in municipal affairs, they all say what they please.

The entrance of Councilman Dunham into the arena as a candidate for the office of City Clerk, also complicates affairs. The present Clerk, Mr. Coward, and the ex-Clerk, Mr. Leonard, had been counting the seven Republican votes between them, but now Mr. Dunham claims at least three and hopes to add thereto the ballots of some Democrats. So you see it's quite a battle, as it stands.

End of a Time-honored Custom.

"Violet," the charming young Mt. Freedom correspondent of the Dover Iron Era, denounces the sad tidings that "spitting tobacco juice on the floor of the Presbyterian church by persons well known, is to be stopped, notice having been given." This abolishes another delightful custom which for many years hath been a charming feature of church service in "Violet's" rural neighborhood. Thus "the worm, the canker and the grief" abridge the joyous spirit of liberty which gave Mt. Freedom its name. Alas, poor Yorick! How fleeting is human happiness! Even in "Violet's" sequestered realm the gentle happiness of the [illegible] are to be abridged.

Somerset and Union the Same as When Created.

Bergen, Essex, Middlesex, Somerset, Monmouth, Burlington, Salem, Cape May and Gloucester counties were in existence before the year 1700. Most of them have undergone changes as to their boundaries, but Somerset and Cape May are now as they were at the start. Hunterdon, Morris, Sussex and Cumberland were all created prior to 1750. Cumberland is practically what she was in 1747. Of those made this century Warren is the same as when created in 1824, Atlantic and Passaic as created in 1837, Mercer as formed in 1838, Hudson as made in 1840, Camden as made in 1844; Ocean as created in 1850; and Union is the same as when given to the State in 1858.

A COMMUTER'S UTOPIAN DREAM.

Some of the Perfections Which the People Would Like to See at Our Railway Station—things Which Shorten the Lives of Harassed Travelers, and How to Abolish the Evils.

Plainfield commuters naturally have considerable to say, from time to time, concerning the managements and mismanagements of the Jersey Central road. The views of some of them have already appeared in these columns, which as everybody knows are always open to the discussion of matters of public importance; and to-day there is published another presentment of commuters' grievances, as offered by T. W. Moore, of 76 Broadway. Some of Mr. Moore's ideas concerning the railroad improvements which he suggests were developed from the lesson taught by the recent narrow escape of two score of people at the North avenue railway station, where but for night baggage-man Smith's vigilance they all would have suffered wholesale slaughter. The following is the interesting monologue which Mr. Moore delivered to a PRESS reporter as the result of a conversation on the subject last night:

"Whether the freight house is to be removed or not, there are some changes which if made would certainly add to the comfort and convenience of those going to the North avenue station from the South side. I have been a commuter from Plainfield over twenty-four years and I do not think that during that time there has been a single injury to a passenger on any train or ferry boat between here and New York. The most of that time I have been accustomed to pass to the station through Peace street. After the track was elevated we had a good comfortable stairway up the South side for the convenience of those a little late, but when the coal yard was altered that was taken away. Then for awhile we could catch a train by running up the grade next to the bridge on the North side if necessary, but since the iron fence was put up that chance is taken from us and we must go around the park to the front of the station. That would do very well if one were always in time, but when a little late it is rather hard on legs and lungs, and if in spite of extra exertion the roundabout path prevents reaching a starting train it is not always conducive to an amiable frame of mind—provokes remarks not suggestive of an agreeable future for those responsible for the change; if earnest prayers are not answered, their ears at any rate are bound to burn. The iron fence is very nice; we like style and improvements, as a rule, but some are too sweet to be healthy—'too rich for our blood', as the saying is. An old Vermont farmer returning from his first and only trip to New York, as the Hudson River train began to move out, shouted to the conductor 'Hole on a few minutes! Here's a man I hain't seen afore in twenty year': but it's no use shouting to our conductors; they must move on the minute. If the railway company would cut some nice wide steps next to the North side of the bridges on both Peace street and Park avenue, up to covered platforms, like those at Westfield and Roselle, extending to or near the station, they would save us much running around, and would save also its accompaniments; and the covered platforms would be a great comfort while waiting for trains. The front of the present station is not large enough to accommodate one-fourth the passengers to several of the morning trains, particularly in bad weather.

"And, while on the subject, as there is no law against talking about railroads, which are sometimes regarded as rather public institutions, would it not be an improvement if the passenger trains were run on the two North tracks? Most all of the stations are on that side, which may show an intention to run trains as I have suggested; at any rate, it looks to an outsider as though such a plan might be much better, for when we take some of the morning trains there are often several freight trains waiting for us to move on. It has been said that the stopping and starting of heavy trains add largely to the expense of running them; considerable time is certainly lost, which also costs money. [I should, by the way, like to save money enough for the road to enable it to turn on the gas in the cars at Jersey City ten minutes earlier, so that we may read our papers.] If the freight trains ran on the two South tracks and a fence were built between them and the passenger tracks opposite the stations they could be run right along without regard to the passenger trains; and, while talking about fences, why not put a fence with sliding gates to come opposite the ends of the cars between the two passenger tracks? Express trains moving East could go straight through when a local going West is at or coming up to a station, and locals would not be obliged to stop before reaching a station and then start up again on account of another train coming from the opposite direction. The East-bound train would come up to the station; then when all was clear the conductor would step off the first car and pull a lever, which would open all the gates. Express trains from the East should always whistle when approaching a station. Bars or gates might be put across the South side steps of the cars to prevent passengers getting off on that side; in fact, steps would be needed on only the North side of the cars. Then if passengers would leave the cars by the forward ends only those getting on could enter at once by the rear, thus saving time and often in bad weather a wetting."

Eclipses for 1891.

In the year 1891 there will be two eclipses of the sun, and two of the moon, besides a transit of Mercury across the sun's disc. A total eclipse of the moon will take place May 23, but will be invisible here. An annular eclipse of the sun will take place June 6, visible in the Western portions of the United States. There will be a total eclipse of the moon November 15, which will be visible, beginning at 5:39 p. m. The transit of Mercury will take place May 9, and will be visible in the Western part of the United States but barely noticeable here.

An Excellent Work by Dr. Hurlbut.

"Scripture Lessons for Daily Reading," prepared by the Rev J. L. Hurlbut of this city, is now published by Hunt & Eaton on a new plan. The purpose here is to give a reading for each day in the year and to complete the Bible in a year, selecting the most appropriate portions, well suited in length and subject, for private devotion, family worship or the public service. The first month's readings are from Genesis, the second from the gospels, alternating each month between the Old and New Testaments. They are arranged, as far as practicable, in chronological order, interspersed with selections from the Psalms. The print is large and clear, and the binding firm and strong.

—A New York taxidermist says that he has "set up" forty of those rare birds known as snowy owls during the month past. He has been in the business thirty years, and he declares that he has mounted more Arctic owls the present season than in all the previous years taken together. Who can account for the phenomenal influx of these beautiful birds? They belong to the far North, but their capture this Winter in these parts is becoming an almost every day occurrence.

THE TAX COLLECTOR'S SALARY.

John Johnson Says He Will Resign Rather Than Be Reduced, but He May Have to Work on a Percentage Hereafter.

The plan to reduce the salary of Plainfield's Tax Collector has been abandoned, temporarily at least. The ordinance which was to fix the Collector's income at $1,200 instead of $1,500 was left on the table indefinitely at a special meeting of Common Council held Monday night, and whatever change is to be made must therefore come before the new Council, as the only remaining meeting of the present board of city fathers is to be an adjourned session at which the matter could not be brought up, Dec. 29.

The matter was freely discussed, however, last evening. Councilman Johnson said that Collector Johnson had told him positively that he would not continue in the office if his salary were reduced. The bond of the Collector had been increased from $10,000 to $25,000, and he would not furnish such a big increase of surety for any less money than he had been in the habit of receiving. Councilman Smith said that Collector Johnson did not do the work of the office; he was inactive, lacked energy, and much of his collections had to be made by a delinquent collector, which added to the city's expense. The idea of the proposed ordinance was to make the $300 saved on the reduction of the Collector's salary pay for the delinquent collector's work. Councilman Rushmore suggested that the collector be vested with the powers of a special police officer so that he might do the work of the delinquent collector and frighten, with threats of arrests, the delinquents into paying up their arrearages. Councilman Hetfield stated that when the Collector had an annual levy of only $74,000 to handle he was paid, by either salary or percentage, from $1,500 to $2,000 for his work; and suggested that surely now when the yearly levy was $120,000 he ought to receive fully as much. The plan he favored, he added, was to have the matter of income fixed by a percentage, thus offering an incentive to sharp collections. This plan seemed to meet with general favor, but the matter was left in abeyance so that the new Council might have something to wrestle with.

The ordinance prohibiting the tearing up of the streets for laying water mains, gas pipes, or similar fixtures, was unanimously adopted on its third reading and final passage.

The Councilmen present at the meeting were Messrs. Hetfield, Johnson, Moffett, Newhall, Roberts, Rushmore, Smith and Spangenberg. Councilman Dunham hitched his horse to a post in front of the hall just as the reporters were leaving the building. Councilman Jenkins didn't show up at all.

PLAINFIELD WINS AGAIN.

Elizabeth's Proud Bowlers Fall Like the Pins Before the Crescent League.

Just a week ago the bowlers of Elizabeth, in the height of practice and crowned with the laurels of many victories, came to this city perfectly satisfied that they had a snap. They quickly discovered their error, however, and finished 207 pins behind. On the way home they all agreed that the Crescent League bowlers were too much for the Elizabeth Athletic Club's "second team," and so Monday night when the Plainfield boys went to Elizabeth to roll a return game, they found a much stronger team awaiting.

Again was the Elizabeth Club sure of victory. In fact their team was made up not only to win but to have big revenge. Yet under all this feeling their good fellowship was not buried. They intended to mop and swab the alleys with the Plainfield boys, but at the same time they prepared a good supper to console their visitors with after all was over.

The members of the Crescent League should be full of thanks to their bowling committee, Messrs. Burnet, Emerson and Thiers, for the fine team they have selected and which under Captain VanEmburgh has brought such credit on Plainfield. The score of the Crescents last night has only been excelled twice on the alleys of the Elizabeth champions. It was wonderful bowling when is considered the fact that it was against 12-inch pins 12 inches apart, and the Crescents have only before bowled against 18-inch pins 11 inches apart.

Dilts was high man of both teams, and Pellistreau second. Krewson had the worst breaks and spreads that ever fell to the lot of a bowler. His luck was the very hardest that can be imagined. Tool rolled in great shape, and after Reed's fourth frame no one excelled him. The two Vans kept their ends up—Captain VanEmburgh only breaking in the 2d and 3d frames, and VanWinkle only in the 3d and 5th.

It was a glorious victory, and the Crescent League members who accompanied the team to Elizabeth can easily be excused for shouting themselves hoarse and going crazy. The Club's mascot, James Moore, 2d, was there and helped along the victory by his presence. The score was:

Another Clergyman Turns Editor.

The initial number of Our Church, the new monthly publication issued by the Congregational church under the editorship of the Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, appeared Tuesday. In his salutatory the pastor speaks as follows:

"The paper will not aspire to literary excellence, nor will it expect to interest any but our own congregation. It will be devoted to the interests of the church. It will represent the various organizations, will contain reports of what takes place in the church, will be open to short contributions from members of the congregation and good suggestions from anyone. In it the pastor will find opportunity to say some things which are not so conveniently said in a sermon, officers and superintendent will find it a means for getting their ideas and wishes before the people, and that it may be very popular there will be a corner in it for those who wish to grumble."

—More criminals were pardoned in New Jersey during the past fourteen months than in the States of New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine and Delaware combined. Some newspapers are disposed to make a great fuss over the matter, and condemn the authorities for the leniency, but as none of them are supposed to know the grounds upon which the pardons are granted, perhaps they had better keep cool and not unnecessarily excite themselves.

Chance for a Speculation.

Now don't all run at once for your wallets and check books! It isn't corner lots in Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, or the "Future Great." It isn't options on wheat, corn, pork or lard, nor "puts" or "calls" on Northwestern's or Southwestern's, nor yet is it gas, oil, telegraph or telephone stock. It is better than any or all of these. It is a deposit in the Bank of Health, which every one can make by the purchase and use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets in all cases of chronic biliousness, dyspepsia, headache, "liver complaint," and the like. Sold the world over.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM INSTANT DEATH.

A Former Plainfield Pastor and His Wife Hurled Forty Feet by a Locomotive.

Many Plainfielders will remember the Rev. Theo. S. Brown, who was pastor of the Crescent Avenue church from 1865 to 1867, when it was known as the Second Presbyterian, and when its meetings were held in an East Front street building on the site of Miller's drug store of to-day; and these will sympathize heartily, and rejoice thankfully, with the pastor and his wife, over the circumstances of their recent miraculous escape from death, at a railroad crossing in Ghent, N. Y. From the columns of The Chatham Courier of Dec. 17 the following account of the affair is taken:

"Last Saturday afternoon as the Rev. Theo. S. Brown and wife, of this village, were out driving, and while crossing the tracks near the brick school house in Ghent, they had a miraculous escape from instant death. Riding in a top phaeton with side curtains closely drawn, and owing to the impossibility under favorable circumstances of seeing a train coming in this direction, the approach of the two o'clock express on the Boston and Albany Railroad was not observed until the shrill shriek of the whistle was heard; and in another instant came a crash, and horse, carriage and occupants were hurled along the track a distance of 30 or 40 feet. Wonderful to relate, Mr. Brown was not hurt, and, quickly extricating himself from the demolished wagon he sought the relief of his unfortunate wife, who, already quite helpless from a prolonged illness, could not assist herself in the least. She was quickly carried to the house of Mr. [illegible] near by, when it was discovered that her left arm was fractured above the elbow, and that there was an ugly wound on her forehead. Dr. Washburn was immediately summoned, and, assisted by Drs. Hanor and Green, reduced the fracture and dressed the wound. As soon as possible, Mrs. Brown was removed to her home in this village.

"It seems that the train was a little behind time; and Mr. Brown, supposing that it had already passed, and not hearing the whistle until an instant before they were struck, was driving unconcernedly, and at quite a good gait, across the tracks. The horse, a valuable animal, and a great pet, had just stepped on the track when the engine struck him in the side or on the shoulder, causing almost instant death. The force of the blow hurled him away from the track a little, and the wagon was caught by the engine and hurled over and over; had the animal taken but another step or two, the carriage and its occupants would have been brought directly in front of the engine, and fatal results must have followed.

"The sincerest expressions of sympathy for the stricken family, and the earnest hope for speedy recovery from what might have been a fatal accident to both, are everywhere heard."

Christmas at Holy Cross Church.

A Fight on the Boulevard.

Another row at Patrick Day's saloon occurred Saturday night. When the police arrived the fight was not only ended, but though most of the participants managed to disappear John Burke was caught. On Monday he was adjudged guilty, by Judge Codington, of drunkenness, disorderly conduct, and fighting. Rather than pay a fine of $10 he went to jail for 20 days.

A Pleasant Greeting.

Miss Annie Oakley, America's greatest female expert with the shot gun or rifle, is now giving exhibition shoots in England. Miss Oakley has many warm friends and admirers in this vicinity, especially among the members of the Middlesex Gun Club, who presented her with a handsome gold medal when she gave exhibition shooting on the club's grounds at Dunellen, several years ago, and which she prizes highly. In the last issue of The American Field appears the following appropriate verse from her to sportsmen:

GREETING.

May the year of Eighteen-Ninety-One
Bring much pleasure with rod and gun;
To all true sportsmen and friends so dear,
A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

Talk of a Paid Fire Department in Elizabeth.

As the following is printed in the New York World it is probably not so. "The firemen of Elizabeth are indignant over the disbandment of Continental and Osceola Hose Companies by the City Council. The firemen claim it is a scheme to give the control of the Department to the independent faction among the firemen. The regulars, who comprise a majority of the Board of Representatives, have elected the Chief Engineer and assistants for several years solely owing to the votes of the two hose companies now abolished. The change gives the independents a better chance to succeed at an election. Councilmen [illegible] any intention of favoring either faction in the Department, but say their action was prompted solely by a desire to reorganize the Department and make it a paid system. It is estimated that it would cost $25,000 a year."

Bishop Scarborough's Visit.

The beautiful little church of the Holy Cross was crowded Sunday morning, the occasion being the annual episcopal visitation. Bishop John Scarborough, assisted by the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector, conducted the impressive services of the church and preached an eloquent and forcible sermon, which he prefaced by a few highly complimentary remarks on the good work, rapid progress and general prosperity of the parish, which, he said, is in every respect among the first and foremost of his diocese. After the sermon the Bishop administered the rite of confirmation to twenty-five candidates, an unusually large proportion of whom were adults.

At four o'clock in the afternoon the Bishop held a special service of confirmation, the second in the year, in Grace Protestant Episcopal church. The church was full, and much interest was manifested in the large number of young people, twenty, who came forward to ratify their baptismal vows. At his regular annual visitation on Whit Sunday, May [illegible], thirteen persons were confirmed, making thirty-three for the year.

AND BEST OF ALL ARE PLAINFIELD'S.

Interesting Facts Brought Forth by a Comparison of New Jersey School Statistics.

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Edwin O. Chapman, has partially completed the compilation of school statistics for the year ending Aug. 31. The figures from most of the counties are extremely encouraging, and show that New Jersey is making decided advancement in the education of her children.

The total amount of money which the various districts have had to expend for school purposes during the year ending Aug. 31, 1890, was $5,482,562.31; of which $928,981.18 was for repairing and building school houses. The amount expended for teachers' salaries was $2,827,131.68, and for fuel $111,289.60; the amount for incidentals was $341,616.30. The total amount expended by the schools aggregated $5,272,280.17. This leaves a balance to the credit of the districts of $210,281.14.

In only four counties of the State the figures show that more money was expended than was due the districts. These are Camden, Gloucester, Hudson and Monmouth. Mercer county expended $146,546.97, and the amount due was $142,097.46, and Cape May county expended the smallest amount, which was $25,496; Ocean follows with an expenditure of $35,967. Sussex spent $52,075. Essex leads with $696,568.96, and Hudson has $[illegible],771.08.

The total value of school property in the State is $9,[illegible]. Of this amount Essex has a valuation of $2,609,[illegible], almost one-fourth of the entire amount. Hudson's valuation is $1,219,950; Camden's, $613,050; Union's, $577,350; Passaic's, $567,950; Mercer's $411,418; Cape May's, $76,100; Ocean's, $61,100. Last year Cape May's valuation was $73,300, and Ocean's $71,050.

The tables show quite a remarkable increase in the average attendance of the schools, as well as in the seating capacity. Last year the number of children of the school age in the State was 399,052; this has increased to 409,768. The number registered last year was 227,441, and this year 234,072 are enrolled. The number that attended ten months or more has increased from 8,502 to 9,490; six months, but less than eight, from 43,533 to 44,866. The average number attending school during the time they were kept open has decreased from 139,273 to 132,289. This is attributed to the prevalence of la grippe during the Winter.

There has been a remarkable decrease in the number of children attending no school. Last year the number was 115,726, while this year the table shows there are but 106,010. The school houses last year would only seat comfortably 213,450 pupils, while this year there are accommodations for 223,804, an increase of over 10,000. The number of teachers employed has been increased by 165, making a total of 4,464 engaged in the State. The average of salaries has also increased, but the pay of the women is still greatly disproportionate to that of the men. The average salary of each male teacher now is $76.09; that of each female teacher, $43.62, per month.

In Camden there are 23,169 children of school age, and 4,046 attended no school. Out of 19,398 in Mercer, 3,752 did not go to school.

Reports come from all over the State that the school houses do not have sufficient seating capacity.

Essex county can seat only 33,031 of her 74,029 children; Hudson, 26,800 of her 96,746; Camden can seat 13,245 of her 23,169 children; Mercer can seat 9,436 of her 19,398 children; Union county can seat 8,731 of her 17,375; Atlantic county comes the nearest to accommodating her children, for there is seating capacity for 6,791 of her 6,826 children; Sussex county can seat 5,561 of her 5,806 children; Cape May can seat 2,441 of her 2,850 children; Gloucester can seat 6,492 of her 7,281. There is in the whole State a seating capacity for 223,804 children, out of a total of school age of 409,768, or not much over one-half can be accommodated. Of this number only 47,369 are provided for by private schools.

Here's a Healthful Place to Live.

The tables of vital statistics of New Jersey for the past year are almost ready for the printer. From the figures already procurable it appears that Plainfield's death rate is less than even last year, being only 16.89 per 1,000 inhabitants. Elizabeth's rate is 19.30, Morristown's 24.32, New Brunswick's 17.71, Orange's, 24.50, Newark's 27.96, Rahway's 19.32, and Jersey City's 26.96. For Union county the rate is 17.56, and for Somerset 15.58.

Another Successful Choral Society.

The Westfield Musical Society gave their initial concert at the First Methodist Episcopal church in that town Friday evening. The programme which was delightfully rendered to a large audience consisted of part songs, choruses and the cantata of The Wreck of the Hesperus. The chorus comprised 125 voices under the leadership of C. Mortimer Wiske. Among the prominent soloists who assisted were William Lavin and Charles S. Reed.

South Plainfield's Railroad Almost Ready.

Efforts are being made to have the South Plainfield and Roselle, and Newark and Roselle roads completed sufficiently by New Year's Day to begin traffic over them. These two roads are portions of the Lehigh Valley's New York extension, and for the present that company's passenger trains will leave its main track at South Plainfield and go to Newark via Roselle, and to Jersey City over the Pennsylvania road. Passenger trains now run by way of Metuchen.

The Boy Who Loves His Teacher Does Not Need Compulsion.

The Hon. E. O. Chapman, State Superintendent of Public Schools, has declared that children are not compelled, by law or otherwise, to draw water, haul coal or sweep out public schools at the commands of their teachers. If such things were compulsory certain students who receive from teachers requests for favors would rebel, but as long as he may help the country school ma'am of his own free will the chap who loves his presiding genius will be glad of the chance to be gallant and to devote his youthful strength and clumsy manliness to generous and pleasure-bringing self-appointed tasks.

In Union County 's the Chance.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

A New York paper says that "the opportunities for villa sites within a reasonable distance of that city are growing very scarce". This only goes to show how utterly unreliable some New York papers are. Opportunities for villa sites were never more numerous than they are at the present day, and no single improvement that has ever been made in New Jersey has opened up more of these villa sites than the county roads in Union county. Along nearly forty miles of the finest drives imaginable, Union county offers upland sites, level plateaus, brookside retreats, forest homes—everything that the imagination can desire or that wealth and taste can beautify. Besides these the cities of Elizabeth, Plainfield and Rahway offer charming places of residence, while the towns of Westfield, Cranford, Roselle, Summit and Linden offer beautiful places that are nearer, in point of time, to Broadway or Wall street than are the upper streets of New York city itself. Opportunity for villa sites indeed! Any New York paper that says they are scarce within reasonable distance of New York doesn't know what it speaks about, or else is very reckless in its statements.

REOPENING THE PARK HOUSE.

MESSRS. MILLER & POLLION LEASE IT FOR A TERM OF YEARS.

$10,000 to be Spent in Making It a Luxurious Hotel for Summer and Winter.

Frank E. Miller, proprietor of Hotel Netherwood, and J. J. H. Pollion, of Putnam avenue, have signed a lease for the Park House for a term of years. $10,000 is to be spent in putting it in thorough order.

Messrs. Miller & Pollion will take possession about the middle of February. The hotel will be furnished from top to bottom in the most modern style and elegance. Steam heaters will be put in every room. New sanitary plumbing of the most costly devices, will be built throughout the house.

The present kitchen and carving room will be entirely torn out and refitted and furnished. The dining room will be remodeled, and a spacious cafe and billiard room will be added to the hotel's attractions.

It will not be equalled in accomodations, appurtenances and service, by any Summer and Winter hotel in the State. It will be open all the year round, and will especially cater to permanent families.

Mr. Miller will open the Hotel Netherwood every Summer, as usual. All this is the best news the people of this city have heard in years.

Prompt Action Prevents a Serious Fire.

A draught through an open door blew a lace curtain against a jet of burning gas, in one of Stephenson's show windows on North avenue, Friday night, and in an instant the whole front of the store seemed in a blaze. Men rushed in, tore down the flaming curtains, and put out the fire.

Don't Forget the Telephone Girls.

When distributing tokens of remembrance to those who have served you faithfully during the past year, do not forget the telephone operators at the central office. Those young ladies have waited on you day after day with willingness, courtesy, accuracy and dispatch.

Elizabeth Envies Plainfield's Growth.

Because enterprising men in other cities of the county are giving a splendid impetus to building and other improvements, and causing various bright towns to grow with marked rapidity, The Elizabeth Journal wails "Why not Elizabeth?" Citing the case of the Crescent city, The Journal says:

> Plainfield is rapidly growing, and is showing grit, enterprise, determination and vitality, and success is sure. But the capital city of the county: what is it doing? There are large tracts of land within the city limits, land desirable for residence or splendidly situated for manufacturing purposes. It is on the market, to be sure, and the normal growth of the city is gradually occupying it. But somehow there isn't the vitality and enterprise that is shown in Plainfield, and so there is lack of what Elizabeth ought to have, a splendid impetus in the right direction.

Mr. Haines the Next Speaker.

There was a fair attendance in Reform Hall Sunday night. President Harper occupied the chair, Edward B. Titsworth invoked the blessing, and Mr. Vanderbeek's choir, with Miss Doremus as accompanist, rendered a fine selection of music.

The speakers were Wm. B. Ayres, E. B. Titsworth and G. M. Angleman, all of whom advocated the cause of temperance in an able and convincing manner, and commanded unbroken attention on the part of the audience.

The President announced as the speaker for next Sunday evening Samuel A. Haines, a gentleman of great oratorical ability. The meeting closed with the doxology.

Is this Plainfield's Dr. Lowry?

[From The New York Sun.]

A publisher of Protestant Episcopal literature, who comes continually in contact with clergymen, is disposed to think that a reaction will soon set in Father Ignatius's favor, so far as inviting him to the larger churches is concerned, if it has not already begun. He instances his being asked to St George's church on the first Sunday in January as proof of this. He is quite confident that Father Ignatius will ultimately compel the admiration and respect which thus far has been withheld.

The Rev. Mr. Lowry, who asked Father Ignatius disagreeable questions on Tuesday in connection with the Romish tendencies of monasticism, told this publisher immediately afterward that Father Ignatius was a Jesuit in disguise.

An Old-Fashioned Winter.

There has been an encouraging beginning for the people who want to see a hard Winter. The Connecticut river is frozen over, the Hudson is well covered with ice, and the canals all over the country are closed for the season. This is doing remarkably well for December, and savors somewhat of the "old-fashioned Winter" so many people are fond of talking about. After the experience of the last two years an old-fashioned Winter will be welcomed by almost everybody. It will give steady employment to the miners of the coal regions—will guarantee an abundant crop of ice for the coming Summer—will cover and protect the Winter wheat and give prospect of a good harvest. It is true the bitter blasts will bring much discomfort and suffering to those who are not prepared for them—but after all it may be a question whether the old-fashioned Winter doesn't bring with it more real comfort and enjoyment than the modern kind. At any rate, an old-fashioned Winter in three or four years is enjoyable just for the sake of variety. The growler will growl and the kicker will kick, whether the weather is old-fashioned or new.

The Only Newspaper for Miles Around.

Friday's DAILY PRESS was a great issue. To begin with, there was a throng of advertisements too numerous to recapitulate—advertisements which in themselves were news, and news of the most live sort, to readers of every degree. Especially in the family is it true that not to read the news contained in the day's advertisement is to miss much of what the family is most concerned to know. THE PRESS is compelled everyday to find room for a much larger amount of advertising than any other publication in this section. Still, it sacrifices not one tittle of the whole chronicle of the day as received through its unrivalled connections. The superiority of these over all others is sufficiently shown in every issue and is frequently notably illustrated.

In addition to the record of the day's occurrences over the entire civilized world, Friday's DAILY PRESS was enriched by picturesquely illustrated articles concerning the interesting history of the Rhineland potters, the famous mountaineer evangelist of Virginia, the quaint characters of the Florida flatwoods, and other matters, curious and entertaining,—all delineated with fidelity and vigor by superior artists and writers.

Of purely local matters nearly seven columns of fresh news were given, every paragraph of which all readers must have found interesting. Here were recorded as has been recorded nowhere else the doings of the people, the happenings of the day, the news, the whole news, and nothing but the news, of Plainfield and its environs, of supreme importance to every resident of the city.

There is only one Evening Newspaper published within the twelve-mile radius of the North avenue railway station, and more people are every day finding out the truth of the position. That paper is THE DAILY PRESS.

KOCH'S CURE.

A Plainfield Doctor Tells All About It in a Very Interesting and Intelligible Way.

Because of everybody's intense interest in the alleged cure for consumption that Dr. Koch of Berlin has discovered—and which the whole World is discussing and eagerly seizing every word in relation to—a PRESS reporter was detailed to-day to interview Dr. Comegys Paul, of Park avenue, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, and ask him to state just what was true about it all. The doctor put aside his other duties for the time, and courteously assented to the reporter's request. What he said cannot be better told than in his own words—a statement concise but complete, instructive but interesting:

"As seventeen per cent. of all deaths is caused by pulmonary consumption, the general public is intimately concerned in the success of Koch's cure. If it will meet the requirements expected, this therapeutic will be by far the most important discovery of this century. As regards the nature and physical character of the lymph, Professor Koch says 'I am unable to make any statement, as my research is not yet concluded. The remedy is a brownish transparent liquid which does not require special care to prevent decomposition. For use this fluid must be more or less diluted and the dilutions are liable to decomposition if prepared with distilled water; bacterial growths soon develop, the liquid becomes turbid and unfit for use.' Therefore it would seem that the proper administration requires a freshly prepared solution. Koch's lymph has no effect when introduced into the stomach, but must be injected subcutaneously. The syringe recommended by the great scientist may be replaced by the ordinary hypodermic if aseptic conditions are strictly observed. In the present stage of medical science all causes of septicaemia are guarded against with the accuracy afforded by tentative and exact chemical investigation.

"The place preferred for hypodermic injection is the space between the scapulae or shoulder blades as it produces the least reaction and is almost painless.

"All physiological and therapeutic experimenters select the rabbit and guinea-pig as their medium, and Koch's labors afford new proof that the all important law of experiment on animals is not conclusive for the human being. A full grown guinea-pig will take without apparent effect eight times as large a dose, subcutaneously, as a healthy, well nourished man, with intense effect. Calculated by body weight, the 1500th part of the quantity which has no appreciable effect on the guinea-pig acts powerfully on the human subject.

"Professor Koch describes the symptoms arising from an injection of 0.25 cubic centimetre as follows: 'Three or four hours after the injection there came on pain in the limbs, fatigue, inclination to cough, difficulty in breathing. In the fifth hour an unusually violent attack of ague followed and at the same time there was sickness, vomiting and rise of temperature to 39.6° C. After twelve hours the symptoms abated.' You will observe that this was the effect of an excessive dose upon a human subject.

"Upon the tuberculous human being a very small dose causes a marked reaction. Even the small quantity of 0.001 cubic centimetre, or even 0.0005 cubic centimetre in delicate children, causes a reaction of chill and fever with a temperature of 103-5° F. with coughing, fatigue, nausea, and sometimes a slight jaundice. The local reaction can best be observed where the affection is visible, as in lupus, a tuberculous, rodent ulcer. Only the diseased parts are attacked by the remedy, and in lupus the separation of the diseased from the healthy tissues is manifest in a very short time, i. e., a disease that has continued its work of destruction for years, begins to capitulate to this treatment in three or four days.

"Its specific action is striking and perceptible to the eye and touch in tuberculosis of the glands, bones, joints, etc.

"By the aid of Koch's lymph doubtful cases of consumption can be clearly diagnosed, and we can form a definite opinion in cases where it had before been impossible to discover bacilli or elastic fibres in the expectorated matter, or by physical examination. Tuberculosis of skin, bone, glands, etc, may be easily and with certainty recognized.

"In its curative effect Koch's lymph does not kill the bacilli, or microbes, but the tuberculous tissue itself, and its action is limited to tuberculous tissue only. When the habitat of the bacillus tuberculosis is rendered untenable it is thrown off as a slough and its occupants are eliminated with the necrotic debris.

"Patients treated with this remedy show great susceptibility at first but gradually evince a marked toleration. Therefore the treatment is by slowly increased doses.

"The medical profession are inclined to place every confidence in Koch's discovery. We are now, in a measure, prepared to consider the prophylaxis of diphtheria and the zymotic diseases. Scarlet fever may be eventually robbed of its terrors and rendered comparatively innocuous. When Sir Wm. Jenner destroyed susceptibility to smallpox by vaccination, he opened a grand field for research which, it would seem, has been but tardily taken advantage of. But Pasteur and Koch, with their numerous collaborators, now afford us a glimpse into the future that awakens great expectation in the mind of every thinking man."

TRAVELING SALESMEN.

Their Opportunities and Dangers Discussed by a Man of Experience.

We take pleasure in copying from the Boston Daily Journal, for the benefit of the many young men engaged in business, the following report of an address by W. H. Baldwin, president of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, upon "Traveling Salesmen: Their Opportunities and Their Dangers." For twenty-five years Mr. Baldwin was engaged in active business in Boston, previous to his accepting the presidency of the Christian Union in 1868.

In opening his address Mr. Baldwin spoke of the almost universal custom in all lines of trade of selling by traveling salesmen or drummers, and, if properly conducted, with mutual advantage to both buyer and seller. He would not, however, he said, stop to discuss the question as to whether or not it would be better to do away with the system altogether, but would deal with the system as he found it. The system itself was of modern growth, having originated not over forty or fifty years ago, and was vastly different now from what it was then. Much of the secrecy at first enjoined upon the salesman was now removed, and men in the same line of business started off together, traveled together, and sold customers in the same city.

One important factor in the change of the system was the progress in the means of public travel. In 1809 it took seventy-four hours to go by stage from Boston to Albany or New York, while in 1890 the time to either place is six hours, and there are six trains to the former and thirteen to the latter place daily.

To the traveling salesman who had faithfulness, truth, a keen sense of honor toward the firm and toward his customers, perseverance, patience and a lively attention to business, there were grand and ever-increasing opportunities. One of these was the opportunity to make the acquaintance of a large number of buyers who had been or would prove to be true business friends. Another opportunity was that of seeing the country and thus obtaining an idea of its extent, its wealth and its resources. Still another opportunity was that to make such a mark in business as would lead to fuller confidence on the part of the firm, and finally to partnership. All of these and other opportunities should be made the most of and improved on every occasion.

Dangers of many kinds assailed the traveling salesman, and to guard against them advice from older men or from the firm should be given and taken. Chief among the dangers was the temptation to other than strict uprightness. A young man if he would get ahead must make up his mind to start right, go right and keep right. Success in business was seldom won by luck, but by hard and persevering work.

Physical dangers would be encountered, and nothing could avert them but a strict attention to the laws of health. Good hotels and regularity in meals were to be sought and early hours kept. Economy in personal expenditure should be studied and also in traveling expenses which the firm had to pay.

Moral dangers were more insidious than all the others, and should be more strictly guarded against. The social glass should be avoided, and no young man ever need fear that an honest and steadfast refusal to drink would lower him in the estimation of any customer worth retaining. No warning against the social evil or gambling could be too strong. One of the worst things a young man could do was to allow himself to be drawn to the gaming table to pass an idle hour or for the sake of "killing time." Often times the first step was the fatal one. A taste for reading could be cultivated and many an otherwise idle hour could thus be profitably spent. One maxim the young man should always observe was "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath. It was a necessity for rest and communion with God, and should always be observed. Nothing should tempt a young man to do any business upon that day.

In closing Mr. Baldwin said: "Young men, I have spoken very plainly to you upon a subject which I deem of vital importance to all young men who now have or may have in the future the position of a traveling salesman. I have spoken to you from my own personal observations in the past, and not from hearsay alone or printed information. I have packed my trunk with samples of merchandise, started for the far West, have stopped at the principal towns and cities between Boston and the Mississippi, and I assure you that the words of counsel, warning and advice I have now given you are such as you will need, and such, if you will take them to heart, as shall help you to become true men, successful in the real meaning of the word, an honor to society and a blessing to the world."

A Congregation Aroused.

An up-town minister, to get even with a sleepy congregation, sang out in loud voice: "Wake up, here; there is a man standing before you with half a shirt on his back." The sleepers awakened, and the sisters of the congregation presented him later on with a dozen span new shirts. He then explained that he was really not in need of shirts. He had a whole shirt on when he made the announcement, but half was on his back and half on his front. All present smiled and enjoyed the joke, as they now saw it.

Good as a Nurse-Girl.

A California paper tells how a mountain lion lay down beside a little boy in a field and guarded him from danger until his mother returned. The story is just as good as if it were true, as the moral is there. The said moral is: "Discharge your nurse-girl and hire a mountain lion in her place."

Not the Right Color.

An Ohio poet having written a poem on "The Little Red School-House," some one set out and began inspecting, and of one hundred and thirty-two country school-houses he found only two painted that color. It's the little white school-house which takes the cake in the country.

How Mr. Bumpers Got Into Trouble.

William Bumpers—Maw, was you ever an actress?

Mrs. Bumpers (bridling)—The idea! Certainly not!

W. Bumpers—Then why did you dress like a ballet girl?

Mrs. Bumpers (amazed)—I never did! What's got into the boy?

W. Bumpers—Well, paw's got a photograph of a ballet girl, and when I caught him looking at it he said it was your picture.

Mrs. Bumpers (with deadly calm)—Oh, yes, to be sure! William, tell your paw I want to speak to him.—West Shore.

Union County Orphans' Court.

On the application of Rowland M. Stover, administrator, &c., of Peter Dunn, Deceased, for sale of land to pay debts.—Order to Show Cause.

Rowland M Stover, Administrator, &c. of Peter Dunn, deceased, having exhibited to this Court under oath, a just and true account of the personal estate and debts of said deceased, whereby it appears that the personal estate of said deceased is insufficient to pay his debts, and requested the aid of the Court in the premises. It is, on this twenty-sixth day of November, eighteen hundred and ninety, ordered that all persons interested in the lands, tenements, and real estate of said Peter Dunn, deceased, appear before the Court, at the Court House, in the city of Elizabeth, on the twenty-eighth day of January, next, at 10 A. M., to show cause why so much of the said lands, tenements, hereditaments, and real estate of the said Peter Dunn, deceased, should not be sold as will be sufficient to pay his debts, or the residue thereof, as the case may require.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—Twenty [illegible] were baptized at the First Baptist church Sunday.

—The Coachman's League will receive their friends at Association Hall, Fourth and Liberty streets, Christmas night.

—"A girl comes here for cigarettes every other day," says a local dealer; "and I know she smokes them herself".

—City Collector Johnson's tax receipts Saturday amounted to [illegible]. And it wasn't a good day for heavy collections either.

—The rooms of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are to be open to the public hereafter Thursdays, Friday and Saturday evenings.

—Wm. Hession, an employe of The Pond Machine Tool Company, had a foot seriously crushed by the falling of a heavy plate of sheet iron upon it, Saturday.

—The purchaser who buys at home feels the satisfaction of one who has done a good thing for himself and at the same time a good thing for the place in which he lives.

—The Hunterdon Grand Jury did not find a single indictment at their sitting this Fall, and Judge Bodine complimented the county on the good behavior of its citizens.

—The Sisters of Charity will be very grateful for any donations of money, food or clothing for the relief of the poor, that may be left at their residence, 66 West Sixth street.

—Those who don't know where to send Christmas gifts for the Children's Home may leave them at the home of Mrs. N. E. Kimball, the President, Fifth street, near Broadway.

—Where is there another Evening Newspaper whose local columns are as original, as newsy, as readable, as those of THE DAILY PRESS? THE PRESS is Plainfield's Only Newspaper.

—Robert McGinnis and Fred Robinson fought on South Second street at midnight Saturday. To-day each paid a $10 fine. Their excuse for fighting was that they were intoxicated.

—Plainfield's getting to be a big boy now. The New York newspapers devote to it a great deal of attention. But the only facts which they give are those which are first recorded in THE PRESS.

—In the struggle to set aside the will of the late William Moore of this city, there has been much evidence to show he was incapacitated. The testimony of Sergeant Lynch has been specially strong.

—This is the tea table conversation of the season in the presence of the children as conducted on the spelling book lines. The wife says:—"I think a s-l-e-d would be nice for J-o-h-n-n-y." "Yes," says the husband, "and a b-a-b-y c-o-a-c-h for S-a-l-l-i-e."

—Louis Case Teller, who insisted before Judge Codington that he wanted his name recorded that way, went to jail for twenty days Monday morning because he didn't have $10 to squander on a fine. The charge was drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

—The music used by the Warren Union Mission for the celebration of Christmas time is composed by the Rev. Robert Lowry of this city. On Sunday Dec. 28, the religious exercises, and on Tuesday afternoon and evening the festival will take place.

—It has been found necessary to try to establish in Jersey City a "rescue mission" such as the Florence Band of New York, described in [illegible], recently. The principal object is to reclaim the numerous wayward women of that wicked town.

—The Christmas entertainment of the Crescent Avenue Sunday school will be held in the Chapel on Friday, Dec. 26; the primary department at 2:30 and the main school at 8 o'clock, when that prince of monologists, J. William Macy, will entertain.

—"The young man who bluffs you with an invitation to a sleigh ride is scarce this year"—says a Plainfield girl—"We had them by the score last Winter and the Winter before, when there was no snow. This Winter, you know, promises to be old-fashioned."

—A [illegible] who found a local drug store temporarily in charge of a small boy asked: "Got in any of Koch's lymph yet?" "Cox's lymph?"—replied the boy, with a serious air—"No, sir: I guess not; but we have Coxe's hive sirup, an' it's just as good."

—There will be skating for everybody, and a band concert, at The Crescent, Christmas' and New Year's afternoons and evenings. Miss Houghton will give exhibitions on Christmas day. It will positively be her last appearance as she goes on the New York stage a few days afterwards.

—The hackmen at the North avenue railroad station have for some time made a practice of taking naps, between trains, in one of the stage coaches. Saturday the proprietor caught four of them in his vehicle, fastened them in, drove them to Demler's Hotel in the mountains, made them "treat", and then caused them to foot it back to town.

—Fritz Frieon, who was arrested in North Plainfield Monday on the charge of stealing a bicycle from George W. Morrison, says he sold the machine, which was worth about $100, to a colored man for $30. This the colored man denies, and no trace of the machine can be found. The boy has been an inmate of the State Reform School and was recently discharged.

—The Westfield brethren are looking forward to a great treat. The Leader says: "Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, expects to entertain its friends on a grand scale on the occasion of the installation of its officers, Tuesday evening, January 20, when a full performance of some standard play by the Gilbert Dramatic Company of Brooklyn will be given in Music Hall.

—There are few standing organizations whose annual meetings and public discussions are of more practical interest and utility than those of the New Jersey Sanitary Association, which met recently at Trenton. Sanitation is not, very unfortunately, a popular subject, and yet the papers and discussions usually brought before the State Association are of great importance, and are listened to with marked attention and positive interest.

—One result of the stringency of the money market has been to decrease the deposits in banks everywhere, so that statements made now do not show as large sums of money on deposit as were shown six months ago or more. The money has been drawn out to pay bills, in many cases; but a very large drain on bank deposits has been caused by the low prices of stocks in the market. Securities ran down to such a low figure that men who had money not invested and lying on deposit in the banks, drew it out to buy stocks with. Some who bought on margins failed in some cases to realize, but those who bought outright, as an investment, are moderately certain to realize largely on the appreciation of their purchases.

All indorse what the proprietors have said relative to the merits of Salvation Oil. It is the greatest cure on earth for pain. Price only 25 cents.

PERSONALIA.

Secretary Kate F. Kimball of the C. L. S. C., is at home for Christmas.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills is now conducting revival meetings at Amsterdam, N. Y.

Samuel Townsend of Rockview avenue returned Sunday morning from a short business trip to New England and Canada.

Miss Minnie J. French, of Craig place, North Plainfield, is home for the Christmas holidays from the Woman's College, Baltimore.

Robert Gaston Smith, of 111 Broadway, is convalescent from a severe illness which has kept him home from college several weeks.

Mr. Van Buren, of this city, is noted by the Bound Brook Chronicle as one of those present at the [illegible] of the Winter's assemblies in that town.

Editor N. D. C. Hodges, of Franklin place, has been granted another patent—this time for a method of protecting buildings from lightning.

The grand jurors from North Plainfield chosen on the Somerset County panel to-day were John Bodine, Robert Cook, Israel C. Coon and Hiram H. Tunison.

Four children were baptized at the Trinity Reformed church Sunday, among them Cornelius Frelinghuysen Schenck, the young son of the pastor.

Miss Aritta Cutler of London, Canada, a student at Swarthmore College, Philadelphia, is spending the holidays with her cousin, Miss Obelia Vail, at 67 Park avenue.

Patents recently granted to Jerseymen include one to George H. Babcock of West Eighth street, for a design; and one to Editor I. D. C. Hodges of Franklin avenue, for a sewing machine cabinet.

The amateur theatrical entertainment at The Casino, last Thursday was not by Pyramus and Thisbe Dramatic Society. They will make their appearance later, dates and particulars of which will be given in these columns.

Will Runyon, of East Second street, who is a Junior at Yale, has gone on a Western trip with the Yale College Glee Club, and will delight the denizens of Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee, and other places, with his rich bass voice.

To swell the subscription list for the benefit of George Staples, the unfortunate brakeman who recently lost a hand while drilling cars at the North avenue station, the commuters on the Howard and Wadsworth club cars have contributed a total of $75.

A number of newspaper men were the guests of C. B. Ripley, Esq., of Ripley Hill, Westfield, at a special matinee in Palmer's theatre, New York, yesterday afternoon. The programme was thoroughly enjoyable, and the courtesy was fully appreciated.

Alfred Holmes and Edward Patterson of this city, students at Princeton, were the guests of Prof. Murray, of the College, at dinner, the other evening. They were thus honored to meet the Rev. Mr. Richards, of the Crescent Avenue church, who preached to the Princeton students the next day.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Fosgate celebrated their tin wedding anniversary at their home on Park avenue, Monday last week. A large party of relatives were entertained in a royal manner. Among those present were Mrs. Fosgate's father, Jas. Moore, chief engineer of the Central Railroad, and his family.

Mrs. J. C. Fernald, Miss C. R. Yates, Mrs. Eaton, Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, and Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, comprising the Evangelistic Committee of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, met at Mrs. Tomlinson's Friday evening and among other important matters decided to keep open the Union's rooms every week-day evening, for everybody to visit.

John Church & Co., of Cincinnati, have just published for the holidays some new piano compositions by Dorsey W. Hyde, of this city. They say of him, "He comes warmly recommended by Wm. H. Sherwood, and others of like standing. His music is a sufficient testimonial of his worth. Fresh, original and melodious, it will interest teacher, pupil, and amateur."

The Hon. John Ulrich is back from a trip through Canada and the South, rejuvenated and resuscitated. A number of clients and friends who dropped in at the ex-Assemblyman's office on North avenue, to-day, and asked the young man they saw there when the "Judge" would be home, would hardly believe it when the young man said "Why here I am." And so he was.

All the way from Santa Barbara came to THE PRESS office, on Friday, a box of California fruits picked and packed by the hands of rare old Martin Thorn, who seems to have turned his face but not his memory from Plainfield for ever. The box contains a sample of the fruit of the live oak, Japanese persimmons, olives, pepper fruit, and strawberry guavas. In a letter he says his neighbors go in bathing every day.

The notice of the death Friday morning of William Winslow Van Slyck, formerly of this city, will be received with a shock by a large number of the people of Plainfield. He was about twenty years of age and the elder of the two remaining sons of Mr. and Mrs. Van Slyck whose friends and sincere sympathizers number a host in this city. Particulars of his death are not yet received except that it occurred at his home, 45 West 73d. street, New York.

MARRIED IN SPITE OF ALL.

The Bride, Though Death Seemed Nigh, said that Her Nuptials Must Proceed.

Rebecca Dunson, the colored woman who was seriously injured by leaping from the platform of a flying express train at Netherwood last Thursday morning, would not let a fractured leg, a broken head, and a mass of bruises, interfere with her nuptials, which had been set for Monday, so she was married, in the afternoon, to James Long, sexton of the Trinity Reformed church. When Miss Dunson was injured she was on her way to New York to have a last look at her wedding trousseau before having it shipped to this city. Her prospective bridesmaid was to meet her at the Netherwood station. Miss Dunson by mistake boarded an express train which leaves the Plainfield station earlier than the local train she was to have taken, and though the express flew past Netherwood at full speed she determined not to fail in her appointment, and so leaped from the car platform to the ground.

Her injuries were not at first, and are not now, supposed to be fatal, but Miss Dunson, hearing it suggested that some minor part of her anatomy having a big Latin name had been damaged, got the idea that she was going to die. Monday was, however, to have been her wedding day, and she insisted, and her lover acquiesced, that the ceremony should be performed just as though nothing had occurred to mar its joyousness. The Rev. J. A. Stafford therefore conducted the marriage at Miss Dunson's bedside as far as possible just as had been planned months before.

The bride has banished from her honeymoon the idea, born of romantic melancholy, that she is going to die, and now says that she's the happiest woman in the world and can't get well too quick.

Safe Record.

So confident are the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy in their ability to cure chronic nasal catarrh, no matter how bad or of how long standing, that they offer, in good faith, the above reward for a case which they cannot cure. Remedy sold by druggists at 50 cents.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

A Woman Leaps From a Flying Express Train Rather Than Pass her Station.

Rebecca Dunson, a colored woman living at the home of Mrs. Stansberry, in Exchange alley, nearly lost her life as the result of her own folly last Thursday. She boarded a railway train at the North avenue station, to go to Netherwood. She made a mistake in the train, however, and was being carried at a rapid speed past the station of her destination when she concluded that she'd venture to alight anyway, and plumped herself from the platform of the car to the ground. She rolled over and over, and the wonder is that she was not killed outright. She was brought on a train to Plainfield again, and was then carried to her home on a stretcher. Dr. J. T. Fritts, the railway physician, found that she had sustained a severe fracture of the right leg near the ankle, had received numerous ugly scalp wounds, and was covered with bruises from head to foot. She says she had an idea there would be just as much fun in jumping off the fast train as there would be in being carried past her station and missing her appointment; but now she is ready to testify to the value of education by experience as opposed to the beliefs of theory.

ARTISTS WITH HEARTS.

Amateur Photographers Remember the Hospital Sufferers.

The Plainfield Camera Club held their annual meeting Tuesday last week, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President—Oscar S. Teale.
Vice President—Geo. H. Babcock.
Secretary—Geo. E. Greenleaf.
Treasurer—Wm. H. Lyon, Jr.

All these were re-elected except Mr. Babcock. Three new members were elected, and the Secretary read his yearly report of the improvements and advancement made by the club. The report was eminently satisfactory.

The Treasurer's report showed that the club's finances were in an exceedingly flourishing condition. Under new business a committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of the club's sending an exhibit to the World's Amateur Photographers' Exhibition which will be held at Vienna in April, 1891. After the regular business was disposed of, Mr. Teale read a very interesting and instructive paper upon lantern-slide making, and illustrated the same by practical demonstrations and valuable hints.

THE PRESS has always upheld and approved of the work this organization is doing in Plainfield—maintaining that it elevates the tastes of not only its members themselves, but of the public at large. The club now has started on a good work. It proposes to collect about fifty pictures to be placed in an album and donate the same to the Muhlenbergh Hospital. They will also loan to the Y. M. C. A. quite a number of "frames," for decorating their parlor on the occasion of their New Year's day reception. May the Plainfield Camera Club "live long and prosper!"

THE MYSTERY OF A HIDDEN PURSE.

Though Locked up in a Closet the Night of the Wedding, the Money Was Gone Next Day.

Mrs. John H. Stevens, of 30 East Second street, has lost a sum of money in a very mysterious manner, but says she has a clue to where it has gone, and threatens to make things very warm and interesting for a certain party she suspects.

The story of Mrs. Stevens told in her own words is as follows:

"While attending the wedding of my nephew, Edward Connett, at 31 Lincoln place, Nov. 11, I was obliged to stay all night, as the wedding took place at eight o'clock in the evening; and while dressing for the wedding I said 'I have no pocket in my dress'. Mrs. Connett, the mother of the groom, said to me 'Give me your pocket book, and I will put it with Bell's and mine in a closet'. She did so. She says she locked the door of the closet containing the purse, and hid the key, and that no one could get in but herself, unless they saw her hide the key.

"Next morning, however, at about ten o'clock, I went to my aunt's to spend the day, and while sitting in the parlor I opened my pocket-book, which had been returned to me, and found that thirty dollars had been removed. I was excited when I found my money gone, but made careful investigation, and think I am sure of the identity of the one who took it. And that person shall be severely punished, if I can only secure convincing proofs."

Women in the Methodist church.

Dr. Henry K. Carroll's paper, The Independent, will this week publish returns from 112 districts of the Methodist Episcopal church of the vote on the question of changing the constitution so as to admit women to the General Conference. The total vote of these 112 districts is 102,086, of which 59,450 were cast in favor, and 42,636 against the women, showing a majority in their favor of 16,814. These districts represent portions of fifty-nine conferences. There are, in all, upward of 500 districts.

The Haseelmann Testimonial.

An audience which would have been three times as large but for the storm, thoroughly enjoyed a very pleasing programme which was presented last week at the Gesang and Turn Verein Hall for the benefit of G. E. Haseelmann. Among the features were vocal and instrumental music, a musical tableau entitled "The Three Germans," which was interpreted by Messrs. Mans, Dreifeldt and Tonnemann; and George Taggart's farce, "A Howling Success," in which Messrs. Howard, Will and Tiffany Spencer, the original players, took part, with the author, and which went just as merrily as it did at its first production in October.

An Unusual Midnight Illumination.

Some of the electric light wires in the Broadway and LaGrande avenue neighborhood were grounded by the storm Dec. 17, and for a while total darkness resulted. Later, light was restored, and the lights flashed up and down like the flickering of flame in the wind; and subsequently the lamps burned with an intensity of brightness that woke people out of a sound sleep with its glare. The people were so astonished to see the streets as light as day that they could not for some time get their eyes closed again, for wondering what had happened to make the lamps burn to the high candle power they nominally possessed but which they had never hitherto reached. The light was so brilliant that the backs of houses, as well as the fronts, were brightly illuminated by the lamps of the blocks beyond. The electric light people to-day said that the breaks in the wires had been repaired, and that everything was all right again, and it may be inferred that the same monotonous light which the streets have known so long will again prevail to-night. The question presents itself, however, whether it is not in the power of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company, purchasers of the Plainfield electric light plant, to burn the lamps throughout the city at their full capacity every night, and give the people the candle-power they are supposed to get. If the electricity can assist the works to give such an illumination one night, can't the company give as good a light every night!

Do not hesitate, when you have taken a cold, to get a bottle of Mines' Cough Cure. It may save you dire consequences. Make a note of it, so as not to forget it.

A NIGHT IN THE COURT OF COMUS

PLAINFIELD AMATEURS INTERPRET ENGLISH COMEDY AT THE CASINO.

Generous Patronage of the Grace Church Benefit—An Excellent Entertainment at the Home of the Country Club—Admirable Acting by All—Even the Novices Win Moderate Triumph.

To the large and cultured audience who were present at the amateur theatricals at The Casino, Thursday night was full of enjoyment. It was a pleasure even to experience, during the brief walk or drive from one's residence, the invigorating coldness of the atmosphere, and afterwards the charming contrast of the warmth and comfort and beauty of the cosy home of the Union County Country Club; and all this was only one of many delightful incidents.

The Casino looked its prettiest. A number of finishing touches had been applied since the public last saw the artistic interior, and the stage pictures were shown for the first time. Whenever the rich folds of the new curtain were drawn back there were exclamations of delight that Plainfield audiences might at last behold in their own town stage scenery that was not an eye-sore. The canvases of the three scenes exhibited were very good, and the way that the furniture and various other accessories were arranged produced an excellent effect. The perfecting touch of woman was plainly visible in all the stage setting, and each scene was in consequence beyond the reach of adverse criticism. That The Casino is rich in opportunities for securing superb furnishings for anything it may choose to stage was quite apparent.

Three gems of histrionic comedy were presented during the evening. In the first, "Ruth's Romance", a Summer evening's sketch, by Fred. W. Broughton, appeared Miss Caroline N. Betts as "Ruth Carey", Mr. E. C. Perkins as "Jack Dudley", and Mr. W. T. Pelletier as "Capt. Wilton". The scene was in rural England, where "Ruth" was following the profession of milkmaid, for a period of three months, in response to the terms of the will of an eccentric uncle, who bequeathed to her his valuable estate on condition that during the Summer following his death she desert the fashionable frivolity of society life in London and earn her own honest living, by the hard work of her soft white hands, at this country farm-house. "Capt. Wilton", her sister's husband, had fled the world's megapolis to avoid pressing financial engagements, and was taking life easily, so far as worriment over his debts would let him, in the same suburban retreat. "Jack Dudley", whose father "was in the baronetcy business", "a real live baron", had seen so much of village maiden simplicity on the stage that he sought out the real article and found "Ruth", "saving her from a watery grave"—along the highway with an umbrella. No sooner had he and "Ruth", after a most amusing courtship, plighted their troth, than the jealous lover took occasion to mistake "Captain Wilton" for a rival, while "Wilton" feared "Dudley" as a creditor, and all sorts of absurdities grew out of the two blunders. After a tangle of grotesque incidents "Ruth" succeeded in straightening out the snarl, and the audience was left to imagine the happy future of the trio.

Miss Betts made an excellent "Ruth," naively impudent, a charming tease, simulating to a nice degree the airs of an English milkmaid who could not wholly conceal her city breeding. Mr. Perkins developed well the dry humor and the matter-of-fact love affair of his part. Mr. Pelletier, as the happy-go-lucky, harrassed debtor, entered fully into the spirit of his disguise. The final tableau, with "Wilton", grateful and merry over "Ruth's" generous-hearted insistence that she would pay his debts, leading the way for the umbrella-protected lovers on a long walk through a dimly-moonlit lane, was as capitally done as was all the rest of the performance.

"Petticoat Perfidy", by Sir Charles L. Young, Baronet, brought before the house Miss Maude Agnes Bowers, as "Mrs. Mountrevor"; Miss Maude VanBoskerck, as "Mrs. Norwood Jones"; and Mrs. Charles E. Brooks, as "Juliette". The comedietta was a bright string of whimsical plot and counter-plot between two darling friends who hate each other as fervently and disguise their hatred as cleverly as only rival women jealous of social honors and attentions can. The stately "Mrs. Mountrevor" and the vivacious "Mrs. Norwood Jones" were both true to the author's models. They carried out in excellent style the deceptions practiced one on the other. Miss Bowers feigned with splendid success the various emotions which her impersonation compelled her to undergo, and her gestures, posings, and elocution, were as faultless and charming as was anticipated from her thorough study of histrionic art. Miss VanBoskerck's raptures over her crowning triumph of the social season, when she accompanied "Juliette," "Mrs. Mountrevor's" maid, who was disguised in "Mrs. Mountrevor's" garments as "the Countess Blavanescoki", to the opera; her distress when she discovered the mockery, and realized that she had humiliated herself before all the people of that upper-tendom that she adored; and the chagrin of both "Mrs. Norwood Jones" and "Mrs. Mountrevor" when they found that while duping each other they themselves had been duped by the Lords and what-nots whose tender missives they had treasured, and learned that these high-minded gentlemen had been in reality adoring "Juliette" instead of themselves: were all particularly well done. Mrs. Brooks acted superbly the double role she undertook. Her French accent as the maid, her "delightfully Russian" manners and patronizing confidences as the Countess; her "cute" slips of the tongue as she naively imparted information concerning her "two nights and Sunday off during the week" and other matters; her surprising wit at recovering what seemed betraying sentences in her conversation as the Countess with "Mrs. Jones"; her charming artificial ingenuousness: were all skillful interpretations of the most difficult impersonation of the evening.

Mrs. Brooks again gave an excellent rendition of a none too easy part in "Little Toddlekins", a comic drama from the pen of Charles Matthews. Here she became the antiquated spinster daughter, "age 45", of "J. Robinson Brownsmith", a young man just turned thirty. The explanation of this peculiar paternal situation of "Mr. Brownsmith" was found in one of those absurd matrimonial complications where a young man marries a wealthy old woman with a full-fledged daughter. To add to the difficulties of elucidating the relationships in "Mr. Brownsmith's" family "Mr. Brownsmith" married off, in the end, after much succession of humorous dilemmas, his daughter, "age 45", and "with 300£ a year", to the father of the sweet young woman whom he himself wedded as his second wife, after eight other engagements which "Amanthis", "Little Toddlekins", his "wee pet of a daughter", had succeeded in shattering. So he became father of his own father-in-law, and his wife consented to be "mamma" to the forty-eight-year-old "Little Toddlekins", prim ringlets and all, whom she had refused to permit to call her "mamma" instead, and who came so near breaking off this ninth match of her young "papa".

Mrs. Brooks was an exquisite "Amanthis". Miss Bessie Morgan's "Susan" was as good as the part could be made, and her distractions over the two trials of her life, "Little Toddlekins" and "Capt. Littlepop's" cigar stumps, were very amusing. Mr. W. R. Cook made a "Barnaby Babbicombe (of Babbicombe Bay)" that would have done the heart of Mr. Matthews good to see. He was extremely funny, in his reading of his part of the dialogue, in his gestures and actions, and in his manipulation of the jumping-jack for "Little Toddlekins"; his make-up was excellent. Mr. C. E. Brooks assumed the personality of "Capt. Littlepop" to the utmost satisfaction of the audience. His eye glass, his cigars, his nonchalance that nothing but sight of simpering "Amanthis" could daunt, all afforded food for much laughter. Mrs. W. T. Pelletier was perfectly suited to the part of "Annie Babbicombe", and won deserved applause. Mr. Pelletier as "Mr. Brownsmith" was again highly enjoyed.

All of the amateurs who appeared during the evening will be welcomed heartily by the people whenever they again come before the public. The popularity of the ladies won them handsome bouquets during the progress of the comedies. Some very good local hits were introduced during the evening. The intermissions were somewhat prolonged, but one could forgive the length of waiting in the rare enjoyment of listening to such delightful music as came from the piano at Mrs. L. E. Howard's touch. Her selections were well chosen, and admirably rendered.

TWO CASES OF INTEREST HERE.

A Plainfielder Who is n't in It, and a North Plainfielder Who Was.

The trial of Henry Williams, a druggist of Asbury Park, was concluded Dec. 16 before Judge Conover, at Freehold, resulting in the conviction of Williams on a charge of selling liquor illegally. The jury did not remain out over five minutes. The evidence was overwhelming against him, and was procured by the Law and Order League. The testimony of the witnesses brought out the fact that all that was necessary to procure a drink of rum at the drug store was to call for a "ball." Williams made no defence.

Some people not acquainted with George Williams, proprietor of the Crescent Pharmacy on Park avenue, this city, have thought he was the druggist in the above case. He is not the same, although he, also, is proprietor of an Asbury Park pharmacy.

The case of Frank Harris, who conducted the notorious Neptune club at Asbury Park, and was arrested for keeping a gambling house, was called, but the defendant did not appear. The court declared his bail bond for $500 forfeited. Associated with Harris in the proprietorship of the "club" was a young man at one time a member of the choir of the Church of the Holy Cross, and who is still a resident of North Plainfield.

FOUND DYING ON THE STREET.

Jack Frost, Assisted by Tom and Jerry, Brings a Young Man to Death's Door.

Daniel Sullivan nearly froze to death on the street on last Thursday night. Policeman Glass found him lying on the pavement, at ten o'clock, as stiff as a log, and ice cold, and what little breath came from his lips was also chill. At the station house Sergeant Lynch and City Physician Manning labored over the man till three o'clock in the morning, before they restored him to consciousness and were sure that he would live. Had he been on the street another hour he must have perished.

Next morning he acknowledged before City Judge Codington that strong drink was the cause of his trouble. He had lain down in the shadow of a fence while intoxicated, and but for a vigilant eye the policeman would have passed him by unnoticed as did other people.

The court impressed on the young man the nearness of his approach to death, and fined him $10, most of which will be needed to pay for medical attendance and for a carriage window which was broken during the transit from Front street to the police station.

Sullivan pawned his watch and chain to Sergeant Lynch for $10, rather than draw his wages so soon from the Pond Machine Tool Works, where he has been working only two weeks.

Westfield to Have a Theatre.

A prominent Westfielder is authority for the statement that his town is to have a theatre, and that an architect now has the plans in preparation.

Bookmakers Sentenced.

The Court at Elizabeth Friday imposed fines and costs amounting to nearly $9,000 on the several race-track bookmakers under indictment. George Johnson, who was convicted yesterday, was fined $500 and costs, and several others who retracted former pleas and pleaded non vult suffered similarly.

Plainfield Veterans Will Visit Westfield.

Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., of this city, will make a visit to Westfield, Christmas night, for the purpose of presenting to the Sunday school scholars of the Methodist Episcopal church the beautiful flags which have lately been purchased for the school by individual subscription. The Leader says that the Post has already a warm place in the esteem of the Westfield public, and this occasion will serve to render still stronger the ties already existing between this stanch old organization of veterans and their hosts of friends in Westfield, whose pleasure and gratification they have ministered to on so many occasions.

Their Victory Will Cost $8,000,000.

The Reading Terminal bill, allowing the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company to extend its tracks from the present terminus at Ninth and Green streets, Philadelphia, to Twelfth and Market streets, about ten blocks nearer the centre of the city, by means of an elevated railroad, passed the Philadelphia Councils Thursday by a vote of 104 to 3. The bill needs the Mayor's signature only to become a law. The general opinion is that he will sign it and the Reading Railroad thereby gain the terminal location for which it has fought for several years. It is estimated that the extension of the road will cost between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000.

A Monument to be Built by the Pennies of the Women.

A great many of the good women of this city, and THE PRESS, have received from Mrs. Edla J. McPherson, the wife of Senator McPherson, an appeal from the National Mary Washington Memorial Association for the contribution by the women of this country of a fund wherewith to erect to Mary Washington a monument worthy of her and of the women of the country. The appeal is one worthy of a generous response, since it is the effort of women to memorize the woman of whom her distinguished son said: "I attribute all my success in life to the moral, intellectual, and physical training which I received from my mother." The hope is that this monument shall not be built by a few generous men and women alone, but that every woman by her dollars or her pennies shall share in the work of erecting an imperishable memorial to "that epitome of womanly virtues and graces, Mary, the mother of our beloved Washington."

—Within the last eighteen months Union county has laid and macadamized with rock and ballast thirty-eight miles of roadways at a cost of $300,000. The result of this work has been so satisfactory that farmers and rural residents who were opposed to issuing bonds for the work are so well converted that they are putting in their demands for the improvement of lateral roads.

DIVISION IN THE REFORM CLUB.

PRESIDENT JAMES MCGEE WILL PROBABLY WITHDRAW.

The Revs. Yerkes, Lewis, Mitchell and Others Argue for the Closing of the Sunday Evening Meetings, but the Presiding Officer Overrules Them.

There was a special meeting of the Reform Club held Thursday to consider the question of abandoning the Sunday night meetings, and concentrating all efforts in future on Thursday evening meetings. Judge Harper presided and, after devotional exercises conducted by the Rev W. E. Honeyman, he called on James McGee, the newly-elected President, to give his views on the question at issue.

Mr McGee stated that the Club owed its existence to the W. C. T. U., backed by the pastors and the christian public, and that they had fostered it from the beginning. He himself had been [illegible] a considerable sum to secure the building they now occupied, and he had obtained large subscriptions from other christian men. It was the christian people, he said, who had been instrumental in raising the means to buy this hall. Beside this the Club was founded by Messrs. Mabee and English, who were christian men, and it was their design to keep it under christian influence. It had, however, in a great measure lost sight of its original purpose, and had antagonized the ministers and churches, and the christian people had been compelled to quietly withdraw. He himself had been insulted there, and he had been on the platform when churches and christians had been criticised in a severe and unjust manner. He and others were unwilling to attend the meetings under such circumstances, and as a result so many had dropped out that only about fifty paying members were left. He thought they had better abandon Sunday evening meeting and get all the christian community to unite on a Thursday night meeting and therefore more good would be accomplished than could be at present.

Ex-president John H. French favored the Sunday night meetings and said the Club was a feeder to the church.

The Rev. Dr. Yerkes sustained Mr. McGee's position, and favored closing up the Sunday night meeting. He declared that they needed a place where all the temperance element could come together and consult, prepare for municipal elections, and in other ways arrange to fight intemperance. He said that a week-day night was necessary to carry out this idea. The Club had not of late been moving in line with the churches, but if a change was made, and it was put under Christian influence, he would feel bound to support it.

The Rev. Dr. Lewis said there were but two things that could keep up an organization—one was money, and the other was conforming to God's word. All history proved that no reform movement could long exist unless it was of a Christian character, and he could see no light for the Reform Club unless it was put under distinctive Christian control. The Reform Club had gradually gone down and it would continue to do so unless it took hold of Christian work. The Rev. C. B. Mitchell said that the theory that the church could not reclaim a drunkard, was all wrong. Many who were there Sunday nights ought to be in the church, and they made a great mistake in saying that the Club was "a good enough church" for them. In Kansas they had held a week-night meeting for eight years, and always had a full house, and it could be done here, and he pledged himself to help sustain such a meeting. Ethan Lanphear said that the Club had been steadily going down hill, and it was high time they tried another policy, and shut up the Sunday night meetings. Frank Harder said that it was time to join a new partnership, take the Christian public in, and cease to try and run it without them. George Angleman said that a change was absolutely necessary, and the Club must give up its Sunday night meetings. Dr. Burnett said that he came expecting to vote for Sunday night meetings, but he had changed his views after listening to the addresses that had been made.

John H. French and Captain Smith spoke against Sunday night closing. In spite of the fact that he who violates his pledge is a member of the Reform Club no longer, Mr. French moved the following: "Resolved, That the Sunday night meetings be continued." When the vote was taken the presiding officer announced that it was a tie, in which case, of course, the motion was lost; but a large number of persons insisted that the announcement was incorrect, and that there was a clear majority opposed to Sunday night meetings. Two persons who counted said afterward that there were ten in favor and fifteen opposed, while others said that the vote against the resolution was larger even than that. A call for a recount was not recognized, and the meeting adjourned.

It is now said that James McGee will resign the presidency, Frank Harder will resign as Vice President, and most of the other newly elected officers will drop out at once. The Club was organized a few years ago with 600 members, and now it has not 60.

He is Not Known Here.

George Boggs, who robbed the tool chests of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company at Lyons Farms, and gave his address as Plainfield avenue, this city, has been sentenced to the county jail for sixty days.

A Chance for True Christmas Generosity.

Owing to the recent call made by an out-of-town charity on the benevolence of Plainfield people, the Relief Association is finding some difficulty in providing clothing for its beneficiaries. In some cases children are prevented from attending school by the lack of suitable garments, and the need is especially pressing in view of the approaching cold weather. Donations of second-hand clothing—especially boys' suits and overcoats will be most gratefully received at the rooms, No. 45 West Second street.

Christmas at the Children's Home.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Will you allow me to say, in answer to many kind inquiries, that we plan to light our "tree" at the Home at four o'clock, on Tuesday Dec. 30. We can give no formal invitations, but all friends are always welcome. We have fifteen children in our Home, eight girls and seven boys, and we shall hope to provide for three extra boys. Articles much needed are shoes and stockings for children from five to fourteen years of age; rubbers for those from ten to fourteen; warm undershirts and drawers for boys; undervests for girls; handkerchiefs, gingham, stationery, lead pencils; a boy's express wagon, strong, for heavy packages.

N. E. KIMBALL, President.

Miss Liberty, who holds aloft the torch on Bedloe's Island, in New York harbor, rejoices in what is literally an iron constitution, and so we don't think it worth while to recommend to her the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. But this is the one great exception which proves the rule. For all the rest of womankind the "Favorite Prescription" is indispensable. The young girl needs its strengthening help. The matron and the mother find in it invigoration and relief from the numerous ills which beset their existence. And ladies well advanced in years universally acknowledge the revivifying and restorative effects of this favorite and standard remedy. The only medicine for women, sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

A TARIFF BOOMERANG.

The Pond Machine Tool Company Has to Discharge Men.

(From The New York Times.)

The Republican papers throughout New Jersey have been holding up as a marvelous example of the good workings of the notorious McKinley bill the statement that the Pond Machine Tool Company, a concern having extensive works in Plainfield, has been obliged, "since the passage of the bill and the consequent demand for American-made steel products, owing to the advance of the tariff and price on foreign-made goods," to employ an extra number of skilled and unskilled laborers, and to keep the plant running day and night to fill orders. Just how much of truth there is in this partisan story may be appreciated from knowledge of the fact that the Pond Company has just been compelled to discharge a considerable number of its men owing to the slackness of work, and one of the number says that still others are to be laid off.

The workmen state that, but for the contracts now being filled to supply lathes for turning out guns for the Government, the Ponds would have but very little to do, compared with former prosperity, though it is one of the foremost machine tool manufacturing concerns in the world; and it is further asserted that ere long, judging from the present outlook, the works will have to be closed till enough orders have accumulated to warrant the expense of keeping the shops open.

"So much," say the imbittered employes, "for the false claims about the McKinley bill and for the story that we 'cannot supply fast enough the demand for American tools of all kinds' and that 'we are working night and day to fill orders.' The McKinley bill is hurting us instead of bettering us. It is slowly, gradually, surely crushing the life out of American workmen by increasing the cost of everything without raising the workman's wages. Of late living expenses have increased greatly, but we get no more money for our labor, and work is very slack."

Apropos of this subject is the information contained in a circular now being distributed among the trade stating that "owing to the passage of the new Tariff bill there is to be a considerable advance in the price of tools and steel." A catalogue accompany the circular quotes an increase in prices on a long list of articles. A fair example is steel wire, of which No. 2, heretofore selling at $3.70, is now to cost $4.40, and No. 3, hitherto considered dear at $2.80, is to be sold at $3.75.

The people of this once Republican stronghold are beginning to appreciate that the tariff is a tax.

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

New Jersey's Champion Trap-Shooters' Club Dies Under the Auctioneer's Hammer.

There was a large attendance at the public sale of the Middlesex Gun Club property at Dunellen, Thursday, but the bidding was not spirited, and everything was sold at a low price. Wm. Pangborn, as auctioneer, did everything in his power to infuse life and interest in the sale, and proved himself a first-class auctioneer.

Dr. Nelson, of Piscataway, became the possessor of the club house; Henry Rogers, of Warrenville, the grand stand and another building; Ellis A. Campbell, the ticket office and other small buildings, a portion of the traps and shooting paraphernalia, and M. Quinn, the 1,500 feet of fencing. The sum netted from the sale was small, but will answer the purpose intended—that of liquidating the debts of the Club.

Previous to the sale, three members of the Club, Charley Smith (Dutchey), T. H. Kellar (Tee Kay), and W. L. Force (Forrest), indulged in a little practice at blue rocks for the last time on the grounds where they have in times past received honors and suffered defeat. In this last little skirmish, it is best not to say who came out ahead. The wind blew too hard. Well, the Middlesex Gun Club is now defunct, and there is no doubt but that certain other gun clubs in the State will be glad of it, for the Middlesex held the high honor of "champion of the State," having defeated all competitors who dared to face them at the traps. Since the organization of the Club, many persons have become familiar with the use of the shot gun, and it was only by reason of lack of interest of members that the crack gun club of the State was compelled to disband. May those who have labored hard for the best interests of the Middlesex now

Requiescant in pace.

Grade Crossings to be Abolished.

The vexed question of getting rid of grade crossings on the two railroads which pass through Elizabeth has at last been settled so far as the action of the City Council is concerned. It is not expected that any opposition will be made by the companies, which have been for some time desirous of separating their own grades. The crossing at a level of the Pennsylvania and the New Jersey Central tracks has been a danger-point that nothing short of extreme vigilance has prevented from being the scene of fatal accidents. Passengers by both lines will breathe more freely when one road is lifted over the other. The advantage which the city of Elizabeth will gain by the improvement will be marked.

How to be a Newspaper.

"What is it to be a great newspaper? Is it to rouse the sluggish spirit, to instruct the understanding, to please imagination, to sooth the anguished heart, to be, in short, the guide, philospher, friend and ministering angel, all in one? By no means; for all these things may a journal be and yet not be a newspaper. All of these functions are, indeed, within the scope and aim of a newspaper, but none of these constitutes, nor all of these together, the fundamental purpose of its existence. This purpose must always be to tell the news. It must do this and do the other, too. It must be the preacher, pedagogue and novelist, but it must first be a newspaper. That which tells the news is the newspaper, and that is the greatest newspaper which comes nearest to telling the whole of the news."

So says the Evening Sun, and it is a gratifying thing to see so enterprising a paper following in the path of THE PRESS and making of a newspaper a newspaper.

HOW CAN THE LONG
BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance, the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has over 3,000 miles of road; magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite line to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the Coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China and Japan; and the journey to the Pacific coast—Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco—will be remembered as the delight of a life-time once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. NOISY IMMIGRANTS.

Anxious to Learn the Language—The Increase in the Parrot Trade—Where the Birds Come from and Their Value.

The Ward Steamship Company enjoys the distinction of being the line which brings the noisiest immigrants that are received at this port, says the New York Tribune. But Superintendent Weber has not yet called on Collector Erhardt to prohibit even one of them from landing, and as they all, at least, try to learn the language of the country, the presumption is that they make good American citizens. Yet seven or eight thousand of them have already been landed at this port this summer. That fact has so far escaped the newspapers, and they come in hundreds. It was on Tuesday that three or four hundred arrived, and they had to discover themselves to several visitors to the Ward steamer, in order to make their presence generally known, and this they did in their own way. They were probably trying to give their impressions of the country when they were first approached. They succeeded in attracting attention, at all events, for they raised such a hubbub of whirring and fluttering, punctuated with squawks and squeaks underneath their tarpaulin cover, that the visitors naturally inquired what caused the noise.

"Parrots," replied a dark-complexioned man, who seemed to feel a strong proprietary interest in the birds as a large and vigorous Thomas cat who was prancing gayly around the scene. "See!" said the dark man as he threw back the tarpaulin, disclosing to view swarms of young Mexican and Cuban parrots, who fluttered wildly and screeched in a dozen keys as the light entered their cages. They were pretty birds and had been caught in their nests only a fortnight or so before the steamer sailed from Havana.

"There are only 300 or 400 of them," said the parrot-tender in a tone as if he generally considered parrots by the abstract rather than in the concrete. "On the last voyage," he continued, "I had 700 to take care of," and he said it as if the caring for 1,000 parrots was a mere bagatelle. "Was I alone? Certainly, except that Thomas here volunteered his assistance after we left Havana, when he killed a big rat that wandered too near the cages. One healthy, vigorous rat will kill four or five parrots or a dozen canaries in one night. He will eat a parrot's brains and suck its blood in no time.

"Parrots don't have brains? It is a curious fact that the parrot has been so closely identified with history. Aristotle wrote about parrots. I've read it in an encyclopedia. Nero's explorers when he sent to Africa discovered parrots and brought them back to Rome, where the Romans kept them in tortoise-shell cages. Some Romans fed the lions with parrots. But when the Romans began to eat the parrot, then began the decline of the Roman Empire. Now, do you know (confidentially) that the South Americans, some of them I don't say all, eat parrots, and I don't know but that accounts for the South American troubles."

The parrot-tender was getting excited, but he calmed down when his visitors asked how the business of importing parrots to this country has developed. "It has grown to large dimensions within the last twenty years," he said, "and is a big business. There are two large establishments in New York City, Bartels' and Reiche's, who import from 5,000 to 10,000 a year from the South American, Mexico and Cuba. This year there has been so much rainy weather in the parrot countries that breeding was interfered with, and the result has been that there is a falling off in numbers. The old birds nest in holes in high trees, and the rain drowns the young ones.

"We catch parrots when they are young—only a few months old. Indians and natives climb the trees and 'pull the nest.' They take the birds to the seaports, and we buy them there. We are not worried over reports that parrots are becoming scarce. That is not true. Bringing the birds here causes us the worst trouble.

"First we have to look out for the rats, and second the weather. We stow the parrots away in a warm place and cover the cages with a tarpaulin. They are very susceptible to changes in the weather. I have had nearly an entire consignment die on a voyage. We feed them on pilot bread and sugared water when they are young. I don't give old parrots pilot bread, but feed them on hempseed. Well, when we get our birds safely to port they are distributed wholesale to small dealers throughout the city and country, who retail them. The gray, or African, is the most expensive parrot, but it is rather rare.

"It is the best, too, but many people think that the Mexican parrot is the best talker. The Mexican is a large bird, and has a green and yellow head. There is also the Mexican double-yellow head. I have a Mexican bird that can sing 'Peek-a-boo,' and I would not take $200 for him. A valuable parrot is the Brazilian Amazon, a green bird with a little blue above his head. But speaking of those parrots we get from Mexico and Cuba, the Cuban is the most numerous and cheapest. They sell from $3 to $30 a dozen. They have white heads, red throats and green bodies, and don't learn to speak very plain. The Mexicans bring from $8.50 to $9 apiece, the Africans $10, and the single yellow heads from South America $5.

"The blue head Amazon is scarce now, and I think that the Indians are eating them. Their flesh is exceedingly delicate. Last year about 15,000 parrots were imported to the United States, of which 5,000 or 10,000 were from Cuba, and the rest were from Mexico and other countries. We get only a few hundred from Africa. France sends to Africa for parrots, and we export many parrots to England, Germany and Belgium.

"You will find the parrot every where, and he makes a good citizen. The last time I was in Holland I saw one that was 150 years old, but by [illegible], he was a curiosity. Still, he was a species of parrot."

THIS IS QUEER.

The Trick Is Simple, But It Is Puzzling After All—Try It.

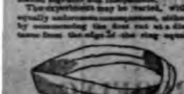
Take a strip of paper of any convenient length and breadth, bend it into a ring, giving it a half-twist on the way, and uniting the ends with gum. It will then appear as above.

Now, if you divide this ring lengthwise along the dotted line, what result will follow?

At first sight it certainly looks as if you would produce two similar rings. Take a pair of scissors, and try.

You will find, when you have cut through the length of the ring, that instead of having two you still possess one ring or band, but twice the length of the original one, and with a double twist or "kink" in it difficult to describe. On repeating the cut, you will, however, obtain two bands, curiously linked together and inseparable.

The experiments may be varied, with equally unforeseen consequences, either by commencing the first cut at a distance from the edge of the ring equal to one-third of its breadth, and continuing twice round until the band is divided, or by giving the paper an [illegible] twist before gumming.



HEART TO ONE.

A little consideration will perhaps enable you to account for these singular results, the circumstances of which, I may add, has been thought to afford some sort of illustration of what is called the fourth dimension—a condition of existence other than ours, with regard to which men of abstract science have recently indulged in some remarkable speculations bearing on the nature of the spiritual world.

For the information of those to whom such speculations are new, I will briefly explain that what we know as space is contained in three dimensions—viz., length, breadth and height, and by these three dimensions all our movements are circumscribed.

But it is conceivable that another race of beings may exist who can move and act in a fourth direction (which we may describe as [illegible], but which is only known to us in theory). Such a condition of existence, although supernatural to us, yet may be normal and natural to spiritual beings.

At any rate, the possibility of this fourth dimension has become a matter of speculation to certain able mathematicians, and the subject has even a religious value, as affording an answer to those who deny the existence of anything which is outside the sphere of sense and experience, by showing that the supernatural is not necessarily opposed to the convictions of the highest scientific minds.—Rev. J. R. Bartlett in Golden Days.

WHO ATE THE PEARS?

Two Children Didn't Want Any Dinner on Account of Them.

Will is a long-legged, crop-headed boy of five; Josepha a chunky, sturdy-limbed, curly-pated lass of three. If it wasn't such a long word I would tell you that they were inseparables; that is, whenever you see Will's sharp little nose poked round a corner, you may be sure Josepha's fat, bare feet are twinkling along behind him.

They live in the country, and their playground is a big, open place, bounded on one side by a stable, cow-house and blacksmith's shop, and on the other by the corn-crib and tool-house. There they collect at least ten other little children, belonging on the big farm, and have royal times, to judge by the noise they make.

We got a bushel of fine pears the other day, and Will and Jo at once petitioned for some to take to "the chillun." So I filled their two little baskets with as many pears as I thought a dozen children ought to eat, well knowing they would be fairly divided.

It occurred to me once or twice after they left, that the tea-party was astonishingly quiet, but children can play quiet games, sometimes, I said to myself, and thought nothing of it. When nurse brought them in for their mid-day nap, I was engaged with company, so I did not see them until our two o'clock dinner. They came down to the dining-room looking clean and rosy after a bath and nap, but strangely solemn. There were no exclamations at sight of the sliced tomatoes, and instead of falling upon the fried chicken like little starved bear cubs, Josepha rested her short chin meditatively in her pink palm, and Will looked as if life were not worth living.

"I don't think I want any dinner," said the head partner; "I don't fink I wants any," echoed the junior member of the firm.

"Why, what's the matter?" I cried in surprise.

"Well, you see," said Will, gloomily, "the chillun had all gone away, every one of 'em."

"To tamp-meetin'," prompted Jo.

"And so," continued the little boy in a depressed voice, "we had to eat all the pears by ourselves."

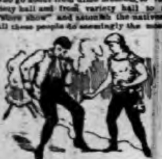
And they really had eaten a bucket of pears apiece! I don't know why they didn't die of cholera morbus, but somehow they didn't, and the only evil that came of it was their not having any more pears for two weeks.—Youth's Companion.

WITH FIRE-EATERS.

Tricks of Professional Siderographists and How They Are Done.

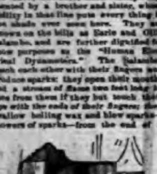
Swallowing Flames for a Living—Latest Wrinkles in the Craft, Including Uses of Chemistry and Electricity—Behind the Scenes.

At the present time in this country there are a half dozen men and women who go about from dime museum to variety hall and from variety hall to a "show show" and astonish the natives. All these people do seemingly the most wonderful things in that line, and as the business is difficult to learn their numbers are limited.



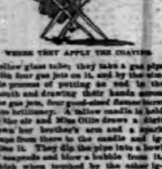
STRIKING FIRE FROM THE LEG.

The present corps of fiery entertainers have, however, been lately augmented by a brother and sister, whose ability in that line puts every thing in the shade ever seen here. They are known on the bills as Earle and Ollie Salambo, and are further dignified for show purposes as the "Human Electrical Dynamometers." The Salambos touch each other with their fingers and produce sparks; they open their mouths and a stream of flame two feet long issues from them if they but touch their lips with the ends of their fingers; they swallow boiling wax and blow sparks—showers of sparks—from the end of a hollow glass tube; they take a gas pipe with four gas jets on it, and by the simple process of putting an end in the mouth and drawing their hands across the gas jets, four good-sized flames burst into brilliancy. A tallow candle is held in the air and Miss Ollie draws a digit down her brother's arm and a spark leaps from there to the candle and ignites it. They dip the pipe into a bowl of soapsuds and blow a bubble from it, which when touched by the other ignites and bursts; and, in short, they do half a hundred things by the means of fire that seem positively marvelous.



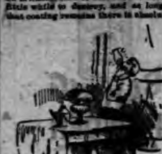
WHERE THEY APPLY THE COATING.

Fire-eaters always had a fascination for me, and I was always curious to know how they managed to manipulate so much flame and escape without seared and blistered mouths and lips, and every time that I saw one of these people perform I hovered round and questioned them to get at the means of doing the trick if possible, and found after all that it wasn't so very wonderful.



THE CONCEALED BATTERY AND INSULATED WIRES.

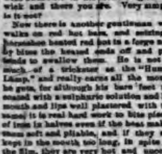
It was only steady practice and constant coating of their mouths and hands and soles of their feet with a [illegible] and the business was comparatively easy, and they really did not swallow any thing at all. Each performer has his own recipe for the solution he uses and rinses his mouth and hands with, but the principal ingredients of it in each case are the same. They are sulphur and alum. When the mouth is rinsed out in that it forms a sort of an artificial skin or film that it takes a little while to destroy, and as long as that coating remains there is absolutely no danger, and the rest of their wonderful tricks are nothing but a delusion and in most cases sleight-of-hand.



THE HUMAN LAMP.

There is one performer who is known in museum circles as the "Human Lamp," and he makes lots of money by doing this act. He drinks some kerosene oil in view of the audience, puts a wick in his mouth, lights the wick with a match, puts a lamp chimney over the flame and burns merrily away. He is such a simple fakir that I feel it my duty to tell just how he does it. On his stand is a lamp half filled with oil. From the can he pours what purports to be oil in the lamp. It is not. It is water, and of course the oil already in the lamp floats on top of the water; then he lights the oil, to prove what he poured out was oil. He gravely drinks from the oil can, puts a wick saturated with sweet oil in his mouth, lights the wick and there you are. Very simple, is it not?

Now there is another gentleman who walks on red hot bars, and seizing a horseshoe heated red hot in a forge near by bites the heated ends off and pretends to swallow them. He is not so much of a trickster as the "Human Lamp," and really earns all the money he gets, for although his bare feet are coated with a sulphuric solution and his mouth and lips well plastered with the same, it is real hard work to bite pieces of iron in halves even if the heat makes them soft and pliable, and if they are kept in the mouth too long, in spite of the film, they are very hot and uncomfortable indeed. This gentleman calls himself St. Elmo, and another part of his performance is to take oakum balls saturated with blazing pitch in his mouth, a half dozen in rapid succession, and that trick gets more applause than the biting of the horseshoe, but it is very easy of accomplishment, because the very minute you put fire in a place where there is no air it immediately goes out, and so the instant St. Elmo closes his mouth the fire is quenched in the blazing ball, and all there is about that is the disagreeable taste of the oakum ball and a little warmth, which may not be pleasant but can be borne for fifty dollars a week.



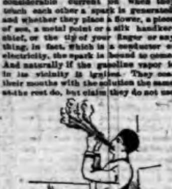
THE MAN WHO BITES HOT IRON.

There is a companion performer to the "Human Lamp" known sometimes as "Natural Gas," or the "Human Gas Well." He gets more money than the man who drinks water for oil, and deserves too. What he does is precisely the basis of all the work done by the Salambos.

Instead of eating cotton and pitch and wax when heated he coats his mouth with his own private solution and unseen stoops down and picks up a round worsted ball saturated with gasoline. Now gasoline is very volatile, and when mixed with air forms a vapor that is easily ignited and gives a very fierce and blue flame. A gasoline ball held in the mouth and blown steadily through; the vapor goes through the gas tube and is ignited, and that's all there is to the "Human Gas Well."

The Salambos, who do so many wonderful things in this line, are tricksters, just like the rest of the profession, but they are entitled to credit because they have combined in their act all the improvements known, and taken advantage of electricity, and withal made a very effective and picturesque and entertaining exhibition. The way they produce sparks from each other and ignite the gas flame is as simple as A B C.

Behind the scenes there is a battery, and to Miss Ollie's body is attached a very thin silk-woven wire, and to her brother's a similar wire. It's easy enough to understand then that with considerable current on when they touch each other a spark is generated, and whether they place a flower, a piece of ice, a metal point or a silk handkerchief, or the tip of your finger or any thing, in fact, which is a conductor of electricity, the spark is bound to come. And naturally if the gasoline vapor is in its vicinity it ignites. They coat their mouths with the solution the same as the rest do, but claim they do not use sulphur, but a better substance. That may easily be, because Mr. Earle Salambo is the son of an electrician and a chemist, and it is quite possible he has discovered something in chemistry which takes the place of sulphur and alum for that purpose. But it is gasoline he uses on the little saturated balls in spite of the fact of a very vigorous denial on the part of his sister.



THE HUMAN GAS WELL.

Miss Ollie is a humorist, and when I asked her if that was not gasoline I smelt she gravely said: "No, but the peculiar odor was electricity." She also claims that her brother and herself charge themselves with the negative and positive current to the extent of twelve hundred volts apiece before going on the stage, but I think that she has taken advantage of my guilelessness, because twelve hundred volts is usually considered fatal, and on the stage of the theatre, where they did their act, I saw the little wire connected with their bodies from the battery behind the scenes. And because she insisted that they did not use gasoline or a solution to coat their mouths with during their act, I show the back of the pretty little centerpiece of their stage setting.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Dec. 4, 1890.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county held on Thursday, Dec. 4, 1890, at 2:30 P. M.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Bender, Briant, Doty, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Russell, Sullivan, Thompson, Trabon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting were read, and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Coroners jury.

To the Honorable the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County:

Gentlemen—The undersigned having served as a jury to examine and ascertain the cause of the death of John Ryan, Jr., of this city, respectfully submit the following:

We have been in session four days greatly to the neglect of our several private and business affairs, thereby sustaining undoubtedly pecuniary losses, as the law governing the pay of coroners juries approved February 19, 1890 gives your honorable board the power and discretion to grant [illegible] the payment of not more than five dollars to each juror.

We respectfully but earnestly pray that you will order the payment of five dollars to each of the undersigned as pay for jury duty in the above stated inquest. We remain your obedient servants.

R. M. ROGERS,
JOHN EGAN, and others.

I approve the above,
ALFRED Q. DONAVAN,
Coroner.
W. R. WILSON,
Pros. of Pleas.

On motion of Freeholder Roll received and placed on file.

A writ of attachment issued out of the New Jersey Supreme Court at the suit of Michael Heeney and Bernard Feeney against Edward N. Lynch and Bernard Mahon was received, and on motion of Freeholder West referred to County Attorney.

From County Engineer.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County:

Gentlemen—I submit herewith the following report showing the progress made in the work on the county roads to this date:

Morris avenue, New Providence township:

The work in this township is now completed with the exception of the final rolling and finishing, which will be done as soon as weather permits.

Morris avenue, Summit township:

A length of 6,900 feet of this avenue has been covered with two courses of macadam, while the first course is in for a distance of 4,900 feet; this leaves a space of about 4,000 feet on which the lower course has not yet been laid.

Mountain avenue, Fanwood township; Morris avenue, Springfield township; Central avenue, Clark township; Central avenue, Rahway city:

The above contracts are completed to my satisfaction as to paving (with a few minor exceptions) and I have given certificates for the same. There is a little work to be done in the gutters in a few places, but this will be done as soon as the weather allows.

Central avenue, Westfield:

That part of Central avenue, Westfield township, between the C. R. R. of N. J., and North avenue, will require some work yet, on account of the top course of macadam not being properly consolidated; the remainder of the avenue is properly completed.

Mountain avenue, Springfield township:

The telford and first course of macadam are now completed, and the second course is on for more than half the total length of the avenue.

Mountain avenue, Westfield township:

The telford foundation has all been laid on the road, and one course of macadam spread over the entire length, with the exception of 3,200 feet. The contractors are making good progress, and in case they are favored with good weather, should be able to finish the road this month.

Westfield avenue, Elizabeth:

The telford has also been completed on this avenue with nearly one-half of the distance covered with one course of macadam, and about one-third of the second course is on.

The contractor has made very satisfactory progress since last report.

Rayway and West Jersey street:

The work is still waiting the completion of the sewer in Rayway, which will soon be in readiness to drain that part of Rayway under the railroad bridge.

North avenue, Union township:

All the telford has been laid except 1,100 feet, and the first course of macadam has been put in for nearly half the length of the township. The grading has also been carried forward and the general condition of the work is satisfactory.

North avenue, Cranford township:

All the stone has now been put on and the contractor will complete the road at once if the weather remains favorable.

Respectfully submitted,
F. A. DUNHAM,
County Engineer.

On motion of Freeholder Russell received and placed on file.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Vanderbeek:

Resolved, That two thousand dollars be transferred from public buildings account, five hundred dollars from account of interest on temporary loans, and five hundred dollars from publication account to account of bridges and culverts.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Roll:

Resolved, That the sum of $275.90 be paid to John B. Woodruff for work on filling in hummock on Morris avenue, Union township, when properly approved and sworn to.

Freeholder Jones moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That when this board adjourns it be to meet on Tuesday, Dec. 23rd, at 1:30 o'clock P. M., to consider certain applications to be made that day for license to build certain docks, wharves or piers in city of Elizabeth, and such other business as may come before this board.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Russell:

Resolved, That $5 be allowed each of the jurors in the case of John Ryan, Jr., as petitioned for in the communication.

Freeholder Jones moved its adoption.

On roll call lost as follows:

Ayes—Freeholders Bender, Jones, Russell, Sullivan, Trabon, Wright—6.

Nays—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Doty, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, West—9.

Not voting—Freeholder Briant—1.

Absent—Freeholder Howard—1.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the collector is hereby authorized to pay the bills of Edward N. Lynch for $6,349.61, and $3,884.19, when the parties and all applying creditors under a certain writ of attachment served on this Board, issued out of the New Jersey Supreme Court at the suit of Michael Heeney and others against said Edward N. Lynch and Bernard Mahon, are paid and satisfied, or the liability of the county, under said attachment proceedings, removed to the satisfaction of the county attorney and collector.

Freeholder Roll moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

The following bills, audited and approved, were read and ordered paid unanimously:

Freeholder Roll moved to adjourn.

Which was carried.

The Director declared the Board adjourned to Tuesday, December 23, 1890, at 1.30 o'clock p. m.

CHAS. E. REED, Clerk.

THE BRIDE WAS COY.

But She Had Sense Enough to Take Her Husband's Fortune.

At a small station on the Georgia Pacific road a bridal couple boarded our train. They were of the "cracker" variety and their greenness at once attracted attention. They had tickets for Atlanta and were going on a "tour." They hadn't been on the train ten minutes when the bride was noticed to be weeping, and pretty soon the groom came back to where I sat with the conductor, and said:

"Conductor, I wish you'un would go'n speak to Mary."

"What's the matter with Mary?" was asked.

"She'un's a-weepin' for her ma. Says she'un wants to go right back home."

"She'll get over it," said the official, and the groom returned to his seat. It wasn't over ten minutes, however, before he returned to say:

"Conductor, she'un's a takin' on like smoke. Says her can't abide to be marr'd, nohow, and her wishes her dun hadn't done it."

"Well, she'll have to make the best of it," replied the conductor, and the groom returned to console her. She turned away from him, however, and pretty soon he was back to say:

"Conductor, she'un declars she'll go home to ma on foot. I never dun see anybody so onery."

"Wasn't it a marriage for love?"

"Your shoutin' it was! We'uns hev dun loved for mighty nigh three y'ars."

"I guess she's a little coy. That will all wear off in time."

The groom went to the rear of the car after a drink of water and just then the train stopped at a station. The bride was up and out on the platform like a flash, and the car had not ceased its motion when she leaped to the ground, fell head over heels, and scrambled up and started back up the track on a run. The groom rushed out of the car and jumped to the platform, and as he caught sight of his fleeing bride he turned to the conductor and said:

"Dog-gone her, she'uns puttin' fo her feet lickety to git back to ma, and I've got to foller! You'un dun said she'un was coy, and I dun depended on you and let her git away! Coy! coy! Why, she'un's got my fo'teen dollars an' is runnin' like a skeered rabbit."—N. Y. Sun.

Splendor Is Out of Sight.

"Ichabod," said the Sultan to his Grand Vizier, "order the court servants to search the markets for the rarest of fruits and herbs; have my private caterer prepare repasts that in excellence have not been equaled since the days of Mahomet, the powerful; have my chamber resplendent with the rugs and laces of the finest makes; have thirteen maids with eyes of night and thirteen with eyes of sapphire ready at a moment's notice; and exercise your judgment to its best to have every thing ready for a grand and discriminating visitor."

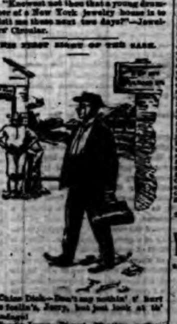
"With pleasure, thou mighty son of a mighty gun."

"And, Ichabod, prepare for my couching with you these next two days, for I must temporarily relinquish my chamber."

"An unusual experience, thou mighty son; wherefore these preparations and discomforts?"

"Knowest not thou that a young drummer of a New York jewelry house is to visit me these next two days?"—Jewelers' Circular.

THE FIRST SIGHT OF THE SASH.



Chinee Dick—Don't say nothin' t' hurt his feelin's, Jerry, but just look at th' bandage!

Sandy Jerry—Phew! That's sufferin' ole humanity t' git [illegible] in [illegible].—Judge.

The Beggar's Son-in-Law.

Friend (to ex-missionary)—I heard that while you were in India you married the daughter of a Rajah.

Ex-Missionary—Yes, I did.

"And in order to do it you had to adopt her religion."

"That's a fact."

"But afterwards you were reconverted to Christianity. How did that come about?"

"Well, the fact is that woman would [illegible] anybody. She would [illegible]."—Texas Siftings.
